 50 was made our Gouvernour, who kept them in his hands to distribute them vnto vs as wee had neede, for the buying of Victualls for our men, with other particular charges, &c. So in the end of thirtie dayes, our ship lying before the City called Sakay, three leagues, or two leagues from Osaka, where the Emperour at that time lay, commandement came from the Emperour, that our ship should be carried to the Easter part of the land, called Quanto, whither according to his commandement we were carried, the distance being about an hundred and twenty leagues. Our passage thither was long by reason of contrary windes, so that the Emperour was there long before vs. Comming to the land of Quanto, and neere to the Citie Eddo, where the Emperour was: being arrived, we sought all meanes by supplications to get our ship cleare, and to seeke our best profit, to come where the Hollanders haue their trade: in which suit we spent much of the money 60 given vs. Also, in this time, three or foure of our men rebelled against the Captaine, and me, and made a mutinie with the rest of our men, so that we had much trouble with them. For they would not abide me any longer in the ship, but euery one would be a Commander: and they would euery one haue their parts of the money that was given by the Emperour. It would bee too tedious to write the particulars of all that passed herein. Therefore for quietnesse sake, wee

diuided the money to euery one as his place was: and this was after we had beene two yeeres in Japan. After which time, when we had receiued a deniall, that we should not haue our ship, but must abide in Japan, our companie hauing their parts of the money, disperfed themselues euery one where he thought best. In the end, the Emperour gaue euery man (to liue vpon) two pounds Rice a day, and yeerely so much as was worth eleuen or twelue Ducats a yeare: my selfe, the Captaine, and Mariners all alike. So in proceffe of foure or five yeeres the Emperour called me, and as he had done diuers times before, so one time he would haue me to make him a small ship: I answered that I was no Carpenter, and had no knowledge thereof: Well, doe it so well as you can, saith he, if it be not good, it is no matter. Wherefore at his command I built him a ship of the burthen of eightie tunnes, or there abouts: which ship being made in all proportions as our manner is, he comming aboard to see it, liked it very well; by which meanes I came in more fauour with him, so that I came often in his presence, who from time to time gaue me presents, and at length a yeerely reuenue to liue vpon, much about seuentie Ducats by the yeere, with two pounds of Rice a day also. Now beeing in such grace and fauour, by reason I learned him some points of Geometry, and the Mathematickes, with other things: I pleased him so, that what I said could not be contradicted. At which my former enemies, Iesuites and Portugals, did greatly wonder, and intreated me to befriend them to the Emperour in their businesse: and so by my meanes, both Spaniards and Portugals haue receiued friendship from the Emperour; I recompencing their euill vnto me with good. So, to passe my time to get my liuing, it hath cost mee great labour and trauell at the first; but God hath blessed my labours.

In the ende of five yeeres, I made supplication to the King to goe out of this Land, desiring to see my poore Wife and children according to conscience and nature. With the which request, the Emperour was not well pleased, and would not let me goe any more for my Countrey, but that I must continue in his Land, &c. Yet in proceffe of time, beeing in great fauour with the Emperour, I made supplication againe, by reason we had newes that the Hollanders were in Achen and Patania; which reioyced vs much, with hope, that God should bring vs to our Countrey againe, by one meanes or other. Then I made supplication againe, and boldly spake my selfe with him, at which he gaue me no answer. I told him, if he would permit me to depart, I would bee a meanes, that both the English, and Hollanders should come and traffique there in his Land. He answered, that he was desirous of both those Nations company for traffique, but would not part with me by any meanes: but bade me write to that purpose. Seeing therefore I could not preuaile for my selfe, I sued that my Captaine might depart, which suit hee presently granted me. So hauing gotten his libertie, he imbarqued in a Japans Iunck, and sayled to Patane: but he tarried there a yeers space, waiting for Holland ships. And seeing none came, he went from Patane to Ior, where he found a Fleet of nine saile: of which Fleet Matleef was General, and in this Fleet he was made Master againe, which Fleet sailed to Malacca, and fought with an Armado of Portugals: in which battel he was shot, and presently died: so that as yet, I think, no certain newes is knowne, whether I be liuing or dead. Therefore my desire is, that my wife and two children may heare, that I am here in Japan: so that my wife is in a manner a widdow, and my children fatherlesse: which thing only is my greatest griefe of heart, and conscience, &c. I am a man not vnknown in Ratcliffe and Lime-house: to my good Master M. Nicholas Diggins, and M. Thomas Best, and M. Nicholas Isaac, and William Isaac, brothers, with many others; also to M. William Jones, and M. Becker. Therefore may this Letter come to any of their hands, or the copy of this Letter: I know that Companies mercy is such, that my friends and kinred shall haue newes, that I doe as yet liue in this vale of my sinfull pilgrimage: the which thing againe and againe I do desire for Iesus sake.

You shall vnderstand, that the first shippe that I did make, made a Voyage or two, and then the King commanded me to make an other, the which I did, beeing of the burthen of an hundred and twentie tunnes. In this ship I haue made a Voyage from Meaco to Edo, beeing about the length as from London to the Lizarde or Lands end of England. In the yeere of our Lord 1609. the King lent this ship to the Gouvernour of Manilla, to goe with eightie of his men, to saile to Acapulco. In the yeere of our Lord 1609. a great ship called the S. Francisco, beeing about a thousand tunnes, was cast away vpon the coast of Japan, in the latitude of thirty five degrees and fiftie minutes: by distresse of weather she cut ouer-board her maine Mast, and bore vp for Japan, and in the night before they were aware, they ranne the ship vpon the shore, which was cast away, in the which one hundred thirtie and sixe men were drowned, and three hundred fortie, or three hundred fiftie saued: in which ship the Gouvernour of Manilla as a Passenger, was to returne to Nova Spania. But this Gouvernour was sent in the bigger ship of my building, in Ann. 1610. to Acapulco. And in Ann. 1611. this Gouvernour returned another ship in her roome, with a geeat present, and with an Embassadour to the Emperour, giuing him thanks for his great friendship: and also sent the price of the Emperours ship in goods and money: which shippe the Spaniards haue now in the Philippinas. Now for my seruice which I haue done and daily doe, being employed in the Emperours seruice, he haeh giuen me a liuing, like vnto a Lordship in England, with eightie or ninetie husbandmen, who are as my seruants and slaues: the like President was was neuer done to any stranger before. Thus God hath provided for mee after my great miserie, his name hath and haue the prayse for euer, Amen.

Now, whether I shall come out of this Land I know not. Vntill this present there hath been no meanes, but now, through the Trade of the Hollanders there is meanes. In the yeere of our Lord, 1609. two Holland Ships came to Iapan. Their Intention was to take the Caracke, that yeerely came from Maçao, and being some five or six dayes too late, neuertheless, they came to Firando, and came to the Court to the Emperour: where they were in great friendship receiued, conditioning with the Emperour yeerely, to send a Ship or two: and so they departed with the Emperours Passe. Now, this yeare 1611. there is a small Ship arriued, with Cloth, Lead, Elephants teeth, Dammaske, and blacke Taffities, raw Silke, Pepper, and other commodities: and they haue shewed cause, why they missed the former yeare 1610. according to promise yeerely to come. This Ship is well receiued, and with great kindnesse intertaine. You shall vnderstand that the Hollanders haue, here, an Indies of money: for, they need not to bring Siluer out of Holland in to the East Indies. For in Iapan, there is much Siluer and Gold to serue their turnes in other places where need requireth in the East Indies. But the merchandise, which is here vendible for readie money, is, raw Silke, Damaske, blacke Taffities, blacke and red Cloth of the best, Lead, and such like goods. So, now vnderstanding by this Holland Ship lately arriued here, that there is a settled Trade driuen by my Countrey-men in the East Indies: I presume that amongst them, some, either Merchants, Masters, or Mariners, must needs know mee.

Therefore I haue emboldned my selfe to write these few lines, in short, being desirous, not to be ouer-tedious to the Reader. This Iland of Iapan is a great Land, and lyeth to the Northwards in the Latitude of eight and fortie degrees, and the Souther-most part of it, in five and thirtie degrees, and the length of it East by North, and West & by South (for so it lyeth) is two hundred and twentie English leagues. The breadth South and North of it thirteene degrees twenty leagues to the degree, is two hundred sixty leagues, & is almost square. The people of this Iland of Iapan are good of nature, curteous aboue measure, and valiant in warre: their Iustice is seuerely executed without any partialitie vpon transgressors of the Law. They are gouerned in great ciuilitie, I thinke, no Land better gouerned in the world by Ciuill Policie. The people are verie superstitious in their Religion, and are of diuers opinions. There are many Iesuites and Franciscan Friars in this Land, and they haue conuerted many to be Christians, and haue many Churches in the Iland. Thus, in short I am constrained to write, hoping that by one meanes or other, in proesse of time I shall heare of my wife and children: and so with patience I wait the good will and pleasure of God Almighty, desiring all those to whom this my Letter shall come, to vse the meanes to acquaint my good friends with it, that so my wife and children may heare of me: by which meanes there may be hope, that I may heare of my wife and children before my death: The which the Lord grant to his glorie, and my comfort, Amen.

Dated in Iapan the two and twentieth of October, 1611.

By your vnworthy friend and seruant, to command in what I can,

WILLIAM ADAMS.

Endorsed,

To my unknowne Friends and Countrey-men, desiring this Letter, by your good meanes, or the Newes or Copie of this Letter, may come to the hands of one, or many of my acquaintance in Lime-house, or elsewhere, or in Kent in Gillingham by Rochester.

A Letter of WILLIAM ADAMS to his Wife from Iapan.

LOving Wife, you shall vnderstand how all things haue passed with mee from the time of mine absence from you. We set saile with five ships from the Texel in Holland, the foure and twentieth of Iune, 1598. And departed from the Coast of England, the fift of Iuly. And the one and twentieth of August, we came to one of the Isles of Cape Verde, called Sant Iago, where we abode foure and twentie dayes. In which time many of our men fell sicke through the vnwholsomenesse of the Aire, and our Generall among the rest. Now the reason that we abode so long at these Ilands was, That one of the Captaines of our Fleet made our Generall beleue, that at these Ilands we should find great store of refreshing, as Goats and other things which was vntrue.

Cape Verde.

Here I and all the Pilots of the fleet were called to a Councell: in which wee all shewed our iudgements of disliking the place: which were by all the Captaines taken so ill, that afterward it was agreed by them all, that the Pilots should be no more in the Councell, the which was executed. The fiftenth day of September we departed from the Isle of Sant Iago, and passed the Equinoctiall Line. And in the latitude of three degrees to the South our Generall dyed: wherewith many contrarie windes and raine, the season of the yeare being very much past, wee were were forced vpon the Coast of Guiney, falling vpon an head-land called Cabo de Spiritu Sancto. The new Generall commanded to beare vp with Cape de Lopo Consalues, there to seeke refreshing for our men, the which we did. In which place we landed all our sicke men, where they did not much better, for wee could find no store of victuals. The nine and twentieth of December wee set saile to goe on our Voyage; and in our way we fell with an Island called Ilha da Nobon, where we landed all our sicke men, taking the Island in by force. Their Towne contayned some eightie houles. Hauing refreshed our men, we set saile againe. At which time our Generall commanded, that a man for foure dayes should haue but one pound of bread, that was a quarter of a pound a day; with the like proportion of Wine and Water. Which scarcitie of Victuals brought such feebleness, that our men fell into so great weaknesse and sicknesse for hunger, that they did eate the Calues skinned, wherewith our Ropes were couered. The third of Aprill 1599. we fell with the Port of Saint Iulian: And the sixt of Aprill we came into the Straight of Magellan to the first narrow. And the eighth day we passed the second narrow with a good wind, where we came to an Anchor, and landed on Penguin Island: where we laded our Boate full of Penguins, which are fowles greater then a Ducke: wherewith we were greatly refreshed. The tenth we weighed anchor hauing much wind, which was good for vs to goe thorow. But our Generall would water, and take in prouision of wood for all our fleet. In which Straight there is enough in euery place, with anchor ground in all places three or foure leagues one from another.

In the meane time, the wind changed, and came Southerly, so we sought a good harbour for our ship on the North-side, foure leagues off Elizabeths Bay. All Aprill being out wee had wonderfull much Snow and Ice, with great winds. For in April, May, Iune, Iuly, and August is the Winter there, being in fiftie two degrees  $\frac{1}{2}$ . by South the Equinoctiall. Many times in the Winter we had the wind good to goe through the Straights, but our Generall would not. We abode in the Straight till the foure and twentieth of August, 1599. On the which day wee came into the South Sea: where sixe or seuen dayes after in a greater storme we lost the whole fleet one from another. That storme being long we were driuen into the latitude of fiftie foure degrees  $\frac{1}{2}$ . by South the Equinoctiall. The weather breaking vp and hauing good wind againe, the ninth of October we saw the Admirall, of which we were glad, eight or ten dayes after in the night hauing very much wind, our fore-sayle flew way, and wee lost companie of the Admirall. Then according to wind and weather, we directe our course for the Coast of Chili: where the nine and twentieth of October, we came to the place appointed of our Generall in fortie sixe degrees, where wee set vp a pinnesse and stayed eight and twentie dayes: In this place wee found people, with whom wee had friendship five or sixe dayes: who brought vs sheep; for which we gaue them Bels and Knives, and it seemed to vs they were contented. But shortly after they went all away from the place where our ship was and we saw them no more. Eight and twentie dayes being expired, we set saile minding to goe for Baldinia. So wee came to the mouth of the Bay of Baldinia. And being very much wind our Captaines minde changed, so that we directed our course for the Ile of Mocha.

The first of Nouember we came to the Ile of Mocha, lying in the Latitude of eight and thirtie degrees. Hauing much wind we durst not anchor, but directed our course for Cape Santa Maria, two leagues by South the Island of Santa Maria: where hauing no knowledge of the people, The second of Nouember our men went on land, and the people of the Land fought with our men, and hurt eight or nine; but in the end, they made a false composition of friendship, which our men did beleue.

The next day our Captaine, and three and twentie of our chiefe men went on land, meaning for marchandize to get victuals, hauing wonderfull hunger. Two or three of the people came straight to our Boat in friendly manner, with a kind of Wine and Rootes, with making tokens to come on land, making signes that there were Sheep and Oxen. Our Captaine with our men, hauing great desire to get refreshing for our men, went on land. The people of the Countrey lay intrenched a thousand and aboue, and straight-way fell vpon our men, and slew them all; among which was my brother Thomas Adams. By this losse we had scarce so many men whole, as could weigh our Anchor. So the third day in great distresse, we set our course for the Island of Santa Maria, where we found our Admirall: whom when we saw, our hearts were some-what comforted: we went aboard them, and found them in as great distresse as we; hauing lost their Generall with seuen and twentie of their men slaine at the Island of Mocha: from whence they departed the day before we came by. Here we tooke counsell what we should doe to get Victuals. To goe on land by force we had no men: for the most part were sicke. There came a Spaniard by composition to see our Shippe. And so the next day he came againe, and we let him depart quietly. The third day came two Spaniards aboard vs without pawne, to see if they could betray vs. When they had seene our Shippe, they would haue gone on land againe: but we would not let them, shewing that they came without leaue, and we would not let them goe on land againe without our leaue; wherewith they were greatly offended. We shewed them that we had extreame neede of Victuals, and that if they would giue vs so many Sheepe, and so many Becues, they should goe on land. So against their wils they made composition with vs, which within the time appoinappointed they did accomplish. Having so much refreshing as we could get, we made all things well againe, our men beeing for the moit part recovered of their sicknesse. There was a young man, one Hudecope, which knew nothing, but had served the Admirall, who was made Generall: and the Master of our Shippe was made Vice-Admirall, whose name was Iacob Quaternak of Rotterdam. So the Generall and Vice-Admirall called me and the other Pilote, beeing an Englishman, called Timothy Shotten, (which had been with M. Thomas Candish in his Voyage about the World) to take counsell what we should doe to make our Voyage for the best profit of our Marchants. At last it was resolved to goe for Iapan. For by report of one Derrick Gerritson, which had been there with the Portugals, woollen cloth was in great estimation in that Iland. And we gathered by reason that the Malucos, and the most part of the East Indies were hot Countreyes where woollen cloth would not be much accepted: wherefore we all agreed to goe for Iapan. So leaving the Coast of Chili from thirtie sixe degrees of South-latitude, the seven and twentieth of Nouember, 1599. we tooke our course directly for Iapan, and passed the line Equinoctiall with a faire wind, which continued good for diuerse moneths. In our way we fell with certain Ilands in sixteene degrees of North-latitude, the Inhabitants whereof are men-eaters. Comming neere these Ilands, and hauing a great Pinnesse with vs, eight of our men beeing in the Pinnesse, ranne from vs with the Pinnesse, and (as we suppose) were eaten of the wild men, of which people we tooke one: which afterward the Generall sent for to come into his Shippe. When wee came into the latitude of seven and twentie and eight and twentie degrees, we found very variable winds and stormy weather. The foure and twentieth of February we lost sight of our Admirall, which afterward we saw no more: Neuerthelesse we still did our best, directing our course for Iapan. The foure and twentieth of March, we saw an Iland called Una Colonna: at which time many of our men were sicke againe, and diuers dead. Great was the miserie we were in, hauing no more but nine or tenne able men to goe or creepe vpon their knees: our Captaine, and all the rest, looking euery houre to die. The eleuenth of Aprill, 1600. we saw the land of Iapan neere vnto Bungo: at vvhich time there were no more but five men of vs able to goe. The twelfth of Aprill, we came hard to Bungo, vvhether may Burkes came aboard vs, the people vvhetherof vvee vvolingly let come, hauing no force to resist them: at vvhich place vve came to an Anchor. The people offered vs no hurt, but stole all things that they could steale: for vvhich some paid deare afterward. The next day, the King of that land sent souldiers aboard to see that none of the Marchants goods were stolne. Two or three dayes after, our Shippe was brought into a good Harbour, there to abide till the principall King of the vvhole Iland had newes of vs, and vntill it was knowne vvhether his will was to doe vvith vs. In the meane time vve got fauour of the King of that place, to get our Captaine and sicke men on land, vvhich was granted. And vvee had an house appointed vs, in vvhich all our men were laid, and had refreshing giuen them. After vvee had bene there five or sixe dayes, came a Portugall Iesuite vvith other Portugals, vvho reported of vs, that vve were Pirats, and were not in the vvay of Marchandizing. Which report caused the Gouvernours and common-people to thinke euill of vs: In such manner, that vve looked alvvayes vvhen vve should be set vpon Crosses; which is the execution in this land for theeuery and some other crimes. Thus daily more and more the Portugalls incensed the Iustices and people against vs. And two of our men, as traytors, gaue themselues in seruice to the King, beeing all in all vvith the Portugals, hauing by them their liues vvarranted. The one was called Gilbert de Conning, vvhoose mother dwelleth at Middleborough, vvho gaue himselfe out to be Marchant of all the goods in the Shippe. The other was called Iohn Abelson Van Owater. These traitours fought all manner of wayes to get the goods into their hands, and made knowne vnto them all things that had passed in our Voyage. Nine dayes after our fall, the great King of the land sent for me to come vnto him. So taking one man with me, I went to him, taking my leaue of our Captaine, and all the others that were sicke, commending my selfe into his hands, that had preserved me from so many perils on the sea. I was carried in one of the Kings gallies to the Court at Osaca, where the King lay, about eightie leagues from the place where the Shippe was. The twelfth of May, 1600. I came to the great Kings citie: vvho caused me to be brought into the Court, beeing a wonderfull costly house guilded with gold in abundance. Comming before the King, he viewed me well, and seemed to be wonderfull fauourable. He made many signes vnto me, some of vvich I vnderstood, and some I did not. In the end there came one that could speake Portuges. By him the King demanded of me, of vvhat Land I was, and vvhat mooued vs to come to his Land beeing so farre off. I shewed vnto him the name of our Countrey, and that our land had long fought out the East-Indies, and desired friendship vvith all Kings and Potentates in vvay of marchandize, hauing in our Land diuerse commodities, vvich these Lands had not: and also to buy such marchandizes in this Land, vvich our Countrey had not. Then he asked vvether our Countrey had warres? I answered him yea, vvith the Spaniards and Portugals, beeing in peace vvith all other Nations. Further, he asked me, in vvhat I did beleue? I said, in God that made Heauen and Earth. He asked me diuerse other questions of things of Religion, and many other things: As vvhat vvay we came to the Countrey. Hauing a Chart of the vvhole vvorld, I shewed him, through the Straight of Magellan. At vvich he wondred, and thought me to lie.

Thus from one thing to another I abode with him till mid-night. And having asked mee, what marchandize we had in our shippe, I shewed him all. In the end, he beeing ready to depart, I desired that we might haue trade of marchandize, as the Portugals and the Spanyards had. To which he made me an answer: but what it was I did not vnderstand. So he commanded me to be carried to prison. But two dayes after he sent for me againe, and enquired of the qualities and conditions of our Countreys, of Warres and Peace, of Beasts and Cattell of all sorts, of the Hea- uens. It seemed that he was well content with all mine answers vnto his demands. Neuerthe- lesse I was commanded to prison againe: but my lodging was bettered in another place.

The fift of December, 1604. we set saile from the Cowes in the Ile of Wight. The three and twentieth we arriued at Teneriffe, in the road of Aratana. The fourteenth of Ianuary at night we were troubled with extreme heate, lightnings, thunder and raine all the night. The sixteenth we passed vnder the Equinoctiall Line, shaping our course for the Ile Loronnah, the wind being at South South-east, our course South South-west, & some three degrees South-ward of the Line, we met with such multitudes of fish, as it is incredible to report, so that with our Hooke, Lines and Harping Irons, wee tooke so many Dolphines, Bonitos, and other fishes, that our men were so wearie with eating of fish, that we could not tell what to doe with it. Moreouer there were fowles called Pasharabones and Alcatrazes. We tooke many of those Pasharabones, for it is a fowle that delighteth to come to a ship in the night: and if you doe but hold vp your hand, they will light vpon it. The other foule called Alcatrazes is a kind of Hawke that liueth by fishing. For when the Bonitos or Dolphines doe chase the flying fish vnder the water, so that he is glad to flee from them out of the water to saue his life, this Alcatrazes flyeth after them like a Hawke after a Partridge. Of these flying fishes I haue seene so many flee together, that you would haue thought them to be a great flocke of Birds as farre off. They are but little fishes, scarcely so big as an Hering.

The Ile of Fernando de Loronnah.

The two and twentieth we came to an anker at the Ile of Loronnah, being foure degrees to the South-ward of the Line, where, in going on shore, our Skiffe was ouer-set, by reason of the violent breach that the Sea made, at which time was drowned a Kinsman of our Generall called Master Richard Michelburne, and all the rest were saued.

The fve and twentieth, our long Boat going to fill some emptie Caske with water, came againe within the danger of that vnfortunate Sea, and was ouer-set, and two more of our men drowned. Here wee were very much troubled in getting wood and water aboard, because the landing was so dangerous, that wee were forced to pull our Caske on shore with Ropes, and so backe againe when it was filled. Not sixe dayes before we came hither, there was an Hollander here, which sent his Boat for water, which was broken all into pieces against the Rockes, and his mens braines beaten out, and their armes and legs cut from their bodies.

The sixe and twentieth, our Generall went on shore to see the Iland, and marching vp and downe in the same, wee found nothing but a wild Countrey, inhabited onely by sixe Negros, which liue like slaues. In this Iland haue beene great store of Goates, and some wild Oxen; but by reason the Portugall Carakes sometime vse to water here when they go into the East-Indies, and that these poore slaues are left there as their seruants, to kill and drie Goates against their comming thither, they haue destroyed both Goats and Oxen, so that wee could find but few. In this Iland are great store of Turtle-Doues, Alcatrazes, and other Fowle, which wee killed with our Pieces, and found them to be very daintie meate. Also heere is good store of Maiz or Gwynie Wheat. Here are likewise plentie of rotten Trees, whereon groweth the fine Bombast, and abundance of wild Goards, and Water-melons. When we were furnished with wood and water we came aboard.

A strange glittering of the Sea.

The twelfth of February, wee found our selues to bee in seuen degrees, fve minutes to the South-ward: in which place at night, I thinke I saw the strangest Sea, that euer was seene: which was, That the burning or glittering light of the Sea did shew to vs, as though all the Sea ouer had beene burning flames of fire, and all the night long, the Moone being downe, you might see to read in any booke by the light thereof.

The

The thirteenth day in the morning, wee descried an Iland, or rather indeed a Rocke. The name is Ascension, the height eight degrees thirtie minutes to the South-ward.

The first of Aprill, toward night, wee descried Land from the maine top, which bare off vs, April. South South-East, when according to our reckoning and accounts, wee were not neere by fortie leagues, but yet the variation of the Compasse, did tell vs that wee were on Land thirtie leagues before we saw Land.

The second day in the morning we were hard by the shore, which was ten or twelue leagues to the North-ward of the Bay of Saldannab.

The third day we sayled by a little Iland, which Captain John Davis tooke to be an Iland, that standeth some five or six leagues from Saldannab. Whereupon our Generall, Sir Edward Michellburne, desirous to see the Iland, took his Skiffe, accompanied with no more then the Masters Mate, the Purser, and my selfe, and foure men that did row the Boat, and so putting off from the Ship wee came on land : while wee were on shore, they in the Ship had a storme, which draue them out of sight of the Iland : and wee were two dayes, and two nights before wee could recover our Ship. Vpon the said Iland is abundance of great Conies, and Seales : whereupon we called it Cony Iland.

The eighth day, we came to an Anchor, in the Road of Saldannab.

The ninth wee went on shore, finding a goodly Countrey, inhabited by a most sauage and beastly people, as euer I thinke God created. In this place wee had excellent good refreshing : in so much that I thinke the like place is not to be found among sauage people. For wee neither wanted Beeffe, Mutton, nor Wild-Fowle all the time we lay there. This Countrey is very full of Oxen and Sheepe, which they keepe in great Heards and Flocks, as we do our Cattle in England. Moreouer, it doth abound with store of wild Beasts, and Fowles, as wild Deere in great abundance, Antelops, Babious, Foxes and Hares, Ostriches, Cranes, Pelicans, Herons, Geese, Duckes, Pheasants, Partridges, and diuers other sorts of excellent Fowles. Of which Fowles wee killed great store with our Pieces. It is also most pleasantly watered with wholesome springs, which haue their beginning from the tops of exceeding high Mountaines, which falling into the Vallies, make them very fruitfull. Also there is a kind of Trees, not much vnlike to Bay Trees, but of a farre harder substance, that grow close by the Sea side. The people of the Countrey brought vs more Bullockes and Sheepe, then wee could spend all the time wee stayed there. So that we carryed fresh Beeffe and Mutton to Sea with vs. For a piece of an old yron Hoop, not worth two pence, you might buy a great Bullocke : and for a piece of yron, not worth two or three good Horse Nayles, you might buy a Sheepe. They goe naked, saue onely they weare vpon their shoulders a Sheepe skin, and before their priuities a little flap of a skin, which couereth as much, as though they had none at all before them. In the time of our being there, they liued vpon the guts and filth of the meate, which we did cast away, feeding in most beastly manner : for they would neither wash nor make cleane the guts, but take them and couer them ouer with hote ashes, and before they were through hote, they pulled them out, shaking them a little in their hands, and so eate both the guts, the excrements, and the ashes. They liue vpon raw flesh, and a certaine kind of roote which they haue, which groweth there in great abundance. In this place we lay on shore, from the ninth of April vntill the third of May. By which good recreation and refreshing, wee found our selues in as good health, as when wee put to Sea at the very first.

The seuenth of May, wee were South off the Cape of Bona Esperanza, by estimation tenne leagues. This night we passed ouer the shoalds of Cape Das Agulhas.

The ninth day, rose a mightie storme, at which time we lost sight of our Pinasse, being driuen by violence of weather from her. This storme continued for the space of two dayes, and two nights most fearefull and dangerous, with raine, lightning, and thunder, and often shipping of much water. The Portugals call this place, The Lion of the Sea, by reason of the extreame fury and danger, which they find in doubling of this Cape. In the extremitie of our storme appeared to vs in the night, vpon our maine Top-mast head, a flame about the bignesse of a great Candle; which the Portugals call Corpo Sancto, holding it a most diuine token, that when it appeareth the worst is past. As, thanked be God, we had better weather after it. Some thinke it to be a spirit : other write that it is an exhalation of moyst vapours, that are ingendred by foule and tempestuous weather. Some affirme that the Ship is fortunate where it lighteth, and that shee shall not perish. It appeared vnto vs two nights together, after which time we had a faire wind and good weather.

The twenty fourth, the Ile De Diego Roiz, standing in the Latitude of nineteen degrees & fortie minutes to the South-ward, and in the Longitude of ninetie eight degrees, and thirtie minutes, bare North off vs about five of the clocke eight leagues off. Wee bare roome to haue landed, but the wind grew so stiffe in the night, that we altered our determination. About this Iland we saw great store of white Birds, hauing in their tayles but two long feathers. These Birds, and diuers others accompanied vs with such contrary winds and gusts, that wee often split our sayles, and

The Ile of Diego Roiz is a verie dangerous place.

The Iles Dos Banhos.

The third day of Iune, standing our course for the Ile De Cirne, we descried the Ile De Diego Roiz againe, and bare roome with it, thinking to haue stayed there to attend a good wind: but finding it to be a very dangerous place, wee durst not come to an anchor there, for feare of the rockes and sholds that lye about it; and vpon better consideration wee altered our purpose, and stood for East-India.

The fifteenth of Iune, we had sight of Land, which was the Ile Dos Banhos, in sixe degrees, and thirtie seuen minutes to the South-ward, and in one hundred and nine degrees of Longitude. These Ilands are falsely laid in most Charts, lying too much to the West. Here we sent our Boats to see, if they could find any good ground to anchor in. But searching both the South and West shore, they could find none. There are five of these Ilands: they abound with Fowle, Fish, and Coco Nuts. Our Boats went on shore, and brought great store of them aboard vs, which wee found to be excellent meate. Seeing wee could find no good anchoring, by reason that in some places close vnder the shore it was so deepe, that wee could find no ground, and in other places were such sharpe rockes, and sholds, that wee durst not anchor, hauing but bad and contrary winds, we left these Ilands, and stood our course, as neere as we could lye for India.

Their Boates goe on shore. The Ile of Diego Graciosa.

The nineteenth of Iune, we had sight of Land, which was the Ile of Diego Graciosa, standing in the Latitude of seuen degrees, thirtie minutes South-wards, and in Longitude one hundred and ten degrees, fortie minutes by our accounts. This seemeth to be a very pleasant Iland, and of good refreshing, if there be any place to come to an anchor. Wee sought but little for anchoring there, because the wind was bad, and the tide forced vs to the shore: so that we durst not stay to search there any further. This Iland seemeth to bee some ten or twelue leagues long, abounding with Birds and Fish; and all the Iland ouer seemeth to be a mightie Wood, of nothing else but Coco-trees. What else this Iland yeeldeth we know not.

Iuly. They passe the Equinoctiall Line.

An Iland or Ilands in two degrees of Northerly Latitude, adioyning to Sumatra.

The eleuenth of Iuly, wee passed againe the Equinoctiall Line, where wee were becalmed with extreame heate, lightning, and thunder.

The nineteenth we descried Land, which was many Ilands, as we thought locked in one, which lay vnder the high Land, of the great Iland of Sumatra. Here wee sent off our Boat to get some fresh water: but the Sea went with such a violent breach vpon the shore, that they durst not land: The people of this Iland made great fiers also along the shore, with intent, as wee thought, to haue had vs come on Land. This Iland or Ilands, is in two degrees of Northerly Latitude.

The five and twentieth we came to an anchor, by a little Iland, where we sent our Boat on shore for water; but finding none, they returned with some Coco Nuts, affirming, that the Iland was very full of Coco Trees, which had very few Nuts vpon them. We saw three or foure people vpon this Iland: but they went away and would not come neere vs. Those people we imagined to be left there to gather the Cocos, and to make them readie against others should come and fetch them.

The Ile of Bata.

A great flying Squirrel, or Bat.

The sixe and twentieth, we came to an anchor, within a league of a great Iland, called Bata, lying in twentie minutes of South Latitude. Here we builded vp our Shalop, and named her the Batte. In this Iland are none Inhabitants: it doth exceedingly abound with wood, and fresh water Riuers, as also with Fish, Munkies, and a kind of Fowle, which they affirme to bee that Countrey Batte, whereof in our time of being there I killed one, which was greater then an Hare, and in shape very like a Squirrel, saue onely from each of his sides, did hang downe two great flaps of skin, which when hee did leape from tree to tree, hee would spread forth like a paire of wings, as though hee did seeme to flie with them. They are very nimble, and will leap from bough to bough oftentimes, taking hold with nothing but their tayles. Because our Shalop was builded in the kingdome of these beasts, hee was called after their name, The Bat.

Three Barkes.

The nine and twentieth day, trauieling along the shore, in this Iland I discovered a Roder, riding vnder a little Iland about foure leagues from mee: which made mee very glad, hoping it had bene our Pinnasse which wee lost in the great storme, neere vnder the Cape of Bona Esperança: with which newes by night I gate aboard our Generall; who in the morning sent mee, with Captaine John Davis, to see if wee could find her. But when wee came to the place, wee found three Barkes riding vnder the Iland. They made signes vnto vs to come aboard them, and told vs they had Hennes; we answered them that we would goe fetch some money, and would come againe the next morning, and buy. Some of them vnderstood Portuguese. Wee durst not goe aboard them, because wee were but euill provided. The next morning being better furnished, wee went, thinking to haue some better commodities of them: but they had waighed anchor, and were all gone. It seemed they were afraid of vs by their halting away.

August.

The fourth of August, we weighed anchor and stood for Priaman.

The ninth of August, our Generall manned the Shalop, and sent vs along the Coast, to see if wee could find any Roderes, and espying a Sayle, we gaue her chase, which when shee perceiued shee shee could not goe from vs, shee came to an anchor, and forsooke their Barke, and rowed all on shore to an Iland in a small Boat, where wee could not come at them. Wee laid there Barke aboard, not finding any one man in it: the chiefe lading was Cocos Oyle, Nuts, and fine Mats. But seeing it was but such meane stuffe, and knowing that if we should haue taken it, our General would not haue liked of it; wee left her, not taking any thing from her worth the speaking of.

The tenth and eleuenth dayes we stood close along the maine land, whereas we espied eight Prawes, riding ouer against a place called Tico. Which whē we first espied, we were in good hope, that we might find our Pinnasse among them. When we came vp with them she was not there: but they put vs in comfort, telling vs there was an English Ship at Priaman, which was not past 10 sixe leagues from this Towne of Tico. Then standing out to Sea we saw our Admiral, and in short time got aboard, telling our Generall the newes. Wee had not sayled a league further, but our Ship came on ground vpon a Rocke of white Corall: but God be thanked, hauing a great gale, in very short time we got her off againe without any hurt at all: And comming neere vnto the Road of Priaman, we descried our Pinnasse to be there, which wee had lost so long before in the great storme, in doubling the Cape of Bona Esperança. The Captaine and Master of the Pinnasse, met vs halfe a league from the Road in their Skiffe, and at our comming aboard of vs, our Generall did welcome them with a peale of great Ordnance: And after many discourses passed of what had happened, in the time of each others absence, wee came to an anchor in fise fathoms water, very good ground in the Road of Priaman, which standeth in fortie minutes of Souther-20 ly Latitude.

The fourteenth, our General sent mee on shore with a Present to the Gouvernor, and to others, to see what price Pepper was at, and to buy fresh victualls, and to know whether our men might come safely on shore. But when we came on shore, the Gouverneur durst not speake with vs priuately, by reason of certaine warres that were among them: by which meanes they were growne ialous one of another. These warres grew vpon this occasion. The King of Achen hauing two sonnes, hee kept the eldest at home with him, to succeed him after his death, and the youngest he made King of Pedir: vvhreupon the eldest sonne tooke his father prisoner, affirming that he was too old to gouerne any longer, and afterward made warre vpon his younger brother. Thus seeing little good to be done in this place, hauing refreshed our selues with fresh victualls, we 30 resolved to depart from thence.

The one and twentieth, we weighed anchor, and stood for Bantam, on which day we tooke two Prawes, hauing nothing in them but a little Rice. The one of these Prawes hurt two of our men very sore after they had entred her. For our men thought, because they saw some leap ouer-board, they had all leaped ouer-board; but they were deceiued. For the first two men that entred were sore hurt by two vvhich lay close hidden behind their Sayle: vvhich as soone as they had wounded them, most desperately leaped ouer-board, swimming away like water Spaniels. So taking such things as best fitted vs, wee left their Pravves, doing them no further harme.

The three and twentieth, wee tooke a Fisher-boat, hauing nothing of value in him, letting 40 him goe without any hurt, sauing onely one of them was shot through the thigh at the first meeting, when they resisted vs.

The fise and twentieth, wee descried a Sayle, and sent our Shalop, Long-boat, and Skiffe to see what shee was: for our Ship and Pinnasse could not fetch her vp, because they were becalmed. These Boats comming vp with her, bid him strike sayle, but shee would not. So wee fell in fight with her, from three of the clocke in the afternoon, till ten of the clocke at night, by which time our Pinnasse had gotten vp to vs: then shee strooke her sayles and yeelded. So wee made her fast to our Pinnasse, and towed her along with vs all night. In the morning, our Generall sent for them to see what they were: and sent three of vs to see what she was laden withall. When hee had talked with them, they told him they were of Bantam: wherefore, knowing not 50 what iniurie he might doe to the English Merchants, that had a Factorie in Bantam at that present; and vnderstanding by vs, that their loading was Salt, Rice, and China dishes, hee sent them aboard their owne Barke againe, not suffering the worth of a penny to be taken from them. They standing toward Priaman, and we toward Bantam, left each other. This Barke was of the burthen of some fortie Tuns.

The second of September, we met with a small Ship of Guzarate, or Cambaya, being about eightie Tuns: which Ship wee tooke and carried into the Road of Sillibar, standing in foure degrees of Southerly Latitude; into which Road many Prawes continually come to refresh themselves. For here you may haue Wood, Water, Rice, Buffles-flesh, Goates, Hens, Plants, and Fresh-fish, but all very deere.

The eight and twentieth day, hauing dispatched all our businesse, wee weighed anchor, and stood for Bantam.

The three and twentieth of October, wee came to an anchor in the Road of Marrab, being in the straight of Sunda: here we tooke in Fresh-water. In this place are great store of Buffles,

Bantam.

The eight and twentieth, we weighed anchor, and stood for Bantam, which standeth in sixe degrees and fortie minutes of Southerly Latitude. This day we came within three leagues of the Towne, where wee came to an anchor all night. Here wee thought to haue seene the English Fleet; but it was gone for England three weekes before we came. Neuerthelesse, those that remained in the Countrey, as Factors of our Nation, came aboard vs, being very glad to see any of their Country-men in so forraigne a place, and withall told our Generall, that the company of the Hollanders Ships that were in the Road, had vsed very slanderous repors of vs to the King of Bantam: The effect whereof was, That wee were theeuers, and disordinate liuers, and such as did come for nothing but to deceiue them, or vse such violence, as time would giue vs leaue to execute; and that we durst not come into the Road among them, but kept two or three leagues from thence for feare of them. After our Generall had heard this report; it so moued him, that hee weighed anchor, sending the Hollanders word, that hee would come and ride close by their sides, and had the prowdest of them all that durst to put out a Piece of Ordnance vpon him; and withall sent them word, if they did goe about, either to braue, or to disgrace him, or his Country-men, hee would either sinke them, or sinke by their sides. There were of these Hollanders five Ships, the one of them of seuen or eight hundred Tuns, the rest of a farre smaller burthen. But of this message (notwithstanding we came and anchored close by them) we neuer had answer. But whereas the Hollanders, were wont to swagger and keepe great sturre on shore, all the time before our being there, they were so quiet, that wee could scarcely see one of them on Land.

The second of Nouember,
they depart
from Bantam.
Pedra Branca.
Three Prawes.

The second of Nouember, hauing seene our Country-men, wee tooke our leaue, and stood our course for Patane. And in our way, as wee sayled betweene the Chersonesus of Malacca and Pedra Branca, wee met with three Prawes, which being afraid of vs, anchored so neere vnto the shore, that we could not come neere them, either with our Ship or Pinnasse. Wherefore our Generall manned his Shalop with eightene men, and sent vs to them, to request them, that for his money hee might haue a Pilot to carrie his Ship to Pulo Timan, which is about some five dayes sayling from the place where wee met with them. But they seeing our Ship and Pinnasse at anchor, about a mile from them, and that they were not able to come any neerer them, told vs plainly, that none of them would goe with vs, and being at anchor weighed, and were going away: Seeing that, we began a fight with them all three: one of them we tooke in lesse then halfe an houre, whose men, which were seuentie three in all gate out of her, and ranne on shore. The other fought with vs all night, and in the morning about the breake of day, shee yeelded vnto vs. Our Generall came to vs in his Skiffe a little before she yeelded. They were laden with Benjamin, Storax, Pepper, China Dishes, and Pitch. The third Praw got from vs, while wee were fighting with the other. Our Generall would not suffer vs to take any thing from them, but only two of their men to Pilote vs to Pulo Timan, because they were of Iaua. These people of Iaua, are very resolute in a desperate case. Their chiefe Weapons are Iauelings, Darts, Daggers, and a kind of poysoned Arrowes, which they shoot in Trunkes. They haue some Harcubushes, but they are nothing expert in vsing them. They also haue Targets. The most part of them be Mahumetans. They had beene at Palimbam, and were going backe againe to Greece, a Port Towne on the North-East part of Iaua where they dwelled.

Certain Ilands.

The twelfth of Nouember, we dismissed them, standing our course toward Patane.

The six and twentieth of Nouember, we saw certaine Ilands bearing off vs North-west, which neither we, nor our new Pilots knew. But hauing a very contrary wind to stand our course for Patane, we thought it very necessary to search those Ilands for wood and water, hoping by that time we had watered, to haue a better wind.

The seuen and twentieth, we came to an Anchor within a mile of the shore, in sixteene fathomes good ground, on the South-side of these Ilands. Heere sending our Boat on shore, wee found some of them to bee Sunken Ilands, nothing aboue the water but the Trees or Rootes of them. In one of them we found a reasonable good watering place, and all the Ilands a Wilderness of Woods. It is a very vncomfortable place, hauing neither Fruites, Fowle, nor any kind of Beast wherewithall to refresh men. These Ilands we tooke to bee some of the broken Lands, lying South-east from the Ile of Bintam.

Pulo Laor.

The second of December, hauing taken in wood and water, we weighed Anchor, standing our course for Patane, as neere as a bad wind would giue vs leaue. For wee found the wind in these monethes to be very contrarie, keeping still at North, North-west, or North-East.

The twelfth day, neere vnto Pulo Laor, wee descryed three sayles, and sending our Pinnasse and Shalop after one of them, being the neereft vnto vs, we stayed with our ship, thinking to haue met with the other two: but in the night they stood away another course, so that we saw them no more. In the morning, we descryed our Pinnasse and Shalop, about foure leagues to Leeward, with with the other ship which they had taken, The wind and current being against them, they were not able to come vp to vs: we seeing that went to the n. When wee came, wee found her to be a Iuncke of Pan-Hange, being in burden aboue an hundred Tunnes, laden with Rice, Pepper and Tinne, going to Bantam in Iana. Our Generall not esteeming any such meane luggage, tooke as much Rice as serued for his prouision, and two little brasse Gunnes, and payd them royally for all: not taking any thing else from them, saue only one man to be our Pilot to Patane: who was willing to come along with vs, when he saw our Generall vse them so well. The other two Pilots, which wee tooke before out of one of the three Prawes, were vnskilfull men. Wherefore our Generall rewarding them, for the time that they had beene with him, sent them backe againe into their owne Countrey, by the Iuncke which wee tooke, that was going to Iana.

Another ship taken..

Pan Hange.

The thirteenth day we left her, standing our course for Pulo Timaon, ioyning on the King of Pan-Hange his Countrey. Here we were troubled very much with contrarie winds and currents. For the Sea runneth alwayes from the beginning of Nouember, to the beginning of Aprill, to the South-ward: and from Aprill to Nouember backe againe to the North-ward. The wind also in the aforesaid first five monethes is most commonly Northerly, and in the other seven moneths Southerly. All the ships of China, Patane, Ior, Pan-Hange, and other places which are to the North-ward, come to Bantam or Palimbam, when the Northerly Monsoon is come: and returne backe againe when the Southerly Monsoon commeth: Which Monsoons come in the monethes before mentioned. This being obserued you shall haue both wind and tyde with you. Here, as I said before, I found such contrary violent winds and currents, that I could not in three weekes get a league a head. This Countrey of Pan-Hange is a very plentifull Countrey, and full of Gentry, after the fashion of those Countries, store of shipping, and victuals very cheape. This Countrey lyeth betweene Ior and Patane, and reacheth on the sea-coast to Cape Tingeron, being a very high Cape, and the first Land-fall that the Caracks of Macao or Iuncks of China, or Camboia Prawes doe make as they come for Malacca, Iana, Sumatra, Iumbe, Ior, Palimbam, Grece, or any other parts to the South-ward.

Cape Tingeron.

Here as I stood for patane: about the twentie seven of December, I met with a Iuncke of the Iapons, which had been pyrating along the coast of China and Camboia. Their Pilote being dead, with ignorance and foule weather, they had cast away their ship on the sholds of the great Iland Borneo; and to enter into the Countrey of Borneo, they durst not: for the Iapons are not suffered to land in any Port in India with weapons: being accounted a people so desperate and daring, that they are feared in all places where they come. These people, their ship being splitted, with their Shalops entred this Iuncke, wherein I met them, which was of Patane, and killed all the people saue one old Pilot. This Iuncke was laden with Rice, which when they had possessed and furnished with such furniture, necessities and armes as they saued out of their sunken shippe, they shaped their course for Iapan: but the badnesse of their Iuncke, contrarie winds, and vnseasonableness of the yeare forced them to Leeward: which was the cause of mine vnluckie meeting them. After I had haled them, and made them come to Lee-ward, sending my Boat aboard them, I found them by their men and furniture very vnproportionable for such a ship as they were in; which was a Iuncke not aboue seuentie tunnes in burthen, and they were ninetie men, and most of them in too gallant a habit for Saylers, and such an equalitie of behaviour among them, that they seemed all fellowes: yet one among them there was that they called Capitaine, but gaue him little respect. I caused them to come to an Anchor, and vpon further examination I found their lading to be only Rice; and for the most part spilt with wet: for their ship was leake both vnder and aboue water. Vpon questioning with them I vnderstood them to be men of Warre, that had pillaged on the Coast of China and Camboia, and, as I said before, had cast away their ship on the sholds of Borneo. Here wee rood at Anchor vnder a small Iland, neere to the Ile of Bintam, two dayes entertayning them with good vsage not taking any thing from them: thinking to haue gathered by their knowledge, the place and passage of certaine ships, on the Coast of China to haue made my Voyage. But these Rogues being desperate in winds and fortunes, being hopelesse in that paltrie Iuncke euer to returne to their Countrey, resolved with themselves either to gaine my shippe, or to lose their liues. And vpon mutuall courtesies with gifts and feasting betweene vs, sometimes five and twentie or sixe and twentie of their chiefeest came aboard: whereof I would not suffer aboue sixe to haue weapons. Their was neuer the like number of our men aboard their Iuncke. I willed Capitaine Iohn Davis in the morning to possesse himselfe of their weapons, and to put the Companie before Mast, and to leaue some Guard on their weapons, while they searched in the Rice, doubting that by searching and finding that which would dislike them, they might suddenly set vpon my men, and put them to the Sword: as the sequell proued. Capitaine Davis being beguiled with their humble semblance, would not possesse himselfe of their weapons, though I sent twice of purpose from my shippe to will him to doe it. They passed all the day, my men searching in the Rice, and they looking on: at the Sunne-setting, after long search and nothing found, saue a little Storax and Beniamin: they seeing oportunitie, and talking to the rest of their Companie which were in my ship, being neere

to their Luncke, they resolved, at a watch-word betweene them, to set vpon vs resolutely in both ships. This being concluded, they suddenly killed and draue ouer-boord, all my men that were in their ship; and those which were aboard my ship sallied out of my Cabbin, where they were put, with such weapons as they had, finding certaine Targets in my Cabbin, and other things that they vsed as weapons. My selfe being aloft on the Decke, knowing what was likely to follow, leapt into the waste, where, with the Boate Swaines, Carpenter and some few more, wee kept them vnder the halfe-decke. At their first comming forth of the Cabbin, they met Captaine Davis comming out of the Gun-roome, whom they pulled into the Cabbin, and giuing him fixe or seuen mortall wounds, they thrust him out of the Cabbin before them. His wounds were so mortall, that he dyed as soone as he came into the waste. They pressed so fiercely to come to vs, 10 as we receiuing them on our Pikes, they would gather on our Pikes with their hands to reach vs with their Swords. It was neere halfe an houre before we could stone them backe into the Cabbin: In which time we had killed three or foure of their Leaders. After they were driuen into the Cabbin, they fought with vs at the least foure houres before we could suppress them, often fying the Cabbin, burning the bedding, and much other stuffe that was there. And had we not with two Demy-culuerings, from vnder the halfe-decke, beaten downe the bulke head and the pumpe of the ship, we could not haue suppressed them from burning the ship. This Ordnance being charged with Crosse-barres, Bullets, and Case-shot, and bent close to the bulke head, so violently marred therewith boords and splinters, that it left but one of them standing of two 20 and twentie. Their legs, armes, and bodies were so torne, as it was strange to see, how the shot had massacred them. In all this conflict they neuer would desire their liues, though they were hopelesse to escape: such was the desperatenesse of these Iaponians. Only one leapt ouer-boord, which after ward swamme to our ship againe, and asked for grace, wee tooke him in, and asked him what was their purpose? He told vs, that they meant to take our shippe, and to cut all our throates. He would say no more, but desired that he might be cut in pieces.

The next day, to wit, the eight and twentieth of December, we went to a little Iland to the Leeward off vs. And when we were about fife miles from the Land, the Generall commanded his people to hang this Iaponian: but he brake the Rope, and fell into the Sea. I cannot tell whether he swamme to the land or not. We tooke our course right to the little fore-said Iland, and came there to an Anchor the thirtieth of December. We remained there three dayes to mend our 30 Boat, and to take in wood and water. In this Iland we found a ship of Patane, out of which we tooke the Captaine, and asked him, whether the ships of China were come to Patane, or no? He told vs that they were not yet come, but that they would come thither within few dayes. We made the Captaine of that ship to be our Pilot, because he knew very well to what place the Chinise ships would come.

The tenth of Ianuary we purposed to stay their, till it pleased God, that we should meete the Chinise ships.

The twelfth of Ianuarie, one of our Mates climbed vp to the top of the Mast, and descryed two ships which came toward vs: but because of the wind they were forced to goe to the Leeward of the Iland. As soone as we had sight of them wee weighed Anchor, and made toward 40 them. And we fetched vp the greatest of them the twelfth of Ianuarie in the night. We fought a little with them, and boorded them, and brought them to an Anchor.

The next day, to wit, the thirtieth of Ianuarie we vnloaded some of their goods, to wit, raw Silke and other Silkes. They had fiftie Tunnes of Siluer of their Countrey: but we tooke little or none of it; because we had good hope, that we should meete with the other Chinise ships. After we had taken some of their Silkes, we let them depart the fifteenth of Ianuary: and gaue them twice as much, as wee had taken from them. And casting them off, wee tooke our course backe againe to China Bata: but we could not fetch it vp, because we had contrarie wind; so that we were forced to put Lee-ward vnto two small Ilands, which they of Iana call Pulo Sumatra: 50 where we came to an Anchor the two and twentieth of Ianuarie.

The foure and twentieth day, as we rode at Anchor there arose a great storme of wind, with which our Cable brake, so that we were forced to put into the neereft Creeke.

The second of February, fife Holland ships met with vs sayling homeward, which put into the same Roade where wee were. Captaine Warwicke was Generall of these ships. Hee sent to our Generall to dine with him. Our Generall went to him. He told vs that our Englische Merchants in Bantam were in great perill, and that still they looked for nothing else, then that the King of Iana would assault them, because we had taken the China ship, whereby the King of Bantam had lost his custome. Wherefore Captaine Warwicke requested our Generall, thar hee would cease to goe any further, and would sayle home vnto England with him. Our Generall answered, That hee had not as yet made his Voyage, and that therefore hee would not returne, vntill it should 60 please God to fend him somewhat to make vp the Game. The Hollanders perceiuing that they could not perswade our General to giue ouer his purpose, departed from vs the third of Februarie.

Our Generall considering, that if he should proceed on his Voyage, it would be very dangerous for the English Merchants which were resident in those parts, and seeing that hee had but two Anchors and two Cables to helpe himselfe withall, thought good to repaire his ships, and to returne home with that poore Voyage that he had made.

• for

When our ships were readie, and that we had taken in wood and water, wee hoysed vp our sayles the fift of February to returne for England. They returne home.

The seuenth of Aprill we had sight of the Cape of Bona Esperanza, after wee had passed a great storme. April 7. 1606.

The seuenteenth of Aprill we came to the Ile of Santa Helena, where we watered, and found refreshment, as Wine and Goates, which we our selues killed. In the said Iland are many wilde Swine and Goates. There are also great store of Partridges, Turkie Cockes, and Ginnie Hennes, This Iland is not inhabited. VVe departed from thence the third of May. Santa Helena.

The fourteenth, we passed vnder the Equinodtiall Line.

The seuen and twentieth of Iune, we arriued in Milford Hauen in Wales. May. They arriued in Milford Hauen in Wales.

The ninth of Iuly, we came to an Anchor in Portsmouth Roade, where all our Companie were dismissed. And heere wee ended our Voyage, hauing beene out vpon the same full nineteene moneths, in the year 1606. They came to Portsmouth.

CHAP. III.

The first Voyage made to East-India by Master JAMES LANCASTER, now Knight, for the Merchants of London, Anno, 1600. With foure tall Shippes, (to wit) the Dragon, the Hector, the Ascension and Susan, and a Victualler called the Guest.

¶ I.

The preparation to this Voyage, and what befell them in the way till they departed from Saldania.

THe Merchants of London, in the yeare of our Lord 1600. ioyned together, and made a stocke of seuentie two thousand pounds, to bee employed in Ships and Merchandizes, for the discouery of a Trade in the East-India, to bring into this Realme, Spices and other Commodities. They bought foure great Ships to bee employed in this Voyage: the Dragon, of the burthen of six hundred tunne, the Hector, of the burthen of three hundred tunnes, the Ascension, of the burthen of two

If this Priuilege be found vnprofitable for the Realme then within two yeares warning giuen vnder the Priuie Seale, the same shall bee void, but if it shall bee found beneficiall, then the same to bee renewed with some additions two hundred and threescore tunnes. These ships they furnished with men, victuals and munition for twentie monethes, and sent in them, in Merchandise and Spanish money, to the value of seven and twentie thousand pounds: all the rest of their stocke was spent and consumed about the shippes, and other necessities appertayning to them: with money lent to the Mariners and Saylers before-hand, that went vpon the Voyage.

The Merchants were Suters to her Maiestie, who gaue them her friendly Letters of commendation, written to diuers Princes of India, offering to enter into a league of Peace and Amicitie with them, the Copies of which Letters shall hereafter appeare in their places. And because no great action can well be carryed, and accomplished without an absolute authoritie of Iustice: Shee granted to the Generall of their Fleet Master James Lancaster, for his better command and 10 gouernment, a Commission of Martiall Law.

The thirteenth of February,

The said Master James Lancaster the Generall, was placed in the Dragon, the greatest shippe being Admirall: Master John Middleton Captaine in the Hector, the Vice-admirall: Master William Brand chiefe Gouvernour in the Ascension: and Master John Heyward in the Susan: and more in euery of the said ships, three Merchants to succeed one the other, if any of them should be taken away by death.

These ships were readie and departed from Wolwich in the Riuer of Thames, the thirteenth of February after the English accompt, 1600. with foure hundred and fourescore men in them. In the Dragon, two hundred and two men. In the Hector, an hundred an eight. In the Ascension, fourescore and two. And in the Susan, fourescore and eight. The Guest, a ship of a hundred and 20 thirtie tunnes, was added as a Victualler.

These ships stayed so long in the Riuer of Thames, and in the Downes for want of wind, that it was Easter day before they arriued at Dartmouth, where they spent fise or sixe dayes in taking in their bread and certaine other prouisions appointed for them. From thence they departed the eighteenth of Aprill, 1601. and roade in Tor Bay, till the twentieth in the morning. While wee roade there, the Generall sent aboard all the shippes, instructions, for their better company keeping, at their comming to the Seas: and further gaue directions, if any of the Fleet should bee separated the one from the other, by stormes of wind, tempests, or other casualties, what * places to repaire vnto, for their meeting together againe.

May the fift.

The second of Aprill, 1601. the wind came faire and wee hoysed our Anchors, and departed 30 out of Tor Bay, directing our course towards the Ilands of the Canaria. The wind holding faire, the fift of May in the morning, we had sight of Alegranza, the Northermost Iland of the Canarias, and directed our course betweene Fortuentura, and the Grand Canaria: and comming to the South part of the Grand Canaria, thinking to water there, wee fell into the Calmes, which proceed by reason of the high-land that lyeth so neere the Sea-side.

The seuenth of May, about three of the clocke in the afternoone, wee departed from the Grand Canaria, hauing the wind at North-east, and we directed our course South-west by South, and South South-west, till wee came into 21.  $\frac{1}{2}$ . degrees. From the eleuenth to the twentieth, our course was for the most part South, till we came into eight degrees: the wind being alwayes Northerly, and North-east. In this heighth, we found the Calmes and contrarie winds, which vpon 40 this Coast of Ginney, at this time of the yeare, are very familiar with many sudden gustes of wind, stormes, thunder and lightening, very fearefull to be seene and dangerous to the shippes: vnlesse a diligent care be had, that all sayles be stricken downe vpon the sudden, perceiuing the ayre neuer so little to change or alter. And yet many times, although the Masters of ships were carefull, and looked vnto it with great diligence: the suddennesse was such, that it could hardly be preuented. From the twentieth of May, till the one and twentieth of Iune, wee lay the most part becalmed, and with contrarie winds at South, and turning vp and downe with this contrary wind, with much adoe, we got into two degrees of the North side of the Line: where wee espyed a ship, to the which, the Generall gaue chase, commanding all the rest of the ships to follow him: and by two of the clocke in the afternoone, we had fet her vp and tooke her. She was 50 of the Citie of Viana in Portugall, and came from Lisbone in the companie of two Carrackes, and three Gallions bound for the East-India, which ships she had lost at Sea. The three Gallions were ships of warre, and went to keepe the Coast of the East-India, from being traded with other Nations.

Wee tooke out of her an hundred sixe and fortie Buts of Wine, an hundred threescore and sixteene Iarres of Oyle, twelue Barrels of Oyle, and fise and fittie Hogsheads and Fats of Meale, which was a great helpe to vs in the whole Voyage after. The Generall diuided these Victualls indifferently to all the ships, to euery one his proportion without partialitie.

The last of Iune about mid-night, we doubled the Line, and lost the sight of the North-star, hauing the wind at South-east, and we held our course South South-west, and doubled the Cape 60 of Saint Augustine some sixe and twentie leagues to the Eastwards. The twentieth of Iuly, we were shot into nineteene degrees, fortie minutes to the Southward of the Line, the wind enlarging daily to the East-ward. Here wee discharged the Guest, the ship that went along with vs to carry the Prouisions, that our foure ships could not take in in England. After wee had discharged her, her, we tooke her Mafts, Sayles and Yards, and brake downe her higher buildings for fire-wood, and so left her floating in the Sea : and followed our course to the South-ward. The foure and twentieth of Iuly, we passed the Tropick of Capricorne, the wind being North-east by North, we holding our course East South-east. Now, by reason of our long being vnder the Line, (which proceeded of our late comming out of England, for the time of the yeare was too farre spent by six or seuen weekes, to make a quicke Nauigation) many of our men fell sicke. Therefore the nine and twentieth of Iuly being in 28.  $\frac{1}{2}$ . degrees, hee wrote a remembrance to the Gouvernour of each ship, either to fetch Saldania or Saint Helena for refreshing.

Thus following on our course, the first of August we came into the height of thirtie degrees, August.

- 10 South of the Line : at which time we met the South-west wind, to the great comfort of all our people. For, by this time, very many of our men were fallen sicke of the Scuruey in all our ships, and vnlesse it were in the Generals ship only, the other three were so weake of men, that they could hardly handle the sayles. This wind held faire, till wee came within two hundred and fiftie leagues of the Cape Buena Esperanza, and then came cleane contrarie against vs to the East : and so held some fiftene or sixteene dayes to the great discomfort of our men. For now the few whole men we had, beganne also to fall sicke, so that our weaknesse of men was so great, that in some of the ships, the Merchants tooke their turnes at the Helme : and went into the top to take in the top-sayles, as the common Mariners did. But God (who sheweth mercy in all distresses) sent vs a faire wind againe, so that the ninth of September wee came to Saldania, where the Generall before the rest bare in, and came to an anchor, and hoysed out his Boats to helpe the rest of the ships.

- For now the state of the other three was such, that they were hardly able to let fall an Anchor, to saue themselves withall. The Generall went aboard of them, and carryed good store of men, and hoysed out their Boats for them, which they were not able to doe of themselves. And the reason why the Generals men stood better in health then the men of other ships, was this : he brought to Sea with him certaine Bottles of the Iuice of Limons, which hee gaue to each one, as long as it would last, three spoonfulls euery morning fasting : not suffering them to eate any thing after it till noone. This Iuice worketh much the better, if the partie keepe a short Dyet, and wholly refraine salt meate, which salt meate, and long being at the Sea is the only cause of the breeding of this Disease. By this meanes the Generall cured many of his men, and preserued the rest : so that in his ship (hauing the double of men that was in the rest of the ships) he had not so many sicke, nor lost so many men as they did, which was the mercie of God to vs all. After the Generall had holpen the rest of the ships to hoysed out their Boats, they began all to be greatly comforted. Then, he himselfe went presently a-land to seeke some refreshing for our sicke and weake men, where hee met with certaine of the Countrey people, and gaue them diuers trifles, as Kniues, and peeces of old Iron, and such like, and made signes to them to bring him downe Sheepe and Oxen. For he spake to them in the Cattels Language, which was neuer changed at the confusion of Babell, which was Moath for Oxen, and Kine, and Baa for Sheepe : which Language the people vnderstood very well without any Interpreter. After hee had sent the people away very well contented with their presents, and kind vsage order was presently giuen, that certaine of euery ships companie should bring their sayles a-land, and build Tents with them for their sicke men : and also to make fortifications of defence, if by any occasion the people should take any conceit of offence against vs, and theret y offer vs any violence. And the Generall prescribed an order for buying and selling with the people, which was, that at such times as they should come downe with the Cattell, only five or sixe men, appointed for that purpose, should goe to deale with them and the rest (which should neuer bee vnder thirtie Muskets and Pikes) should not come neere the Market, by eight or ten score at the neereft : and alwayes to stand in their ranke in a readinesse, with their Muskets in their Rests, what occasion soeuer should befall. And this order was most strictly obserued and kept, that no man durst once goe to speake with any of the people without speciall leaue, and I take this to be the cause, why we liued in so great friendship and amitie with them, contrary to that which lately had befallen the Hollanders, which had five or six of their men slaine by their treacherie.

- The third day after our comming into this Bay of Saldania, the people brought downe Beefes and Muttons, which we bought of them for pieces of old Iron hoopes, as two pieces of eight inches a peece, for an Oxe, and one piece of eight inches for a Sheepe, with which they seemed to be well contented. Within ten or twelue dayes, we bought of them a thousand Sheepe, and two and fortie Oxen, and might haue bought many more, if wee would. Now within twelue dayes they ceased to bring vs any more Cattell, but the people many times came downe to vs afterward, and when we made them signes for more Sheepe, they would point vs to those wee had bought, which the Generall caused to be kept grazing vpon the Hilles about our Tents, and was the cause (as we iudged) they thought we would haue inhabited there, and therefore brought vs no more. But (God be thanked) we were well stored to satisfie our need, and might then, very well forbear buying. These Oxen are full as bigge as ours, and were very fat, and the sheepe many of them much bigger, but of a very haire wooll, yet, of exceeding good flesh, fat and sweet, sweet, and to our thinking, much better then our sheepe in England. The people of this place are all of a tawny * colour, of a reasonable stature, swift of foot, and much giuen to picke and steale: their speech is wholly vttered through the throate, and they clocke with their tongues in such sort, that in seuen weekes, which wee remained heere in this place, the sharpest wit among vs, could not learne one word of their language: and yet the people would soone vnderstand any figure wee made to them.

While wee stayed heere in this Bay, wee had so royall refreshing, that all our men recovered their health and strength, onely foure or fve excepted. But, before our comming in, and in this place, wee lost out of all our Ships one hundred and fve men, and yet wee made account, wee were stronger at our departure out of this Bay, then wee were at our comming out of England, 10 our men were so well inured to the Southerne Climates.

HE foure and twentieth of October, the Generall caused all our Tents to bee taken 20 downe and our men to repaire aboard the Ships: and being fitted both of wood and fresh water; The nine and twentieth of October, wee put to Sea, and went out by a small Iland, that lieth in the mouth of the said Bay: which is exceeding full of Seales and Pengwines, so that if there were no other refreshing, one might very well refresh there.ouer the Bay of Saldania standeth a very high Hill, flat like a Table, and is called the Table: such another plaine marke to find an Harbour in, is not in all that Coast, for it is easie to be seene seuenteen or eightene leagues into the Sea.

The Cape doubled.
Nouemb. 26.

Sunday, the first of Nouember in the morning, wee doubled the Cape of Buena Esperança, hauing the wind West North-West a great gale.

The fixe and twentieth of Nouember, wee fell with the Head-land of the Iland of Saint Lau- 30
rence, somewhat to the East of Cape Sebastian, and being within fve miles of the shoare, wee sounded, and found twenty fve fathome: the variation of the Compasse, being little more or lesse sixteene degrees. For in an East and West course, the variation of the Compasse helpeth much, and especially in this Voyage.

Decemb. 15.

Ile of Cirne, or
D. Rodrigues.

From the fixe and twentieth of Nouember, till the fifteenth of December, wee plyed to the Eastward, the neereest our course wee could lie, alwayes struing to haue gotten to the Iland of Cirne, which in some Cardes is called Diego Rodrigues, but wee found the wind alwaies after our comming to the Iland of Saint Laurence, at East, and East South-East, and East North-East, so that wee could not obtaine it: and to strue long in hope of change of windes wee could not, for now our men began againe to fall sicke of the Scuruy. Then, the Captaine of the Vice-Admi- 40 rall called to the Generall, and thought it best to beare into the Bay of Antongile, and there to refresh our men with Oranges and Limons, to cleere our selues of this disease, which was by him and the whole counsell called for that purpose well approoued.

Iles of S. Mary and S. Laurence

The seuenteenth of December, wee had sight of the Southermost part of the Iland of Saint Mary, and the next day wee anchored betweene Saint Mary, and the great Iland of Saint Lau*rence*: and sent our Boats aland to Saint Maries, where wee had some store of Limons and Oranges, which were precious for our diseased men, to purge their bodies of the Scuruy. Now, as we roade heere, buying Oranges and Limons, there arose vpon vs a very great storme, so that three of our Ships were put from their Anchors: but within some sixteen houres, the storme ceased, and the ships returned, and weighed their Anchors againe. The Generall thought it not good to make 50 any longer stay there, seeing the vncertaintie of the weather, and that there was vpon this Iland so little refreshing to be had: only these Orenge and Limons, a little Goates milke, and some small quantitie of Rice: we sawe onely one Cow, and that they draue away, as soone as they saw vs come on Land. Seeing this place so dangerous to ride in, the Generall gaue present order to sayle toward the Bay of Antongile, the time of the yeere being spent, the Easterly winds come against vs, and our men sicke.

People of S.
Marie

This Iland of S. Mary is high land, and full of woods, the people are blacke, very handsome and tall men, and of curled haire, onely before in their foreheads they stroke it vp, as the women doe here in England: so that it standeth some three inches vpright. They are wholly without apparell, onely their priuy parts couered, they are very tractable to conuerse withall, yet seeme 60 to be very valiant. The most of their food is Rice, and some Fish: yet at our being there, wee could buy but small store of Rice, for the time of their store was farre spent, and their Haruest was at hand. There are two or three watering places on the North part of this Iland: but none of them very commodious, yet with some trauell there is water enough to be had.

The

The twentieth third of December, we departed from this Iland of S. Mary, and the twentieth fifth being Christmas day, we came into the Baye of Antongill, and came to an anchor in eight fatham water, betweene a small Iland, and the Mayne, lying in the bottome of the Baye, a very good, and a safe roade. But, the best riding, is neerest vnder a small Iland, for the defence of the winde that bloweth there: for while we abode in this Baye, there blew an exceeding great storme, and those of our shippes, that roade neerest the small Iland, beeing vnder the wind sped best: for two of our ships droue with three anchors ahead, the ground being Ozy, and not firme. At our going a land in the little Iland, we perceiued by writing vpon the rockes, of five Holland ships which had beene there, and were departed about two monethes before our comming in: and had had some sickness among their men, and had lost (as we perceiued) betweene one hundred and fiftie, and two hundred men while they roade in that place.

Decemb. 25.

The next day after our comming to an anchor, we went a land to the Mayne Iland, where the people presently repaired to vs, and made vs signes of the five Holland ships departed, and that they had bought the most part of their prouision. Yet, they entred into barter with vs, for Rice and Hennes, Oranges and Limons, and another fruit called Plantans, and held all at high rates, and brought but a pedlars quantitie. Our market was neere to a great riuer, into which we went with our boats, and some men that were appointed to be buyers, went ashore: the rest remained in the boates, alwaies readie with their weapons in their hands: and the boates some fifteene or twentieth yards off into the water, where the people could not wade to them: and were readie at all times (if they a shore had had any need) to take them in. So, we trifled off some daies, before (as aforesaid) we could bring them to any reall trade: for all these people of the South, and East parts, are very subtil, and craftie, in their bartering, buying and selling, that vnlesse you hold a neere hand with them, you shall hardly bring them to trade in any plaine sort. For, they will list you continually to giue a little more, and then, no man will sell without that price: so that you must not inlarge to any one, more then another: for, in so doing, all will haue that price, or none. The Generall seeing this, commanded measures to be made of (almost) a quart, and appointed how many glasse beades should be giuen for euery measure: and he that would not deale in this manner, should not deale at all. The like order was set downe for Oranges, Limons, and Plantans, how many for euery beade, or else not. Our Merchants after a little holding off, consented, and our dealing was francke, and round, without any contradiction, or words. So, that while we abode heere, we brought 15.  $\frac{1}{4}$ . tunnes of Rice, fortie or fiftie bushels of their Pease, and Beanes, great store of Oranges, Limons, and Plantans, and eight Beeues, with many Hennes. While we roade in this Baye, we reared a Pinnace, which we brought in peeces in our shippes out of England: and cut downe trees, of which there were very great, and great store, which trees we sawed out in boordes, and sheathed her. This Pinnace was of some eightene tunnes, and very necessary, and fit to goe before our shippes, at our comming into India. In the time we stayed heere, there died out of the Generalls shippe, the Masters Mate, the Preacher, and the Surgeon, with some tenne other common men. And out of the Viceadmirall there died the Master, with some other two. And out of the Ascension, by a very great mischance, were slaine the Captaine, and the Boatswaines mate. For, as the Masters Mate, out of the Generalls shippe was carried a land to be buried, the Captaine of the Ascension tooke his boate to goe a land to his buriall: and as it is the order of the sea, to shoote off certaine peeces of Ordnance at the buriall of any Officer, the Gunner of the Ordnance shotte off three peeces, and the bullets being in them, one stroke the Ascensions boate, and slue the Captaine, and the Boatswaines Mate starke dead, so that they that went to see the buriall of another, were both buried there themselves. Those that died heere, died most of the Flux, which (in our opinion) came with the waters which we dranke: for it was the time of winter, when it rained very much, which caused great floods to ouerflowe the Countrie: so that the waters were not wholesome, as in most places in these hot countries, they are not, in the times of their raines. This disease also of the Flux, is often taken, by going open, and cold in the stomacke, which our men would often doe when they were hot.

The want of this discretion in Virginia (while one out of need, or seeming bountie, would giue a greater price then another, to the Strangers for their commodities) so heighthened the prizes, and made them ouer-value their corne, &c. that it proued much hindrance to the Plantation. A Pinnace reared.

How vaine a thing is Man?

We set saile out of this Baye the sixth of March, and held on our course toward the India, and the sixteenth we fell with an Iland called Rogue-Pize, which lyeth in 10.  $\frac{1}{4}$ . degrees, to the South of the Equinoctiall Line. To this Iland the Generall sent his boate, to see whether there were any safe riding for the shippes: but the boate (for the most part) found deepe water, where the shippes could not safely ride. As we coasted along this Iland, it seemed very faire, and pleasant, exceeding full of foule, and Coco nut-trees: and there came from the land such a pleasant smell, as if it had beene a garden of flowers. And surely, if there be any good riding for shippes in this Iland, it must needs be a place of very great refreshing. For as our boates went neere the land, they saw great store of fish, and the foules came wondering about them in such sort, that with the Oares, wherewith the Mariners rowed, they killed many which were the fattest, and the best that we tasted all the voyage. And of these, there was such exceeding great abundance, that many more shippes then we had with vs, might haue refreshed themselves therewith.

Plant.

The thirtieth of March 1602. being in sixe degrees to the South of the Line, wee happened vpon a ledge of Rockes, and looking ouer-boord, and seeing them vnder the shippe about hue fathome deepe, it much amazed vs, falling vpon the sudden, and vnexpected. Then, as wee were presently casting about the ship, wee found eight fathome: and so held on our course East. One of our men, being in the top saw an Iland South-east of vs, some fiue or sixe leagues off, being but low land: this we iudged to be the Iland of Candu, although in our course we could not (by computation) find our selues so farre shot to the Eastward. Bearing on our course some thirteene or fourteene leagues, we fell vpon another flat of Rockes. Then wee cast about to the Southward, and sayling some twelue leagues, found other Rockes: so that, prouing diuers wayes, wee found flats of Rockes round about vs: and twentie and thirtie, and in some places, forty and fiftie fathome water in the middest of the flats. Here we were for two dayes and an halfe in exceeding danger, and could find no way to get out. But at last, wee resolved to seeke to the Northward, and in sixe degrees, fortie three minutes (God bee thanked) wee found sixe fathome water: the Pinnasse alwayes going before vs, and sounding with commandement, to make signes what depth she had, that thereby we might follow her. Thus (thanks be to God) being deliuered out of this pound, we followed our course with variable windes, till the ninth of May about foure of the clocke in the afternoone. At which time we had sight of the Ilands of Nicubar, and bare in, and anchored on the North-side of the Channell. But the wind changing to the South-west, wee were forced to hoysse our Anchors, and to beare ouer to the South-side of the Channell: and so came to an Anchor, vnder a small Iland, that lyeth on the said shore. Here wee had fresh water, and some Coco Nuts, other refreshing wee had little. Yet the people came aboard our shippes in long Canoas, which would hold twentie men, and aboue in one of them: and brought Gummes to sell in stead of Amber, and therewithall, deceiued diuers of our men: For, these people of the East, are wholly giuen to deceit. They brought also Hennes and Coco Nuts to sell, but held them very deare: so that we bought few of them. We staid here ten dayes, placing of our Ordnance, and trimming of our ships: because we would be in all readinesse at our arriual, at our first Port, which we were not (now) farre from.

The twentieth of April, in the morning, we set saile to goe toward Sumatra, but the wind blew so hard at South, South West, and the Currant was against vs, that we could not proceed: but beating vp and downe, our ships fell into two leakes, so that wee were forced to goe to the Iland of Sombrero, some ten or twelue leagues to the Northward of Nicobar. Heere, we in the Admirall lost an anchor, for the ground is foule, and groweth full of counterfeit Corall, and some Rockes: which cut our Cable asunder, so that we could not recouer our anchor.

The people of these Ilands goe naked, hauing onely the priuities bound vp in a peece of Linnen cloath, which commeth about their middles like a girdle, and so betweene their twist. They are all of a tauny colour, and annoint their faces with diuers colours; they are well limmed, but very fearefull: for, none of them would come aboard our Shippes, or enter into our Boates. The Generall reported, that he had seene some of their Priests, or Sacrificers, all apparelled, but close to their bodies, as if they had beene sewed in it: and vpon their heads, a paire of hornes turning backward, with their faces painted greene, blacke and yellow, and their hornes also painted with the same colour. And behind them, vpon their buttocks, a taile hanging downe, very much like the manner, as in some painted cloathes, we paint the Diuell in our Countrey. He demaunding, wherefore they went in that attire, answer was made him, that in such forme the Diuell appeared to them in their sacrifices: and therefore the Priests, his seruants were so apparelled. In this Iland grow trees, which for their talnesse, greatnesse, and straightnesse, will serue the biggest shippe in all our Fleete, for a maine Mast: and this Iland is full of those trees.

Heere, likewise we found vpon the sands, by the Sea side, a small twigge growing vp to a young tree, and offering to plucke vp the same, it shruke downe into the ground: and sinketh, vnlesse you hold very hard. And being plucked vp, a great Worme is the roote of it: and looke how the tree groweth in greatnesse, the Worme diminisheth. Now, as soone as the worme is wholly turned into the tree, it rooteth in the ground, and so groweth to be great. This transformation was one of the strangest wonders that I saw in all my trauailes. For, this tree, being plucked vp little, the leaues stripped off, and the pill, by that time it was dry, turned into an hard stone, much like to white Corall: so that this worme was twice transformed into different natures: Of these we gathered, and brought home many.

Their entertainment and trade at Achen.

29. Of May.

HE nine and twentieth of May, we set saile from this Iland of Sombrero, and the second of Iune, we had sight of the land of Sumatra, and the fifth of Iune we came to anchor in the Roade of Achen, some two miles off the Citie. Where we found sixteene or eightene saile of shippes of diuers Nations, some Gosserats, some of Bengala, some of Calicut, called Malabares, some Pegues, and some Patanyes, which came to trade there.

There came aboard of vs two Holland Merchants, which had beene left there behind their shippes, to learne the language, and manners of the Country. These told vs, we should be very welcome to the King, who was desirous to intertaine strangers: and that the Queene of England was very famous in those parts, by reason of the warres, and great victories, which she had gotten against the King of Spaine. The same day, the Generall sent Captaine John Middleton, Captaine of the Vice-admirall, with foure or fife Gentlemen, to attend vpon him to the King: to declare vnto him, that he was sent from the Generall of those shippes, who had a message, and a letter, from the most famous Queene of England, to the most worthy King of Achen, and Sumatra. And that it would please his royall Maiesty, to giue to the said messenger, audience to deliuer his message, and letter: with a sufficient warrant for the safety of him and his people, according to the law of Nations, holden in that behalfe. This messenger was very kindly entertained by the King, who when he had deliuered his message, gladly granted his request, and communed with him about many questions: and after, caused a royall banquet to be made him. And at his departure gaue a robe, and a Tucke of Calico wrought with Gold, which is the manner of the Kings of this place, to those he will grace with his speciall fauour. And withall, sent his commendations to the Generall, willing him to stay one day aboard his ships, to rest himselfe after his comming from the disquiet seas: and the next day to come a land, and haue kind audience, and franke leaue, with as great assurance, as if he were in the kingdome of the Queene his Mistris. And, if he doubted of any thing of this his royall word, such honourable pledges should be sent him, for his further assurance, as he should rest very well satisfied therewith.

The Fame of
Q. Elizabeth.

The third day, the Generall went a land very well accompanied, with some thirtie men or more, to attend vpon him. And first at his landing, the Holland Merchants met him, and carried him home to their house, as it was appointed. For as yet, the Generall would make choyce of no house of his owne, till he had spoken with the King: but stayed at the Hollanders house, till a Noble man came from the King, who saluted the Generall very kindly, and declared, that he came from his Maiestie, and represented his person. Then, he demaunded the Queenes letter of the Generall, which he refused to deliuer: saying, he would deliuer it to the King himselfe. For it was the order of Embassadors, in those parts of the world from whence he came, to deliuer their letters to the Princes owne hands: and not to any that did represent the Kings person. So, he demaunded to see the superscription, which the Generall shewed him, and he read the same, and looked very earnestly vpon the seale, tooke a note of the superscription, and did likewise write her Maiesties name: and then, with courtesie tooke his leaue, and repaired to the Court, to tell the King what had passed. Who presently sent sixe great Elephants, with many Trumpets, Drums, and Streamers, with much people, to accompany the Generall to the Court: so that the presse was exceeding great. The biggest of these Elephants was about thirteene, or foureteene foote high, which had a small Castle, like a Coach vpon his back, couered with Crimson Veluet. In the middle thereof, was a great Basen of Gold, and a peece of Silke exceeding richly wrought to couer it: vnder which her Maiesties letter was put. The Generall was mounted vpon another of the Elephants: some of his attendants rode, others went a foote. But, when he came to the Court gate, there a Noble man stayed the Generall, till he had gone in, to know the Kings further pleasure. But, presently the said Nobleman returned, and willed the Generall to enter in. And when the Generall came to the Kings presence, he made his obedience after the manner of the Country: declaring that hee was sent from the most mightie Queene of England, to congratulate with his Highnesse, and treat with him concerning a peace and amitie with his Maiestie, if it pleased him to intertaine the same. And therewithall began to enter into further discourse, which the King brake off, saying: I am sure you are weary of the long trauaile you haue taken, I would haue you to sit downe and refresh your selfe. You are very welcome, and heere you shall haue whatsoeuer you will in any reasonable conditions demaund, for your Princess sake: for she is worthy of all kindnesse, and franke conditions, being a Princess of great Noblenesse, for Fame speaketh so much of her. The Generall perceiuing the Kings mind, deliuered him the Queenes letter, which he willingly receiued: and deliuered the same to a Noble man standing by him. Then the Generall proceeded to deliuer him his present, which was a Basen of Silver, with a Fountaine in the midst of it, weighing two hundred and fife ounces, a great standing Cup of Silver, a rich Looking-Glasse, an Head-peece with a Plumé of Feathers, a case of very faire Dagges, a rich wrought embroidered Belt to hang a Sword in, and a Fan of Feathers. All these were receiued in the Kings presence, by a Nobleman of the Court: onely, he tooke into his owne hand, the Fanne of Feathers: and caused one of his Women to fanne him therewithall, as a thing, that most pleased him of all the rest. The Generall was commanded to sit downe in the Kings presence, as the manner is, vpon the ground: where was a very great banquet prouided. All the dishes, in which the meate was serued in, were, either of pure Gold, or of another Mettall, which (among them) is of great estimation, called Tam-bayke.

baycke, which groweth of Gold and Brasse together. In this banquet, the King (as he sate aloft in a Gallery, about a fathome from the ground) dranke oft to the Generall in their Wine, which they call Racke. This Wine is made of Rice, and is as strong as any of our Aquanita: a little will serue to bring one asleepe. The Generall, after the first draught, dranke either water mingled therewithall, or pure water, the King gaue him leaue so to doe: for the Generall craued his pardon, as not able to drinke so strong drinke. After this feast was done, the King caused his Damofels to come forth, and dance, and his Women to play Musicke vnto them: and these Women were richly attired, and adorned with Bracelets and Iewels: and this they account a great fauour, for these are not vsually seene of any, but such as the King will greatly honour. The King also gaue vnto the Generall, a fine white Robe of Calico, richly wrought with Gold, and a very faire girdle of Turkey worke, and two Creses, which are a kind of Daggers, all 10 which a Noble man put on in the Kings presence: and in this manner he was dismissed the Court, with very great curtesies, and one sent along with him, to make choyce of an house in the Citie, where the Generall thought most meete. But, at this time he refused this kindnesse, and rather chose to goe aboard his Ships: and left the King to consider of the Queenes Letter, the tenor whereof, hereafter followeth.

To the great and mightie King of Achem, &c. in the Iland of Sumatra, our louing Brother, greeting.

THe eternall God, of his diuine knowledge and prouidence, hath so disposed his blessings, and good things of his Creation, for the vse and nourishment of Mankind, in such sort: that notwithstanding they growe in diuers Kingdomes, and Regions of the World: yet, by the industrie of Man (stirred up by the inspiration of the said omnipotent Creator) they are dispersed into the most remote places of the vniuersall World. To the end, that euen therein may appeare vnto all Nations, his maruelous workes, hee hauing so ordained, that the one land may haue need of the other. And thereby, not only breed intercourse and exchange of their Merchandise and Fruits, which doe superabound in 30 some Countreies, and want in others: but also ingender loue, and friendship betwixt all men, a thing naturally diuine.

Whereunto wee hauing respect (Right noble King) and also to the honorable, and truly royall fame, which hath hither stretched, of your Highnesse humane and noble vsage of Strangers, which reparaire into that your Kingdome, in loue and peace, in the Trade of Merchandise, paying your due Customes. Wee haue bene moued to giue Licence vnto these our Subiects, who with commendable and good desires, saile to visite that your Kingdome: Notwithstanding, the dangers and miseries of the Sea, naturall to such a Voyage, which (by the grace of GOD) they will make, being the greatest that is to be made in the World: and to present trafficke vnto your Subiects. Which their offer, if it shall bee accepted by your Highnesse, with such loue and grace, as wee hope for, of so great and magnanimous a Prince: Wee, for them, doe promise, that in no time hereafter, you shall haue cause to repent thereof, but rather to reioyce much. For 40 their dealing shall be true, and their conuersation sure, and wee hope, that they will giue so good prooffe thereof, that this beginning shall be a perpetuall confirmation, of loue betwixt our Subiects on both parts: by carrying from vs, such things and merchandise as you haue need of there. So that your Highnesse shall be very well serued, and better contented, then you haue heretofore bene with the Portugals and Spaniards, our Enemies: who only, and none else, of these Regions, haue frequented those your, and the other Kingdomes of the East. Not suffering that the other Nations should doe it, pretending themselves to be Monarchs, and absolute Lords of all these Kingdomes and Prouinces: as their owne Conquest and Inheritance, as appeareth by their loftie Title in their writings. The contrarie whereof, hath very lately appeared vnto vs, and that your Highnesse, and your royall Familie, Fathers, and Grandfathers, haue 50 (by the grace of GOD, and their Valour) knowne, not onely to defend your owne Kingdomes: but also to giue Warres vnto the Portugals, in the Lands which they possesse: as namely in Malaca, in the yeere of the Humane Redemption 1575. vnder the conduct of your valiant Captaine, Ragamacota, with their great losse and the perpetuall honour of your Highnesse Crowne and Kingdome.

And now, if your Highnesse shall be pleased, to accept into your Favour and Grace, and vnder your royall Protection and Defence, these our Subiects, that they may freely doe their businesse now, and continue yeerely hereafter: This Bearer, who goeth chiefe of this Fleet of foure Ships, hath order (with your Highnesse Licence) to leaue certaine Factors, with a settled House of Factorie in your Kingdome, vntill the going thither of another Fleet, which shall goe thither vpon the returne of this. Which left Factors, shall learne the Language, and customes of your Subiects, whereby, the better and more louingly to conuerse with them.

And the better to confirme this Confederacie, and Friendship betwixt vs, wee are contented, if your Highnesse be so pleased, that you cause Capitulations reasonable to be made: and that this Bearer doe 60 the the like in Our name. Which wee promise to performe royally, and entirely, as well herein, as in other Agreements and Arguments which he will communicate unto you: to whom, wee doe greatly desire your Highnesse to giue intire faith and credite, and that you will receiue him, and the rest of his companie, vnder your Royall protection, fauouring them in what shall be Reason and Iustice. And we promise on our behalfe, to re-answere in like degree, in all that your Highnesse shall haue need, out of these our Kingdomes, And wee desire, that your Highnesse would be pleased to send vs answere, by this Bearer of this our Letter, that wee may thereby vnderstand of your Royall acceptance of the Friendship and League, which wee offer, and greatly desire, may haue an happie beginning, with long yeeres to continue.

10 AT his next going to the Court, hee had long Conference with the King, concerning the Effect of the Queenes Letter, wherewith the King seemed to be very well pleased, and said: if the contents of that Letter came from the heart, he had good cause to thinke well thereof. And, for the League, Her Maiestie was desirous to hold with him, hee was well pleased therewith. And, for the further demands the Generall made from Her, in respect of the Merchants trafficke: he had committed all those points to two of his Noblemen, to conferre with him, and promised, what her Maiestie had requested, should by all good meanes bee granted. With this contented answere, after another Banquet appointed for the General, he departed the Court. And the next day, he sent to those Noblemen, the King had named to him, to know their appointed time, when they would sit vpon this Conference. The one of these Noblemen 20 was the chiefe Bishop of the Realme, a man of great estimation with the King, and all the people: and so he well deserued, for he was a man very wise and temperate. The other was one of the most ancient Nobilitie, a man of very good grauitie: but, not so fit to enter into those Conferences as the Bishop was.

As the Turke hath his Musli, so other Mahometan Princes haue their Chiefe Priests in all Countreies of that profession.

A day, and a meeting was appointed, where many questions passed betwixt them, and all the Conferences passed in the Arabike Tongue, which both the Bishop and the other Nobleman well vnderstood. Now, the Generall before his going out of England intertained a Jew, who spake that language perfectly, which stood him in good steed at that time. About many demands, the Generall made touching Freedomes for the Merchants, the Bishop said vnto him: Sir, what reasons shall we shew to the King, from you, whereby he may (the more willingly) grant 30 these things, which you haue demanded to be granted by him? to whom the Generall answered with these reasons following.

Great vse of the Arabian Tongue.

Her Maiesties mutuall Loue.

Her worthinesse in protecting others against the King of Spaine the common Enemie of these parts.

Her noble mind which refused the offer of those Countries.

Nor will shee suffer any Prince to exceed her in kindnesse.

Whole Forces haue exceeded the Spaniards in many Victories.

And hindred the Portugals attempts against these parts.

40 The Grand-Signor of Turkie hath alreadye entred into League with her Maiestie on honorable conditions.

Reasons of another kind.

Moreouer, it is not vnknowne to the King, what prosperitie, Trade of Merchandise bringeth to all Lands: with increase of their reuenues, by the Custome of these Commerces.

Also Princes grow into the more renowne and strength, and are the more feared, for the wealth of their Subiects, which by the concurse of Merchandises grow and increase.

And the more kindly that Strangers are entertained, the more the Trade doth grow. The Prince is thereby much enriched also.

50 And for Achem, in particlar, this Port lieth well, to answere to the Trade of all Bengala, Iaua, and the Moluccas, and all China. And these places hauing vent of their Merchandise, will not let to resort hither with them. So that, by this meanes, the royaltie of the Kings Crowne, will greatly increase, to the decrease, and diminishing of all the Portugals Trade, and their great Forces in the Indies.

And, if it shall happen, that his Maiestie wanteth any Artificers, hee may haue them out of our Kingdome, giuing them content for their trauaile: and free course to goe, as they haue good will to come. And any other necessarie, that our Countreie bringeth forth, and may spare, shall be at the Kings command and seruice.

But, I hope his Maiestie will not vrge any demands more, then her Maiestie may willingly consent vnto: or that shall be contrarie to her Honour and Lawes, and the League she hath made with all Christian Princes her neighbours.

60 Further, the Generall demanded, that his Maiestie would cause present Proclamation to be made for our safetie, and that none of his people should abuse any of ours: but that they might doe their businesse quietly. And this last request was so well performed, that although there were a strict order, that none of their owne people might walke by night: yet ours, might goe both night and day, without impeachment of any. Onely, if they found any of ours at road at vnlawfull houres, the Iustice brought them home to the Generals house, and there deliuered them.

After these conferences ended, the Bishop demanded of the Generall, notes of his reasons in writing, as also of his demands of the priuiledges he demanded in her Maiesties name for the Merchants, and hee would shew them to the King: and within few dayes, he should haue his Maiesties answere to them. And with these conferences, and much gratulation, and with some other talke of the affaires of Christendome: they broke vp for that time.

The Generall was not negligent, to send his demands to the noble men, which (for the most part) were drawne out before hand: for, he was not vnreadie for these busineses, before he came aland in the Kingdome.

Cock-fighting in Achen.

At his next going to the Court, and sitting before the King, beholding the Cock-fighting (which is one of the greatest sports this King delighteth in) hee sent his Interpreter with his obeisance to the King, desiring him to be mindfull of the businesse, whereof hee had conferred with his Noblemen. Whereupon, he called the Generall vnto him, and told him, that hee was carefull of his dispatch: and would willingly enter into Peace and League with her Maiestie, and (for his part) would hold it truely. And for those Demands and Articles, he had set downe in writing, they should be all written againe, by one of his Secretaries, and should haue them authorized by him. Which within five or six dayes, were deliuered the Generall, by the Kings owne hands, with many good and gracious words: the Tenor of which League and Articles of Peace, are too long to be inserted. According to their desires, was to the English granted, First, Free entry and trade. Secondly, Custome free, whatsoever they brought in, or carried forth: and assistance with their vessels and shipping, to saue our ships, goods, and men from wracke in any dangers. Thirdly, Libertie of Testament to bequeath their goods to whom they please. Fourthly, Stability of bargaines and orders for payment by the subiects of Achen, &c. Fifthly, Authority to execute iustice on their owne men offending. Sixtly, Iustice against iniuries from the Natiues. Seuenthly, Not to arrest or stay our goods, or set prizes on them. Eightly, Freedome of Conscience.

This League of Peace and Amitie being settled, the Merchants continually went forward, providing Pepper for the lading of the ships: but there came in but small store, in respect of the last yeeres sterility. So by some of them he vnderstood of a Port, about an hundred and fiftie leagues from thence, in the South part of the same Iland, called Priaman, where he might lade one of his smaller ships. Then he prepared the Susan, and placed for Captaine and chiefe Merchant in her, M. Henry Middleton.

Henry Middleton.

Captaine John Davis.

This was his second voyage to the Indies. In the third with Sir E. Mich, he was flaine, as before is shewed.

He was also not a little grieved, that Captaine John Davis his principall Pilot, had told the Marchants before our comming from London, that Pepper was to be had here for foure Spanish royals of eight the hundred; and it cost vs almost twentie. The Generall, daily grew full of thought, how to lade his shippes to saue his owne credit, the Merchants estimation that set him a worke, and the reputation of his Countrey: considering what a foule blot it would be to them all, in regard of the nations about vs, seeing there were merchandise enough to bee bought in the Indies, yet he should be likely to returne home with empty ships.

Besides the Portugall Embassador had a diligent eye ouer euery steppe we trode, but was no whit accepted of the King. For the last day of his beeing at the Court, he had demanded of the King, to settle a Factorie in his Countrey, and to build a Fort at the comming in of the Harbour: his reason was, for the more securitie of the Marchants goods, because the City was subiect to fire. But the King perceiuing what he meant, gaue him this answer backe againe: Hath your Master (saith he) a Daughter to giue vnto my Sonne, that he is so carefull of the preservation of my Countrey? He shall not neede to be at so great a charge, as the building of a Fort: for I haue a fit house about two leagues from this Citie, within the Land, which I will spare him to supply his Factorie withall: where they shall not need to feare either enemies or fire, for I will protect him. Hereupon the King was much displeased at this insolent demand: and the Embassadour went from the Court much discontented.

Discontent betwixt the Portugals and the King.

Portugall subtleties retorted.

Shortly after this, there came to our house, an Indian (to sell Hennes) which was appertaining to a Portugall Captaine, who came to that Port with a Ship laden with Rice, out of the Port of Bengala. This Captaine lay in the Embassadors house, and the Generall mistrusted, he came only for a Spy to see, and perceiue what we did: and yet he gaue commandement, he should be well intreated, and they should alwayes buy his Hennes, and giue him a reasonable price for them. At last, he himselfe tooke occasion, pleasantly to commune with the Indian, whence hee was, and of what Countrey: saying, A young man of his presence, merited some better meanes then buying and selling of Hennes. Sir, said he, I serue this Portugall Captaine, yet am neither bound, nor free: but beeing free borne, I haue beene with him so long time, that now he partly esteemeth me as his owne: and so great they are, that wee cannot striue with them. Then said the Generall vnto him; If thy liberty be precious vnto thee, thy person meriteth it. But what wouldst thou doe for him, that would giue thee thy libertie without pleading with with thy Master for it? Sir, said the Indian, Freedome is as precious as life, and my life I would adventure for him that should do it. Prooue me therefore in any seruice that I can doe for you, and my willingnesse shall soone make good what I haue said. Well, said the Generall, thou hast willed me to prooue whether thou meanest truely, or no. I would aske of thee, What the Embassador saith of me, and my shipping which I haue in this place; and what pretences he hath? Sir, said the Indian, he hath had a Spie aboard of all your Ships, a Chinesse, who is continually conuersant with your people: so that he hath a draught drawne, not onely of your ships, and their greatnesse; but also of euery Piece of Ordnance that each ship hath, and how they are placed, and the number of your men that are in them. And he findeth your ships strong, and well appointed; But by reason of the sicknesse that hath been in them, they are but weake of men, and easie to be taken, if any force come vpon them on the suddaine: and within few dayes, he meaneth to send his draughts to Malacca, for force to attempt your ships as they ride. The Generall laughed pleasantly to heare these things, saying; The Embassador was not so idle as he thought him: for hee well knoweth (said he) that I care little for all the forces of these parts. It is but to make thee, and the rest that are about him beleue, that you are stronger then you be. But goe thy way, and be here once in a day or twaine, and tell me whether the Embassadour goe forward in his proceedings, and when those Messengers shall depart with the plots thou speakest of. And although it will benefit me little to know these things, yet I will giue thee thy libertie for thy good will thou shewest therein, as I haue promised thee to doe. This Indian went away very well contented, as any man might easily perceiue by his countenance, and the lightnesse of his pace. Now, when he was gone, the Generall turned about, and said to me: We haue met with a fit man to betray his Master, if we can make any benefit of the treason. And surely, he was not deceiued in his opinion: for by this meanes, whatsoeuer the Embassadour did all the day, we had it either that night, or (at the furthest) the next day in the morning. And this Fellow carried the matter so warily, that he was neither mistrusted of any of the Embassadors house, nor knowne to any of ours, what businesse he went about. For he had the right conditions of a Spie, being wily, fearefull, carefull, subtil, and neuer trusting any to heare what conference he had with the Generall: but deliuered his minde vnto him alone, and that in such carelesse sort, as if hee had answered the Generall idly, whatsoeuer he demanded of him: for he stood in feare of our owne people, leaſt they would bewray the telling of his Hennes, which couered all his comming and going to our House.

A Spie for the Portugal discouered.

The next day, the Generall was sent for to the Court, and the King had conference with him, about an Embassage that the King of Siam had sent him touching the conquest of Malacca: and with what force he would assist him by Sea, if he vndertooke that seruice. For this King of Siamatra, is able to put a very great force of Gallies to Sea, if he may haue but some foure or five moneths warning before-hand, to make them ready. This conference the Generall furthered with many reasons, and tooke an occasion to enter into talke of the Spanish Embassadour, how insolently proud he carried himselfe: and that his comming into his Maiesties Kingdome and Court, was for no other purpose, but onely as a Spie, to see and discouer the strength of his Kingdome. I know it well (said the King,) for they are enemies of mine, as I haue bene to them: but what causeth thee to see this? The Generall answered him; That he could take nothing in hand, but his Spies attended vpon him, to marke what he went about, and to what ende. And among other things (saith he) he had taken a draught of his ships, and meaneth to send it to Malacca: and to procure forces to set vpon him at vnawares. The King smiled to heare the Generall mention these things, and said; Thou needest not feare any strength that shall come from Malacca: for all the strength they haue there, is able to doe thee no harme. The Generall answered, I doe not (said he) feare their strength, what they can doe to me: but it may be much to my hinderance, that they vnderstanding the time I meane to goe to Sea, they shall thereby bee aduised to keepe themselues within their Ports, so that I shall not be able to offend them. Is it so, said the King? Yea, said the Generall, and therefore I would intreat your Maiestie, to make stay of two of the Embassadors seruants that are now going to Malacca, within these few dayes, who take not their passage from hence: but will goe to another Port of yours, and there hire a Barke, to transport them thence, because they will be sure not to be intercepted. And if your Maiestie intercept them there, you shall be priuy to some of their plots and pretences. Well, said the King, let me vnderstand of their departure from hence, and thou shalt see what I will doe for thee. So, the Generall tooke his leaue of the King, well contented, and had daily conference with his Merchant that sold Hennes: so that there was not any thing done, or said in the Embassadors house, but he was priuy to it.

the King of Siamatra.

Now the time was come, that the Embassadors two seruants were to depart with their plots, and their Masters Letters: and they went down to a Port about five and twentie leagues from Achen. But the Generall was not slacke to aduise the King thereof, who had giuen order before: so that at their comming thither, and when they had hired their passage, and had embarked themselues with all their Letters, and were going ouer the Barre, a mile from the Citie, a Frigget went after them, and caused the Barke to strike sayle, that the Iustice might see, what their la-ding was. And when the Iustice came aboard, and saw two Portugals there, he asked them from whence they came, and whether they were going: they answered, They came from Achem, and belonged to the Portugall Embassadour. Nay, said the Iustice, but you have robbed your Master, and runne away like theeves with his goods: and therefore I will returne you againe to him, from whom you are fled, and there you shall answer it. But in this hurly-burly, and searching of them, they lost their plots, and their letters, and their Trunkes were broken open: and they sent to Achem, bound backe againe to the Court, to be deliuered to the Embassador, if they did belong vnto him. The Generall had some intelligence of these things, and the next time he came to the Court, the King called him vnto him, and said: Now what sayest thou, art thou contented? The Generall made him obeisance, and gaue him humble and heartie thanks for his clemencie, and 10 kindnesse towards him: and with some other conference, the Generall departed for that time. The Marchant of Hennes came daily following his Merchandize, and as the Generall suspected, and he himselfe afterward confessed, not without his Masters consent; to aduise from vs, as well as he aduised from his Master.

But now the Summer was past, and September came, the time that the Generall meant to goe to sea to seeke meanes to supply his necessities: and now fell out the greatest Crosse of all to his pretence. The Embassador himselfe had his dispatch from the King to be gone. Which the Generall knowing, went to the Court, and where the King sat, seeing the sports that were made before him, he sent his Interpreter to him, desiring that it would please him to heare a certain request which he had vnto his Maiestie. Whereupon the King immediately called for him, and dema- 20 ded what he would haue him to doe. It hath pleased your Highnesse, said the Generall, to doe me many curtesies, and therefore I am further imboldened, to proceed to request one kindnesse more at your Maiesties hands. What is that (said the King, smiling) are there more Portugals going to Malacca, to hinder thy pretences? Yea, said the Generall the Embassador himselfe (as I am giuen to vnderstand) hath your Maiesties dispatch to be gone at his pleasure: and is determined to depart within five dayes. And what wouldst thou haue me to doe, said the King? Only stay him but tenne dayes, till I be gone forth with my ships. Well, said the King, and laughed, thou must bring me a faire Portugall maiden when thou returnest, and then I am pleased. With this answer the Generall tooke his leaue, and departed; and hasted all that he could to be gone. For he had left the Merchants behind him, and vnder the protection of the King till his returne: and in the meane time to buy what Pepper they could, to helpe to furnish the Ascensions lading, 30 which was now more then three parts laden. But the Generall would not leaue her behind him, riding in the Port, but tooke her in his company: for she roade but in an open place. All the three ships were made readie, and there was a Captaine of a Dutch ship in the road, who desired the Generall that he might goe to sea in his company, and take part of his aduventure; his ship was aboue two hundred Tunnes, but had as little money to lade himselfe, as we; and therefore refused no consort. So the Generall was contented to giue him  $\frac{1}{2}$  of what should be taken, and hee rested therewith contented. The Generall hauing taken his leaue of the King, and presented two of the chiefe Merchants vnto him, M. Starkie, and M. Styles, the King graciously tooke them into his protection and safeguard: for these Merchants with some others, were left behind (as I said be- 40 fore) for the prouiding of such Pepper, as was there to be had, against the returne of the ships from the Sea. The ships being ready, we set sayle the eleuenth of September, toward the Straights of Malacca.

Now, let me tell you how the King dealt with the Embassadour of Portugall, after our departure, which euery day vrged his dispatch to be gone: but still, vpon one occasion or other, his passage was deferred. At last (four and twenty daies after our departure) the King said vnto him: I maruaile you are so hasty to be gone, seeing the English Embassadour is abroad at the Sea with his shipping? If he meete you, he will be able to wrong you, and doe you violence. I care little for him, said the Embassadour, for my Friget is so nimble with Saile and Oares, that if I haue but her length from him, I will escape all his force. Well, said the King: 50 I am the more willing you should depart, because I see you rest so assured of your owne safety: and so he had his dispatch to be gone. This seruice came well to passe for vs, for if he had gone away in time, such aduice would haue bene giuen from Malacca, by Frigots into the Straights, that all shippes would haue had warning of vs: but (by this meanes) we lay within five and twentie leagues of Malacca it selfe, and were neuer descryed, whereby to be preuented. The third day of October, we being in the Straights of Malacca, laying off and on, the Hector espied a Sayle, and calling to the rest of the shippes, we all discried her. And being toward night, a present direction was giuen, that we should all spread our selues a mile and an halfe, one from another, that she might not passe vs in the night. The shippe fell with the Hector, that first espied her, and presently she called vnto her, and shot off two or three peeces of Ordnance: so 60 that the rest of the shippes had intelligence, and drew all about her, and began to attempt her with their great Ordnance, and she returned shot againe. But when the Admirals ship came vp, he discharged sixe peeces together out of his Prow: and then her maine yard fell downe. After that she shot no more, nor any of our shippes, fearing least some vnforgotten shot might light betweene betweene wind and water, and so sinke her, (for the Generall was very carefull) so the fight ceased till the morning. At the breake of day, the Captaine with some of the rest, entred their Boate, and the Hector being next her, called them to come aboard him: and Maister John Middleton the Captaine, being Vice-Admirall, brought the Boate and Captaine aboard the Generall, to whom they rendered their shippe and goods. The Generall presently caused all the chiefe men of the Prize, to be placed aboard our shippes, and onely placed but foure of our men aboard the Prize: for feare of rifling, & pillaging the good things that were within her; and those foure suffered none other to come aboard. And their charge was, if any thing should be missing, to answer the same out of their wages and shares: for when the shippe was vnladen, the Boate-

 10 swaine and the Marriners of the same shippe, did wholly vnlade her, and none of ours came within her to doe any labour. Onely they receiued the goods into their Boates, and carried them aboard each shippes, as the Generall appointed them to doe: so that by this order, there was neither rifling, theeuing, pillaging, or spoiling, which otherwise would hardly haue bene auoyded in such businesse as this. Within fve or sixe daies, we had vnladen her of nine hundred and fiftie packes of Calicoes, and Pintados, besides many packets of Merchandize: she had in her much Rice, and other goods, whee of we made small account. Now a storme arising, all their men were set aboard, and we left her, riding at an Anchor. This shippe came from a place called Saint Thomas, that lyeth in the Bay of Bengala, and was going for Malaca. When we intercepted her, she had in her about sixe hundred persons, Men, Women, and Children: her bur-
 20 then was nine hundred tuns. The Generall would neuer goe aboard to see her, and his reason was, to take away suspicion, both from the Mariners that were there, and the Merchants that were at London, least they might charge, or suspect him for any dishonest dealing, by helping himselfe thereby. He was very glad of this good hap, and very thankfull to God for it, and as he told me, he was much bound to God, that had eased him of a very heavy care, and that hee could not be thankfull enough to him for this blessing giuen him. For, saith he, he hath not onely supplied my necessities, to lade these ships I haue: but hath giuen me as much as will lade as many more shippes as I haue, if I had them to lade. So that now my care is not for money, but rather, where I shall leaue these goods that I haue, more then enough, in safety, till the returne of the ships out of England.

Care to auoyd rifling and spoile. Goods taken in the Prize.

His care to preuent suspicion.

30 The one and twentieth of October, our shippes returned out of the Straights of Malaca for Achen, where by the way a great Spout of water came powring out of the Heauens, and fell not farre from our ship, which we feared much. For these Spouts come powring downe like a riuer of water, so that if they should light in any ship, she were in danger to be presently sunck downe into the Sea: it falleth with such an extreame violence, all whole together, as one drop, or as water powred out of a vessell: and sometimes dureth a quarter of an howre together, so that the Sea boyleth with froth, of an exceeding height, by the violence of the fall of the Spoute.

Their Present to and from the King: His Letters to Queene ELIZABETH: Their departure for Priaman and Bantam, and selling a Trade there.

HE foure and twentieth of October, we cast our Anchors in the Port of Achen in Sumatra, where the Generall went a shore, and found all the Merchants well, and in safety: who gaue great commendations of their good, and kind entertainment receiued from the King, in the Generals absence. Wherefore, the Generall willing 50 to gratifie the King, with such things as he had taken in the Prize, sorted out a present of diuers things, that he thought might be most to his liking: and at his first going to the Court, presented them vnto him. The King receiued the Present, and welcomed the Generall, and seemed to be very ioyfull, for the good successe he had against the Portugall: and iestingly said, hee had forgotten the most important businesse that he requested at his hands, which was, the faire Portugall Maiden, he desired him to bring with him at his returne. To whom the Generall answered: that there was none so worthy, that merited to be so presented. Therewithall the King smiled, and said: If there be any thing heere in my kingdome may pleasure thee, I would be glad to gratifie thy good will. After this, the Generall commaunded the Merchants to put aboard the Ascension, all such Pepper, Cinamon, and Cloues, as they had bought in his absence: which 60 was scarcely the ships full lading, but at that time there was no more to be had, nor that yeare to be hoped for. And therefore, he willed the Merchants to put all their things aboard the ships, for his resolution was to depart from thence, and goe for Bantam in Iaua maior, where he vnderstood both of good sale for his commodities, and great returne of Pepper to be had, and at a much more reasonable price, then they could buy it at Achen. This determination once knowne, all men hasten to put their things aboard. So the Generall made the King priuy to his departure, and went to the Court, and had long conference with him, who deliuered him a Letter for her Maiestie, written in the Arabian tongue: The Tenor whereof, is as followeth.

The Letter of the King of Achen, to the Queene of England.

For this Citie, which is not slacke to shew their loue, hath manifested it, in the entertainment of that societie, which filleth the Horizons with ioy, and hath confirmed it to the eye by a signe, which bringeth knowledge of remembrance of it generally and particularly. And for that their request is iust, with purpose for exchange; and they themselues of honest carriage, and their kindnesse great in doing good in generall to the Creatures, helping the Creature in prosperitie and aduersitie ioyntly, giuing liberally unto the poore, and such as stand in neede of their abundance, preserving the Creature to their uttermost, with a willing mind: which for them now is extended unto India and * Arach; sending forth the chiefeest men of discretion and note, calling also the best of the 20 creatures to counsaile herein.

FOr a Present to her Maiestie, he sent three faire Cloathes richly wrought with Gold, of very cunning worke, and a very faire Rubie in a Ring: and gaue to the Generall another Ring, and a Rubie in it. And when the Generall tooke his leaue, the King said vnto him: haue you the Psalmes of David extant among you? the Generall answered: yea, and wee sing them daily. Then said the King: I, and the rest of these Nobles about me, will sing a Psalm to God for your prosperitie, and so they did very solemnly. And after it was ended, the King said: I would heare you sing another Psalm, although in your owne language. So there being in the company some 60 twelue of vs, we sang another Psalm; And after the Psalm ended, the Generall tooke his leaue of the King, the King shewing him much kindnesse at his departure: desiring God to blesse vs in our iourney, and to guide vs safely into our owne Countrey, saying, if hereafter your ships returne to this Port, you shall find as good vsage as you haue done. All our men being shipped, we departed the ninth of Nouember, being three ships, the Dragon, the Hector, and the Ascen-tion. We kept company two dayes, in which time the Generall dispatched his Letters for England, and sent away the Ascension, she setting her course homeward, toward the Cape of Buena Esperanza, and we, along the Coast of Sumatra, toward Bantam: to see if wee could meete with the Susan, which had order to lade vpon that Coast.

As we sayled along the Coast of Sumatra, we sodainly fell among certaine Ilands in the night: and the day approching, wee marvelled how wee came in among them, without seeing any of them. They were all low landed, and full of Flattes and Rockes, so that wee were in great danger, before we could cleere our selues of them: but thanks be to God, who deliuered vs from many other dangers, as he did also deliuer vs from these. So holding on our course from Priaman, we passed the Equinoctiall Line the third time, and came thither the six and twentieth of November, and found the Susan there, which the Generall had sent before from Achen, to lade there. Now, when they saw vs, they were very glad of our comming, and had provided toward their lading, some six hundred Bahars of Pepper, and sixtie sixe Bahars of Cloues. Heere our Pepper cost vs lesse then at Achen, but there is none growing about this Port, but is brought some eight or ten leagues out of the Countrey, from a place called Manangcabo. This place hath no other Merchandise growing there; only, there is good store of Gold in Dust, and small graines, which they wash out of the Sands of Riuer: after the great floods of Raine, that fall from the Mountaines, from whence it is brought. This is a place of good refreshing, and is very wholesome and healthfull, and yet it lyeth within fifteene minutes of the Line. At this Port hauing refreshed our selues with the good ayre, fresh victuals and water, the Generall gaue Commission to the Captaine of the Susan, to make what halte he could for his lading, which would bee accomplished with some hundred Bahars of Pepper, and so to depart for England. And the fourth day of December, we tooke our course toward Bantam, in the Iland of Iaua maior: and we entred the Straights of Sunda, the fifteenth of December, and came to an anchor vnder an Iland, three leagues from Bantam, called Pulopansa.

The next day in the morning, we entred the Road of Bantam, and shot off a very great peale of Ordnance out of the Dragon, being our Admirall, and out of the Hector: such an one as had neuer bene rung there, before that day. The next day in the morning, the Generall sent his Vice-Admirall, Captaine Iohn Middleton a-land, with a Message to the King: declaring, that hee was sent by the Queene of England, and had both a Message and a Letter to deliuer to his Maiestie from her: and required his Maiesties safe conduct and warrant to come a-land, to deliuer the same. The King returned him word, that hee was very glad of his comming, and sent backe a Nobleman with Captaine Middleton, to welcome the Generall, and to accompany him a-land. The Generall tooke some sixteene men in his company, and went a-land with the Nobleman to the Court: where he found the King (being but a child of ten or eleuen yeares of age) sitting in a round-house; with some sixteene or eightene Noblemen of the Countrey about him, in some reasonable estate. The Generall did his obeysance, and the King welcomed him very kindly. And after the Generall had had some conference about his message, hee deliuered to the Kings hand, her Maiesties Letter, with a Present of Plate, and some other things withall: which the King receiued with a smiling countenance, and referred the Generall (for further conference) to one of his Nobles, who was then Protector. After some houre and an halfe conference had of many things, the said Nobleman (as from the King) receiued the Generall vnder the Kings protection, and all his Company: willing him to come a-land, and buy and sell, without any kinde of molestation, for there he should be as safe, as if he were in his owne Countrey: and to this, all the Nobles agreed with one consent. There passed many speeches of diuers things, which (for breuities sake) I omit to trouble the Reader withall: for, my purpose is to shew the effect of this first settling of the Trade in the East-Indies, rather then to particularize of them. The Generall, after his kind welcome and conference had, took his leaue of the King, and the rest of his Nobles: and presently gaue order for the providing of housing, whereof the King willed him to make his best choice wherefoeuer he would. So, within two dayes, the Merchants brought goods ashore, and beganne to sell: but, one of the Kings Nobles came to the Generall, and said, it was the custome of that place, that the King should buy, and furnish himselfe, before the Subiects should buy any thing. The Generall was well contented, for he was aduised, that he would giue a reasonable price, and pay very well. The King being serued, the Merchants went forward in their sales: so that within some five weekes, much more was sold there in goods, then would haue laden our two shippes: and yet they brought away from thence two hundred and seuentie sixe bagges of Pepper. These contayned sixtie two pound waight a piece, and cost at first penny 5.  $\frac{2}{3}$ . Rials of eight the piece, beside our anchorage, and the Kings Custome, which anchorage for our two ships cost vs (by agreement the Generall made with the Sauendar, or Gouernour of the Citie) fifteene hundred Rials of eight, and one Riall of eight vpon euery bagge of custome. Wee traded heere very peaceably, although the Iauians be reckoned among the greatest Pickers and Theeues of the World. But the Generall had commission from the King (after hee had receiued an abuse or two) that whosoever he tooke about his house in the night, he should kill them: so, after foure or five were thus slaine, we liued in reasonable peace and quiet. But, continually, all night, wee kept a carefull watch. As we went buying Pepper, we sent it aboard, so that by the tenth of February, our ships were fully laden, and readie to depart. But, in this meane time, the Captaine of the Hector, Master John Middleton, fell sicke aboard his ship, in the Roade (for the Generall obserued this from the beginning of the Voyage, that if he himselfe were ashore, the Captaine of the Vice-Admirall kept aboard, because both should not be from their charge at one time. The Generall hearing of his sicknesse, went aboard to visit him, and found him weaker, then hee himselfe felt, which experience had taught him to know in these hot Countries. And so it happened with Captaine Middleton then walking vp and downe, who dyed about two of the clocke next morning.

Now, the Generall began to put all things in order, and hasten his departure, and appointed a Pinnaffe of about fortie tunnes (which he had) to bee laden with Commodities, and put in her twelue men with certaine Merchants, and sent her for the Moluccas: to trade there, and settle a Factorie, against the returne of the next shipping out of England. Moreover, he left eight men: and three Factors in Bantam, the chiefe of which Factors, was Master William Starkey, whom he appointed to sell such Commodities as were left them: and to prouide lading for the shippes, against the next returne. Also the Generall went to the Court to take his leaue of the King, where he received a Letter for her Maiestie, and a Present for her, of certaine Bezar-stones, very faire, and to the Generall he gaue a very faire Iana Dagger, which they much esteeme there, and a good Bezar-stone with some other things. And thus the Generall tooke his leaue of the King, with many kind countenances and good words.

Their departure for England, and occurrents in the way.

The twentieth

Capricorne.

A terrible
storme.

They lose their Rother in a storme.

Almost 40. degrees of South
Latitude.

THe twentieth day of Februarie, we went all aboard our ships, shot off our Ordnance, and set sayle to the Sea toward England, with thanks to God, and glad hearts, for his blessings towards vs. The two and twentieth and three and twentieth of the same moneth, wee were in the Straights of Sunda, and the sixe and twentieth wee were cleere of all the Iles that lye in those Straights, and cleere of all the land, holding our course South-west, so that the eight and twentieth, wee were in eight degrees and fortie minutes to the South of the Line. Vpon Sunday the thirteenth of March, wee were past the Tropicke of Capricorne, holding our course, for the most parte, South-west, with a stiffe gale of wind at South-east. The fourteenth day of Aprill, wee were in thirtie foure degrees, iudging the Land of Madagascar to be North of vs. The eight and twentieth day we had a very great and a furious storme, so that we were forced to take in all our Sayles. This storme continued a day and a night, with an exceeding great and raging Sea, so that, in the reason of man no shippe was able to liue in them: but God (in his mercie) ceased the violence thereof, and gaue vs time to breath: and to repaire all the distresses and harmes we had receiued, but our ships were so shaken, that they were leakie all the Voyage after.

The third of May, wee had another very sore storme which continued all the night, and the Seas did so beate vpon the ships quarter, that it shooke all the Iron worke of her Rother: and the next day in the morning, our Rother brake cleane from the sterne of our shippe, and presently funke into the Sea. This strooke a present feare into the hearts of all men, so that the best of vs, and most experienced, knew not what to doe. And specially, seeing our selues in such a tempestuous Sea, and so stormie a place, so that, I thinke, there hee few worse in all the World. Now our ship draue vp and downe in the Sea like a wracke, which way soeuer the wind carried her:
so that sometimes we were within three or foure leagues of the Cape Buena Esperanza, then commeth a contrary wind, and driueth vs almost to fortie degrees to the Southward into the hayle and snow, and fleetie cold weather. And this was another great miserie vnto vs, that pinched vs exceeding sore, so that our case was miserable and very desperate. Yet all this while the Hector kept by vs carefully, the company whereof was some comfort vnto vs: and many times the Master of the Hector came aboard our shippe, so at the the last, it was concluded to take our misen Mast, and put it forth at the sterne Port, to proue if wee could steere our shippe into some place where we might make another Rother to hang it, to serue our turnes home. But this de-uice was to small purpose, for when we had fitted it, and put it forth (the Seas being somewhat growne with lifting vp the Mast) it did so shake the sterne, and put all in such danger, that it was needfull to make all conuenient haste, to get the Mast into the ship againe: which we were very glad when we had brought it to passe. Now we were without all remedie, vnlesse we made a new Rother, and could bring it to passe to hang it in the Sea: which to performe let euery man iudge how easie a thing it was, our ship being of seuen or eight hundred tunnes, and in so dangerous a Sea as this was: but necessitie compelleth to prouue all meanes. Then the Grnerall commanded the Carpenter to make a Rother of the said misen Mast, to prooue what wee could doe: but this barre fell in our way; that, at such time as wee lost our Rother, wee lost also the most of our Rother irons, wherewith to fasten the Rother. But yet, wee went forward, and made all the haste we could, and one of our men diied, to search what Rother irons remayned, who found but two, and one that was broken, to helpe vs withall. Yet, by Gods helpe, finding a faire day, wee made fast the said Rother, and sailed on our course homewards: But, within three or foure houres, the Sea tooke it off againe, and wee had much adoe to saue it, and with the sauing of it, wee lost an other of our irons, so that now, we had but two to hang it by: and our men began to be desirous to leaue the Ship, and goe into the Hector to saue themselves. Nay, said the Generall, wee will yet abide Gods leasure, to see what mercie he will shew vs: for I despair not to saue our selues, the Ship and the goods, by one meanes or other, as God shall appoint vs. And with that, he went into his Cabbin, and wrote a Letter for England, purposing to send it by the Hector, commanding her to depart, and leaue him there: but, not one of the companie knew of this command. The Letter was very briefe, and the tenour little more or lesse, as followeth.

Right worshipfull, what hath passed in this Voyage, and what Trades I haue settled for this companie, and what other euents haue befallen us, you shall vnderstand by the beaues hereof, to whom (as occasion hath fallen) I must referre you. I will strue with all diligence to saue my ship, and her goods, as you may perceiue, by the course I take in venturing mine owne life, and those that are with mee. I cannot tell where you should looke for mee, if you send out any Pinnace to seeke mee: because I liue at the deuotion of the winds and seas. And thus fare you well, desiring God, to send vs a merrie meeting in this world, if it be his good will and pleasure.

Your very louing friend,

JAMES LANCASTER.

This Letter being deliuered, the Generall thought they would haue beene gone in the night, according to their Commission: but, when he espied the ship in the morning, he said to me, these men regard no Commission. Now, the ship kept some two or three leagues from vs, and came no neerer: for the Master was an honest and a good man, and loued the Generall well, and was loth to leaue him in so great distresse. And now, it was time for vs, to seeke all meanes that could be to saue our selues and the ship. Then, the Carpenter mended the Rother we had saued, and within two or three dayes, the weather began to bee somewhat faire, and the seas smooth. So, we put out a signe to the Hector to come neere vs, out of which the Master, Master Sander Cole came, and brought the best swimmers, and diuers that he had in his ship, who helped vs not a little in the businesse wee had to doe. Thus, by Gods good blessing, wee hung our Rother againe, vpon the two hookes that were left: so that, we had some good hope to obtaine one Port or other, to relieue our selues withall. Now, wee had beene beaten to and fro, in these mightie seas, and had many more stormes of weather, then are here exprest, sometimes for one whole moneth together, so that our men began to fall sicke and diseased: and the wind fell so short, that wee could fetch no part of the coast of Africa, which was neere to vs. Committing our selues therefore to God, we set saile straight for the Iland of Saint Helena: for, we knew we had doubled the Cape of Buona Esperanza, by the height wee were in to the Northward. As we were in our course, the Main-yard fell downe, and strooke one of our men into the sea, and he was drowned. This was the end (God be thanked) of all our hard fortunes.

Master Sander Cole Master of the Hector.

The fift day of Iune, wee passed the Tropicke of Capricorne, and the sixteenth in the morning wee had sight of the Iland of Saint Helena: at the sight whereof, there was no smale reioicing among vs. Wee bare close along by the shoare, the better to get the best of the Road, in the Harbour, where wee came to an anchor, right against a small Chappell, which the Portugals had built there, long since. Our ships rode in twelue fatham water, which is the best of the Harbor. At our going a shoare, we found by many writings, that the Carrackes of Portugall had departed from thence, but eight dayes before our comming. In this Iland, there is very good refreshing of water, and wild Goats, but they are hard to come by, vnlesse good direction be giuen for the getting of them. And this course our Generall tooke, he appointed foure lusty men, and of the best shot he had, to goe into the Iland, and make their abode in the midst of it, and to euery shot, he appointed foure men to attend him, to carrie the Goats that hee killed, to the Rendezuous: thither went (euery day) twentie men, to fetch home to the ships, what was killed. So there was no hoyting or rumour in the Iland to feare the Goats withall. And by this meanes, the ships were plentifully relieved, and euery man contented. While wee stayed here, wee fitted our shipping, and searched our Rother, which wee hoped, would last vs home. All our sicke men recouered their health, through the store of Goats and Hogs, wherewith wee had refreshed our selues, hauing great need of good refreshing : For, in three moneths, wee had scene no land, but were continually beaten in the sea.

The fift day of Iuly, we set saile from this Iland, our course being Northwest. The thirteenth day, wee passed by an Iland called the Ascension, which standeth in eight degrees. No ships touch at this Iland, for it is altogether barraine, and without water : onely, it hath good store of Fish about it, but deepe water, and ill riding for ships. From hence wee held our course still Northwest, the wind being South and South-east, till the nineteenth day, and then, we passed the Equinoctiall-Line. The foure and twentieth day wee were six degrees to the Northward, at which time, wee iudged our selues to be an hundred and fiftie leagues from the Coast of Ginney. Then wee steered away North and by West and North till the nine and twentieth, at which time, wee had sight of the Iland of Fogo. Here, wee were becalmed five dayes, struiuing to passe to the Eastward of this Iland, but could not : for the wind changed, and came to the North-east, so we stood West North-west.

The seuenth day of August, wee were in sixteene degrees, and the twelfth day wee passed the Tropicke of Cancer, that lieth in 23.4. degrees, holding our course Northerly. But the three and twentieth, the wind came Westerly. The nine and twentieth, wee passed the Iland of Saint Marie, the wind faire.

The seuenth day of September, wee tooke sounding, iudging the Lands end of England to be fortie leagues from vs. The eleuenth day, wee came to the Downes, well and safe to an anchor : for the which, thanked be almightie God, who hath deliuered vs from infinite perils and dangers, in this long and tedious Navigation.

Iaua maior, is an Iland which lieth in an hundred and fortie degrees of longitude from the middle part of it, and in the ninth degree of latitude, being also about an hundred fortie and six leagues long, East and West, and some ninetie leagues broad, South and North, the middle part of which Land is for the most part all mountaines, the which are not so steepe, but that people doe trauell to the top of them, both on horse-backe, and on foot. Some inhabitants doe dwell vpon those hills, which stand next to the Sea, but in the very middle of the Land, so farre as euer I could learne, there are no Inhabitants, but there are wild beasts of diuers sorts, whereof some doe repaire neere the valleyes adioyning to the Sea; and deuoure many people. Towards the Sea, for the most part is low moorish ground, wherein stand their principall Townes of Trade, the chiefest whereof lie on the North and North-east side of the Iland, as Chiringin, Bantam, Iackatra, and Iortan or Greesey, The which low ground is very vnwholsome, and breedeth many diseases, (especially vnto strangers which come thither) and yeeld no merchandise worthy trading for, or speaking of, but Pepper, the which hath beene brought in times past from all places of the Land to Bantam, as the chiefe Mart Towne of the Countie, which Towne for Trade doth farre exceed Achen, or any Towne or Citie thereabouts; And Pepper was wont to be brought thither from diuers other Countries, which of late yeeres is not, by reason that the Dutch-men trade to euery place, and buy it vp.

This Towne of Bantam, is about three English miles in length, also very populous, There are three Markets kept on euery day, one in the forenoone, and two in the afternoone : that especially, which is kept in the forenoone, doth so abound with people, that they throng together, as in many Fayers in England. Yet I neuer saw any kind of Cattell to sell, by reason that there are are very few tame in the Countrey. Their food is altogether Rice, with some Hens, and some Fish, but not much, or in no abundance. The Iauans houses are altogether built of great Canes, and some few small Timbers, being slight buildings: In many of the principall mens houses, is good workmanship shewed, as carvings, &c. And some of the chiefeft haue a square Brick roome, being built in no better forme then a Brickill, which is onely to put in all their household stuffe, when fire commeth, but they seldome or neuer lodge, nor eat in them. There are many small Riuers running through the Towne: also, there is a good road for shippes, whereby if they were people of any reasonable capacity, it would be made a very goodly Citie, also it is walled round with a Bricke wall, being very warlike built, with Flankers, and Turrets scouring euery way.

10 I haue bene told by some that it was first built by the Chineffes. In many places it is fallen to decay for want of repairing. At the very end of this Towne, is the China Towne, a narrow Riuer parting them, which runneth crosse the end of the China Towne, vp to the Kings Court, and so through the middle of the great Towne, and doth ebbe and flow; so that at a high water, both Gallies and Iuncts of great burthen, may goe vp to the middle of the great Towne.

This China Towne, is for the most part built of Brick, euery house square, and flat ouer-head, some of them hauing Boords, and small Timbers, or split Canes ouer-crosse, on which are laid Bricks and Sand, to defend them from fire. Ouere these Bricke Ware-houses is set a shed, being built vp with great Canes, and Thatched, and some are built vp with small Timber, but the greatest number with Canes onely. Of late yeares, since we came thither, many men of wealth haue built their houses to the top, all fire free, of the which sort of houses, at our first comming, 20 there was no more but the Sabundars house and the rich Chyna Merchants house, which neuertheless by meanes of their windowes, and sheds round about them, haue bene consumed with fire. In this Towne stand the English and Dutch houses, which are built in the same manner, onely they are very much bigger, and higher then ordinary houses, and the Dutch-men of late (though with great cost and trouble) haue built one of their houses vp to the top all of Bricke, fire free, as they suppose.

The King of this place is absolute, and since the deposing and death of the late Emperour of Damacke, is held the principall King of all that Iland: he vseth alwaies Marshall law vpon any offender whom he is disposed to punish. If any priuate mans Wife or Wives be taken with dishonesty, so that they haue good prooffe of it, they cause them presently to be put to death, 30 both the woman, and the man that is taken in Adultery with her. And for their Slaues, they may execute them for any small fault. To euery Wife that a Iauan, being a free-man, marrieth, he must keepe ten women-slaues, which they as ordinary vse as their wiues; and some of them keepe for euery wife, fortie slaues, for so they keepe ten: they may haue as many more as they will, but they may haue but three wiues onely.

The Iauans, are generally exceeding proud, although extreame poore, by reason that not one amongst an hundred of them will worke. The Gentlemen of this Land are brought to bee poore, by the number of Slaues that they keepe, which eate faster then their Pepper or Rice groweth. The Chinois, doe both plant, drisse, and gather the Pepper, and also sowe their Rice, liuing as Slaues vnder them, but they sucke away all the wealth of the Land, by reason that 40 the Iauans are so idle. And a Iauan is so proud, that he will not endure one to be an inch in height aboue him, if he be but of the like calling. They are a people that doe very much thirst after blood, yet they will seldome fight face to face one with another, or with any other Nation; but doe altogether seeke reuenge of their enemy cowardly, albeit they are for the most part men of a goodly stature. Their law for murder, is to pay a fine to the King, and that but a small summe: but euermore the friends of the party murdered, will be reuenged on the murderer, or his kindred, so that the more they kill one another, the more fines hath their King. Their ordinary weapon which they weare, is called a Crise, it is about two foot in length, the blade being waued, and crooked to and fro, Indenture like, and withall exceeding sharpe, most 50 of them hauing the temper of their Mettle poysoned, so that not one amongst five hundred that is wounded with them in the body escapeth with his life. The handles of these weapons, are either of horne or wood, curiously carued in the the likenesse of a Duell, which many of them doe worship. In their warres, their fight is altogether with Pikes, Darts, and Targets. Of late, some few of them haue learned to vse their Peeces, but very vntowardly.

The apparell of the better sort, is a tucke on their heads, and about their loynes a faire Pintadoe, all the rest of their bodies naked; sometimes they will weare a close coate, somewhat like a Mandillion, of V. luet, Chamblet, Cloath, or some other kind of Silke: but it is but seldome, and vpon some extraordinary occasion. The common sort weare on their head, a flat cap of V. luet, Taffeta, or Collico-cloath, the which is cut in many peeces, and seamed with a faire stitch, 60 to make them sit flat and compasse: about their loynes they weare a kind of Callico-cloth, which is made at Chyn, in manner of a silke girdle, but at the least one yard broad, being of two colours. Also, there commeth from thence many sorts of white colours, which they themselues do both Dye Paint and Gild, according to the fashions of that Countrey: Likewise, they can weare a kind of striped stufte, both of Cotten, and Rindes of trees, but by meanes of their lasinesse, there

- Their head & head-tire. is very little of that worne. The men for the most part, haue very thicke curled haire on their heads, in which they take great pride, and often will goe bare-headed to shew their haire: the women goe all bare-headed, some of them hauing their haire tucked vp, like a Cart-horse taile, but the better sort doe tucke it vp, like our riding Geldings tailes. About their loynes they weare the same stufes, which I haue before mentioned, alwaies hauing a faire Girdle or Pintado, of their Countrey fashion, throwne ouer on their shoulders, which hangeth downe loose behind them.
- Their religion. The principall of them are most religious, but they very seldome goe to Church: They doe acknowledge Christ to be a great Prophet, whom they call Naby Isa, and some of them doe keepe of Mahomets Priests in their houses, but the common people haue very little knowledge in any Religion, onely they say, there is a God which made heauen and earth, and them also. He is good they say, and will not hurt them, but the Diuell is naught, and will doe them hurt, wherefore many of them for want of knowledge doe pray to him, onely for feare lest he should hurt them. And surely if there were men of learning, which were perfect in their language to instruct them, a number of them would be drawne to the true faith of Christ, and also would be brought to ciuilitie. For many which I haue reasoned with, concerning the Lawes of Christians, haue liked all well, excepting onely their plurality of Women, for they are all very lasciuiously giuen, both men and women. The better sort which are in authoritie, are great takers of bribes, and all the Iauans in generall, are bad pay-masters when they are trusted, notwithstanding, their Lawes for debts are so strickt, that the Creditour may take his Debtor, his Wiues, Children, 20 Slaues, and all that he hath, and sell them for his debt.
- The Diuell prayed to. Likewise, they are all much giuen to stealing, from the highest to the lowest, and surely in times past, they haue beene * Man-eaters, before that Traffique was had with them by the Chynasses, which as I haue heard some of them say, is not aboue one hundred yeares since. They delight much in ease and Musicke, and for the most part, they spend the day sitting crosse legged like a Taylor, whistling of a stick, whereby many of them become very good Caruers, to carue their Crise handles: and that is all the worke that most of them indeuour to doe. They are very great eaters, but the Gentlemen allow their Slaues nothing, but Rice sod in water, with some rootes and hearbs, and they haue a certaine hearb called Bettaile, which they vsually haue carried with them wheresoeuer they goe, in boxes, or wrapped vp in a cloath like a Sugar-loafe, and also a nut 30 called Pinange, which are both in operation very hot, and they eate them continually to warme them within, and keepe them from the Flux, they doe likewise take much Tobacco, and also Opium.
- Bribing. The Iauans themselves, are very dull and blockish to mannage any affaires of a Commonwealth, whereby all strangers goe beyond them that come into their land: and many of the Countrey of Chyn, which come thither to dwell, doe grow very rich, and rise to great Offices and Dignitie amongst them, as their Sabandar, their Laytamougon, and others, especially the Chineses, who like Jewes liue crooching vnder them, but rob them of their wealth, and send it for China.
- Lawes for debt. The Chineses are very crafty people in trading, vsing all kind of cousoning and deceit which may possibly be deuised. They haue no pride in them, nor will refuse any labour, except they 40 turne Iauans (as many of them doe when they haue done a murther, or some other villanie) then they are euery whit as proud, and as lasie as the Iauans. For their Religion they are of diuers sects, but the most of them are Atheists. And many of them hold opinion, that when they die, if they be good men, they shall be borne againe to great riches, and be made Gouvernors, and if they be wicked men, then they shall be turned into some vgly beast, as a Frog or a Toade. They burne sacrifice euery new Moone, mumbling prayers ouer them, with a kind of singing voyce, and as they sing, they ting a little Bell, which at the end of euery Prayer, they ring out as fast as they can. This ceremony they also vse, when any amongst them of account lyeth a dying. The manner of their sacrifice is this: They furnish their Altars, with Goats, Hens, Duckes, and 50 diuers sorts of fruits, the which are sometimes dressed to eate, and sometimes raw, and then are dressed afterwards and eaten. All that they burne, is onely papers painted, and cut out in curious workes, and valued by them at a certaine price. I haue many times asked them, to whom they burne their sacrifice, and they haue answered me to God: but the Gosserats and Turkes * which are there, say they burne it to the Diuell. If they do so, they are ashamed to confesse it. They are many of them well seene in Astronomy, and keepe a good account of their moneths and yeares: they obserue no Sabbath, nor one day better then other, except when they lay the foundation of a house, or begin some other great worke, which day they euer after obserue as a holy day. When any of them that are wealthy die in Bantam, their bodies are burnt to Ashes, which Ashes they put close in Iarres, and carry it to China to their friends. I haue seene 60 when some of them haue lyen a dying, they haue set vp seauen Odours burning, foure of them being great, and burning light, and they were set vpon a Cane, which lay crosse vpon two Crotches, about sixe foote from the ground, and three set on the ground right vnder them, being very small, and burning dim. I haue demaunded the meaning of it many times, but I could neuer hau haue other answer, but that it was the fashion of China; and surely many such like things they doe, not knowing why, or wherefore, but onely that it hath beene a fashion amongst them. They delight very much in Playes, and singing, but they haue the worst voytes that one shall heare Playes. any people haue; the which Playes or Interludes, they hold as seruice to their gods: in the beginning of which, they often vie to burne a sacrifice, the Priests many times kneeling downe, and kissing the ground three times, one presently after another. These Playes are made commonly, when they thinke their lunccks or shipping are set forth from China; likewise, when they are arrived at Bantam, and also when they set out from Bantam towards China: These Playes sometimes begin at noone, and end not till the next day morning, being most commonly in the open streete, hauing Stages set vp for the purpose. Moreouer, they haue amongst them some South-sayers, which sometimes rage, and runne vp and downe the streetes like mad men, Southsayers. hauing swords drawne in their hands, raring their haire, and throwing themselves against the ground. When they are in this franticke taking, they asseme, and other Chyneses doe beleeeue, that they can tell what shall come to passe after. Whether they be posselt with the Deuill or no, who reuealeth something to them, I know not, but many Chyneses vse them, when they send a lunccke of any voyage, to know whether they shall speed well or no, and by their report, it hath fallen out according as these South-sayers haue told them. The Chyneses are apparelled in long gownes, wearing kirtles vnder them, hanging something lower then their gownes. They are surely the most effeminate, and cowardliest people that liue. On their heads they weare a Caull, some of them being made of Silke, and some of haire: the haire of their heads is very long, which they bind vp on a knot, right on the crowne of their heads. Their Nobility and Gouvernours weare hoods of sundry fashions, some being one halfe like a hat, and the other like a French-hood; others being of Net-worke, with a high crowne, and no brims. These people are tall, and strong of body, hauing all very small blacke eyes, and very few of them haue any haire on their faces: They will steale, and doe any kind of villanie to get wealth: their manner at Bantam, is to buy Women-slaues, (for they bring no women out of China) by whom they haue many children, and when they returne to their owne Countrey, not minding to come to Bantam againe, they sell their women, but their children they carry with them. As for their goods, they take an order to send some at every shipping: for if they die in Bantam, all the goods they haue there, is the Kings, and if once they cut their haire, they may neuer returne to their Countrey againe, but their Children may; alwaies provided, that they neuer cut their haire.

§. II.

A true and briefe Discourse of many dangers by fire, and other perfidious treacheries of the Iauans.

After our Ships were laden, and all things set in as good order as it could be: vpon the one and twentieth of February, 1602. our General taking his leaue of the shore, departed, leaving behind him to be resident in Bantam nine persons, ouer whom he appointed M. William Starkie, to be cheife Comander: likewise he left xiiij. more, which he appointed to go in our Pinnasse for Banda; of which he was appointed for cheife Comander ouer the rest, Thomas Tudde Merchant, and for Master of the said Pinnasse, one Thomas Keith. The Generall at his departure left order, that this Pinnasse should be sent away with all speed; wherefore hauing taken in, to the quantitie of fifty sixe Chests and Fardells of goods, vpon the sixth of March at night, she set saile, but by reason of contrary winds, after she had spent neere two moneths, beating vp and downe in the Seas, she was forced to returne againe to Bantam. Also at our Generals departure, he left vs two houses full of goods, and likewise some goods lying in the Dutchmens house, but we were too few in number to keepe one well, had not God of his great mercie preserved vs.

It is not vnknowne to all that were there, the quarrell betwixt the Iauans and vs, before our ships departed, who sought all the meanes they could to be reuenged. Infomuch, that presently after the departure of our Pinnasse, they began to practise the firing of our Principall house, with fiery darts and arrowes in the night, and not content with that, but in the day time, if wee had brought out any quantitie of goods to ayre, we should be sure to haue the towne fiered to windward not farre from vs. And if these fire Arrowes, had not by Gods prouidence, beene espyed by some of our owne house, as they were, it was thought of vs all, that that house and goods had beene all consumed, as might plainly appeare at the top, when we came to repaire it. But as the mallice of the raskall sort of people began now to appeare, and continued for the space of two yeeres against vs: So Gods mercie began to shew it selfe vnto vs, and continued to the last day. As this discouse will plainly shew hereafter, his Name be blessed for it.

So soone as we had dispatched away our Pinnasse, we began to lay the foundation of our house, which was seuentie two foot long, and thirtie sixe foot broad, but by reason there was at that

wherefore many of them for want of knowledge doe pray to him, onely for feare lest he should hurt them. And surely if there were men of learning, which were perfect in their language to instruct them, a number of them would be drawne to the true faith of Christ, and also would be brought to ciuilitie. For many which I haue reasoned with, concerning the Lawes of Christians, haue liked all well, excepting only their plurality of Women, for they are all very lasciuiously giuen, both men and women. The better sort which are in authoritie, are great takers of bribes, and all the Iauans in generall, are bad pay-masters when they are trusted, notwithstanding, their Lawes for debts are so strickt, that the Creditour may take his Debtor, his Wiues, Children, 20 Slaues, and all that he hath, and sell them for his debt.

The euill people.

* So L. Verto-mannus.
Idleness.

Likewise, they are all much giuen to stealing, from the highest to the lowest, and surely in times past, they haue beene * Man-eaters, before that Traffique was had with them by the Chynasses, which as I haue heard some of them say, is not aboue one hundred yeares since. They delight much in ease and Musicke, and for the most part, they spend the day sitting crosse legged like a Taylor, whistling of a stick, whereby many of them become very good Caruers, to carue their Crise handles: and that is all the worke that most of them indeuour to doe. They are very great eaters, but the Gentlemen allow their Slaues nothing, but Rice sod in water, with some rootes and hearbs, and they haue a certaine hearb called Bettaile, which they vsually haue carried with them wherefoeuer they goe, in boxes, or wrapped vp in a cloath like a Sugar-loafe, and also a nut 30 called Pinange, which are both in operation very hot, and they eat them continually to warme them within, and keepe them from the Flux, they doe likewise take much Tobacco, and also Opium.

The Iauans themselves, are very dull and blockish to manage any affaires of a Commonwealth, whereby all strangers goe beyond them that come into their land: and many of the Countrey of Chyn, which come thither to dwell, doe grow very rich, and rise to great Offices and Dignitie amongst them, as their Sabandar, their Laytamougon, and others, especially the Chineses, who like Iewes liue crooching vnder them, but rob them of their wealth, and send it for China.

Chinois crafty.

The Chineses are very crafty people in trading, vsing all kind of cousoning and deceit which may possibly be deuised. They haue no pride in them, nor will refuse any labour, except they 40 turne Iauans (as many of them doe when they haue done a murther, or some other villanie) then they are euery whit as proud, and as lasie as the Iauans. For their Religion they are of diuers sects, but the most of them are Atheists. And many of them hold opinion, that when they die, if they be good men, they shall be borne againe to great riches, and be made Gouernors, and if they be wicked men, then they shall be turned into some vgly beast, as a Frog or a Toade. They burne sacrifice euery new Moone, mumbling prayers ouer them, with a kind of singing voyce, and as they sing, they ting a little Bell, which at the end of euery Prayer, they ring out as fast as they can. This ceremony they also vse, when any amongst them of account lyeth a dying.

The manner of their sacrifice is this: They furnish their Altars, with Goats, Hens, Duckes, and 50 diuers sorts of fruits, the which are sometimes dressed to eat, and sometimes raw, and then are dressed afterwards and eaten. All that they burne, is onely papers painted, and cut out in curious workes, and valued by them at a certaine price. I haue many times asked them, to whom they burne their sacrifice, and they haue answered me to God: but the Gosserats and Turkes

* which are there, say they burne it to the Diuell. If they do so, they are ashamed to confesse it. They are many of them well seene in Astronomy, and keepe a good account of their moneths and yeares: they obserue no Sabbath, nor one day better then other, except when they lay the foundation of a house, or begin some other great worke, which day they euer after obserue as a holy day. When any of them that are wealthy die in Bantam, their bodies are burnt to Funerall Rites.

Ashes, which Ashes they put close in Iarres, and carry it to China to their friends. I haue seene 60 when some of them haue lyen a dying, they haue set vp seauen Odours burning, foure of them being great, and burning light, and they were set vpon a Cane, which lay crosse vpon two Crotches, about fixe foote from the ground, and three set on the ground right vnder them, being very small, and burning dim. I haue demaunded the meaning of it many times, but I could neuer

haue other answer, but that it was the fashion of China; and surely many such like things they doe, not knowing why, or wherefore, but onely that it hath bene a fashion amongst them. They delight very much in Playes, and singing, but they haue the worst voyces that one shall heare any people haue, the which Playes or Interludes, they hold as seruice to their gods: in the beginning of which, they often vse to burne a sacrifice, the Priests many times kneeling downe, and kissing the ground three times, one presently after another. These Playes are made commonly, when they thinke their Iuncks or shipping are set forth from China; likewise, when they are arrived at Bantam, and also when they set out from Bantam towards China: These Playes sometimes begin at noone, and end not till the next day morning, being most commonly in the open streete, hauing Stages set vp for the purpose. Moreouer, they haue amongst them some South-sayers, which sometimes rage, and runne vp and downe the streetes like mad men, hauing swords drawne in their hands, raising their haire, and throwing themselves against the ground. When they are in this franticke taking, they affirme, and other Chyneses doe beleeeue, that they can tell what shall come to passe after. Whether they be possesst with the Deuill or no, who reuealeth something to them, I know not, but many Chyneses vse them, when they send a Iuncke of any voyage, to know whether they shall speed well or no, and by their report, it hath fallen out according as these South-sayers haue told them. The Chyneses are apparelled in long gownes, wearing kirtles vnder them, hanging something lower then their gownes. They are surely the most effeminate, and cowardliest people that liue. On their heads they weare a Caull, some of them being made of Silke, and some of haire: the haire of their heads is very long, which they bind vp on a knot, right on the crowne of their heads. Their Nobility and Gouvernours weare hoods of sundry fashions, some being one halfe like a hat, and the other like a French-hood; others being of Net-worke, with a high crowne, and no brims. These people are tall, and strong of body, hauing all very small blacke eyes, and very few of them haue any haire on their faces: They will steale, and doe any kind of villanie to get wealth: their manner at Bantam, is to buy Women-slaues, (for they bring no women out of China) by whom they haue many children, and when they returne to their owne Countrey, not minding to come to Bantam againe, they sell their women, but their children they carry with them. As for their goods, they take an order to send some at euery shipping: for if they die in Bantam, all the goods they haue there, is the Kings, and if once they cut their haire, they may neuer returne to their Countrey againe, but their Children may, alwaies prouided, that they neuer cut their haire.

§. II.

A true and brieue Discourse of many dangers by fire, and other perfidious treacheries of the Iauans.

After our Ships were laden, and all things set in as good order as it could be: vpon the one and twentieth of February, 1602. our General taking his leaue of the shore, departed, leaving behind him to be resident in Bantam nine persons, ouer whom he appointed M. William Starkie, to be cheife Comander: likewise he left xiiij. more, which he appointed to go in our Pinnasse for Banda; of which he was appointed for cheife Comander ouer the rest, Thomas Tudde Merchant, and for Master of the said Pinnasse, one Thomas Keith. The Generall at his departure left order, that this Pinnasse should be sent away with all speed; wherefore hauing taken in, to the quantitie of fifty sixe Chests and Fardells of goods, vpon the sixth of March at night, she set saile, but by reason of contrary winds, after she had spent neere two moneths, beating vp and downe in the Seas, she was forced to returne againe to Bantam. Also at our Generals departure, he left vs two houses full of goods, and likewise some goods lying in the Dutchmens house, but we were too few in number to keepe one well, had not God of his great mercie preserved vs.

Thomas Tudde. Thomas Keith.

Iauans goe about to fire the English house.

It is not vnknowne to all that were there, the quarrell betwixt the Iauans and vs, before our ships departed, who sought all the meanes they could to be reuenged. Insomuch, that presently after the departure of our Pinnasse, they began to practise the firing of our Principall house, with fiery darts and arrowes in the night, and not content with that, but in the day time, if wee had brought out any quantitie of goods to ayre, we should be sure to haue the towne fiered to windward not farre from vs. And if these fire Arrowes, had not by Gods prouidence, bene espyed by some of our owne house, as they were, it was thought of vs all, that that house and goods had bene all consumed, as might plainly appeare at the top, when we came to repaire it. But as the mallice of the raskall sort of people began now to appeare, and continued for the space of two yeeres against vs: So Gods mercie began to shew it selfe vnto vs, and continued to the last day. As this discouise will plainly shew hereafter, his Name be blessed for it.

So soone as we had dispatched away our Pinnasse, we began to lay the foundation of our house, which was seuentie two foot long, and thirtie sixe foot broad, but by reason there was at that time,

The house builded.

time, a new Protector chosen, we were put to some trouble and cost, before we could be permitted to goe thorow with it. Also wee ayred all our prize goods, and M. Starkey caused the leathers of most of the packs to be stripped off, by whose counsell it was I know not, but these goods did not keep their colours nothing so well as the rest did, as we found afterwards.

fired, and some of our goods burned.

The one and twentieth of March, by reason of a China Captaine that shot a Piece, the towne was set on fire, in which fire were many houses full of goods consumed. Amongst other, the Dutch house was burnt to the ground, wherein we had lying sixtie five Fardells of goods, besides some Pepper. Also we had some Pepper lying in a Chinaes house, which for the most part was burned and spoyled, so that we lost one hundred and ninetie sacks cleare, besides the damage the rest receiued. Our losse by this fire was great, but we praye God it was no more, considering how neere the fire came to both our houses, and how vnfit they were at that time for such a danger, especially one, where the fire came within three yards of it, insomuch that the Iammes of the windowes were so hot, that a man could hardly suffer his hand to touch them, and yet the old and dry thatch tooke not fire, to the great admiration of all people that were there of many Nations. There was gathered about this house all the villaines in the Countrey, so that all that night, we that kept that house durst take no rest, for feare they would throw some firebrands vpon it. In the Euening some of vs standing in the doore, there came Iauans, whom we knewe to be notorious Theeues, and asked vs how many we were that lay in that house, wee demanded againe, what they had to doe to aske, and if they would know, they should come at midnight and see, at which answere they departed very much discontent, but such is their boldnesse there, that in the day time they would come and looke before our faces, how our doores were hanged, and what fastning they had within, and many times we were informed by some that wished vs well, that if we did not keepe good watch, that there was a Crew, that meant to enter suddenly vpon vs, and to cut our throates, in so much that we being but foure at that house, what with ouer-watching, and what with the Disease that raigneth much in that Countrey, which is loosenesse of the bodie, wee were growne to very great weaknesse, and two of vs neuer recouered it.

Nine saile of Hollanders.

The nineteenth of Aprill, 1603. came into the Road, nine saile of Hollanders, ouer whom was Generall Wyborne Van Warwicke, who shortly after sent two of them for China, two for the Moluccoes, two laded at Bantam, one went to Iorian. Also he dispatched a Pinnasse to Achen, to will certaine ships (that went from thence by Captaine Spilbergs directions to Zeilon, to winne a small Fort from the Portugals) to come to Bantam, in the meane time, he with one ship stayed vntill their arriual. We are very much beholding to this Generall for wine, bread, and many other necessaries, and courtesies receiued of him. Hee would often tell vs how Sir Richard Luson relieued him, when he was likely to perish in the Sea, for the which he would say he was bound to be kind to Englishmen wherefoeuer he met them, and to speake truth, there was nothing in his ships for the comfort of sicke men, but we might command it, as if it had beene our owne. Also he in his owne person, did very much reuerence the Queenes Maiestie of England, when hee talked of Her. But there were some of baser sort in his Fleet, that did vse very vnreuerent speeches of Her to some of the Country people.

T. Morgan.

The five and twentieth of Aprill died Thomas Morgan, our second Factor heere, who had bin sickly a long time. Also Master Starkey began to grow very weake. The eight and twentieth day, came in our Pinnasse which was sent for Banda; hauing lost one of her Factors, William Chase, and the rest but weake and sickly. About this time there came certaine of the Kings Officers, and forbade vs to goe forward with our house, the reason whereof, as I doe iudge was because the new Protector had not as yet receiued a Bribe; and the Sabyndar and hee heeing at that time not friends, he could doe vs little pleasure: wherefore we complayned to Cay Tomongone Gobay, the Admirall, who indeed is the Father of all Strangers in that place. He presently made a great Feast, and inuited all the principall of the Court, at which Feast hee began to discoure of our cause, telling them what a shame it was that the King and they would not keepe their words to the English Generall and Merchants, and that rather then hee would breake his word, hee would goe dwell in a small Cottage himselfe, and wee should haue his house: but after much adoe, he made them grant that we should goe forward with our house, the which in short time after was finished. Our principall Merchant fearing Pepper would be deare, by reason of the Flemmish shipping that was there present, and the rest that were to come, bought vp as much Pepper as he could, and because our house was not as yet readie, he disbursed his money before the Pepper was weighed, and by reason the Flemmings are not curious in receiuing their Pepper, when we came to weigh ours, we were forced to receiue it as they did, or else we should haue neither money nor Pepper, so that we had in that parcell much fowle and bad Pepper.

New Protector
perfidious.

Master Starkeys
death.

Vpon the last of Iune, Master Starkey ended his dayes, whose buriall Generall Warwick caused to be honoured with a Company of shot and Pikes, the Colours trayled vpon the ground, according to the Order of Souldiers buriall.

The fourth of Iuly, the great Market on the East-side of the Riuer, was by villanie of certaine Iauans, (who thought to get some spoyle of the Chines goods) set on fire, in which fire some Chines.

Chinois that were indebted to vs, lost all that they were worth, so that we escaped not without some losse by it. The seuenteenth of Iuly, deceased Thomas Dobson, one of the Factours left for Banda: the seuen and twentieth day the Towne was burnt againe on the East-side the Riuer. The fifth of August at ten a clocke at night, there came to our house Captaine Spilberge, Captaine John Powlson, and some other Dutch Captaines, who told vs they had that day bene with the Protector about some businesse, who asked them if they would take our parts, if hee should doe any violence to vs, to the which they answered, as they said, that wee and they were neere Neighbours, wherefore they might not see vs wronged, they said more that hee straightly charged them, that whatsoeuer he should doe vnto vs, that they should not bee offended nor ayde vs in any way.

Fire.
M. Dobsons
death.

From thence I went presently to the Protector, and gaue him a smal Present, and also thanks for his men, which foure or fve dayes before hee had sent to helpe vs in our building. The Present he receiued, but I perceiued by his countenance he was angry: He told me, that that day he had much businesse with the King, but the next morning he would send for me, for that hee had to speake with me. The same day the Admirall sent his sonne to him to know what his meaning was to vse such threatning speeches of vs, but he denyed them. In the morning following hee sent for me: when I came he asked me, what they were that had told me he meant to harme vs: I told him the Hollanders: hee asked againe whether they were Slaues or Captaines, I told him they were Captaines: he bad me I should shew his Scruiants those Captaines. He said more, that if any Iauan or Chines had done it, he would haue sent for him, and cut his throat before vs. Then hee began to find fault with vs, because wee did not come to him when wee had any Sute, but went alwayes to the Sabindar or the Admirall: I answered againe that he was but new come into his place, and that we had as yet no acquaintance with him, but hereafter I would come to him. Then he promised me he would doe vs all the friendship he could, but it was but dissimulation to borrow money of vs. Also the Flemmings about this time spred a rumour through their owne Fleet, that the King would force vs to lend him fve thousand Rials of eight, otherwise he would cause our house to be plucked downe againe, the which was false, for neither the King nor the Protector, had at that time sent to vs for any, nor did in foure monethes after.

The seuenteenth of August, Captaine Spilberge hauing vented all his Commodities (which he shared in our prise) and laden his ships and his Pinnasse with Pepper, departed thence, hauing in his company two ships more of Warwicks Fleet. The nineteenth of August, wee brought out certaine packes of goods to ayre, wherefore a Iauan being Slaue to one of the principall of the Countrey, threw some fire-workes vpon a Thatched house, a little to windward of vs, we espying it pursued him, and tooke him, and carryed him to Cay Tomongone the Admirall, who put him in Irons. Within an houre after there came more of his fellowes, who would haue taken him away perforce, wherefore the Admirals men and they fell by the eares, and many were hurt on both sides. So soone as the Admirals men had beaten them away, hee sent him to the King, but because his Master was one of the Kings friends, he was not put to death: although by the Law of the Countrey he should haue dyed, neither did we greatly seeke it, because his Master was our very good friend also. Likewise, if a Iauan doe offend hee must bee punished with death, for if they inflict any lesse punishment, they are so wicked and bloudie a people, that they will bee cowardly reuenged, not only of Strangers, but of their owne Masters: so that if any Slaue doe offend his Master, he doth quite forgiue him, or else hee dyes for it. But they are very obedient, and will seldome offend their Masters, because they are for the most part as wicked as themselves. The two and twentieth of August, at night there were certaine Iauans gotten into a great yard hard by our house, who when we were singing of a Psalm, which wee did vse to doe when we set our Watch, these Rogues threw stones at our windowes, as if they would haue beaten downe our house, and some of the stones came in at the windowes, and missed vs very narrowly, but we tooke some of them, which yet vpon submission we spared.

About this time there grew a quarrell betweene the Flemmings and the Chinois, and some were slaine and hurt on both sides. This grew by the misbehaviour of the Flemmings, which in that place doe carry themselves very rude and disordered, in that abundant manner that they are a shame and infamy to Christendome and Christians. I doe not condemne them all, but the vulgar sort, who when they are ashore, and their drinke in, their Commanders can beare no rule ouer them. They got the worst before this quarrell was ended, but not by the Chinois, nor by manhood of the Iauans, only some that were Slaues to some Turne-coate Chinois, would steale behind the Flemmings in the Euening, and cowardly stab them.

Quarrell betwixt Chinois and Hollanders.
Hollanders drunken disorders.

One day they being very importunate, for one of their men which was slaine, the Protector demanded of them, when they came to any Countrey to trade, whether they brought Lawes with them, or whether they were gouerned by the Lawes of the Countrey they were in: to the which they answered, that when they were aboard their ships, they were gouerned by their own Lawes, but when they were ashore, they were vnder the Lawes of our Countrey they were in: well, said the Protector, then I will tell you the Lawes of the Countrey, which is this, if one kill a Slaue, he must pay twentie Rials of eight, if a Freeman, fifty Rials, if a Gentleman, a hundred Rials. The Flemings requested to haue that vnder his owne hand, the which they had, and it was all the mends they had for killing of their man, if they would haue taken fiftie Rials of eight, they might haue had it.

Lampooners cruell enemies to Ia-
uans.

About the fift of September, here came a Iuncke full of men from the Iland of Lampoon, which standeth in the Straights of Sunda; and are enemies to the Iauans, and all others that are dwellers in Bantam: these are so like the Iauans, that the one is not knowne from the other. Also there were many Iauans consoorted with them. These men hauing their Iuncke riding in a Creeke hard by the Towne, and being in all points like vnto the Iauans, would boldly come into the Towne, and not only in the euenings and nights come into houses, and cut off the peoples heads, but at noone dayes, in so much that for the space of a moneth, wee could take little rest for the grievous crying of the people. One day while we were sitting at dinner, they came and tooke a woman, 10 being our next Neighbour, and muffled her so with a Sacke, that she could not cry, and so carried her into a tuft of bushes in our back-side, and there cut her throate, and meant to haue cut off her head, if they had had time. Her Husband missing her, and looking out might see them carrie her, who cryed out, and we rose from dinner and pursued them, but it was too late to saue her life. Also they were very swift of foot, so that we could come neere none of them, and for any thing that we knew, they might be amongst vs, for after the Iauans were come wee could not know them. It was thought of some that they lay hid in the bushes till the comming of the Iauans, and then stole out, and put themselues amongst them. There were some Iaua women that would cut off their Husbands heads in the night, and sell them to these people. They did 20 linger much about our house, and surely if we had not kept good watch, they would haue attempted the cutting of our throats (if not for our heads) for our goods. But after awhile, many of them were knowne, and being taken were executed, which were men of very goodly stature. The reason they doe make these hard Aduentures, is, their King giues them a woman for euery strangers head they bring him, wherefore many times they would digge vp such as were new buried at Bantam, and cut off their heads, and so coozen their King.

Perfidious Ia-
uans.

Crueltie rewarded.

Treacherie intended and preuented.

Also at this time, some credible men that wished vs wel, of whom the Admirall was one, bid vs haue a speciall care of our geod watch, because some of the principall of the Land in birth, though not in wealth nor office, which had many Slaues, but little to maintayne them, had laid a Plot to haue slaine vs in the night, and to haue made spoyle of our goods which they tooke to be ten times more then were, and after to haue giuen it out, the Lampoons had done it. Whereupon we 30 were forced to haue Lights burning al night round about our house, otherwise in the dark nights, they being so blacke as they are, might haue entred suddenly vpon vs, before wee should descry them. For all the vpper worke of our houses by reason of the heat are open, and they are built with Canes, and likewise the fence round about the houses, which is but a weake building, and may quickly be borne downe. These Heathen Devils came forth two or three times, thinking to haue executed their bloudie pretence, but God would not suffer them. For so soone as they came within sight of our Lights and might heare our Drumme sound at the end of euery watch, their hearts failed them, so that they durst not giue the attempt, for they supposed, wee were readie not only with our small shot, but with our Murtherers to giue them entertainment, and to speake truth, they should haue found it so indeed. After they had wayted long, and could 40 neuer find oportunitie, they fell out amongst themselues, and so were disperfed. Diuers others made bold but vain attempts, and therefore now fel to work with the Chinois, whose houses at this time were full of our goods, which they had bought, in so much that euery night for a long time, we had such grievous crying out, and we looking euery houre when we should be assaulted, durst take no rest in the night. Many Chinois about vs were slaine, and surely if wee had not defended them with our shot, many more would haue bin slaine: for the singing of a Bullet is as terrible to a Iauan, as the cry of the Hounds is in the eares of the Hare: for they will not abide if once they heare it. But these continuall alarmes, and grievous out-cryes of men, women and children grew so rise in our eares, that our men in their sleepe would dreame they were pursuing the Iauans, and suddenly 50 would leape out of their Beds and catch their weapons: his next fellow hearing the dolefull noyse he made, would bussell vp, and in their sleepe haue wounded one another, before those that had the watch could come to part them: and if they should haue set their weapons further from them they would not haue beene readie, if we should haue had occasion, the which we looked for euery minute, and being but few of vs, I tooke my turne to watch as long as any, in which I haue stood many times more in feare of my owne men then of any other, and when I haue heard them bussell, haue caught vp a Target, for feare they would haue serued me as they did their fellowes.

The miseries of the English.

Terror of the word Fire.

But all this feare was nothing to vs in comparison of that which I will now speake of, which was fire. O this word fire, had it it beene spoken neere me, either in English, Mallayes, Iauanes, 60 or China; although I had beene found a-sleepe, yet I should haue leaped out of my bed, the which I haue done sometimes, when our men in their watch haue but whispered one to another of fire: In so much that I was forced to warne them, not to talke of fire in the night, except they had great occasion.

And

And not only my selfe, but my fellowes, Thomas Tudd, and Gabriel Towerfon, after our watches had beene out, and we heauie a-sleepe so that our men many times sounding a Drumm at our Chamber doores, we haue neuer bewrayed them, yet presently after they haue but whifpered of fire, we all haue runne out of our Chambers. I speake not this, that any that may bee sent thither hereafter should be discouraged, for then we were strangers, and now we haue many friends there, and the Countrey is growne to much better ciuilitie, and as the yong King groweth in age, will more and more, because their Gouvernement will bee better. In three monethes space, the Towne on the East-side the Riuer, was burnt fise times, but God be prayled the wind alwayes fauoured vs, and although the Iauans many times fired it on our side, yet it pleased God still to preferue vs, so that by reason it blew but little wind, it was quenched before it came to hurt vs.

20 ABout this time also, there was much falling out betweene the Flemmings and the Countrey people, by meanes of the rude behauiour of the Flemmings, and many of them were stabd in the euenings: and at that time the Common people knew not vs from the Flemmings, for both they and wee were called by the name of Englishmen, by reason of their vsurping our name at their first comming thither to trade, wherein they did our Nation much wrong, for wee were euer ashamed of their behauiour, and as wee passed along the street, wee might heare the people in the Market, rayling and exclaiming on the Englishmen, although they meant the Hollanders, wherefore, we fearing some of our men might be slaine in stead of them, wee began to thinke how wee might make our selues knowne from the Hollanders.

Hollanders called themselves English in the Indies, and so disgraced vs. Nouemb. 17. solemnized, & thereby a difference made betwixt vs.

30 And now the seuenteenth of Nouember drawing neere, the which wee held to be our Cornation day, (for at that time, nor the year following, we knew no other) we all suted our selues in new apparell of silke, and made vs all Scarfes of white and red Tassata, beeing our Countrey Colours, Also we made a Flagge with the red Crosse through the middle, and because wee that were the Merchants would be knowne from our men, we edged our Scarfes with a deepe fringe of gold, and that was our difference. Our day being come, wee set vp our Banner of Saint George, vpon the top of our house, and with our Drumm and Shot wee marched vp and downe within our owne ground, being but fourteene in number, wherefore we could march but single one after another, and so plied our Shot, and casting our selues in Rings and Esses. The Sabindar and diuers of the Chiefest of the Land, hearing our Peeeces, came to see vs and to enquire the cause of our triumph, we told them, that that day seuen and fortie yeare, our Queene was crowned, wherefore all Englishmen, in what Countrey soeuer they were did triumph on that day, Hee greatly commended vs for hauing our Prince in remembrance in so farre a Countrey. Many others did aske vs, why the Englishmen at the other house did not so: wee told them, that they were no Englishmen, but Hollanders, and that they had no King, but their Land was ruled by Gouernors. Some would replie againe, and say they named themselves to bee Englishmen at first, and therefore they tooke them to be Englishmen, but wee would tell them againe, they were of another Countrey neere England, and spake another Language, and that if they did talke with them now, they should heare they were of another Nation. The multitude of the people did admire to see so few of vs deliuer so much shot, for the Iauans and Chinees are no good shot. In the after noone I caused our men to walke abroad the Towne, and the Market, whereby the people might take notice of them, and the red and white Scarfes and Hat-bands made such a shewe, that the Inhabitants of those parts had neuer seene the like, so that euer after that day, wee were knowne from the Hollanders, and many times, the children in the streets would runne after vs, crying, Oran Engrees bayk, oran Hollanda Iabad, which is, the Englishmen are good, the Hollanders are naught. Generall Warwicke went for Patanca, and from thence to China.

50 The first day of December came in two ships, which some six moneths before he had sent thither, who comming vnder the Iland of Mackow, found a Carracke there riding at an anchor, beeing full laden with raw Silks, Muske, and diuers other costly wares, readie to depart, and at that time, her men were almost all ashoare, so that they tooke her without any resistance, or very little, they laded their two ships and the rest they set a fire, so that there was by their owne report, twice so much burnt as they brought away. Comming backe they met with a great Iuncke of Syon, with whom they fought and killed threescore and foure men. They had some slaine and hurt also, but when they had taken her, and knew her to be of Syon, they let her goe againe, because they had or shortly meant to send Factors there, the Captaine of the Iuncke was slaine, who they say, when they haied him would not tell them of whence he was, and when they had him strike, Answered that he would not for neuer a Saile that swamme in the Sea. The Flemmings not knowing Muske sold great store to certaine of Iapan, which they met with at Sea for little or nothing. After they had spent some fortie dayes in Bantam, and their Mariners, some wickedly and some vainly consumed their pillage, (which was great) vpon the seuenteenth of Ianuary they set saile from thence, being foure ships in company there. One had laded at Bantam, and one that some two monethes before came from China; and had spent foure yeares out of their Countrey, of which time, they had bene fourteene monethes at Cachinchina, where they at their first comming were betrayed, and their Captaines taken Prisoners, whom they made kneele on their knees foure and twentie houres, hauing their neckes bare, and one standing with a sharpe Sword readie to haue strooken off their heads when the word should bee giuen. They bare them downe to be men of Warre and Spyes, and no Merchants. These Dutchmen were Papists, wherefore in the end the Portugall Friers saued their liues, and afterwards they were kindly vsed, but their ranfome cost them deare.

Macadu.

About this time the Protector sent to mee diuers times to lend him two thousand pieces of eight, and if not two thousand, a thousand, but I put him of, telling him we were left there with goods but no money. Also that the people of the Countrey ought vs much, the which we could not get in, likewise that as yet we had bought but little Pepper, wherefore we must buy all wee could to get lading against we expected our ships. The Flemmings that came in so rich from Mac-kow, had so bribed him, that now he began to harken to them concerning the building of a faire house.

heate of Pepper.

The sixt of February we lost one of our Company Robert Wallis, and many more of our men were sicke and lame, which came by the heate of the Pepper in milling and shutting it, so that euer after wee were forced to hire Chines to doe that worke, and our owne men to ouer-see them only.

Chineis dishonesty.

The sixteenth of February, came in a great ship of Zeilan from Pattary, but fve or sixe dayes before her comming, she sent in a small Slup or Pinnace, willing their Factors to buy vp all the Pepper they could, which made vs thinke that Generall Warwicke, with all his shippes was comming to lade there, wherefore we bought vp all that wee found to bee good and merchantable. For the Chinees spoiled much with water and durt, because the Flemmings refused none, and it is of a certaine, the Chinees bought one of another, and sold it to the Flemmings againe at the same price they bought it, and yet they would gaine ten Riials of eight in a hundred sackes, by putting in water and durt, for were it neuer so bad, they knew their Chapmen, and blow which way the wind would, they had shipping to come thither, either from the East or from the West, in so much that one would haue thought they meant to carrie away the Pepper growing on the Trees, Mountaines and all. The people there hearing our Countreies are cold, haue asked vs if wee beat Pepper in our Morter, that we playster our wales with to make our houses warme. This ship hade taken much good purchase, but they sware those Englistmen they had with them, and also charged them vpon losse of their wages, they should tell vs nothing, which we tooke very vnkindly.

buying so much Pepper.

There was at this time three houses of Flemmings, and all lay for seuerall accounts, and bought vp Pepper euerie one so much as they could get. The fift of March, the Protector sent to mee in the Kings name to borrow a thousand Riials of eight, wherefore I was forced to lend them fve hundred, or else they would haue fallen out with me, the which the Flemmings would haue bene glad to haue seene.

Ior.

About this time, there came in a Iuncke from Iore, with certaine Flemmings in it, who stole away with their goods, because Iore had a long time bene besieged by the Portugals of Malacco, so that they of the Towne could hardly looke out. They said the Portugals offered the King of Iore peace, vpon condition hee wold deliuer those Flemmings that were there into their hands, or kill them himsele, to the which the King answered, that hee would first lose his Kingdome.

Two great fires.

In the beginning of this moneth of March, and to make an end of this old and wonderfull yeare, 1603. we had two great fires on the other side of the water which did much spoile, but God bee thanked the wind alwayes fauoured vs.

Anno, 1604.

And now to begin the new yeare 1604. my Pen affords to speake of little else, but Murther, Theft, Warres, Fire and Treason, and first to begin with a Tragedie. We had a Malato of Pegu in our house, which our ships brought from Achen, and in the great ship that came lately from Pattania, there was one of his Country men, who on Sunday being the eight of Aprill, had gotten a bottle of Wine, and brought it ashore to make merry with our Molato. In the afternoone, they walke abroad, met with the Prouost of their ship, who bid their Molato get him aboard, but he answered he would not yet, whereupon the Prouost strooke him, our Molato seeing his Country-man misused and being somewhat tickled in the head with wine, which hee did seldome vse to drinke, thought he would reuenge his Country-mans quarrell, wherefore hee presently came home, and the euening being come, he tooke a Rapier and a Target, and with his Cryse at his backe went forth. And because at that time there was much quarrelling and brabbling betweene the Iauans and the Flemmings, I charged our men, that if they were sent out in the euening about any businellie, they should take their Weapons with them, for feare some Iauans.

mans, that knew them not might doe them a mischiefe in the darke, we thinking the Cooke had sent him into the Market for Herbes or something which hee wanted, mistrusted nothing. Also there went out with him a Slaue of the Sabindars, which was borne and brought vp amongst the Spaniards at the Manelies. They meeting with the Prouost, & the other Molato together, our Molato beganne to quarrell with the Prouost, and presently out with his Cryse, and stabd him, then fearing his Countryman would bewray him, stabd him also, and would haue slaine him that went out with him, had he not runne thorow a great Ditch, and so got from him, then meeting with a poore Ianan, and being nulled in blood stabd him likewise.

There manner is, that when a Ianan of any account is put to death, although there bee a common Executioner, yet the neereft of kinne doth execute his office, and it is held the greatest fauour they can doe them. The Protestour would haue twentie Rials of eight for the Ianan which was slaine, and the Hollanders his life. And accordingly they came with a guard of shot, the sixteenth of Aprill, to his execution, which the Executioner performed with quickest dispatch.

The same euening their Vice-Admirall, hauing one ship more in company set sayle for Holland. The fourteenth day Thomas Tudd, the Companies chiefe Factor left there for Banda who had beene a long time sicke departed his life, so that of seuen Factors left there for this place and Banda, we were now but two liuing, and we had lost in all since the departure of our ships, eight men besides the Malato that was executed, and wee were now tenne liuing and one Boy. The twentieth day died Iasper Gensbery, who was Admirall of the two ships that was betrayed at Cachinchina.

The two and twentieth of Aprill, came in a great Iuncke from China, which was thought to be cast away, because she tarried so late, for they vse to come in February and March, but by reason of her comming, Cathis kept all the yeare at a very cheape rate, which was a great hindrance to vs, in the sales of our prize goods, for when Cathis were cheape, and Rials deare, wee could not vent a piece of stufte at halfe the value we did at our first comming. Againe, the Chinois this yeare sent all the Rials they could get for China, wherefore we were forced to giue them credit, or else we must lose the principall time of the yeare for our sales. Pepper the Flemmings had left none, but what was in our hands and the Sabindars, who would not sell for any reasonable price. Also our goods now began to grow old, and the colours of many sorts began to vade, for the Ware-houses in that place are so hot and moyst, that although men take neuer so much paines in ayring and turning their wares, yet they will spoyle any sort of Cloth which shall lye long in them.

Needs must he goe whom the Deuill drives. This Story being long I haue cut off, lest it should irke some quarrels caused both with Ianans & Hollanders, the proximity might cause a third from the Reader.

§. IIII.

Treacherous underminings, with other occurrents.

A Chines borne, but now turned Ianan, who was our next neighbour, and kept a victuall house, and brewed Aracke, which is a kind of hot drinke, that is vsed in most of those parts of the world, instead of Wine, had two Out-houses, where his guests did vse to sit, and in the one hee vsed to brew, which ioyned to our pales, on the South side of our house; but now he began another Trade, and became an Ingenor, hauing got eight Fire-brands of hell more to him, onely of purpose to set our house a fire. These nine deepe workers digged a Well in one of these houses, from the bottome of which Well, they brought a Mine, quite vnder the foundation of our house: but when they came vp to the Planckes of our Ware-house, they were at a stand, but before they could make this Mine, they were forced to dig a very deepe Well in their yard, to draw away the water which did abound in this Mine, and because we should mistrust nothing, they planted Tobacco, and many other hearbs, hard by that Well, and would euery day be watering of them: Also, we might heare them boyling of water euery day, but because they were Brewers, and had many tubbs to wash and to fill, wee mistrusted nothing of that ensued. When they came to these Plancks afore-named, they durst not cut them, alwaies for some of vs were walking ouer them, both night and day. After they had waited two moneths, and could neuer find opportunitie to cut the boords, they began to cast their Cerberous heads together how they should get in, but the Deuill set them wrong to work, for if they had continued stil, vntil they had come but crosse the ware-house opposite against them, they had found thirtie thousand Rials of eight buried in Iarres, for feare of fire, and also that roome was not boorded at all, so they might haue come into the Ware-house, and had what they sought for. Well, one of these wicked consortship being a Smith, and brought vp alwaies to worke in fire, told his fellowes he would worke out the plancks with fire, so that we should neuer heare nor see him: and vpon the eight and twentieth of May, about ten of the clocke at night, they put to a Candle, and burnt a round hole through the boords. So soone as the fire came thorow, the Mats of our Packs tooke fire, which presently spread, and began to burne; all this while we knew nothing, nor could perceue nothing, by reason of the closenesse of the Ware-house, for all the windowes were plaistered vp, for feare of fire ouer-head. After the first watch was out, wherein I was one my selfe, the second watch smelt a strong funcke of fire, for it was by that time much increased, but they knew not where it should be, and searched euery roome and corner. One remembered a Rats hole at last, behind his Trunke, where he might plainly perceiue the smoake to steame vp out of the hole. Then presently he came into my Chamber, and told me our Cloath Ware-house was a fire, I hearing this word fire, although I was fast asleepe, yet it was no need to bid me rise, neither was I long a slipping on my clothes, but presently ran downe and opened the doores, whereat came out such a strong smoake, that had almost strangled vs. This smoake, by reason it had no vent, was so thicke, that wee could not perceiue whereabouts the fire was, and at that time we had two great larres of Powder standing in the Ware-house, which caused vs greatly to feare being blowne vp; yet setting all feare aside, we plucked all things off that lay on them, which felt in our hands verie hot: The Powder we got out, and carried it into our backside, then we searched boldly for the fire and found it; we lighted Candles, but the thicknesse of the smoake put them out, then we tied twelue great Waxe Candles together, and lighted them all, which continued alight: we plucked out packes so fast as wee could, but by reason of the heat and smoake which choaked vs, being so few as we were, could doe little good vpon it: wherefore we let in the Chinois; then came in as well those that had done it, as others, hoping to get some spoile. When I saw that these damned Chinois would doe vs little good, but rather harme, I was almost in dispaire, and hauing at that time a thousand pound in Gold, which I had receiued of Generall Hymskerke for Pepper, in my Chest aboute staires, I ran vp thinking to fetch it, and to throw it into a pond on our backe-side, but when I came to my Chamber doore, my mind altered, and I thought I would goe see once againe what might be done, and comming thorough our Hall, I chanced to cast mine eie into our dyning roome, which was right ouer the place where the fire was, where there were Chinois that had removed the Table, and were breaking vp the Bricks of the Seeling; amongst which was our vnkind neighbour, which was the principall Actor; I bid them leaue and get them downe, the which they would not, vntill I began to let flie amongst them: when I had driuen them downe, I went downe after them, and desired some Merchants that stood by, with whom we had dealings, that they would vrge the rest of the Chinois to help vs plucke out packes, promising they should be well paid for their paines: it pleased God to put so much good in their minds, which I thinke, neuer had any before nor since, so that they fell to worke of all hands, and presently the roome was cleered, out of which came fiftie and odde packs, whereof fixteene were on a light fire. Thus by their help the fire was quenched, which they knew, and therefore would not worke any more, and the next day were paid for their worke, besides what they stole.

Hymskerke.

Discouery of knauery.

We wondered much how this fire should come, suspecting the Portugalls had hired Malayes to doe it. But a certaine Chines, a Bricklayer, which wrought at the Dutch house, in the morning, told a Flemming that had beene long in the Country, that certaine Chinois had done it, which now were fled, and if we looked well in the roome, we should finde the manner how it was done. The Dutch-man told an English Surgeon what he had heard, and willed him to come and tell vs, and he himselfe, because he was perfect in the language, would go and inquire after them. The English Surgeon came to me, and desired me he might see the roome where the fire was, I presently called for a Candle, and shewed him the roome; he going to one corner, found a little round hole, which was burned thorough one plancke of the floore, whereat I put downe a long sticke which I had in my hand, but could feele no ground: then I called for an Axe, and as softly as we could, we wrinched vp the plancke, where vnder was a way, that the greatest Chest or Packe in our house might haue gone downe, which when I saw, as secretly as I could, I called three of our men, and went to the house from whence the Mine came, hauing our weapons. I set one in the doore, and charged him he should let none come out, whatsoeuer he were, and my selfe with the other two went in, where in one roome we found three men, there were two more in another roome, who hearing vs, fled out at a backe doore, which we knew not of before we see them; those three, after two or three blowes giuen, we brought away, one was a dweller in the house, but the other two we could proue nothing against them: I laid them fast in Irons, and presently I sent Master Tower to the Protector, to certifie him how the case stood, and to desire him they might be sought out, and haue Iustice done vpon them, which he promised should be done, but was very slacke in performance.

Hollanders kindnesse.

The Dutch Merchants hearing we had taken some, and doubting the Chynois would rise against vs, came very kindly with their weapons, and sware they would liue and die in our quarrell: when we had laid out those goods that had receiued some water to ayre, then we examined this partie that dwelt in the house, who told vs the names of sixe that were fled, but hee would not conesse that he knew any thing of it: also he said, the other two knew nothing of the matter, neither could he tell vs, as hee said, whether the rest were fled. Then fearing him with an hot Iron, but not touching him, he confessed the whole manner of all, and that he did helpe; he said, those two out-houses were built for that purpose at the first, although they put them to other vse, because because we should not mistrust them: and more, that the myne was made two moneths before, in which time many nights before, they had been in the myne, striving to get into our house, but could not.

We tortured him, because when we had laid downe the yron, he denied all; but beeing tortured, made a second confession. The next morning I sent him to execution: as hee went out of our gates, the Iauans (who doe much reioyce when they see a Chynese goe to execution: as also the Chynois doe, when they see a Iauan goe to his death) reailed him, but hee would answer againe, saying, The English-men were rich, and the Chynois were poore, therefore why should they not steale from the English if they could. The next day, the Admirall tooke another of them, and 10 sent him to me, who knew there was but one way with him, and therefore resolved with himselfe not to confesse any thing to vs: he was found hid in a pryue, and this was he that put the fire to our house; he was a Gold-smith, and confessed to the Admirall, he had clipped many Ryalls, and also coyned some counterfeit: some things he confessed to him concerning our matter, but not much, but he would tell vs nothing. Wherefore because of his fullennesse, and that it was hee that fired vs, I caused him to be burned vnder the nayles of his Thumbes, Fingers and Toes, with sharpe hot yrons, and the nayles to be torne off, and because he neuer blinshed at that, we thought that his hands and legs had been nummed with tying, wherefore we burned him in the hands, armes, shoulders, and necke, but all was one with him: then we burned him quite through the hands, and with rasphes of yron tore out the flesh and sinewes. After that I caused them to knock
 20 the edges of his shin-bones with hot searing yrons. Then I caused cold serues of yron to be scraed into the bones of his armes, and suddenly to be inatched out: after that all the bones of his fingers and toes to be broken with pincers; yet for all this he neuer shed teare, no nor once turned his head aside, nor stirred hand nor foote; but when we demanded any question, he would put his tongue between his teeth, and strike his chin vpon his knees to bite it off. When all the extremitie we could vse was but in vaine, I caused him to be put fast in yrons againe, where the Amits or Ants, which doe greatly abound there, got into his wounds, and tormented him worse then we had done, as we might well see by his gesture. The Kings Officers desired me he might bee shot to death; I told them that was too good a death for such a villaine, and said more, That in our Countrys if a Gentleman, or a Soldiour had committed a fact worthy of death, then he was shot
 30 to death, and yet he was befriended too, but they doe hold it to be the cruellst and basest death that is. Wherefore they being very importunate, in the euening we lead him into the fields, and made him fast to a stake: the first shot carried away a piece of his arme, bone and all; the next shot stroke him through the Breast vp neere to the shoulder, then he holding downe his head, looked vpon the wound: The third shot that was made, one of our men had cut a bullet in three parts, which stroke vpon his Breast in a triangle, whereat he fell downe as low as the stake would giue him leaue; but between our Men and the Flemmings, they shot him almost all to pieces before they left him. Now in this time the Admirall, and the Sabyndar sent vs a guard of men euery night, for feare the Chynois would rise against vs, but we feared it not, yet we kept foure of their men to be witnesses, that whatsoeuer we did, if they should rise, was but in our owne defence. The other two I set free.

Another of them I obtained by a bribe, who confessed his associats, viz. Uniete the chiefe, Sawman his partner that dwelt in the house with him, Hynting, Omigpayo, Hewsameow, Utee, which was shortly after crysed for lying with a woman, himselfe Boyhy, Irrow, and Lackow, which were fled to Iackatra: the which Irrow and Lackow I had neuer heard of before, I made all the meanes I could to get them, but I could not except I would haue been at exceeding great charges, and there were others that belonged to some Iauans, which were great men, and getting into their houses, we could not get them: some of them did offer them to sell to vs, and wee did beat the price as one would doe about an Oxe or a Calf. but they held them so deare, that I durst not deale with them: I proffered them as much for euery one, as they might buy them another slaue in their roomes, and some benefit, but they were so fit instruments for their purpose, beeing practised in all villanie, that they would not part with them without a great summe. For all the 50 Iauans and Chynies, from the highest to the lowest are all villaines, and haue not one sparke of grace in them; and if it were not for the Sabyndar, the Admirall and one or two more, which are Chyn-men borne, there were no liuing for a Christian amongst them, without a Fort, or very strong house all of bricke or stone. This Boyboy we tortured not, because of his confession, but crysed him.

Amongst all other of the deuils Instruments here vpon earth, there was one of the Kings blood, called Panggranman delicke, who kept one of those nine villaines in his house. One day he coming to our house to buy cloth, we desired him he would deliuer this fellow into our hands, promising him that we would cause our Generall to giue him thanks, and told him how good it would be for the Countrey, to roote out such villaines as they were: he answered againe, That we should tell them so, that had the gouernment of the Countrey in their hands, or cared for the good of the Countrey, for he did not. Some three or foure daies he came to our house againe, and would haue had me giuen him credit for sixe or seuen hundred Rialls of eight in cloth, but because he was a man not to be trusted, I excused the matter, saying, That I looked every day for our Ships, and that I could deliver no goods, but I must have Pepper presently, whereby I might have lading ready. After he had been very earnest, and saw he could not prevail, he went out very angry, and being at our gate, he looked back upon our house, and said, It was pity but it should be burnt againe. Also he would have had a Chynese that we had some dealings with, to have helped to some Chynois that dwelt neere vs, to undertake the firing of our house againe. Hee being a man generally hated of all for cruelty that he had done, the Chynois told vs what he said: wherefore I would presently have gone to the Court to have complained of him; but many wished me not to doe so: for they said, He was a desperate villaine, and cared neither for King nor Protector, but if we brought him to that open shame, he would doe vs a mischief whatsoever came of it: 10 and I saw it, for the King and the Gouverneur, had sent to him often times, to deliver vs that fellow he had, but he cared not for them. Shortly after, we had many shrewd attempts to have fired our house: for the towne was fired in three places at one instant in the night, a little to windward of our house, and twice another night, but God blessed our industry and preserved vs.

Amongst all these sorrowfull and troublesome discourses, it happened that a certaine Chynois which dwelt hard vnder our pales, did steale away another Chynies wife, and being hardly pursued by her husband, they had no meanes to shift her away, but to put her over the pales into our ground. And at that time we having newly shot much Pepper into our Warehouse, which was so extreame hot, that we were forced to keepe the doore open night and day, having alwayes a regard to it in the night: This being a fit place for her to hide her in; got behind the doore, so 20 farre as she could stand for heat, and her husband would have sought all Iana and Chyna, before he would or durst come thither to seeke. In the night after our watch was set, one of our Company went into our backside, the which place we did very much frequent night and day; but as he was coming backe, and being a little starre light, he saw the woman stand in the Pepper house doore, who came forth to take breath, for she had been better to have been in the stoues so long: he presently swore, A woman: I ran downe, and caused her to be searched and examined presently; She told vs that her husband would have beat her, wherefore she was forced to climbe over our pales, and to hide her selfe.

It is an ordinary thing for the Chines to beate their Wiues, especially she being a Cuchinchyne woman, which had no friends in Towne, for the Iauans will hardly suffer them to beat their women; wherefore now having searched and secured every place, I thought it would proue but 30 some such leet. The next morning her husband came, who falling downe on his marie-bones, desired me to be good vnto him, for I having so lately tortured some Chines, he thought I would torture him: But in my conscience he needed no more plague or punishment then such a Wife, wherefore I presently dismissed them both.

The Protector, a little before had given vs, all the houses and ground which ioyned to our pales, and belonged to those Chynois, which vndermined our house, but although it were given, yet I thinke, there was neuer English-man paid so deere for so little ground, in any Countrey in the world: the houses were rotten, but the ground did vs great pleasure. We bought also a house 40 of a Pangran, or Gentleman, which came so neere our Pepper-house doore, that it was verie troublesome to vs, when wee should carry in or out our Pepper, wherefore I bought that house with the ground, so that now we had a very spacious yard.

The ninth of September, the Protector sent a Proclamation, that no Chines should weigh any Pepper to the strangers, meaning the English and the Hollanders: the which Proclamation was procured by the Hollanders, and we knew it very well, for the same day they dined with vs, and at dinner they told vs, the Protector owed them ten thousand sacks of Pepper, but I told them that was not so, for they would neuer be such fooles to trust him so much. The next morning, I went to the old woman, who commands the Protector, and all the rest, and indeed is called 50 Queene of the Land by the Sabindar, and diuers others, although she be not of the Kings blood, but onely for her wisdom, is held in such estimation amongst them of all sorts, that she ruleth, as if she were soly Queene of that Countrey. After we had made our griefes knowne to her, she presently sent for the Protector, willing vs to talke with him before her: when he came, I demanded of him, for what cause he had forbidden vs to Trade; he answered, he must buy ten thousand sacks of Pepper for the King, I told him againe, that the Flemmings themselves told me, that the Pepper he would buy was for them, and that he owed them ten thousand sacks. Many shifts he vsed, but the Queene our constant friend said, he should not hurt vs. For the Hollanders, when they saw they could get no trading with the people for Pepper, then they delivered the Protector money, and wrought with him, as I have before rehearsed: and if we had had but ten thousand Rials of eight, more then we had, the Flemmings should have got little 60 Pepper that yeare in Bantam. It is most certaine, they are very much hated there, and what they doe or procure, is for feare of their shipping, wherein they doe abound in all those parts. The twelfth of September, the Protector sent Rials vp and downe amongst those that were dealers in Pepper. In the Kings Name, some to serue him an hundred sackes, some fiftie sackes, some ten, some five, as it were a begging, and indeed he tooke it vp at the Kings price, which was was 4. a Riall in a sacke lesse then we paid. The Chines with much grudging serued him, a while after he set a taxe vpon them to serue him so much more; then the Chines railed vpon the Protector, and the Hollanders both, and many of them would not receiue their Money, but the Officers would throw it downe in their houses, and take their names.

The fifteenth of September, by meanes of an old Trot, which was making of Candles, the Towne was set on fire, the which consumed all the vpper worke of our three houses, to our exceeding great danger, cost and trouble: The Sabindar came to vs in the tumult, also the Admirall, who had charge of the Court, in the Kings and Gouvernors abience, then in progresse, sent vs a great traine of his principall men; likewise, one of the Kings Vnckles came to vs with a great number, and also the rich Chyna, with a very great crew. All these came to see that no body should offer vs any violence, for they knew well we had enemies of great force, but not for our sakes, but for our goods. Now we were laid open to all our enemies, for our fence for the most part was burnt to the ground, and we had not a place to dresse our victuals in, yet as good fortune was, we had one little shed in the middle of our yard, which was our Court of Guard, that escaped, where we incamped by night. The Dutch house escaped, though but narrowly, wherefore we borrowed some of their men. For it is to be noted, that though we were mortall enemies in our Trade; yet in all other matters we were friends, and would haue liued and dyed one for the other. Also the Admirall and Sabindar sent vs men euery night, so that we with our Drum, Shot, and Pikes, lined a Souldiers life, vntill our fence was made vp, and afterwards too: For this was but to shew vs the way, and our fence was no sooner vp, but wee looked euery houre when it should be burnt downe, or borne downe by those that would haue had the cutting of our throats.

The Pangran Mandelicko in the end of September, fell to robbing of Iuncks, one of which was of Ire, laden with Rice, Men and Women: with a great crew of villaines, his Slaues, he seized on the Iuncke in the night, and carried away all the Rice, with the Men and Women as his prisoners. The which was the next way to keep away all other Iuncks, which vsed to bring victuals to the Towne, whereby to starue them all, for that land is not able to serue one quarter of the people that are in it. The King and his Protector sent to him, commanding him to deliuer the people and goods which he had taken, the which hee would not, but presently fortified himselfe. Also the rest of the Pangrans that were of the Kings blood, and his, but being all traytors to the King, maintained him, so that the Kings Officers durst not meddle with him. The Protector, Sabindar, and Admirall, sent to vs to take heed to our selues, the Rebels grew euery day stronger and stronger, and all the people in the Countrey, and also strangers began to be in great feare. I was forced to borrow some small Ordnance of Chyna Merchants, which were our friends, and with Chaines and Bushes to fortifie our selues, and our men were besides euery day, a making of Chaine-shot, Lanegrall-shot, and Crosse-barre-shot. All Trade of Merchandise was laid aside, neither did any in the Towne looke after buying and selling: And euery day, we should haue the Rebels espyals would come into our yard, who would be very inquisitiue, what, and wherefore those were, which our men were all so hard at worke vpon, wee would plainly tell them, that we looked euery night for such a mans comming, wherefore we made prouision for his entertainment.

About the twentieth of October, came in the King of Iacatra, with a crue of fifteene hundred fighting men, besides straglers, and had a thousand more comming after. Hee challenged the Rebels, and likewise the Pangrans to fight with him and his Company only: hee had indeed a great quarrell against them all, for but a little before, they sought meanes to put him out of his Kingdome, but the Rebels keepe their fortification, and would not come out. The sixe and twentieth of October, the King of Iacatra, and the Admirall sent for vs, to know if there were no meanes to fire them a reasonable distance off, out of the reach of their Baces, of which they had a great number. We told them if there had beene a ship in the Road, it might easily haue bin done, but for vs to doe it, we thought we should hardly find things wherewithall. The Admirall asked me what things we would haue, I told him Camphire, Salt-peeter and Brimstone; as for some things we had already. The Admirall said he would helpe vs to all these, and desired vs we would helpe them: also he had a long Bow and Arrowes, fit for such a purpose, but I thinke a Musket had beene better. We were minded to haue caused the Kings Ordnance to haue beene planted, and to haue shot red hot Bullets amongst them, which I thinke would haue made perillous worke, both with them and their Thatched houses, and fortifications made of Canes: The principall Rebell had fought all the meanes he could to fire vs, now we meant verily to see if we could fire him: but whether it was for feare of the King of Iacatra, or hearing wee were about such a matter: The Pangrans and the Rebels, both came to an agreement within two dayes after, the which agreement was this, that the principall Rebell should within six dayes depart out of the King of Bantams Dominion, hauing with him only thirtie of his household, the which hee did. For the space of ten dayes, we looked euery houre, both night and day when the Kings Forces and the Pangrans would ioine battle, for they were both readie: but the Iauans are verie loth to fight if they can chuse; the reason they say is, their wealth lyeth altogether in Slaues, so

The seuenteenth day of Nouember, which we tooke to be our Coronation day, and hauing all our Peeces and Chambers lying laden since the troubles, we inuited the Flemmings to Dinner, in the middle of Dinner we dranke a Health to our Queene, and also shot off all our Ordnance.

There resort to this Towne of Bantam a number of many Nations, the which diuers of them are Liegers. These people hauing heard much fame of the English Nation in times past, before euer they saw any of vs, had an especiall eye to our carriage and behauiour, and wee were growne a common admiration amongst them all, that wee being so few should carrie such a port as wee did, neuer putting vp the least wrong that was offered by either Iauans or Chinees, but alwayes 10 did iustice our selues, and when the Protector did wrong vs himselfe, it was knowne that wee did not spare to tell him of it soundly, and in such sort that he wanted very much of his will. It is well knowne also, that at the first comming of our ships, the Iauans offered vs much wrong, in purloyning our goods, but so many as we tooke, were either slaine, wounded, or soundly beaten: the Iauans thought we durst not doe so, when our ships were gone, wherefore they did practise to steale both day and night, but they found it all one, the which they did admire at, for it is most certaine, and I haue heard many Strangers speake it, that haue beene present when wee haue beaten some Iauans that they neuer knew or heard of any Nation but vs, that were Liegers there, that durst once strike a Iauan in Bantam, and it was a common talke among all Strangers and o- 20 thers, how we stood at defiance with those that hated vs for our goods, and how little wee cared for them. Likewise, how we neuer offered any wrong to the meanest in the Towne, and also how we were generally beloued of all the better sort: they would say, it was not so with the Flemmings, nor with no other Nation. And all the while I was there, I neuer heard, that euer the Flemmings gaue a Iauan so much as a box on the eare, but many times fowle of the Chinees, who will very seldome make any resistance, yet it is of truth, they are mortally hated, aswell of all sorts of Iauans, as Chinees.

Now euery day they looked for their shipping, and hauing little Pepper, nor knew not where to buy any, for the Chinees would sell them none, so long as we would giue as much as they. And more then that; for when all our Riaks was layd out, some of them sold vs Pepper to bee paid when our ships came, not knowing when they would come, nor we neither at that time, but as 30 we guessed. If they would haue gone to the Flemmings, they might haue had readie money, and great thankes. They therefore bought what they could by reraile in the Markets, sending it to a Chineses house by Boate in the euening, but the charge consumed the gaine.

About this present time, the Emperour of Damack, who not many yeares before for tyrannie had beene deposed by the Kings teereabouts, going by Sea from Bantam, to another Towne vpon the Coast, was by one of his sonnes stabd in his Bed sleeping.

The Chineses will mingle vially their Pepper in the night if you leaue it with them, or put in dust, or transport it, and we should be sure to find that which wee had not liked, at one mans ye- 40 sterday, now in another mans house, a good distance off, and the next night after at another house, as who should say, it was another parcell, and the olde Ware-houle where it lay first should be shut, or a parcell of better Pepper in it.

In Nouember, and the beginning of December, we were busied both in building and getting in, and making cleane of Pepper, the fourteenth of December, came in a Dutch Pinnasse, who told vs of the death of our late Queene, and of the great Plague and Sicknesse, that had beene ouer all Christendome, which strooke more terrour to our mindes, then all the troubles wee had passed, but they could tell vs no newes of our ships, which caused vs much to doubt, only they told vs, the King of Scots was crowned, and that our Land was in peace, which was exceeding great comfort vnto vs, also they told vs of the peace that was likely to be betwixt England and Spaine. In all the Dutch Fleet, and because we heard of no Letters for vs in the Pinnasse, I made haste, and went aboard the Dutch Admirall to bid him welcome, also to enquire for Letters, the 50 which we found in their Vice-Admirall. The two and twentieth of December, by meanes of some of our friends, Vniete that was the principall that vndermined our house, being decryed and taken, hauing beene long in the Mountaines, and for want of food, was forced to repayre to certaine houses neere the Towne, from whence he was brought to the rich Chinas house, so soone as I heard of him, I sent Master Tewerson to the Protector to certifie him of it, and withall to tell him, we would shortly execute him, for since the time that this mischiefe happened, I neuer went out of sight of our house my selfe, but once, vntill our ships came in, the which once was when the Protector crossed vs, so that then I was constrayned, and my feare was so great, that I thought all would be burnt, before I should come hacke againe, likewise three times euery weeke, I vsed to search all the Chinees houses round about vs, for feare of more vndermining. 60

man, and the King of Bantams circumcision, and pompous Triumphes.*

10 TH E same day towards Euening, we descried our Ships comming into the Road, to all our extraordinarie great ioyes; but when we came aboard of our Admirall, and sawe their weakenesse, also hearing of the weakenesse of the other three ships, it grieved vs much, knowing that Bantam is not a place to recouer men that are sicke, but rather to kill men that come thither in health. At my first comming aboard, I found our General, Captaine Henry Middleton, very sickly and weake; to whom I made relation in brieft what troubles we had passed; also I certified him neuerthelesse, we had lading ready for two ships, which was some content vnto his mind, very much grieved for the weakenesse of his men. They had hardly fiftie found men in their foure ships, and of the sicke men a number died. Also of those that came thither in health, many neuer went out of the Road.

The foure and twentieth day, our Vice-Admirall, Captaine Coulthurst came a shore, with some other Merchants; on which day we executed this Villaine which we had lately taken. Ha-20 uing now slaine the fourth principall, and one more was kild for stealing of a woman: at my comming away there remained foure aliue, of which, two were at Iacatra, one with Mandelicko the traytor, and one with Cay Sanapatty Lama, which we could not as then come by. The same day, our Vice-Admirall beeing accompanied with vs there resident before, and also some other of the newe Merchants, went to the Court to certifie the King, that our Generall had Letters from the King of England, with a present for him, and more to tell him our Generall was weary, hauing been long vpon the Seas, and so soone as he was a little refreshed, he would come himselfe to see him, and also to deliuer the Letters, and the Present.

Captaine Colthrust.

Letters from King James.

The five and twentieth, being Christmas day, we dined aboard our Generall: but I should haue spoken before of a Counsell that was holden on Sunday, being the three and twentieth day, wherein it was thought of all, that the Dragon, and the Ascension were fittest to goe for the 30 Moluccos, for diuers reasons which need not here be rehearsed; and the Hector, and Susan to lade Pepper, and to be dispatched home. And the same weeke after, we were busied in getting of fresh victuals, Herbs, Fruits, and Flowers, for the recouery of our men, which were most pitifully payed with the Scuruy.

Men sicke of the Scorbute.

The one and thirtieth day, our Generall came on shore, and beeing accompanied with all the Marchants that were in health, and diuers others, he went to the Court, and deliuered the Kings Letters and Present, the which were as followeth: One faire Bason and Ewre, two faire standing Cups, all parcell-gilt, one gilt spoone, and sixe Muskets with their furniture: the which were kindly receiued. A day or two after our General spent in visiting our chiefe friends, as the 40 Sabindar, the Admirall, the rich Chynois, and also gaue them Presents, who very thankfully receiued them. After this, we fell all to worke, both ashore and aboard, to packe vp, and take in goods for the Moluccos: but after our men were a little recovered of the Scuruy, the Fluxe tooke them, so that we continued still very weake in men, in so much, that it was vnpossible in mans iudgement, that euer we should be able to accomplish our businell in that manner.

Present to the King.

Fluxe succeeded the Scorbute.

On Monday, being the seuenth of Ianuary, the Dutch fleet, being nine tall Ships, besides Pin- naces and Slupes, set sayle for Amboyna, and the Moluccos, so that we rested very doubtfull a long time, whether our ships should get any lading in those parts that yeere, by reason of their number of shipping which was gone before ours. Neither could our Ships possibly goe sooner, by meanes of our weakenesse.

50 The tenth of Ianuary, the ships that were bound home, began to take in Pepper, but they were so oppressed with sicknesse, that they could make no dispatch. The eighteenth day, our shippes hauing taken in all the goods which we thought meet for those parts, set sayle for the Islands of Banda, hauing their men for the most part extreame weake and sicke: but how they spent their time vntill their returne to Bantam, I must referre to their owne reports. Presently after the departure of these ships, the protector sent vnto vs to agree about Custome, the which we had thought we had known since our first shipping departed, but he asked many duties, which we neuer heard of before, & because I would not grant to pay the, he commanded the Porters they should carry no Pepper: wherefore to preuent that this should not be a hinderance to vs in lading
60 our ships (for we had hinderance enough besides) I was forced to agree with him, to pay in hand according to that rate as our ships paid before, and to let the full agreement rest vntill the returne of our Generall, and he thought he did vs great kindnesse herein. It pleased God to take away the two Masters of these two ships which we were now a lading, Samuel Spencer, Master of the Hector, and Habbakuck Pery, Master of the Susan. Also William Smith, the principall Masters mate mate of the Hector, and soone after Captaine Stiles, with many other of their principall men, with a number of their ordinarie saylers, so that we were not onely constrained to hire men to doe them all the ease we could there, but likewise to hire so many as we could get of Goosserates and Chynois to helpe bring home our ships, to our exceeding great cost and charges. With much turmoyle, we got them both laden, by the sixteenth of February, but it was the fourth of March, before they could make their ships ready to set sayle.

Hector and Susan sent for England.

The fourth of March, the Hector and Susan set sayle for England, hauing sixtie three persons in the Hector of all sorts, English and others, but many of her owne men beeing sicke. The Susan so neere as I could learne, had forty seuen of all sorts: also many Englishmen sicke, I pray God send vs good newes of her, William Crane being Master of the Hector, and Richard Hacknesse, Master of the Susan.

A Holland ship.

The sixt of May, came in a ship from Holland, who had come all along by the Coast of Goa, and meeting there with two ships more of Holland, which were bound out for Cambaya, they three had taken foure Portugall ships, wherein they found great riches, onely one of them was laden with great horses, which they set on fire, and consumed both ship and horses. This ship came out of Holland in Iune, 1604. but they could certifie vs of no further newes, then our own ships had done. Their Captaines name was Cornelius Syverson, who was a very proud Boore, and had neither wit, manners, honesty, nor humanitie, presently after whose comming in, the Flemmings withdrewe their familiaritie, which they were wont to hold with vs, and that as wee thought, by Generall Warwicks charge to them.

Captaine Syverson first cause of breach betwixt Hollanders and English.

Circumcision of the King of Bantam.

But now I will leaue this contemner of curtesie and hater of our Nation, with his rascall crue which he brought with him, and speake somewhat of the manner and order of the Kings Circumcision, and of the Triumphes that were held there euery day, for the space of a moneth and more before his going to Church, whereby all the better sort of that Country had beene busied, from the time of the comming in of the Chyna Iuncks, which is in February and March, vntill the foure and twentieth of Iune, about making preparation. There was a great Pageant made, the forepart of which was in likenesse of an huge deuill, vpon this Pageant was set three chaires of State, the middlemost was for the King, which was placed higher then the other by some two foote, on either of his hands were placed the sonnes of Pangran Goban, who is heire apparant to the Crowne, if the King should die without issue. This Pageant was placed on a greene before the Court gate, and rayled in round about. The manner of their Countrey is, that when any King comes newly to the Crowne, or at the Circumcision of their King, all that are of abilitie must giue the King a present, the which they must present in open manner, with the greatest shew they are able to make. And those that are not able to doe it of themselves, doe ioine a Company of them together, and so performe it, both strangers and others. About the fise and twentieth of Iune, these shewes began, and continued all that moneth, and the next, except certaine rainie dayes. The Protector began himselfe the first day, and euery Noble man, and others had their dayes, not as they were in birth, but in readinesse, and sometimes two or three Companies in a day. Because the Iauans are no good shot, the Protector borrowed shot both of vs and the Flemmings; when they came to set forth, there was a great strife whether should goe fore-most, they contemning our paucity, and ours their fordidnesse. Our men were in neat apparell, with scarfes and coloured hat-bands; they in thrumbed greasy caps, tarred coates, and their shirts (if they had any) hanging betwixt their legges. Ours went therefore in the rereward, refusing to follow next after the Flemmings.

The difference twixt vs and Iauans, in militarie matters.

Euery morning the Kings guard, which were both shot and pykes, were placed without the rayles round about the Pageant, beeing commonly in number, about three hundred men: but some principall dayes of shewes, there was vpward of fixe hundred, the which were placed in files according to our martiall discipline. But in our march we doe much differ: for whereas wee commonly march, three, fise, seuen, or nine, they neuer goe but one, and so follow one another so close as they can, bearing their pykes right vpright. As for shot they haue not beene vsed vnto. Their drummes are huge pannes made of a mettall called Tombaga, which make a most hellish sound. They haue also their Colours and Companies fittable, but their Standerds and Ancients are not like ours: their Ancient staffe is very high, bending compasse at the top, like the end of a long Bow, but the Colours on it is hardly a yard in breadth, hanging downe from the top with a long pendant. The first day beeing the greatest day of shew, there were certaine forts made of Canes, and other trash, set vp before the Kings Pageant, wherein were certaine Iauans placed to defend them, and other companies were appointed to assault them, and many times the assaillants would fire them: but still when the Iauans were at it in iest with their pikes, our men and the Flemmings were at it in earnest with their shot, and were forced to march apart. The Protector perceiuing it, sent to them, desiring both parties to be quiet, whereupon they were quiet for that day. The next time we saw their Marchants, which was that Euening, I asked one of them if he thought Holland now were able to wage warre with England, that there should be such equalitie between their men and ours, to striue who should goe foremost? And likewise wee told them all, that if Englishmen had not once gone before, their Nation might haue gone behind all Nations.

Nations of Christendome long agoe: but they would answer that times and seasons doe change, and without doubt the greater multitude of them here, doe hold themselves able to withstand any Nation in the world: but I can say nothing of the opinion of their States at home, and of the wiser sort.

Dutch ingratitude & Pride: in many In this businesse of the Dutch as the fault is not (I hope) National but Personal, I have mollified the Authors stile, and left out some harsher censures. See Pacific.
The Kings triumphall pompe.
The shot.
Musicke.
Targettiers & Darts.
Trees, Beasts, and Fowles.

Now a word or two in what manner the King was brought out every day, and what shewes were presented before him: Alwaies a little afore the shewes came, the King was brought out vpon a mans shoulders, bestriding his necke, and the man holding his legs before him, and had many rich ty. asoles carried euer and round about him: his principall Guard came out before him, and were placed within the railes, round about the Pageant. After the King came out, a number 10 of the principall of the land, which gaue their attendance vpon the King, as it should seeme, they had their dayes and times appointed them. The shewes that were brought, came in in this manner: First, a crue of shot beeing led by some Gentleman-slaue, after followed the pikes, in the middle of which was carried their colours, and also their musique, which was ten or twelue pannes of Tombaga, carried vpon a coulstaße betweene two: these were tuneable, and euery one a note aboue another, and alwayes two went by them which were skilfull in their Country musique, and played on them hauing things in their hands of purpose to strike them, also they had another kind of musique which went both afore and after, but these pannes are the principall. After the pykes followed a crue of Targettiers with darts, then was brought in many sorts of trees, with their fruit growing vpon them, then followed many sorts of beasts and fowles both a-20 liue, and also artificially made, that except one had beene neere, they were not to be discerned from those that were aliue.

After these followed a crew attyred like Maskers, which before the King did dance, vault, and shew many strange kind of tumbling trickes, of these there were both men and women. After all these, followed sometimes two hundred, sometimes three hundred women, all carrying Presents only at euery tenth woman, there went an old motherly woman Souldier to keep them in order, which carryed nothing. These Presents were of Rice and Cashes, the which were layd in frames made of split Canes curiously set out for shew, with painted and gilded papers, but the present it selfe was not commonly worth aboue twelue pence or thereabouts. After them followed the rich presents, which was commonly a faire Tuck, and some fairer Cloth of their Coun-
30 trey fashion, being curiously wrought and gilded, or imbroydered with Gold for the Kings own wearing, the which was carryed also by women hauing two Pikes borne vpright before them. Also euery present which was for the Kings wearing, had a rich Tierasoll borne ouer it. Last of all followed the Heire to that party which sent the presents, which is their yongest sonne, if they haue any, being very richly attyred after their Countrey manner, with many Iewels about their armes and middles, of Gold, Diamonds, Rubies, and other stones, hauing also rich Tierasoles borne ouer them, and a number of men and women attending on them; after hee hath done his obeysance to the King, he sits downe vpon a Mat being layd vpon the ground, which is their order in generall, the presents are all borne by the Kings Pageant into the Court, where there are some Officers appointed to receiue them. After all which past, one within the Kings Pageant, 40 speakes out of the Deuils mouth, and commands silence in the Kings name, Then begins the chiefe of the Reuels and Musicke, and now and then the shot discharges a Voley. Also the Pike-men and Targettiers with Darts doth shew all their feates of Armes: their shot is very vnskilfull, but the Pikes and Targets are very expert, and alwayes when they come to charge their Enemy, they come towards him dancing, because his Aduersary should haue no steadie ayme to throw his Dart, or make a thrust at him. Likewise amongst some of these shewes there came Iunckes sayling, artificially made, being laden with Cashes and Rice. Also in these were significations of Historicall matters of former times, both of the Old Testament, and of Chronicle matters of the Countrey, and Kings of Iana. All these Inuentions the Iauans haue beene taught in former times by the Chinees, or at least the most part of them; for they themselves are but 50 Block-heads, and some they haue learned by Goossarats, Turkes, and other Nations which come thither to trade.

Conies, Rarities in Iana.

We brought a very faire Pomgranate Tree being full of fruit growing on it, both ripe, halfe ripe, some young, and some budded: this Tree wee digged vp by the roots, which wee set in a frame being made of Ratanes, or Carricke Rushes, somewhat like a Birds Cage, but very wide. At the roote of this Tree we placed earth, and vpon that Greene Turfes, so that it stood as if it had beene still growing; vpon these Turfes we put three Siluer-hayred Conies, which our Vice-Admirall had giuen me, and at the top, and round about vpon the boughes, we with small threds made fast a number of small Birds, which would euer be chirping. Likewise, we had foure very furious Serpents, which the Chinees there can make artificially, vpon these wee hung the Cloth 60 which was for the Kings owne wearing, which were fise pieces curiously wrought, and gilded after their fashion. Some other pieces of Stuffle there were also for the King to buttow vpon some of his followers. More wee gaue him a fayre Peternell damasked, and a Case of Pistols damasked, with very fayrer Cases feuerally belonging to them, the which had great silke strings, with Tassels of Gold. Now we had no women to carry these things, wherefore we borrowed thirtie of the prettyest Boyes we could get, and also two proper tall Iauans to beare Pikes before them. Matter Towerfon had a very prettie Boy, a Chinees sonne, whose Father was a little before slaine by Theeues: this youth we attyred as gallant as the King, whom we sent to present these things, and to make a speech to the King, signifying to him, that if our number had beene equall to our good wils, we would haue presented his Maiestie with a farre better shew.

Fire-workes.

The King and diuers others about him tooke great delight in the Conies. Also our men carried some Fire-workes with them, which were very rare matters to the young King and his play-fellowes, but the women cryed out, for feare they would set the Court a fire.

Hollanders Vanities.

The Flemmings gaue a present which they can easily bragge off, small matters, they doe not spare to bragge very much of their King, meaning Graue Maurice, whom they call in all these parts at euery word Raia Hollanda. Much quarrell arose betwixt our men and them, the Flemmings in drinke still beginning and brauing, and vsually getting the worst. I had much to doe to restrayne our men, which yet was necessary considering wee had a great charge of goods, the charge of which lay vpon me. Also wee were but badly housed, and in a dangerous Countrey, likewise if we gaue them blowes, it was likely, a number of them would come vpon vs: we being but few could not defend our selues without shedding of blood, the which would require reuenge. They were about a hundred men in the House, Ship, and Flye-boat, which (no doubt) would haue come vpon vs hauing such an occasion, and wee but thirteene in a Straw-house.

The eighteenth of Iuly, the King of Iacatra came in to present his shew before the King of Bantam, also to giue his present, and to doe his homage, the which was performed the three and twentieth of Iuly in this manner. In the morning early, the King of Bantams Guard (which was on this day an extraordinarie number) were placed in files, their Pikes set vpright in the ground, and their shot lying in order, and euery man sitting by his Armes, being clothed in red Coates. About eight of clocke my selfe with some other of our Merchants and men went to see this shew, and taking vp our standing neere the Kings Pageant, the Kings Guard would often bid vs sit downe, but we would answere, they must first bring vs a forme: for indeed there is no Nation suffered to stand in the Kings or any great mans presence, if they be neere them. Wee and the Flemmings were commanded by the Officers to sit downe, as well as the rest, but wee were too stout (knowing they had no such Commission) to stoope vnder their yoke: but for other Nations they would bang them if they refused, although the ground and place where they should sit were neuer so durtie. But the Iauans, who cannot indure to haue any stand ouer them, would remoue a good distance from vs, and many of the Kings Guard forlooke their Weapons, and would goe sit as farre off, neither can they indure that one should lay his hand on their head, the which is not for any point of Religion, as some will affirme, but only of meere Pride. Many times, when I haue come into a Chinees house, where Iauans haue set in the floore, I sitting downe on a Chest, as our order was, they haue all start vp, and ranne out at doores: the Chinees would tell vs, if any other Nation should doe so, but we or the Hollanders, they would stab them, but they durst not meddle with vs.

Standing a token of honour, sitting of submission; contrary to our Customes.

But now to my former matter. About nine a clocke the King was brought out in the same manner, as I before haue mentioned, some two houres after the King of Iacatra came, hauing a guard of some hundred persons about him: so soone as euer hee came in sight, the Kings Guard all rose vp, and euery man proued his Weapon, the which wee had neuer seene before when any shew came in, so that it should seeme that there was great feare, not that the King of Iacatra would offer any violence, but there was a number of other pettie Kings, who had great troupes of men, the which Kings were his mortall Enemies, wherefore fearing they might rise against him, we plainly perceiued the King of Bantams Guard, had their charge to bee readie to defend the King of Iacatra, if such a matter should happen. When hee came neere the innermost file of the Kings Guard, he could not passe to the King but hee must needs goe thorow a ranke of these pettie Kings, whom he knew did most deadly hate him, wherefore fearing the cowardly stab, which is vsed amongst that Nation, he began to looke very gasly, and wildly on it, although he is as stout a man, as any is in all those parts: passe them hee would not, but sat downe, vpon a Leather that was layed on the ground, the which euery Gentleman hath carryed after him for that purpose. So soone as he was set, hee sent to the King, to know if it were his pleasure, hee should come vnto him, whereupon the King sent two of the principall Noblemen about him, to conduct him to his presence, and after the King of Iacatra had done his obeysance, the young King imbraced him, and welcommed him according to the Countrey order: after this the King of Iacatra sat downe in a place appointed for him. All this while there was some other prettie shewes presented.

Many pettie Kings.

Cowardly stabs.

King of Iacatraes Presents.

About twelue a clocke came his shew and presents. The Souldiers came in order as I haue before declared, being about three hundred in number, then followed so many women with Cashes and strange Fowles both aliue and artificiall, and likewise many strange beasts; amongst which was one furious beast called by them a Matchan. This beast is somewhat bigger then a Lion, and very Princely to behold if they be at libertie, they are spotted white and red, hauing many black streakes which came downe from the reines of his backe vnder his belly. I haue seene one of them

them iump at the least eightene foot, by many mens estimation for his pray. They doe kill many people neere the Towne of Bantam, and many times the King and all the Countrey, goeth a hunting of them, not onely in the day time, but in the night. This Matchan, which I now spake of, was in a great Cage of wood, which was placed vpon Trucks of old carriages, and being drawne in with Buffels, he lay for all the world like a Traytor vpon a hurdle. There was drawne in like manner a huge Gyant, which by our estimation, might bee some thirtie foote in height: also a Deuill came in, in like order: more there was drawne in a Garden hauing many sorts of hearbs and flowers in it. In the middle of which Garden, was a Fiill-pond, wherein was diuers sorts of small Fishes, and all sorts of Fishes which they doe know in those parts, were brought in either aliue, or artificially made. Amongst these things, came in many Maskers, Vawters, Tumblers, very strangely, and saluagiously attired, which did dance and shew many strange feates before the King. There was drawne in likewise a very faire bed-stead, whereon was a faire quilted bed: also eleuen boulsters and pillowes of Silke, embroidered with Gold at the ends. The posts of the bedstead were very curiously carued and gilded, with a faire Canopy wrought with Gold: A number of other pretty toyes, were brought in and presented. Last of all, came in his youngest sonne, riding on a Chariot, but it was drawne with Buffels, which mee thought was very vuseemely. Indeed they haue but few horses, the which are small Nags. I neuer saw any of them put to draw, but onely to ride on, and to runne at Tilt, after the Barbary fashion (as I haue heard some Barbary Merchants say) which exercise they vse euery Saturday towards Euening, except in their time of Lent, which is a little before ours.

The second day after this show was presented, being Friday, and their Sabbath, the King was carried on his Pageant to Church, where he was circumcised. His Pageant was borne by many men, it was reported to me by the Kings Nurse, foure hundred: but I think she lied, for me thought there could not stand so many vnder it.

The foure and twentieth of Iuly, our Generall came into the Road from Ternata: so soone as we discerned the shippe, and knew her to be the Dragon, I tooke a Prow and went aboard to bid him welcome, who declared to me the dangers they had passed, and also of the vnkind dealings which he had of the Hollanders, albeit he saued some of their liues. Neuerthelesse, he told mee hee had (though with great paines and turmoyle) gotten a good quantitie of Cloues towards his lading, the which was good newes to vs, wherefore wee gaue God heartie thanks for all, especially that he had brought him thither againe in safetie, not doubting but within short time, we should be able to furnish him with the rest of his lading. The eight and twentieth day, came in the great Encusen of Holland from Ternate: Also the same day the King of Iacatra came to see our Generall.

Further quarrels betwixt the English and Dutch, with other accidents.

THE first of August in the afternoone, our Generall, and all the rest of the Merchants, being very busie in the Ware-house, taking an Inuentarie of the remainder of prize-goods, and all other goods, there was word brought that the Flemmings had wounded two of our men, the which we saw come bleeding in at the gate. Our Generall commanded euery man to get him weapons, with all speed, and to lay them ouer the pates soundly, the which presently was performed: himselfe could find no weapon ready, wherefore hee tooke vp a barre of Iron, but finding that too heauy, he came into the streete onely with a small Cudgell. The Flemmings were banged home to their owne gates, one was runne quite thorough the body, what became of him we could not certainly tell, yet some said he escaped it, two more lost their armes, the Merchants with diuers others of their house came with shot. The Flemmish Merchants came to our Generall, but hearing that their men began, they answered, that they had but their desarts: and after they had drunke a Cup of Wine, they kindly tooke their leaue of our Generall, and all the rest of the Merchants, and so departed. Newes was presently carried to the Court, how the Flemmings and we were by the eares, and that there was two slaine. Some about the King, asked whether they were English or Flemmings, which were slaine; answer being made, that they were Flemmings: They said, it was no matter if they were all slaine. In this broyle, I thanke God, we had no man hurt, but two, the which was done before the complaint came, neither had they any great harme; one hauing a slash ouer the hand, the other a stab vnder the side with a knife, which was not very deepe: this was the first time, but it was not long, but we were at pell mell againe, and againe, where the Flemmings sped as they did now.

Dutchmen satisfied with their fellowes reward.

The eleuenth of August, came in two ships from Cambaya, who had taken great wealth from the Portugals, the same day came in one ship from Ternate. The sixteenth day, came in the Ascension from Banda; The eight of September, the Dutch Merchants invited our Generall, and all his Merchants and Masters to a feast, where there was great cheere, and also great friendship was made betweene vs. The fifteenth day of September, two Dutch ships set saile for Holland, one being a small ship, which had laden Pepper at Bantam; the other, had taken in some Cloues at Ternate. The rest of her lading was of prize-goods, which was taken out of the ships which came from Cambaya. The one and twentieth day, came in the Dutch Admirall from Banda. The two and twentieth day, our Generall sent some of his Merchants to the Dutch house, to bid him welcome. On which day, a drunken Flemming caused a new fray, which began with our Surgeon, and after parts, were taken on both sides, and some of the Dutch wounded.

Another drunken
a Dutchman.

Againe, about one a clocke the same afternoone, our Generall sitting vpon a bench at our gate, talking with a Portugall which sate by him, who sometimes had beene of good reputation, there came one of their drunken Swads, and sate downe betweene our Generall and this Portugall. Our Generall seeing the rudenesse of this vnmanly Flemming, gaue him a boxe on the eare, and thrust him away. Presently, diuers of his consorts came about our gate, drawing their Kniues and Sables, and began to swagger. We taking the But-ends of Pikes and Halberds, and Faggot-stickes, draue them into a Racke-house, who shutting the doore vpon vs, we brake it open, and knocked some of them downe, bringing them away as prisoners to our Generall. So many of the Flemmings as came by in peace, our Generall caused to goe into our yard, where they were in safetie, and those that would not, bare it off with head and shoulders. So soone as wee had beaten them well, that tooke the Racke-house, there came another troope of them downe the streete to take their parts, with whom we met; and after a few brabbling words past, we laid on such load, that they were forced to giue ground, and to betake them to their heeles: some of them were beaten downe in the streete, and many had their pates pittifully broken, others were forced to runne thorough a great myrie Ditch, to escape from vs, they were chaled in at their owne gates.

The Master of their Admiral had occasioned this fray, and gone from ship to ship, to bid them goe weaponed on shore, and kill the English-men they met with. And when some went to goe aboard the Dutch shippes on businesse, some English-men of their Fleete, with weeping eies called to them, that they should not come: For strait order was giuen, to kill as many English-men as they could, either aboard or on shore, and willed them to certifie our Generall of it. Wherefore the Flemmings haue no cause hereafter to complaine, but to say we dealt kindly with them: for the truth is, it lay in our hands that day, to haue slaine a great number of them, the which had beene done, if our Generall had but giuen the word. These frayes were greatly admired at, of all Nations in that place, that we should dare to bandy blowes with the Flemmings, they hauing seauen verie tall ships in the Road, and we but two. There was not one of our men had any harme, onely Master Sarys Merchant, who receiued a cut on the fore-finger with a Sable.

Dutch General satisfied.

At the latter end of this fray, the Dutch Generall came to our house, with a great Guard of Captaines, Merchants, and diuers others, whom our Generall being in like manner accompanied, met in the streets, and brought him into our house. After the beginning of the matter was declared to the Dutch Admirall, he liked well of that we had done. Some of the Captaines about him said, we complained, but their men bore away the blowes, as might appeare by their bloudy pates and shoulders: the Dutch Admirall answered, it was no matter, for he saw plainly, the fault was in their men, wherefore hee would take order henceforward, that so many of them should not come ashore at once. After much talke had passed, and a banquet of sweet meates ended, the Dutch Admirall kindly tooke his leaue of our Generall: and all the rest of the Merchants, both English and Dutch, shaking hands one with another.

Their taking.

There were certain Iauans, which belonged vnto two of the principall men of that Land, next vnto the King, who had stolne nine Muskets and Calliurs out of the Ascensions Gunner roome: shortly after two of them comming to steale more, were taken by our people with the manner. Our Generall sent me aboard to examine them, and to bring them ashore. They first told me, they belonged to great men, which were our very good friends, but I mistrusting they did dissemble with me, bid them confesse the truth, and they should find some fauour, then they confessed truly whose Slaues they were, and said the Peeeces were forth comming. After they came ashore, our Generall sent the King and the Protector word of it, and desired he might haue his Peeeces againe; The Protector sent to the Masters of these two Slaues for them, but they louing the Peeeces better then their men, said they had no Peeeces, but what they had bought with their Money, yet they sent to our Generall to desire him, to deferre their execution for a day or two, the which was granted: but because their Masters were no great good willers to the King, the Protector in the Kings Name sent the Executioner to put them to death, with a Guard of Pikes. When they came to the place of execution, our Generall taking pittie of them, would haue giuen them their liues: But the Hang-man said, their liues were in the Kings hands, and not in our Generals, wherefore because the King had sent him, he would execute them. Which the two Thecues very patiently suffered, as the manner of all that Nation is, when they are bound to it. They doe hold it the greatest glorie that can be, to dye resolutely without any show of feare: and surely so they doe, in as carelesse a manner as it is possible for flesh and blood, the the experience of which I haue seene by diuers, both men and women. One would thinke these men should be good Souldiers, but it is not so, this valour is but when there is no remedy. Against the people of those parts of the world, they are reasonable tall men, but they will not meddle with Christians, except they haue some exceeding great aduantage of number, or other meanes.

10 The sixe and twentieth of September, by meanes of a Ianan shooting off a Peece, the Towne was set on fire, but by reason wee had good helpe of our Mariners, who were many of them ashore at that time, our house was preserued, but the Dutch house being to leeward, although they had neuer so much helpe, could not be saued, but the vpper worke of one of their principall houses, which did ioine to their great house, was burnt, and all their out-houses, wherein lay cables, hawfers, pickled porke, and diuers other things, whereby they sustained great losse. Some that had serued there fve yeares, lost all that they had gotten in those parts.

The Towne set on fire.

Dutch house burned.

Not long after this, the Towne on our side the way, was twice fired by the Ianans in the night, which put vs to great trouble, in carrying and recarrying our things, but by labour of our Mariners and the Chyneese, it was quenched. The third of October, our Generall made a feast, which was for his farewell, whereunto he inuited the Dutch Admirall, with all the rest of his Captaines, Masters, and Merchants, where wee were all exceeding merry, and great friendship was made betweene vs.

The Towne twice fiered.

20 The fourth of October, our Generall being accompanied with diuers Merchants and others, went to the Court to take his leaue of the King, and his Nobles. The sixt of October, being Sunday, about ten a clocke, our General, with all that were bound home, went aboard, who going by the Dutch house, went in, and tooke his leaue of the Dutch Admirall, and the rest of his Merchants. Also there went aboard with him Master Gabriel Towerfon, who was to stay for Agent there, and some other Merchants, who after dinner, some went ashore, and some stayed vntill the next day. About three a clocke we wayed Anchor, and with some Ordnance bid the Towne and Dutch shippes farewell. About eleuen or twelue a clocke at night, we came to an Anchor vnder an Iland, where the next day we tooke in wood, which our Generall had sent our men before hand to cut ready. The seuenth day towards euening, we wayed Anchor againe, and set saile: Master Towerfon, and some other of the Merchants, then tooke their leaue to go ashore, whom wee committed to the protection of the Almighty; and our selues to the curtesie of the Seas, desiring God to blesse both them and vs, and if it be his will, to send vs a happy meeting againe in England.

Preparation to depart.

CHAP. V.

40 The second Voyage set forth by the Company into the East-Indies, Sir Henry Middleton being General: wherein were employed foure ships; the Red Dragon, Admirall; the Hector, Vice-Admirall; the Ascension with the Susan: written by Thomas Clayborne in a larger Discourse, a brieve extract whereof is here deliuered.

THE second day of April, 1604. being Munday, about twelue of the clocke, we had sight of the Lizard. The three and twentieth day, West South-West to the West-ward, two and twentie leagues, latitude fifteene degrees, and five minutes: and this day we fell with the Westermost part of S. Iago, being West by North sixe leagues, and at five of the clocke we stood to the East-ward for Maio, the wind at North.

The Isle of S. Iago. Maio.

50 The foure and twentieth day we fell with Maio, and stood to the South-ward of the Iland, and came to anchor at fifteene fathomes, one point North-West and by North, and the other East South-East.

The five and twentieth day we landed, and lost one of our Merchants, who was taken by the people of the Iland. The sixe & twentieth day in the morning, we landed an hundred men to see if we could get our Merchant againe, but could not come neere any of the people of the Iland; so we lett him behind vs, and this night about nine of the clocke wee set saile, the wind at North.

They land in Maio.

60 The sixteenth day of May, latitude 00. fifteene minutes, and this day we passed the Equinoctiall. The thirteenth of Iuly in the forenoone, we had sight of Cape Bona Esperanza being off vs fifteene leagues. The seuenteenth day we came to anchor in the Road of Saldania, hauing sixtie men sicke of the Scuruy, but (God be prayd) they all recouered health before we went from hence. Saldania is in latitude thirty three degrees, fittie sixe minutes, or thirty foure degrees. Here M. Cole was drowned, being Master of the Hector, our Vice-Admirall: and here we stayd fve weekes wanting a day.

They came to an anchor in the roade of Saldania. M. Cole drowned.

- The twentieth day of August being Munday we weighed, and set sayle out of the Road of Saldania, the wind Southerly, and we stood to the West-ward.
- Bantam.* The three and twentieth of December, being Sunday, we came to anchor in Bantam Roade, where we found fixe Holland shippes, and three or foure Pinnasses.
- Amboyna.* The eighteenth day of January, we set sayle out of Bantam roade, with the Dragon and the Ascension; but they parted at Amboyna. The Generall went with the Dragon to the Moluccas, and the Ascension (whereof M. Colthrust was Captaine) for Banda; and the Hector and the Susan landed Pepper at Bantam, and set sayle from thence about the middle of February.
- The Moluccas.*
- Banda.* The twentieth day of February, the Ascension arrived at Banda, and anchored in foure fathoms and an halfe, by Nera, which is the cheifest place in those Ilands. From the South-part of Amboyna to Banda, the course is East by South, to the South-ward thirtie leagues: the latitude of Banda is foure degrees, fortie minutes, and the going in is to the West-ward. There is a very high hill that burneth continually, and that Hill you must leaue on the Larbord-side, and the other great Iland on your Star-boord side. The going in is very narrow, and you cannot see it till you come within halfe a mile: but feare not to stand with the Iland, that the high Hill is on, while you come within two Cables length of it; for so you must doe, and then you shall haue about twentie fathomes; and then stand along still by that Iland about a Cables length from it, if the wind will giue you leaue, and then you shall find shallower water, eight, seuen, fixe fathoms, and in the very narrow of all, you shall haue five fathomes, and so that depth vntill you come into the Road.
- Nero.* By Gods helpe, a man may goe in without any danger, keeping neere vnto the aforementioned Iland: it is somewhat shallow on the Star-boord side, in the narrow of the going in, but that will shew it selfe. There are two small Ilands, one called Puloway, and the other Pulorin, and they lie about three leagues to the West-ward of the going in: there is no danger about them, but may be very well perceiued. You may leaue those Ilands on which side you please, either at your going in, or comming out.
- Banda is in 4. degrees 40. minutes.*
- An high burning hill in Gunmanappi.*
- Puloway.* About the middle of March, here we found the wind to be variable, and so continued till the middle of Aprill; and then it continued, and stood betweene the East and South-East, foure moneths to our knowledge. But it doth vse to continue five moneths, as the people of the countrey say, and likewise five moneths betweene the West and North-West, and the other two moneths variable. Here in the darke Moones it is giuen much to gusty weather, and much raine.
- Pulorin.* Here we stayed one and twentie weekes, and fixe dayes, in the which time we had cleuen men died, and most of the Fluxe.
- The Monsons.* The one and twentieth day of July, 1605. being Sunday, we set saile from Banda, the wind at East South-East, and we stood to the West-ward. The two and twentieth day, we fell with the South-end of Burro, the wind at East South-East.
- They stayed in Banda 21. weekes.* The seuen and twentieth day we fell with Dezelem, and then we came about the South-end of the Iland, leauing seuen Ilands on our Lar-boord side. We stood close by the wind to the North-ward, faire by the maine Iland of Dezelem, to cleare our selues of a small Iland and a shold, that lieth off the South-West part of Dezelem, and leauing this Iland, and all the other sholds on our Larboord-side, we stood North, North-West, along the West side of Dezelem, while wee came in fixe degrees and tenne minutes: then we steered West eighteen leagues, and fell with the point shold that lieth off the South-West end of Celebes: And the very Souther-most part of that shold, lieth in fixe degrees, and being cleare of that, we stood to the West-ward.
- Burro.* The sixteenth day of August, we came to anchor in Bantam road.
- Dezelem.* The sixt day of October being Sunday, we set sayle out of Bantam roade, with the Dragon and the Ascension.
- Celebes.* The fifteenth day of Nouember, latitude thirty one degrees, fortie eight minutes, the wind North North-West, thicke foggy weather. This day about tenne of the clocke in the morning, we came within a ships length of a Rocke, or sunken Iland: the water shewed vpon it very browne, and muddie, and in some places very blue, and being a ships breadth or two to the North-ward of it, we saw the water by the ships side very blacke and thicke, as though it had been earth, or grosse sand boyling vp from it. The variation in this place, is one and twentie degrees from North to West decreasing.
- Bantam.* The sixteenth of December, West nine leagues, latitude thirtie foure degrees, and twentie minutes. This day in the morning we had sight of the land of Ethiopia, distant from vs some twelue leagues.
- They returned from Bantam for England.* The fixe and twentieth day, latitude thirty foure degrees, thirty minutes. Now being in the latitude, and in the sight of Cape Bona Esperansa, and within one league of it, we steered North-West, and North North-West, and North, and as the land lay about the Cape.
- Note.* The seuen and twentieth day, we came to anchor in Saldania roade, where we found our Admirall, and the Hector, which ship the Dragon, our Admirall, met withall seuen dayes before, driuing vp and downe the Sea about foure leagues off the Cape Bona Esperansa, with tenne men in her. All the rest of her men were dead, which were in number three and fiftie, which died since since she came out of Bantam, which time was nine moneths: being in great distresse, shee lost company of the Susan, three moneths after she came out of Bantam roade, which ship (the Susan) was neuer heard of since. Here we came to anchor in seven fathomes, hauing the low point going in North-West by West, and the Sugar-loafe South-West,  $\frac{1}{2}$ . a point to the West-ward, the point of the breach of Penguin Iland North-West by North, and the Hill betweene the Sugar-loafe and the low point, West South-West, the peake of the Hill to the East-ward of the Table, South by East.

The Susan ver-terly lost.

The sixteenth day of January in the morning, we set saile from Saldania Road, and went to the Northward of Penguin Iland, betweene that and the Mayne. When wee had the Iland South from vs about one mile and a halfe we founded, and had ground twentie fathomes, white Corall, and Whistles of shels. When we were cleere of the Iland, we stood off West by South, and West South-west, while we brought the Iland South-east by East off vs, now being about sixe of the clocke in the after-noone, we had sight of the Hector, comming out to the Southward of the Iland, for we left her at Anchor when we weighed. Now the wind being at South, we stood all night to the West-ward, close by a wind, in the morning following we had lost sight of the Hector, and then we steered away North-west with a low saile while noone, being the seuenteenth day thinking to get sight of the Hector, but we could not.

The first day of February, West to the Southward sixteene leagues of Latitude, sixteene degrees and twentie minutes: this day about one of the clocke in the after-noone, wee had sight of Saint Helena, bearing West to the Northward from vs, about twelue or thirteene Leagues.

The second day West, and West by South foure Leagues, then hauing the Iland West from vs about eight or nine Leagues, the wind at South-east wee lay off and on, to the Eastward of the Iland, most part of the night, and in the morning following, we stood to the Northward of the Iland.

Santa Helena

This day about twelue of the clocke, wee came to anchor in the Road of Saint Helena, our Land anchor lay in seuentene fathomes, our shippe rid in twentie fathomes, blackish, grauelly sand. We had one point North-east of vs, and one sharpe Hill like a Sugar-loafe (with a Crosse on the top of it) that bare North-east by East. The Church in the Valley South-east. In this Valley there are many Trees likewise, the high-land South-east vp from the Church, and all the Valley besides is full of Trees: the other point of the Land South-west to the West-ward. Wee moored South-east, and North-west. Our anchor in the offing lay in one and twentie fathomes.

The Hector.

The third day at night being Munday we had sight of the Hector, comming about the South end of the Iland, but could not fetch into the Roade, yet stood to the North-ward as neere as she could lye, the wind at East.

The foure and fise dayes, our Boates went out to helpe to get her into the Roade, but they could not.

The sixt day at night being a little wind, wee towed her in with our Boates, into thirtie fise fathomes, one mile and a halfe from the shore, bearing from vs South-west by West, distant about two Leagues.

Seven degrees
fortie fise minutes of variation,

The eleuenth day, we set saile from Saint Helena, the wind at East North-east, and we steered North-west. This North-west part of the Iland lyeth in the Latitude of sixteene degrees, and in seven degrees, fortie fise minutes of Variation. Note this, that the Church that bare South-east of vs, when wee were in the Roade, standeth in the bottome of the fift Valley from that point that bare North-east of vs.

We came to anchor in the Downes, on the sixt of May 1606. where wee rid eight dayes for a faire wind.

§ I.

Prill the first 1607. the Dragon and Hector were fallen as low as the Downes: and after their departure from thence their hopes were by diuers disasters so fallen downe, and crossed, that after they had passed the Line in the beginning of Iune, piercing foure or five degree of Southerly Latitude, they were inforced by Gusts, Calmes, Raines, Sicknelles, and other Marine inconueniences to returne Northward: and missing the Ile of Fernando de Loranha, certaine of nothing but vncertainties which much amazed them, The Generall on Iuly the thirtieth, hauing consulted with Taerner the Master, and hearing his answer that they must bee driuen to returne for England, the whole Company expecting no other (all which to recite would at once both becalme and bestorme the Reader) they consulted for their best course, wherein (you shall haue it in his owne words) we had some speech of Sierra Leona. I, hauing formerly read well of the place, sent for the * Booke, and shewed it my Master, who as my selfe, tooke good liking to the place. Wherevpon, my Company beginning to bee grievously diseased, wee, without hope to get Fernando de Loranha, (water being our speciall want, and a watering place so nigh) I called a counsell: and after Dinner propounded what was fittest for vs to doe. They were generally of opinion, that we had no reason to stand to the South any longer, for many reasons: and demanding their opinions, concerning a place of watering, Churchward, Sauadge, and Taerner, opined Mayo the fittest, how much without reason, I leaue to iudgement. Earming, Pokham, Mollmeux, and my Master, held Sierra Leona fittest; and my selfe, the Author thereof, for many causes. Wherefore, we concluded to seeke for Sierra Leona. I acquainted my Company with our determinations, to their great comfort.

* M. Hackluis books of Voyages are of great profit. This saued the Company, as Sir Th. Smith affirmed to me, 20000. pounds, which they had bin endangered if they had returned home, which necessitie had constrained, if that Booke had not giuen light. Conclusion to seeke Sierra Leona. Many flowres, a signe of land. Currents. Sight of land.

This morning the fourth of August, we saw many Flowres, a signe of Land, and this euening we had ground from twentie eight to sixteene fathome Ozy, but no sight of land.

I hoyleed out my Schiffe, and sent her to ride neere vs, to proue the set of the Current: she found by the Log-line, the Current to set South-east by East two miles a watch: howbeit the Schiffe rode wind-road. We steered all this morning East, and East by South, and had from thirtie to twentie, and ten fathome water: no sight of land, and the greatest depth was Ozy, the least a grosse yellow sandie ground.

About nine of the clocke, we espyed the land, being a round plot of meane altitude, bearing North-east from vs, about eight leagues.

We were at noone in the latitude of seven degrees and fiftie sixe minutes, and haue steered all day East, sometimes North, sometimes Southerly, one point, as our water deepned or shoaled: for we had oftentimes ten fathome vpwards, and at the next cast seven fathome vnder pittie ground. And when we found shoale water, as we bare vp Northerly, we deepned, instantly (a perswasion that we borrowed vpon the shoales of Saint Anna, alias Madera Bomba) I allow since yesterday at noone, fourteene leagues East, and five leagues West, wind at South, and South by West, and South by East.

In the after-noone we had nine, ten, eleuen and twelue fathome water.

The first land pruned Ilha Verde, being a very round land, and a notable marke, for whosoever is bound for the place, from the Southwards.

Ilha Verde a very round Land.

The

About seuen in the euening, we anchored in twentie fathome water, hard sand, hauing steered six leagues or more North-east, and North North-east, the South part of Ilha Verde, bearing East off vs: and the Cape of Sierra Leona, being a low point North by East, about eight leagues from vs: but the said land ouer the said Cape, is very high land, and may bee seene in a cleere, fiftene leagues off.

About fixe in the morning, wee made saile for the Roade, and had no lesse then sixteene, fifteen, ten or nine fathomes, till we were North and South with the Rocke, (which lyeth to the Westward of the Cape of Sierra Leona) about 1.  $\frac{1}{4}$ . miles; and one mile from the neereft shoare) within halfe a mile thereof, we had then, seuen fathome very good shoaling, betweene vs, and the Rocke. And soone after we had passed the Rock, we had twentie fathome water, and shoalded to eightene, sixteene, twelue, and ten fathome, all the way into the Roade, borrowing very neere the South shore. For there is a sand lying off the North shoare about two miles, or a league from the South shore, whereon the Sea breaketh. Wee road in ten fathome water, good ground, the point of Sierra Leona, bearing West Northerly, the North point of the Bay North Westerly, and the foresaid breach or Sand, North, North-east.

Note, that comming in, when we were North and South with the Rocke, it bare with the South point (for Sierra Leona is the North point of the South land making the Bay, or Riuer) and Ilha Verde, North by West and South by East.

This afternoone, being anchored, we espyed men to weaue vs a-shore. I sent my Boate, which leauing two Hostages, brought foure Negroes, who promised refreshing.

My Schiffe founded betweene vs, and the foresaid Breach, and found faire sholding, hauing two fathome water, within two Boats length of the Breach.

Note, that all the Obseruations of the Variation, since our comming from two degrees of North latitude to this place, proued erroneous: for to each distance, hauing reference to any Meridian Easterly thereof, there must be added thirtie leagues, and from such as are referred to Meridians Westerly, must be subtracted thirtie leagues. For it appeareth by our falling with the land, that the ship was so much more Westerly, then we supposed our selues; my selfe notwithstanding the said errour, being as much, if not more Westerly, then any of our Mariners. Howbeit, I wish euery man to trust to his owne experience: for, Instruments may deceiue, euen the most skilfull.

The seuenth, there came Negroes of better semblance, aboard with my Boate (for whom, as for all other, wee were faine to leaue one of my men, for two of them in hostage) who made signes, that I should send some of my men vp into the Countrey, and that they would stay aboard in hostage. I sent Edward Buckbury, and my Seruant William Cotterell with a Present, viz. One course Shirt, three foot of a barre of Iron, a few Glasse Beads, and two Knives. They returned towards night, and brought me from the said Captaine, one small earring of Gold, valued at seuen, eight, or nine shillings sterling: and because it was late, the Hostages would not goe a-shore, but lay aboard all night, without pawne for them.

I sent my Boate, and fetched fise tunnes of fresh water, both very good and easie to come by.

The eleuenth, I went a-shore a fishing, where the people brought their women vnto vs, but feared, we would carry them away. I gaue some trifles, we bought good store of Limons, two hundred for a penny Knife, wind at East.

The twelfth, I went but tooke little fish, wind from North-west to South, rainie weather.

The thirteenth, It rayned without intermission: we got fish enough for a meale.

I bought an Elephants tooth of sixtie three pound English, for fise yards blue Callico, and seuen or eight pound of Iron in barre.

The fourteenth, I kept aboard, all day rainie.

The fifteenth, I went and tooke within one houre and a halfe, six thousand small and good fish Cauillos.

After noone, with Captaine Hawkins, and a conuenient Guard, I went ashore, and to the Village, where we bought two or three thousand Limons. We esteeme it a faire day, wherein we haue three houres dry ouer head.

The sixteenth, I licenced our weekly Workers to recreate themselues with me ashore, where in our large walke, we found not past foure or fise acres of ground sowed with Rice: the superficies of the ground is generally an hard Rocke.

This only day, hitherto, we had faire weather.

The seuenteenth, It was all day faire weather. I appointed making of Limon-water.

The twentieth, John Rogers returned and brought me a present of a piece of Gold, in forme of an halfe Moone, valued at fise, six, or seuen shillings sterling. Hee reporteth the people to bee peaceable, the chiefe without state, the landing two leagues vp, and the chiefe Village eight miles from the landing.

The two and twentieth, We went a-shore, where we made six or seuen Barricoes full of Limon-water. I opened the Companies Firkin of Knives to buy Limes withall.

- An Elephant shot. The seventh of September in the after-noon, we went all together a shore, to see if we could shoot an Elephant: we shot seven or eight bullets into him, and made him bleed exceedingly, as appeared by his tracke, but being neere night, we were constrained aboard, without effecting our purposes on him.
- The best road. The best Road and watering place is the fourth Bay, to the East-ward of the point Sierra Leona. It floweth neere West South-west, within where we roade: and the water highest vpon a Spring-tyde at the least, twelue foote.
- Latitude of Sierra Leona, 8. 36. North. The Variation 1. degr. 50. min. After noone, the wind came at West South-west, and wee anchored in ten fathome water, Ilba Verde bearing from vs South-east  $\frac{1}{2}$  South, and the point of Sierra Leona North-east by East  $\frac{1}{2}$  Easterly, about three leagues from vs, where wee found the flood to set North-east by North, a strong tyde.
- I haue at no time obserued the Sunne in the Roade, howbeit I haue sundry times purposed the same, both aboard and ashore, but the Master made the Roade by his obseruation, in eight degrees and thirtie fixe minutes of North Latitude, and the point of Sierra Leona, bare neere West about a league or foure miles off. The Master also made the Variation to bee one degree, fittie minutes North-easting: but my Instrument was out of order, and I had no time to mend it.
- The fourteenth in the morning, we wayed the wind all Easterly: but about eight it calmed, and we draue to the North againe: after with the ebbe, draue to the South-west by South, toward night, the flood being come, we anchored in 15.  $\frac{1}{2}$  fathome water: the point of Sierra Leona bearing North-east by East, about seven leagues off vs. We haue not had lesse then ten fathome water, all day. They found a Current setting North by West, on the sixteenth day.
- Saldania*. The seventeenth of December, About two in the after-noon, we saw the land, the Table at Saldania very plaine, and stood in to make it, till three, then I caused the Master to steere East South-east, and South-east by East, to put about the Cape: what time sicke, and whole, desired to put into Saldania. Whereupon wee bare vp for Saldania, and about noone wee got into the Roade anchoring in 5.  $\frac{1}{2}$  fathome water: the West point bearing West North-west, the Iland North North-west, and the Sugar-lofe South-west.
- The Sugarloafe. The Westernmost Cape Land, and Penguin Iland bare South by West, &c. There is a breach South of the Iland, about a mile distant.
- Penguin* Iland. Betweene the Iland and shore are seven miles distance. The Sugar-loafe and the Ile, beare South by East, and North by West. From the West point of the Bay, halfe a mile off is a flat. The Westernmost South land, and point of the Sugar-loafe, beareth South South-west, and North North-east.
- The arriual of the Consent at Saldania, Iuly 24. 1607. 102. sheepe. 12. bullocks. 2. calves. They bought for 200. yron hoopes, 450. sheepe, 46. cowes, 19. steers, 9. calves, and one Bull. There is another breach, which lyeth East South-east from the Iland halfe a league off. As soone as I was anchored, I sent a shore, finding the people very bold, but deare. I found a shore these words engrauen vpon a Rocke, viz. The foure and twentieth of Iuly, 1607. Captaine Dauid Middleton in the Consent.
- The one and twentieth, I went ashore, where we bought a hundred and two sheepe, twelue Bullockes and two Calues, whereof I allowed the Hector a proportionable share, and this continued diuers dayes in which they bought much Cattell.

II.

Their departure from Saldania, and what happened after till the shippes parted company.

- Sea shipped. THE first of Ianuary, 1607. by Sunne rising we were both vnder saile, and by fixe in the Euening, we were tenne leagues West Southerly from the South point of the Bay. The nineteenth we shipped much water at the Helme port, and at the hole abaft in my Gallery, about two after mid-night, which wet some of our bales of cloth. Latitude thirty five degrees, twenty two minutes, I allow thirteene leagues South South-East, wind, East North-East, and North-East, sixe leagues drift South, and three leagues North-East wind all Westerly. Our too great quantitie of kintledge goods, maketh our ship to labour maruelously: wherein the Company must haue speciall care, another Voyage.
- Dragon labour-some. The twentieth, I aired and dried our cloath, also oyled the Companies peeces and blades. I strengthened the cases of Callicoes, &c. I allow thirty leagues North-East as we steered, wind at South-West and South. This afternoone, contrary to expectation, and to the admiration of all our Marriners, we saw the land, bearing North North-West, about twelue leagues off, wee in the latitude of thirty foure degrees. And surely, but that I had many deare experiments of the strength of the Westerly current in my last voyage, I should likewise admire: albeit I am more Westerly then any, by reason I doubted currents for causes before noted, beeing by reckoning an hundred leagues more Easterly, then then the sight of land approoueth vs.
- Land. The

The two and twentieth, Latitude thirtie foure degrees, foure minutes. I allow thirtie three leagues East by North, Northerly, wind South and South South-West. But by this reckoning, the ship should haue been in thirtie three degrees, twelue minutes, and wee find her fiftie more South, caused by the Current. Whereby it is euident, that such as depend vpon their dead reckoning and iudgement, without respect had to the currents, must needs make intollerable errors. I bring the ship to her latitude vpon a South line, in her distance Easterly. Note.

I must acknowledge, that in iudgement the Current must be of greatest power hereabouts, the land falling away suddenly North-East, and South-West, and we opening the gut. And I presume, that as we come more Easterly, past the middle of the gut, we shall find the Currents force diminished.

The twentieth, latitude thirtie foure degrees fiftie one minutes. Iudgement alloweth for three watches, nine leagues North-East by East, wind South-West: and for two watches, five leagues South wind, all Easterly, and East North-East: yet note, how we are continually carried to the South, contrary to reasonable iudgement.

The sixe and twentieth, latitude thirtie five degrees, twentie eight minutes. I allow thirteen leagues South South-East wind, at East North-East: so I do not finde that the Current vseth such violence as before, except we should be carried by the streame, as much Westerly off the South, as I allow her Easterly thereof, which would raise or deprese the Pole, in the same proportion: but herein our variation (being well obserued) will resolve vs.

The seuenteenth of February, we saw the land bearing East, about eight leagues from vs, and as I deeme, in the latitude of twentie foure degrees, twenty minutes. We stood in till after sixe a clocke, at what time, being within foure leagues of the shore, we flatted, the Hector being too neere a sterne for vs to stay. Where we tacked, we had no ground at eightie or ninetie fathomes, no great maruell, for it is low smooth land.

About noone, we were thwart of two small Islands, seeming to make a good roade: wherefore not knowing our latitude, we stood off till we could obserue, it being nigh noone. Note, wee could haue no ground at sixtie fathomes within two miles of the shore. Two Islands.

The eighteenth, latitude twentie three degrees, thirty seven minutes: wherefore we stood in againe, supposing this to be the place we sought: but comming neere the shore, and hauing sent both Schiffes a head, they found but sixe fathome water; for which, we anchored in senen fathome water, sandy ground, about one in the afternoone, the two Islands and breach bearing South Westerly, a mile from vs. Anchored.

There is an Inlet about three leagues from vs East Northerly, which the Master supposeth to be S. Augustine, and we purpose to search the same. I called a Councell, where we resolved to make some small stay at S. Augustine. Variation in this place, is fiftene degrees, and thirtie minutes. A Councell. Variat. 15. 30.

Variation againe obserued this morning, is fiftene degrees, twentie sixe minutes, but I was faine to obserue ouer the Land halfe a degree high: otherwise, I should haue made somewhat more variation, and to these two obseruations, I repose great trust. It floweth East. Variat. 15. 26. Tyde.

The nineteenth, we weighed this morning, and in the weighing brake one of our anchors, through defect therein. And surely, the matter deserueth much blame, but I referre me for the particulars, to a Certificate which I purpose to make thereabout. Anchor brake.

We steered for the aboue-mentioned seeming Harbour, or Bay, and found, from whence wee weighed, from tenne, twelue, to twentie fathome: and comming neere the point, in the height of the Bay, we had no ground at an hundred fathomes, till we came very farre into the Bay (our Schiffes being before vs, and hauing ground) and then we had from thirtie to eight fathome, and further in deepe water. We anchored in eightene fathome, and laid another anchor in forty fathome, the South shoare being the deepest water, the other, being by the comming downe of riuers made shallow.

The twentieth, we had seuentie fathome water at the ship, the ground oaze. The land beareth West by South, and North of vs: and to the North are certaine sholds, and a breach, bearing North-West of vs: so that we are but five points of the Compasse, open to winds: but the roade is very pittie ground, and deepe water: and there runneth a strong streame downe the riuer continually. Captaine Hawkins came aboard me, whom with both our Schiffes strong, I sent a shore, my selfe being ill at ease. Toward night he returned aboard, without hauing seene any people; but their fresh tracke in diuers places. They left some beades and trifles in a boat which they found, to allure the naturalls. He affirmeth little likelihood of refreshing here: but my fishers from the other side, tell me of Beasts bones good store, and bones haue had flesh. S. Augustine.

George Euans, one of the Hectors Company, was shrewdly bitten with an Alegaria. I willed all speed in filling our water, and in the meane time, purpose to seeke for refreshing. It floweth here neere East, and higheth much water. George Euans bitten by an Alegaria. Tyde. People.

The one and twentieth, we espyed foure Naturalls, I sent to present them beades; &c. they promised by signes store of cattell the morrow.

The two and twentieth, seeing people I went a shore, where we found a subtile people, their bodies strong, and well framed: their priuities onely carelesly couered, with cloath made of the rindes of trees. We bought one Calfe, one Sheepe, and one Lambe: but they would not deale saue for siluer, by any meanes.

Naturalls bodies

After noone, I rowed vp the riuer, aswell to looke for the best watering, as otherwise. The water is very shallow, and brackish.

The foure and twentieth, I went a shore, seeing one man there, where we bought three Kine, two Steeres, and foure Calues: they cost vs nineteene shillings sterling, besides a few beads.

The Cattell are farre better flesh then those of Saldania, with bunches of flesh on their shoulders, like those of the Cammels, saue that they stand more forward.

The people are circumcised, as some affirmed to haue scene.

Here we found the beautifull beast.

Water by the ships side, at an high water very fresh, and at a low water very salt, contrary to sense. Also, fresh water at high water on one side of the ship, and very salt on the other side, the ship tide roade.

The five and twentieth, in a gust at North-West, our ship draue, and the cable broke, and we lost the anchor. We bought one Calfe, and one Sheepe, and one Lambe great tailed, which cost two shillings three pence. I found certaine Spiders, whose webbe was perfect good, and strong as silke.

Note, that all along the low land, from East to West a ledge of rockes lyeth  $\frac{1}{2}$  a mile from the shore, whereon the Sea breaketh continually: betweene which and the shore, is two fathome water neere to, good for landing, and maruelous full of fish, fit to haile a net in.

The eight and twentieth in the morning betimes, we were vnder sayle to put to sea. There lieth a breach foure miles from the North point of the Bay, South South-East. Note, that the ridge of land, like a rooffe or barn, is about five miles to the Northward of the middest of the Bay. I conceit this Bay of S. Augustine to be vnfit for any shippes to exp. & refreshing, it beeing to be had but in small quantitie: the place very vntoward for riding, the water deepe, the ground pittie and foule, as appeareth by the cutting of our cable.

The twelfth of March, latitude fifteene degrees fiftie minutes. We sounded sundry times in the afternoone, and had no ground at ninetie fathome, and before eight, we had ground at twentie, twentie eight, seuteene, and sixteene fathome, all within  $\frac{1}{2}$  a cables length: then wee instantly tacked off, and had nineteene, and twentie foure, and the third cast, no ground at fortie fathome. The ground was small shingle stones like beanes, and we about five or sixe miles from the shore (an vntoward place to fall with in a darke night.) This afternoone, we had a fresh gale at East by North, whereby we haue gotten somewhat North by the land.

The thirteenth, latitude fifteene degrees fortie five minutes. Yesterday afternoone, wee got somewhat to the North, hauing a fresh gale at East by North. It hath beene calme from mid-night, till eleuen this forenoone, and we haue driuen South as appeareth by the land. We were at noone within three leagues of the shore.

The foureteenth, latitude fifteene degrees fortie two minutes: so that wee are gotten North but three leagues, and iudgement would haue allowed at least fifteene leagues North North-East. So it seemeth that the Current runneth swift, and I doubt setteth more South then South-west. For this morning, though it were hazy, we were not farre from the shoare, seeing the land all along, and now beeing much cleared we can hardly see it.

The fifteenth, latitude fifteene degrees fortie minutes. I can allow in iudgement, no lesse then twentie leagues North by East, yett by obseruation we are gone to the South-wind, at South to South-west a faire gale.

We cannot see the land, yett are but tenne leagues from it. I know not what course to take to get out of this Current: for if we put off, and the Current hold, it may indanger vs of *In. de No-*ua: and keeping the shore, God knoweth what dangers there be: and where such a gale stemmes not the streame, it is indiscretion to continue.

The seuteenth, latitude foureteeene degrees fiftie seven minutes, so we haue gotten twentie five leagues North. Iudgement would allow twelue leagues North North-East, Northerly, and she hath runne nine by obseruation: so that the maine power of the Current is lessened. My Master opineth, that the Moones seasons haue peculiar domination ouer these Currents, causing their force, till three or foure dayes after the full. But I rather thinke, that the deepe Bay betweene Cape Corientes and Mosambique, causeth an indraught, or eddy of some streame, comming either from the North-East, or more Easterly in at the North-East of S. Laurence, and so along the land to the Cape Corientes: or else the streame, which is affirmed to set from S. Laurence, North-west, meeting with the land of Mosambique, may by the said falling away of the land, be drawne that way. Which supposition, if it be true, then we committed an error, in falling with the land before we had gotten neerer North, then Mosambique point, which trendeth farre into the Sea, and whence the Norther land lieth away North and South next hand; and the Souther land, South-west by &c. for if we had not fallen too much Westerly, and brought the said Cape too nigh our Meridian, we should not haue felt this streame at all.

§. III.

Instructions learned at Delisa of the Moores and Guserates touching the Monsons, and while they rode there. Their coming to Priaman and Bantam.

THE Moores of this place affirme, that in some yeeres, pieces of Amber-greece are found, Huge quantity Poiz twentie kintals, of such bulke, that many men may shelter themselves vnder the of Amber-greece. sides thereof, without beeing seene. This is vpon the coasts of Mombasa, Magadoxo, Note. Pata, Braua, &c. being indeed all one long Coast.

They of this place make yeerely voyages to the Iles of Comora, to buy slaues, and report the people to be very treacherous, hauing at times killed fiftie persons by treason: and therefore they trade aboard. Notes of Comora. a Ilands.

They affirme, that there are eight Hollanders vpon Pemba, who haue been there three or foure yeeres, whereof two are turned Moores. Eight Hollanders vpon Pemba, whereof two are Moores. The Monson.

They reckon this Monson of South winds, to begin yeerely the first of May, and the extremitie thereof to continue one hundred dayes. The most wind (which they report to be wonderfull) is in Iune and Iuly. For the tenth of August, it beginneth to be lesse wind, and soone after come the North winds, with much raine, for three or foure moneths more: at what time they make the most Aloes vpon the Ile, and is onely the iuyce of Semper viuens, put into Goates skins, and so dryed. Aloes how made.

The three and twentieth, I sent a shore to weigh certaine Aloes, and receiued aboard, 1250. pounds, which cost for the Companies accompt, 250. Dollers, and so at other times. We bought in all 1833. pounds neat. The Chiefe sent to borrow five hundred rials of eight, which I refused to lend. I presented him with two yards of Carsey, gallant colour, and a knife of mine. I sent againe a shore, and receiued 575. pound more Aloes, cost 115. Dollers. 1250. pound Aloes. Presents. Aloes 575. pound. Monon.

The foure and twentieth, I vnderstood more, that the West winds began this yeere the last of Aprill, and doe each yeere come eleuen dayes later then the yeere before: so that in thirty three yeeres, they begin againe the same day of the same Moneth; which I conceit not to be truth. That the Easter Monson will come this yeere the thirteenth of October, and continue till Aprill forcible: and then faire weather while May. That the West Monson returneth (both Monsons falling each yeere eleuen dayes later then other) neither haue they more then two Monsons yeerely. That their yeere, called Neyroose, beginneth with the first of the East Monsons. That as the West Monson bloweth here all South, so doth the East Monson all North. That after the twenty fifth of September, ships cannot depart from the Red sea to the East-ward. That Chaul, Danbul, and Dandaraageepuree, are good and safe ports, and rich trade townes, vpon the coast of India. That at Saada, Ilbookee, Auzdane, Mootoo, foure of the Iles of Comora, there is abundance of cheape Rice, and the people good. Inghzeegee, and Malale, two more of the same Ilands, haue small store of Rice, and the people very treacherous: at the first whereof they report, that sixteen yeeres since, an English ship lost many men treacherously, which surely, was Sir James Lancaster. The losse of M. James Lancaster in Captaine Raymonds Voyage.

That this day of (May the six and twentieth) is the two hundred and foure and twentieth of their accompt of Neyroose. No raine on the Coast of Arabia, till the seuentieth day of this Monson. The three hundred and fift of Neyroose, the best time to goe for Suratt, to put hence I say, and that in ten or twelue dayes they get thither.

Burrom, Mekella, and Cayxem, are good Harboroughs for both Monsons on the Coast of Arabia, but no places for Merchandizing. Burrom, Mekella and Caixem, good Ports. Xael.

That Xael, or Xaer, hath no Harborough nor Road for any time, but would vent Iron and Lead, a Turke being Aga: and that they send by land for such Commodities to Caixem, a dayes journey to the West ward, but there is no going thither at this time. That in both Monsons, there is a continuall extreame Sea-gate vpon the Coast of Arabia: the Current also there as the wind. That there is no riding at the entrance of Suratt, to haue any shelter of the West shore, for the West Monsons, as well by reason of ill anchor ground, as chiefly the extremitie of Tydes, which (by their reports) ouer-set ships not a ground.

This Road of Delisa, is a very good place for the West Monson, but which is strange, two miles either East or West from the Road, it doth continually blow so much wind, that no shippe can ride it. Neither can I giue any reason for it, except the distance twixt vs and the high Mountaines cause it: for there is much low land betwixt vs and them. Iune the foure and twentieth, we set saile to depart. Note.

The three and twentieth of Iuly, we saw an Iland, and about noone two more, wee left two to the North, and one to the South latitude of foure degrees and two minutes, South of the Equinoctiall. The North of these Iles is great, and high land full of Trees. An Iland. 4. degrees, 2. minutes, Southerly. Notes of Iles to Sea-bord of Priaman.

Betweene the two Southermost of these three Ilands, ten leagues distant, there lyeth a Breach dangerous about halfe way betweene them: to auoyd which we steered within two leagues of the southermost Iland very good passage, the breach being then to the South about three leagues from from vs. It lyeth very dangerous for men bound through by night, not hauing knowledge thereof. We could discerne no vnlikelihood of a passage, betweene the two Northermost also, but it is not a league broad. The Southermost Ile is the biggest. Of the two Southermost Iles, the West part of the North, and the East point of the Southermost, beare North and South ten leagues distant. The Breach lyeth from the Easter end of the Northermost of the said two South Ilands, South-east halfe the Channell ouer.

Note. The sixe and twentieth, we were halfe way betweene Priaman at Tecu, about three leagues from the shore where I noted, viz. The two Hummokes of Tecu, with the high land ouer them, beare North and by West, and South by East  $\frac{1}{4}$ . a point Easterly. There lyeth a shoale foure mile from the shore, bearing South and North with the high land of Tecu. Wee had fortie fye fathome water,  $2\frac{1}{2}$ . leagues from the shore, we then bearing North-east by East from the Road of Priaman. There is an Iland about foure leagues from the said Road, North-east and South-west. The three Ilands of Priaman, lye South South-east, and North North-west being distant each from other about a mile. Afternoone we got into Priaman Roade, and I saluted the Towne with fye Peeces of Ordnance.

Presents. The Gouvernour sent me a Goate. I presented the Gouvernour with three yards of Stammel-cloath, one blue Callico, one piece stocked, one Barrell, and two Sword-blades. The Gouvernour sent me a Goate. The Messenger spake good Portuguze, to whom I presented one blue Callico. There came another of Achen, with whom I had good conuersation in Arabicke, by whom I had great hope of good trade.

I went ashore where with much adoe, we bargained for Pepper. The nine and twentieth, I went ashore betimes, shooting seuen Peeces of Ordnance, and comming to the Gouvernours house, he presented me with a Buffalo, and appointed mee to make price of Pepper with sundry chiefe men. Where being set downe among sixtie persons, they first propounded that I must weigh such Pepper as I bought of them in the Towne: Whereabout we had much speech, I desiring to weigh vpon the Iland, but they would weigh in the Towne.

Craft in dawbing. They demanded fiftie Dollers the Bahar for Pepper, which much displeased me. For the Achen man had willed me to offer but sixteene Dollers, howbeit there was craft in dawbing: for he being a Merchant, would haue ingrossed much Pepper, before I should haue bought, and after would haue sold it me at his owne price. After much time, and many words, we accorded at  $22\frac{1}{2}$ . Dollers the Bahar, besides sixe per Cento, Custome. I refused to pay two other Customes, or rather Exactions. The one of a hundred and sixtie Dollers, the other not much lesse: whereto, with 30 much adoe, I consented, and Writings were drawne betweene vs.

Trecherous offer of a Moe. The last night a man speaking Portuguse, lay aboard mee, who in the behalfe of the late Gouvernours Wife, by him titled Queene, desired my ayde in taking the Towne, offering mee the one halfe thereof. To whom (not vnacquainted with the finenesse of Moores) I refused to intermeddle, it not being answerable to my Prince, and this morning sent him ashore.

I sold Cloth to Nakhada, for a hundred fiftie nine Masse of Gold.

Notes of Priaman. The Towne and bounds of Priaman yeeld not yeerely aboute fye hundred Bahars of Pepper, but with parts neere adioyning, as Passaman, Tecu, Beroose, and the Mountaines ouer the Towne are made two thousand fye hundred Bahars yeerely: which quantitie will lade two good shippes, and may bee bought very good cheape, if a Factorie haue meanes to buy all the yeere. But their Haruest is only in August and September, and is fetched away by them of Achen and Iana only, the Guserats not being permitted to Trade there, by 40 the King of Achen his expresse commandement. So that a ship (touching at Suratt) and buying, especially blue Callicoes, white Callicoes, blue striped, and checkered Stuffles, and some small and fine Pintatoes leauing a Factorie, shall lay the best foundation for gaine, against another yeere, that euer I haue heard off: I say, against another yeere, for that I see not, how ships can goe to Cambaya, and come hither time enough in one yeere. And in such case the King of Achen his Letter must be procured, for our safer proceeding in these parts.

The eighteenth of September, In the morning we made saile, the Lord prosper vs.

The nineteenth, At noone, we were West North-west from the point, to the South of Priaman, ten leagues we steered to the East-ward of Ilha de Tristexa. 50

Note. The twentieth, before day, we saw an Iland, a head, and steered East South-east, to go cleere off it: wee went to the Eastward of it foure leagues, the Ile Sumatra being seuen leagues from vs.

Notes. The one and twentieth, I allow sixe and twentie Leagues South-east by South, we were within sixe or seuen leagues of Sumatra, and West from vs about foure leagues was another great Iland: so that Nauigation vpon this Coast is carefully to be performed, for wee find no such Iles projection.

Latitude three degrees, twentie minutes, I allow eightene leagues South South-east winde 60 Northerly.

Iland. Wee being nine or ten leagues from Sumatra, haue scene another small Iland to Sea-board of vs, three or foure leagues off.

The

The first of October, 1608. Latitude five degrees and thirtie minutes, I pricke by the Land, being twelue leagues from vs, and haue gone faster to the South then by reckoning.

The second, we saw land in the morning, which we made for the Salt Iland, but it prooued a round Hummock vpon Sumatra. We haue made almost no way, yet are at noon in five degrees and fiftie five minuts, by help to the South. The third, we saw the Salt Ile bearing Northeast by North, some foure or five leagues from it. It lyeth in latitude sixe degrees six minutes. Wee were when we first saw the Iland, within foure leagues or lesse of the South land: whether Ilands (which I thinke) or Iana, it bare from vs East, South-east wind all night, fresh at West and North-west.

Note.
Salt Ile, in the straight of Sanda.

Note the South land are Iles, and lye the Wester part, with the Salt Iland (or roundest and highest Iland of the Straights mouth) South-west by South, &c.

Note.

The neereft of the South Ilands, being the Westernmost of them, is sixe leagues distant from the Salt Iland.

The Salt Iland, lyeth halfe Seas ouer, and the distance twixt Sumatra and the Souther land is twelue or fourteene leagues.

The Salt Iland, with the point including the whole Bay, wherein is Bantam Road, lye East North-east, and West South-West (which I should haue set first.)

The Salt Iland with the highest South land of Sumatra (it being a round Hummock, and with the North-west point of Iana, to the East-ward of the foure Ilands, which I formerly call the South land) beare East South-east, and West North-west. The Hummocke of Sumatra, and point of Iana, being about twentie leagues distant.

This euening, we had the Salt Iland, foure leagues North from vs.

The fourth, in the morning we were within five or sixe leagues of the point, including Bantams whole Bay, East North-east from vs. There are before wee come to the said point two Rockes full of Trees, bearing each with other North and South foure miles distant betweene which two we steered. The Southermost lyeth very neere Iana and the Northermost halfe way and more, betweene the point of Bantam and another low ragged Iland, which (with other two to the Northward of it) beare with the Northermost Rocke, West South-west, and East South-east, betweene which Ilands we doe not know of any passage.

Note that that ragged Iland maketh the Straight, and we came to the South thereof.

We got into the Road of Bantam where we found sixe Holland ships, whereof two were almost laden with Cloues, and two were to be laden with Pepper.

We arrived at
Bantam.

I found thirteene English aliue, whereof foure were Merchants. I receiued a Letter from Captaine David Middleton.

The sixt, I paid Vncte and Tegin the two Chineses their wages, and released them.

The twentieth, I called my Merchants, and hauing formerly resolu'd to retorne with the Dragon for England, vpon speciall considerations, I now questioned concerning the imployment of our Pinnace not yet finished: where we concluded that Browne and Sidall should goe in her for Banda.

Counsell and resolution, to send the Pin-nace for Banda.

Iohn Hearne, Iohn Saris, and Richard Saunge to remayne at Bantam. Also, that so soone as the Pinnace could retorne from Banda, Iohn Saris should goe in her to Suquedana vpon Borneo.

The fifteenth of Nouember, I sent for Iaques Lermite, and discouered vnto them a purpose in the Ianans, to cut their throates whereof I vnderstood very particularly.

The two and twentieth, the Ambassador of Siam came to visit mee, and dined with me. Hee affirmeth that a thousand Clothes red, would vent in his Countrey in two dayes, and great quantitie yeerely; they clothing their Elephants and Horses therewith.

Vent of Red
in Siam.

Gold is there abundant, and worth (as hee reporteth) three times the weight in Siluer, beeing good Gold. There are also precious stones in quantitie, and cheape. And that their King would account it, one of their greatest happineses to haue commerce with so great a King as his Maiestie of England: with whom, as he vnderstood, the King of Holland was not comparable.

The King of Holland.

The eight and twentieth, I tooke leaue of the King, the Gouvernour, the Admirall, the old Sabandare, Iura Bassa, Tanyong, and of the Hollanders, with purpose to be aboard the morrow.

The nine and twentieth, I went aboard for altogether.

The second of December, within night, our Merchants came aboard, bringing a Letter from the King of Bantam, to his Maiestie of England, and two Picolls of Canton, in present vnto him.

Kings Present.

The twelfth, wee espyed a Sayle, which prooued the Hector, yere wee got out of the Straights. She had no Captaine he remaying at Suratt, I vnderstood, that the Portugals had taken eightene English, whereof diuers of our Factors, and goods to the value of nine thousand Dollers.

Hector.
M. Will. Har-kins Captaine of the Hector

The fourteenth, we got into Bantam Roade againe, forced to a longer Voyage or losse of reputation:

The sixteenth, there came a small Flemming from Amsterdam, with newes of peace, betweene Spaine, France, and the Netherlands: and that his comming was to desist from their purpose to Malacca.

Newes of peace twixt
Spaine and the Netherlanders.

I appointed Master Molineux and Pockham for England, the rest with me for the Maluccoes.
The seuenteenth, I remoued to the Hector, and the Masters shifted ships.

The one and twentieth, I speeded Master Towersson with all things, willing his departure with all speed.

Dragon set saile
for England.

The three and twentieth, The Dragon made saile from Bantam, the Lord prosper her.

§ IIII.

*Their Voyage to Banda, Obseruations by the way,

The first of January, 1608. About one in the morning we weighed, and with a gale off the shore, got about the East point, East North-east from where wee roade three leagues.

A dangerous
shoale.

Thence to another point, South-east Easterly three leagues, betweene the two points lyeth a shoale, hauing little water, a great length: to preuent which, it is good to steere halfe way betweene Iana, and the Iles Tonda, which are five leagues distant.

To the Eastward of the second point, close aboard the shoare lyeth the Ile Tanara, and is not 20 seene of such as come farre off, it lyeth so neere the shoare.

From the second to the third points, bearing East South-east, are foure leagues. And  $1\frac{1}{2}$  mile off that point North by West lyeth the Ile Lackee, twixt which and the point is but  $1\frac{1}{2}$  fathom water by report. We roade all night, hauing the Ile East a league off, fixe fathome water.

The fourth, wee weighed and steered within  $\frac{1}{2}$  a league of Lackee, hauing seuen or eight fathome water. The Iland Lackee, with the West point including Iacatra, lyeth East South-east foure leagues distant. There lyeth a dangerous sand off the West point of Iacatra: so it is good to borrow of the Iland lying opposite vnto the said point.

Iacatra:
Presents.

The eighth, I went to Iacatra, and anchored farre out. The King sent his Sabandare to desire Powder and Match, and I presented him thirtie pound of Powder, and a roll of Match. I bought of them a Portugall Boy (which the Hollanders had giuen vnto the King) who would by no meanes forsake Christianitie: hee cost mee fortie five Dollers. The points, as wee roade, bare North-west and East by North foure leagues distant: the Towne and highest of the Eastermost hills South by East, and the West hill South by West from vs. Wee haue seene since wee came from Bantam, thirtie or fortie Ilands.

The tenth in the after-noon, we weighed and got vnder saile.

There lyeth a sunken Iland, euen with the water about two leagues West by North from the East point of Iacatra. We left it on our Larbord, going betweene it, and the Easter Iland. The two points making Iacatra Bay, beare East South-east, and West North-west foure leagues distant.

The Eastermost Iland lyeth in a straight Line betweene both points.

The eleuenth, we were at noone ten leagues North-east from the East point of Iacatra.

The twelfth, we were at noone South-west by South two leagues from an Iland, hauing made East by South thirtie leagues way. And there is a shoale South and North with the said Iland three leagues from Iana, called Los tres Hermanos: the Ile lyeth ten leagues from Iana, but not so farre Easterly as is proiected. The said Iland beareth with the highest hill we see vpon Iana North by West. There is a point of Iana, which with the same and the former Iland, beareth South by West Westerly.

The fifteenth, we were neere Madura, contrary to my expectation. I suppose that the Ile of Iana is not so long as it is proiected: or else wee haue found a set to the East-ward. A round Ile, and the highest Easter land of Iana, beare with vs South South-west, halfe West about fixe leagues from vs, the Ile within three leagues of vs.

Another Ile is with vs Northwest five leagues from vs. I pricked according to the land, and doe ouerleape thirtie leagues.

The sixteenth, I allow sixteene leagues East, North-east.

The seuenteenth, I allow sixteene leagues East by North.

An Iland not mentioned.
* Or Nuiafira.

At noone, wee were two leagues South-east by South from an Iland which trendeth East by North two leagues long (no mention hereof in Platts.)

The eighteenth, at noone, wee were neere the Iles * Nossaferes, it was North by West a league off vs. It trendeth North-west and South-east two or three leagues long, in latitude five 60 degrees, thirtie minutes.

I allow thirtie fixe leagues East North-east.

We saw another flat Iland to the North thereof.

The nineteenth, I allow eighteene leagues East, wind Westerly.

The twentieth, we yet see no land, albeit the ship hath runne more ground, since wee made Nossafes then the distance projected betweene them. This evening wee saw three Iles to the North of vs, foure or five leagues or more: they were low land, and lay a good length East and West, all small Ilands. We sounded thwart of them, and had but nineteene fathome water.

The three Iles
of Gicaliam.

The one and twentieth, this fore-noone we saw the land of Celebes, and esteeme the distance twixt it and our being yesternooone, nine and twentie leagues as we steered East, and I deeme the Iles we saw yesterday, the Easter of them to be three and twentie leagues from Celebes. But wee could not fetch Macassar by any meanes, the wind fresh Northerly, and North-west. We anchored in twelue fathome water, the South point of Celebes, bearing East by South sixe leagues from vs. Note, that the falling with Celebes, by reckoning nine and twentie leagues before we came to it, was caused by making error in the East end of Iaua. For whereas I over-leaped thirtie leagues there, as by the fifteenth. I was ashore heere, before wee had his length nine and twentie leagues. Wherefore I opine that the ordinary distance betweene Bantam and Celebes, being two hundred thirtie five leagues is neere the truth. Also, that betweene Celebes and Nossafes is seuentie sixe leagues, or else, that the Iles we saw the eighteenth were not (as we supposed) Nossafes. We brake our Cable and lost our Anchor.

Celebes.

Note.

The distance betweene Ban- tam and Celebes, is 235. leagues.

The three and twentieth, from the point where wee road to another point, that is East by South ten leagues thence, to another low point East by North Northerly eight leagues (and one league East of the said East point, is the notable round land) to another low point is six leagues East, and thence to another point, three leagues North-east by East, but this distance is to the East-ward of the Straights. We haled it all night vnder the notable round land, it beeing foure leagues East North-east from vs. The highest South land of Celebes, and the West point of Desolam, beare North North-west, tenne or twelue leagues distant. The West end of Desolam, and the low East point of Celebes (which is the narrowest of the Straights) beare South by West twelue or fourteene leagues off. The Coast of Desolam is neere South-west.

Desolam.

The straight
of Desolam.

The East end of Desolam, with the Iles making the Straight, and the East land of Celebes, in sight lye all in a right line, South and North neere.

The foure and twentieth, This morning we saw Cambina, and cannot possibly bee more then twentie leagues East North-east from the Straights of Celebes.

Cambina.

We were at one afternoone, North-east by North eight leagues from the West point thereof, it being a very high and round hill, the rest higher, but thicke land. The Wester part of what we see lyeth South-east by South, and the Easter part South-east by East, eight leagues long at the least.

The five and twentieth, We haue done little, but are still vnder the Iland, and see land to the North, whether Celebes or what I know not.

The seuen and twentieth, This morning wee were North and South with land lying twelue leagues East South-east from the East-side of Cambina. Comming neere it, the Wester part produced two Ilands, lying East North-east, &c.

The great Iland lyeth East by North five leagues, making three or foure head-lands.

Buton.

There lyeth a round Iland South from the said head-lands, eight leagues distant. From the Easter point to another North-east  $\frac{1}{2}$ . North three leagues thence, to another North-east sixe leagues thence, to another North-east by North three leagues. From the last point saue one, South-east by East, eight leagues lyeth a shoale sixe leagues long as it beareth.

The eight and twentieth, From the said point North-east eight leagues lyeth the Iland Ticabessa, whereof we had sight. And from the said point North-east by North fourteene leagues lyeth the East or North-east point or part of Buton.

Ticabessa.

Toward night came a Caracoll with fortie or fiftie men aboard me, sent from the King of Buton, among which were the Kings Vncle, and Sonne, who knew Sidall and Spalding.

The one and thirtieth in the morning, we were five leagues North-East, Northerly from the point neere Ticabessa, and within three leagues of the North part of Ticabessa, which are two or three Iles. At noone, we were sixe leagues South-East from the East point of Buton, whereby we haue more way since, then the ship can haue runne.

Ticabessa.

The third, latitude foure degrees twenty five minutes. I allow twenty foure leagues East North-East wind, North-west and North North-West, but we are set Southerly.

February, 1668

The fourth in the morning about eight, we saw Burro, the East point whereof was North-East by East seuen leagues off, and the West point North by West nine leagues off. I allow twelue leagues, North-east winde Westerly.

Burro.

The fift, taking aduise what to doe, all men opined fittest to goe for Banda; winds not seruing for the Moluccos, we concluded to goe thither. From the last Easter point of Burro, to another foure leagues East and West. The Ile Bloy lieth South and North from the Eastermost end of Burro, four or five leagues. We saw Amboyno from Burro, East by North twelue leagues, and lieth ten leagues long East, to the Eastward whereof lie other Iles, East and West of good quantitie.

Counsell.

Bloy.

Amboyno.

The sixt, we saw the high land of Banda, and is (in my opinion) twentie five leagues distant from the Easter part of Amboyno, East by South  $\frac{1}{2}$  Southerly. The seuenth Pulorin, with the lit-

The eight, we got into the roade or harbour of Banda, where the people and Hollanders came to welcome me. There is a ſmall flat Iland lyeth to the North of Pulorins Eaſt end. Puloway and the entrance of the Harbourough Weſt Notherly, three leagues diſtant. The two points of the Sound beare North  $\frac{1}{2}$ . Eaſt, &c. one  $\frac{1}{2}$ . mile diſtant. He that is bound in, muſt borrow on the North ſide, cloſe vnder the higheſt Hill. We roade in fixe  $\frac{1}{2}$ . fathome water, the Soundes entrance beeing Weſt South-weſt one mile off vs, Nera one mile North, and the low point of the round hill, Weſt one mile. The Hope was put to the Eaſt, and came Piloted in the morrow.

The ninth, I went a ſhore, and deliuered his Maieſties Letter to Nera, together with a Preſent, being the beſt gilt cup with a couer, the beſt Head-piecc and Gorget, and one of M. Buckes Pieces, 10 which coſt twenty five Dollers. It was receiued with the moſt State that hath been knowne: but they would bethinke themſelues for our houſe till to morrow. The Hollanders ſhot five Chambers at my landing, and five at my going aboard. I dieted with them. They report, that the Eaſt Monſon bloweth eight moneths, and beginneth twixt the firſt and tenth of May.

The eleuenth, we agreed for the building of our houſe.

The one and twentieth, I went to Urtatan, to haue conference with the people, where I promiſed to be at Lantor the Sunday following.

The five and twentieth, in the afternoone, I was called, and went to Lantor, where I deliuered the Kings Letter, the ſmall gilt cup with a couer, the faire gilt Target, one Piece ſtocked, and a Barrell, which they receiued reſpectuely. 20

Nakhada China (as the Hollanders Spie) came aboard mee in the night, to counſell me to ſpeed. Where the Dutch haue a Factorie, let no man looke for better meaſure, large gifts being better regarded then good dealing.

The thirteenth, they of Lantor demanded Serepinang one hundred and fortie rialls of eight, and I required leaue to ſell my cloath, as I might, with a publike price making. The Prieſt was ſent from the State, to demaund payment of Rooba, Rooba, before we traded: which I denied, except vpon condition the whole Country would bind themſelues to lade me with Mace and Nuts, within foure moneths. At one hundred Dollers, he tooke time to * be chary. I answered, that perceiving they deferred time till the Hollanders annuall (which was now in ſuſpence, the Monſons beeing almoſt ſpent, and already ſome Eaſt winds come in) I would not giue paſt ninetie ryalls: 30 wherewith he tooke his leaue, hauing as ſmooth an out-ſide, as rough in mind.

The ſixteenth, there came in three tall Hollanders, without anchoring, ſhot thirtie, ſixteene, and nine pieces of excellent Ordnance. Two of theſe ſhippes came from Tarenate, hauing loſt Paul Van Carden their Admirall, with ſeuentie foure men taken by the Spaniard, who would hearken to no other ranſome for him, except the Fort of Machian, by him formerly taken, might be reſigned. The Dutch offered fiftie thouſand Dollers for him.

The ſeuenteenth, the Hollanders viſited me by Sr Brewer.

The eighteenth, the Hollanders of the two leaſt ſhippes, came to viſite me, and ſupped with me: but an Engliſhman reporteth, that they meane to ſurpriſe vs ere a moneth expire.

The nineteeth, the States ſent againe for Rooba, Rooba, which I reſuſed to pay, ſo they ſent 40 againe, to tell me, that now they are together: but except I would exceed one hundred Dollers, I ſhould ſaue my labour and not trouble my ſelfe. I ſent them word againe, that though I laded not a graine, I would not giue about one hundred. They ſent ſoone after to call me, where after long diſpute, we accorded at one hundred Dollers, Rooba, Rooba, three hundred and eightie Dollers, and Serepinang fifty Dollers, beſides Piſſalin, a dutie to the foure Sabandares, of foure peeces Saraſſa, or Malaian Pintadoes.

We receiued a Beame and waight, the Cattee poize ninetie nine Dollerss, and in the haber-depoize, five pound thirteene  $\frac{1}{2}$ . ounces: ſo our Rials are too light.

The twentieth, this day we began to weigh, and the Hollanders comming aſhore, made price at one hundred, with foure hundred Rooba, Rooba, fiftie Serepinang, and foure cloathes. 50

We payed the Hollanders vnder-hand price, elſe we muſt haue bene idle.

The three and twentieth, I made a ſecret accord with the Chiefe of Puloway, to ſend a Factory thither, and were conſtrained to lend them three hundred Rials, and giue Serapinang one hundred Rials, with foure Malaian Pintadoes.

The foure and twentieth, the Dutch hearing of my accord with Puloway, ſought to preuent me.

The nine and twentieth there came fixe great ſhippes Hollanders, into the Roade, whom I ſaluted with nine Peeces, answered with three: beſides two ſmall Pinnaffes.

The firſt of April, receiued by the Hope from Puloway, 225.  $\frac{1}{2}$ . Cattees, Mace, and 1307.  $\frac{1}{2}$ . C. 60 Nuts, which Mace (all bought by him) I marked with B. for diſtinction.

The fourth, I went aboard to cure mine eye, which by the heat of Nuts, watching, &c. was very ſore. I left the houſe and goods with Augustine Spalding. There arriued from the Molucc-coſt two ſmall Hollanders. Note, that now the wind every morning, bloweth hard Eaſterly.

The ninth, the Dutch Admirall, Peter Williamſon Warboef, went aſhore to Urtatan. The Fleete ſhot shot fortie Peeces of Ordnance : his ship but five. He deliuered a letter from Count Maurice, without present, whereof when the people demanded, answer was made : that they had one, but it was not yet accorded what it should be. This I vnderstood.

The tenth, the Sabandar at my request, sent for the same Letter, which being in Portuguse, I perused, and found it onely an authoricall Instrument, binding the Prince and State, to confirme what their Admirals and Councils should accord with other States. It was written in Paper, sealed vnder the Contents, and left open for all.

The eleuenth, we began to bring our Nuts aboard, thereto constrained by the Dutch : their Note.
 meaning was, to goe ashore within a day or two : so that we could neither select the best, nor 10 let them lie long enough in sweate.

The twelfth, this night after the first watch, the States sent foure men to request my company ashore instantly, which I refused to doe till morning.

The thirteenth, I went betimes ashore, where the Sabandar of Nera came to visit me, and then after much talke, I propounded (as I had sundry times formerly done) the formall deliuering of Bandan, to the vse, and in the Name of his Maiestie of England, our Soueraigne, before the Hollanders did land, or begin their purposed Fort. They seemed to like well thereof, and concluded to be chary thereabout, and giue me answer to day : but I doubt their inconstancies.

The fifteenth day, the Dutch went ashore, twentie Boats, one thousand and two hundred men: the Naturals fled.

The eighteenth, I went ashore, and sent for some Hollanders of note, to speake with mee, to 20 whom I made knowne many wrongs I had receiued since their comming in : wishing redresse, and affirming, that though we were not at present strong enough to right our selues, yet his Maiestie of England, our Soueraigne, would not permit his Subiects to sustaine any dammage by their meanes, without speciall and sound satisfaction.

I affirmed, that notwithstanding wrongs receiued, I could not chuse but Christianly aduertise them, that the people purposed to poyson their water, and to that end warned me not to drink thereof. He thanked me, and hauing beene with their Admirall, requested me from him, to haue patience concerning Rice, till he had had counsaile therein. (Necessitie hath no Law.)

The twentieth, I went ashore to fetch the Rice, in part of Daton Putee his debt to the Company : but the Hollanders had dishonestly taken the same, notwithstanding the Admirall promised that I should haue it. Thence I went among the Iauans, to haue bought some Rice, who generally affirmed, that the Hollanders had straightly charged them, not to sell me any : neither durst 30 they, though I offered five Dollers the Coyoung more then the Dutch paid. At my comming home, I found him that the Admirall had formerly sent vnto me, whom I requested to tell his Admirall, that I esteemed his so taking my Rice, a great wrong : and that if he were a Gentleman, he would not permit his base people to abuse me as I walked among them. Whereto was answered, that he was a Weauer. I reprehended the reporter, being an English-man seruing them, who affirmed, that his owne people spake so of him generally. Thence I tooke my Prow, and went to Labatacca, where I found such small doings, as was not fit to keepe people thereabout : wherefore I appointed them to come away in the Skiffe, which I would send for them and their 40 goods to day.

The two and twentieth, I went to Comby, where the Dutch did vs much wrong, euen in our yard : whereof hauing sundry times complained without redresse, is argument, that it proceeded by order from the chiefe.

The foure and twentieth, they began their Fort.

The five and twentieth, a Dutch Pinnasse from Puloway, would giue me no newes of Browne there. I manned my Skiffe, and went to Puloway, where I found litle Spice. The people desired me to stay at Ayre Putee, promising to lade me, offering to enact among the the penaltie of death, to such as would sel one Cattee of Spice to the Hollanders. I seemed to distrust their words, hauing once before deceiued me : whereupon they offered to passe writings and oathes. I questioned 50 the bringing of it aboard, which they refused, fearing the Dutch. I offered to send one English-man in each Prow, and to runne the hazzard if the Dutch tooke it : but they would not hazzard their people.

The sixe and twentieth, in the morning, putting into my Boate foure Suckles of Mace, and many Nuts, with three Chiefe, to consider what to doe : by the way the Chiefe affirmed, that if we would not deale with them, their Spice should rot vpon the trees, and they would all dye, ere they would deale with the Hollanders. But they are wicked and faithlesse Moores, neither know I what to doe. Forby going for the Moluccos, I must loose two thousand Dollers owing here, and trade there vncertaine : and staying two moneths more heere, will preuent going to 60 the Moluccos : At last we agreed.

The nine and twentieth, the Chiefe being conuented, after many protests, they made mee a writing to deale with me onely, for all their Spice at Puloway, and Puloron, and at Ayre Putee, Ayre Putee. and not to sell or part with the Hollanders one Cattee thereof.

The Hollanders offered twelue thousand Dollers among the Countrey, to make their peace, and and driue vs hence, which they refused : and desired me often, and earnestly, not to conceit ill, in that they permitted the Dutch to come ashore, and sell their Cloath, being vpon a speciall consideration, to me immateriall.

fourth, 1609.

The fourth of May 1609. I went to Puloway, where I found the Hollanders offer Cloath at  $\frac{5}{7}$  our price. I found a thousand Cattees Nuts, and two hundred Cattees Mace, which they of Pulorin had sold vs, not weighing to the Hollanders one Cattee.

The quarrels twixt the Dutch and Bandesses, grew partly out of the leuity of these, and partly out of the insolency of those which exercised fortifications in stead of merchandising, & spare no the liberty of the living, or ie-pulchres of the dead.

The eight, the Dutch there sent to request the conueyance of a Letter, and a sick man aboard them, which I promised : but my Nuts being readie to lade, Nakhada Goa came to me from the Chiefe, to intreate me, not to carrie their man or letter, but stay also my selfe, which I refused, and fitted hence. Whereof hee hauing informed, they sent me word againe by him : that if I went, they would make purchase of whatsoever I left behind, and account vs enemies : whereupon I stayed.

Hence murders and hostilitie. See my
P. l. g. l. 5. c. 16. §. 3.

The ninth, the people sent and required me, not to depart these foure daies. As I was going to bed, there came a command vpon our liues, that we should not stirre out of doores : and presently thereupon, I heard that the Dutch were vpon their knees to the people. I armed my selfe and went out among them, where I found the Dutch ouercome with feare ; and demanding the cause of comming aboard so late, they answered, that one of them was shot into the legge with a Truncke, as he slept in their house : which caused them to seeke my helpe, and were intercepted by the way. I went home with them, and leauing three English with two of them in their house, I brought two Dutch home with me.

Note.
Shot with a Truncke.

The tenth, in the morning, I caused the goods of the Dutch (at their earnest request) to be brought home to my house, whereat the Countrey seemed offended with me.

Note.

There was counsaile taken, and resolution to kill the Dutch, but Nakhada Goa preferred their liues. The Dutch were commanded by the people, not to stirre out of doores, vpon paine of their liues, their goods and money registred. This euening many Prowes and men went hence.

ders*: but how

The twelfth, at night, there returned a Prow with newes, that they had slaine the Dutch Admirall, with all his chiefe followers and counsaile.

The thirteenth, I had much adoe to keepe the Dutch from being slaine, by those of Campon Awrat, whose Sabandar was slaine by the Dutch.

The foureteenth, two Dutch Pinnasses arriued, and the Countrey would faine haue gotten them ashore : whereof my people, by order aduised them. They of Campon Awrat came all armed, to haue slaine the Dutch, which with much intreaty and danger, I preuented. About noone, I sent away my Schiffe with Letters, of, and for the Dutch. This night, wee had much adoe to preferue the Dutch aliue with carefull watch.

The fifteenth, my Schiffe returned with Letters, from, and for the Dutch.

The sixteenth, the States consulted and resolved, that with me the Dutch should be safe : but would not permit them aboard their shippes. I came aboard, and brought Letters from, and to the Dutch, and at the Harboroughes mouth, was hayled by five Dutch Shallops, and other Boates.

Note.

The twentieth, in the euening, Simon Hoen, Viceadmirall, came aboard me, giuing me many thankses, for kindnesse shewed to the Dutch at Puloway. I shot seauen parting Guns.

Our house sold

The fine and twentieth, I manned my Prow, and went to Labatacca, where they desired a man or two Ledgers, to buy their Spice, which I promised them. The Hollanders pulled downe my house, and satisfied me for the same, one hundred and fiftie Dollers, besides fortie of the boards. When I was going to bed, Van Bergell, and Samuel King, came from the Vice-admirall, to let me know, that they had counselled concerning my Trade at Labatacca, and concluded to permit my quiet Trade there : except at such times, as they should come to surprize the same. Also, they requested me not to take offence, if their Boates laied mine aboard, to search what aide I did to their enemies, which I tooke in ill part. And in preuention of which inconueniences, I propounded vnto them : that if they would pay me such debts, as Nera and Cumber owed me, amounting to twelue or thirteene hundred Dollers, I would trade at Puloway and Pulorin only : whereof they promised me answer to morrow.

The sixe and twentieth, Van Bergell brought me word, that I might trade at Labatacca.

The seauen and twentieth, I sent Matthew Porter with a Cargason to Labatacca.

The one and thirtieth, I went to Labatacca to forward businesse. About supper time, Van Bergell and Samuel King came aboard me, desiring priuate speach with me from their Vice-Admirall : and going into my Cabbine, after many Italian-like Complements, they deliuered me a note from their Vice-Admirall, permitting vs trade, but prohibiting victuall and munition to be carried to the people, which they held for enemies, and requesting that their Boates might passe by them to be searched to that ende, which else should be done by force, * threatening confiscati-on of ship and goods.

out (feare
the tedious-nesse) this & other letters
on both sides.

I answered ; that I would follow my trade, wherein if he wronged me, it would be too heauy for him to answer. That I had a remainder of the Rice, with I formerly acquainted him, which I would sell, except they tooke an vnanswerable course therein. That for Munition, I had in the shippe shippe not past twenty hand-gunnes, belonging to sundry poore men, the sale whereof I neither could nor would preuent, except they would buy them, which I would cause to be reasonably sold. Concerning my subiection to their search, I answered, to haue rather my estate, and life hazarded here, then my hitherto vnspotted reputation at my comming home: nay, I should therein become a Traytor vnto my Soueraigne, wherewith my conceit was neuer stained.

The second of Iune, I sent the Vice-Admiral and Councell a few lines in Answer thereof, by Iune, 1609.
Augustine Spalding, seeking all wayes of Peace.

The third, I receiued a note from the Dutch, whereby they would continue their search by all meanes, offering to buy the hand-gunnes, but not permit the Rice to be carried. Whereto instantly by their Messenger, I answered, as followeth;

THE Vice-Admirall, M. Simon Iahntson Hoen, &c. of the Dutch Fleete, may please to know; My reply.
That to the ende, to take away all cause of quarrell from them to vs, and shew the World our honest cause, and their wilfulnesse: Whereas they will not permit my Rice to bee carried to Puloway, I will likewise therein consent to them, vpon condition, that they shall reuoke their purposed search. And to the end, they shall haue some securitie for the performance, I will passe my yet vn falsified word; or if that (through your incredulitie) be not sufficient, mine oath vnto your Deputies, or your selues, generally at pleasure to the same effect. But if herein you will not (through desire of quarrell with the English) consent vnto my reasonable request: then be pleased to knowe, that I will send it, at what price or hazard soener. Concerning our munition, I write nothing; your purpose to buy the same, beeing preiudiciall to your owne doubts, which I pray let bee done speedily for your owne satisfactions. Thus I commit you to the Almighty who prosper your honest proceedings, as I wish to mine owne. From aboard the Hector in Banda, this third of Iune, 1609.

WILLIAM KEELING.

Toward night, they sent me againe their last resolution (they hauing called foure Counsell thereabout) holding their determination for the search. Whereupon, considering their purposes, and that the least breach would prooue totall, wherein sixtie two men, against a thousand or more, could not performe much (to the hazarding of ship and goods or at least not permission to lade, their Fort commanding all) I yeelded as vpon constraint to the search.

The fift, I went with my last Rice to Puloway, the Hollanders hauing first sent aboard, and searched, to our great discontents; notwithstanding which, the ship at Lantor weaued vs, and called vs aboard. I refused; they said they would shoote: but I neither went aboard, nor they shot.

The foureteenth, I went to Labatacca, where I bought some Spice, and put away some cloth. The foure and twentieth, I went to Cumber, whence I stowed eleuen Suckles Mace.

The five and twentieth, I went to Lantor to recouer some debts made by Sidall, which were denied. The sixe and twentieth, I sent my great boat for Puloway. I went to Labatacca, whence I stowed two Suckles Mace.

The seuen and twentieth, my Boat returned with Spice from Puloway. The Ianans began to haue conference with the Hollanders.

The nine and twentieth, I went to Cumber, whence I stowed foureteene Suckles Mace.

The first of Iuly, 1609. I went to Cumber to account with debtors. The second, the Hollanders (with all the strength they could make, leauing the shippes and fort weakly manned) went and tooke Labatacca: where, as they say, they killed twenty or sixteene persons, and burned the Towne, bringing away pots and pannes. I am verily perswaded, that fortie men would haue done as much as they did, with more then tenne times so many.

The fourth, I sent to Cumber, and one of my Guserates counsellled me to goe no more: for they distrust my Intelligence with the Dutch.

The sixteenth, before day, the Hollanders with their whole power went to the East-ward, and hauing burned certaine boates, and returning to take Salomo, were there at much strife about landing, not who should land soonest, but who might stay longest aboard. By which, and other their defaults, they were repulled with the losse of fixe men, besides many hurt: among whom the Gouverneur, M. Iacob de Bitter, is reported to haue behaued himselfe worthily there. Afterward, Matthew Porter and others, desired to goe a shore, which I permitted, by whom one sent me word, that the Hollanders meant to take me, and wished me to looke well to my shippe and selfe. The cause, as he saith, was this: They report that the two last nights wee made signes a shore, (and were by the people answered) of the Hollanders prouision to land: whereof, God knoweth, that I knew nor heard not.

The seuenteenth, the Dutch sent Van Bergell, and Samuel King aboard mee, requesting to know when I hoped to be gone: wherein I could not satisfie them, Puloway delaying mee, as it doth. They offered to make good all my debts, if I would be gone speedily, which I refused: affirming that the Company would not feele so small a losse. Also, that I could not answer it at home, hauing stayed till now, that lading is readie. We had some speach concerning the supposed fed signes, which we should make to the Countrey against them: Wherein I made iust protests to the contrary.

They affirmed vs to haue made signes two nights together, and said, that many Depositions were taken thereupon: (a signe of their purpose to quarrell with vs.) Also, that one of my men yesterday being in their Fort demanded, why we made signes to the Countrey? should answer: that we had reason so to doe, the Countrey being so much indebted vnto vs, and the Dutch hindering vs what they can. Which imposture, I had no patience longer to hearken vnto, but pawned my hand that they could not proue any thing, first or last: wishing them to take their cour-les. Howbeit, that I might vtterly preuent all cause of mistrust in them of vs euen in the whole Worlds opinion: I offered to goe ride in Laboan Iana, where I might neither know their stirrings, nor could make signes to hurt them. 10

The eighteenth, in the afternoone the Dutch sent many of their chiefe aboard me, who at first demanded kindly, whether I continued in my former determination of lading here? whereto I answered yea. Whereupon they desired me to take some course to goe hence in friendship, I answered, that now Spice was readie, I hoped to get hence within twentie dayes laden, and in friendship. Many reasons passed betweene vs: but when they saw my purpose, they deliue-red me a note from their Vice-Admirall and Councell, wherein were forged as many vntruthes as lines. The Copie whereof followeth.

THe Generall Master William Keeling, May please to know, that it hath beene by our Deputies 20 proffered vnto him, that if he thought good to transport ouer to vs, the Debts remayning among the Bandanese, and then in friendship withdraw from the Roade, with his shippe (which himselfe heretofore hath partly made mention of to some of vs) we are resolved to deale with him in that behalfe. And albeit, this reasonable proffer, to eschew quarrell, is by vs to him motioned: yet hath the Generall afore-said, denied to accept the same. Notwithstanding we haue sufficient occasion enough, with good reason to command him, with his said ship, to withdraw from forth this Roade, and out of our Fleete also, without the command of the Artillery of the Fortresse of Nassau: and that the fore-said Generall may understand the reasons which moued us to the same we haue at large remonstrated the same, as followeth.

vnto them. &c. together with their selfe worthlesse ouer-weening.

The eight of Aprill, 1609. The Worshippfull Admirall Peter Williamson Var Hoef, being anchored with his Fleete, in the Islands of Banda, and there vnderstanding of the Merchants of the vnited East India Company, how they were through the Inhabitants of Banda, daily constray-ned and molested, and also sometimes dispossessed of their Clothes and Merchandizes, which they held for themselves at such rates as they pleased, satisfying for them, as and when they thought good: and so remayned indebted so much, as their debt vnto the Generall East India Company, amounted vnto aboue twentie thousand Rials of eight, without intention to recontent the same.
And further that our Liegers, concerning their liues, haue euer liued in very doubtfull estate, fearing, least daily they would vntimely practice their ends, as appeared few yeares past, they haue murdered our Merchants, and forcibly taken other some, and after their custome, made Heathens 40 of them.

Wherefore the Admirall afore-said was moued by all friendly meanes, to make a Castle or Fortresse, whereby our Liegers, and Merchandizes, might rest in better safety, both against the Portugall, and against all other our Enemies: which by most of the chiefe Oran-Cayas, was condescended vnto. And thereupon, haue wee proceeded to the building of a Fortresse, vpon the Iland Neyra. Which Fortresse, being about halfe finished, the Admirall Var Hoen abouesaid, hath procured a Conuention of the chiefe Oran-Cayas, and Councell of the Ile of Banda, to meet with him, and other of his Councell at Ratoo: and there to haue entred in treatie of a friendly accord and contract together. To which effect, the said Admirall appointed the Fiscall, or lu-stice of the Fleet, besides other of good account, as Hostages, to continue at Keyacke: that thereby, they, the rather or with lesse feare might come to the Admirall afore-said, and his Councell. 50

Thus the Admirall, with diuers of his Councell, together with a Company of his Souldiers, the two and twentieth of May, 1609. came to Ratoo, the nominated place of Conuention; their being a Bandanese approached vnto him out of the Woods; who told the Admirall, that the Oran-Cayas, and other chiefe of the Iles, were neere there in the Woods, but were so timorous of the Souldiers, that the Admirall had with him, as they feared to come vnto him: and therefore prayed him and his Counsell to come vnto them. The Ad-mirall vnderstanding the report, passed towards them, together with his said Councell, and left his Souldiers at their appointed place. And being entred amongst them, hee found the Woods replenished with armed Black-Moores, Bandanese, and Oran-Cayas, who instantly incircled 60 them, and without much conference betweene them passed, were by them treacherously and villanously massacred, and gaue euery of our chiefe, no lesse then twentie wounds. This Stratagem thus performed, they presently assaulted the Company of Souldiers, intending to haue serued them with the like sawce. But they partly in feare, and doubt of some treachery, armed themselves, and stood in their defence, and encountered one another, so as in fine they betooke themselves to their best refuge, with losse of some of their chiefe, and so fled vnto Cayack: and there haue murdered the Fiscall or Iustice afore-said, with the rest of the hostages, besides diuers others of our people, who were walked into the Woods, to gather Cocus Nuts: insomuch, as at that time, were murdered about forty of ours by the Bandanesses, contrary to their oathes and promises. All which, prouoketh vs to execute and practise all reuenge possible, toward the inhumane treacherous Bandanesses: which occasions pricke vs forward, to prosecute this present bloody warre against them. Then followed many presumptions of his assistance of the Bandanesses, by English Powder and Munition, by signes, &c. which I omit. They conclude on those suppositions.

10 We, by vertue of our Commission, and Patent of his Princely Excellency, commaund the foresaid Generall to withdraw with his ship from forth our Road out of our Fleet, and without the command of the Artillery of the Fortresse of Nassau, within the time of five daies, after the date hereof. And in that we haue conquered, by force of Armes, the Iland Nera, so doe we also pretend, and hold the Roades thereabout depending, as the Road of Labatacca, &c. to bee vnder our command: and will not permit any (the time that we warre with the Bandanesses) to anchor there.

Thus by vs ordained, past, and absolutely resolued vpon by the Vice-Admirall, and residue of the Councill in the shippe of Hollandia, vpon the Roade of Banda, the eight and twentie of Iuly, 1609.

Whereto I briefly answered by word, that I could not answere my so going hence (lading being now ready) to my Countrey: and that vnlesse I were otherwise commaunded then by words, I would ride here till I were laden, which would be within five and twenty daies at the vttermost. They affirmed, that this their signification to me, was answere. Whereto I applyed, that oftentimes rash men threatned to kill, which they durst not for life performe. I shot five parting Peeces.

30 The nineteenth, I sent away my Schiffe for Puloway, to know of riding there. Van Bergell came aboard to search the Boate; I willed him to tell the Vice-Admirall, that I would leaue a Factorie at Puloway, in case of constraint: and without constraint I would not hence.

The twentieth, about one this morning, my Schiffe returned from Puloway, without note of our debts, or Inuentory of goods, the principall causes of my writing. He onely affirmed, that the people were willing to pay their debts, if we could stay fifteene or twentie daies: also offering vs their best Road at Puloway. The Dutch and we came to some accord for the time of our stay, and for our debts, the Monson also inuiting vs thereto, and the Trade which already we had.

40 The first of August 1609. peace generally published twixt the Dutch and Countrey, is an vncomfortable argument, of the Puloways breaking with vs. The Dutch sent me a Letter of credit, for the receipt of my debts left at Banda, payable at Bantam. The Hollanders this euening shot an hundred and fiftie Peeces of Ordnance, for ioy of peace. Vpon the Gouernors earnest treatie, I went to see the Dutch Fort, whose square may be foote, hauing thirtie Peeces of Ordnance in circa, whereof eight very good Brasse Demi-cannons.

The first of August, 1609.

Peace between the Hollanders and the Bandanesses.

The fourth, I sent my Boat to fetch away goods, wherein came a Seruant of Nakhada Guse-ral, by whom I vnderstood that the Pulowans were resolued to let me haue no more Spice, except some little, to shaddow their wrong vnto vs: wherefore I sent the Boat againe for Browne. Being faire by the Towne, shot five Peeces, the better to procure my people thence: they not perceiuing that we tooke any displeasure at their ill dealings. I sent againe for Browne; which Boat staying long, I shot two seuerall warning Peeces. Whereupon M. Browne came aboard me, but not Spalding: affirming, that they would not let him come, before I came ashore. Wherfore I stood againe to the Eastward, and comming somewhat neere the Towne, the King of Macassar came aboard me, to redeeme his pawne, and brought Spalding and the three Dutch aboard mee, more thanks to the loue of his good pawne, then their honesties.

Perfidy of the Hollanders.

The King of Macassar cometh aboard.

The tenth, I weighed an halfe hundred by our ordinary Banda Beame, and it weighed nine Cattees, whereby the Cattee appeareth to weigh five pound, foureteene  $\frac{1}{2}$ . ounces haberdupoise. I weighed also the single Cattee, which made five pound foureteene  $\frac{1}{2}$ . ounces haberdupoise.

Banda waights.

The eleuenth, we anchored neere Macassar vpon Celebes, I being very desirous to goe thither, hoping vpon reports, to finde Cloues there for Cloth.

Macassar vpon Celebes.

60 The twelfth, I sent my Schiffe armed, to inquire of the place, who returning, heard that Macassar was yet  $\frac{1}{2}$ . a daies saile to the North: and that three moneths since, there was a Dutch ship lost in sight of the Towne: vpon which dangerous report, we gaue ouer the search of Macassar.

A ship of Holland lost before Macassar.

The one and twentieth, we anchored in Iaccatra, where we found the Banda and Enquisen, two Dutch shippes, hauing bene eight daies there: who brought our people (in the Hope) and their goods from Amboyno.

They arrive in the Road at Bantam.

The sixe and twentieth, comming neere the point, we met a Praw with Raffe Hearne, sent by Master John Saris to me, who had readie three thousand foure hundred eighty one bagges of Pepper. We got betimes into the Roade, and John Saris came aboard me in a Dutch Boat.

The thirteenth, vpon the Kings request, I sent five and twentie armed men to make him pasture, which he willed in honour of his hauing the last night, made conquest of his Wives virginities.

The three and twentieth, hauing taken in there foure thousand and nine hundred bags of Pepper, I questioned the leauing of a Factorie, where to we accorded.

Factory at Bantam.

The seuen and twentieth, I appointed the Factorie at Bantam, (viz:) Augustine Spalding, Factor, at fiftie pound sterling a yeare: Francis Kellie, Chirurgion, fortie five shillings a moneth: John Parsons thirtie shillings a moneth: Robert Neale, twentie nine shillings a moneth: Augustine Adwell, foure and twentie shillings a moneth: Esheldred Lampre, twentie shillings a moneth: William Drimer, twentie shillings a moneth: William Wilson, two and twentie shillings a moneth: William Lamwell, sixteene shillings a moneth: Phillip Badnedg, sixteene shillings a moneth: Francisco Domingo, twelue shillings a moneth: Iuan Seraan, ten shillings a moneth: Adrian, Master Towersons Boy, ten shillings a moneth. I also hired sixe persons to goe with vs for England, and make all possible speed.

The nine and twentieth, we ended with the Gouvernor about our customes, with much adoe.

The thirtieth, we deliuered the Companies businesse from Saris to Spalding, giuing him speciall charge of the Dutch insolency and hate towards vs, and therefore to haue little to do with them.

October, 1609.

The second of October, 1609. I went and tooke my leaue of the Gouverneur, and desired his fauour to our Factor, which he promised in seeming hartily.

The third, betimes I came aboard for adue, hauing visited all my friends.

The first of Nouember, 1609. About the distance sixe hundred and fiftie from Bantam, wee were in five and twenty degrees South Latitude, hauing foure and twenty degrees variation, and foure and twentie daies running it.

Storme.

The nine and twentieth, we had all day an hard gale of wind, which towards night prooued a storme, at West South-west from the North-ward, and put vs to try with our maine course, continuing all night, and the next day. Wherein (as sundry other times before) we haue found a report of Linschot to be true, that generally all Easterly winds comming about to the North-ward, if it proue raine, presently the wind commeth about to the West South-west, and there bloweth. We were in two and thirtie South when the storme tooke vs, and had about thirtie degrees variation, and vpwards.

Note.

Variation thir-
teene degrees.

December the eight, 1609.
Terra Donatall.

The eight of December, 1609. We fell betimes in the morning, with Terra Donatall, some fixe leagues off vs, the Wester part where the variation was about eight  $\frac{1}{2}$  degrees. We were at noone vnder thirtie one degrees, and seuen and twentie minuts of Latitude, wee standing South South-East (wind at South-west) vnder low sailes.

We met a Hollander, and vnderstood by them, that the Erasmus (a ship of the Fleete, which made homewards, at my arriuall with the Dragon at Bantam) being very leaky at Sea, and the rest of the Fleete so leauing her, steered for the Iland Mauritius, and there vnladed the said Erasmus, leauing the goods there, with five and twentie persons to guard the same, till it might be sent for; the rest of her company being now in this ship;

The latitude and description of the Ile
Mauritius.

That vpon Mauritius were two hauens; the one, called the North-west, lying vnder twenty degrees, somewhat lesse; the other, the South-East in twenty degrees and fiftene minuts, all kind of refreshments being there to bee had: as Fish, Turtles, Manatees, in great abundance, Bowles infinite, and Goates, newly by them brought thither, in some reasonable number; Hogs also, and the place very healthfull. The Iland is betweene thirtie and fortie leagues in circuit: and the variation there being one and twentie degrees the North-westing. They came from Bantam in May, were a moneth getting Mauritius, stayed there foure moneths and an halfe, and haue bene fixe weekes thence, whereof seuentene daies with contrary winds.

Cape Das
Aghulas.

The two and twentieth, we were in Latitude thirty five degrees, twentie eight minuts, and within seauen leagues of the Cape Aghulas, which riseth like two Iles, we being South-East off it: but comming more thwart like three Ilands, two Bayes North making three perspicuous points low, and seeming round. We sounded about seauen in the euening, and had seuentie seuen fathome water, Oazy ground, being South off the shore, about five leagues the most, and as I gesse, newly got to the Westward of the Flats shoalest.

I obserued the Sunnes setting, and found small variation, hauing eight and twentie  $\frac{1}{2}$  degrees (South of the West) Azimoth, our latitude being about five and thirtie degrees, and six and twentie minutes.

Note.

A man bound home vpon this Coast, finding no weather for obseruation, either for latitude or variation, may boldly and safely keepe himselfe in sixtie fathome water, and shelly ground: and when he findeth Oazy, is very neere Cape Das Aghulas: and when he loofeth ground at one hundred and twenty fathome line, he may resolue that he hath past the said Cape, prouided hee be within the latitude of thirty sixe degrees.

The

The three and twentieth, we steered all night, West by North, and West North-west, a fresh gale Easterly, and in the morning, saw the land all along, about eight or ten leagues from vs high land. About noone, we were neere Cape Buona Speranza, hauing runne twixt Cape D'aghulas and it, in seuentene houres. We got within three leagues of the Sugar-loafe, and stood off and on all night. Cape De Buona Speranza.

The eight and twentieth, I receiued by the Dutch Boate sixe sheepe (the fattest that euer I saw) from the Island: the taile of one of them was eight and twenty inches broad, and weighed five and thirty pound weight.

I receiued of the Dutch a Maine Top-sayle (whereof we had extreame want) and deliuered them a note to the Company, to receiue twelue pound twelue shillings for the same: besides, their promises to vs for other wants, are very honest and Christian-like. We tooke fat sheep left on Penguin Island, and set leane in their room: I left a note also there of my comming, and the state of my company, as others had done before. Maine top saile bought.

The tenth of Ianuary, in the morning, wee were vnder sayle homeward. Note, that all the time we had beene heere, the wind hath beene Westerly, and Southerly: and the two former times that I was heere, at the same season, it blew stormes Easterly. Ianuary the tenth. 1609. Set Sayle.

The twentieth, we passed the Southerne Tropicke, about noone. The Dutch came and supped with me: shot three parting Peeeces. South Tropic.

The thirtieth, before day, we saw S. Helena, hauing steered sixtie fixe leagues West in that latitude. We roade on the North-west part thereof, a mile from the shore, North-west from the Chappell, in two and twenty fathome sandy ground. The Island may lie truly two hundred and seenty, or two hundred and eightie leagues to the West-ward, from the land of Aethyopia, we were faine to steere close in vnder the high-land, to get ground, the bancke being steepe too, and without no anchoring. Santa Helena.

The ninth of February, wee weighed, and made sayle home-ward: hauing receiued aboard heere, for refreshing, nineteene Goates, nine Hogges, and thirteene Pigges. February 9. Set sayle from S. Helena.

The sixteenth, we saw the Ile Ascension seuen or eight leagues West South-west from vs. Ascension.

The eight and twentieth, in the morning, the wind being Westerly, and reasonable faire weather, we steered with the Dutch (who had made a Wast vpon his Mizen Mast-head for vs.) He told vs, that he had but eight or nine men standing, the rest sicke, and fixe and forty dead. A grievous chastisement vnto them, and to vs, a neuer sufficiently acknowledged mercy: that they who offered to spare me ten or twenty men, or more vpon occasion, should so generally decay, and we loose no one, nay euery one in good health. We left the Dutch to our Christian griece.

Toward night, at my Companies earnest sute, considering our leake, with many other iust causes, on our part, besides our want of meanes to aide them, though we should accompany them: they hauing (without any our speech or motion to the like end) desired vs to acquaint such Dutch, as we should meete with their distresse, that they might take the best course for their ayde, wee made saile, and left them not without sensible and Christian greefe, for our want of meanes to helpe them. Latitude forty nue degrees and fixe minutes.

The first of May, 1610. We had very faire weather, wind South-west, latitude forty nine degrees, and thirteene minuts. May 1610.

The second, betimes in the morning, the wind came at South, and blew an hard storme, which put vs into our fore-course.

Toward night, we spake with a Lubecker, who told vs, that Silley bare East by North (thirtie eight Dutch miles, which is fiftie leagues) from vs: and the weather being faire, we made saile. I told them of the distressed Dutch.

The ninth, in the morning, Beachy was North North-East, three leagues from vs.

The tenth, about Sun-set, we anchored in the Downes.

* Captain Keeling and he had kept company together all the voyage before related (& not needfull to be repeated) to the Roade of D. Lisa in Socatra, whence on June the 24. Captaine Keeling departed in the Dragon, as you haue heard; the other in the Hector for Surat (the meane while built a Pinasse) on the fourth of August hauing receiued from the Generall a duplicate of the Commission vnder the Great Scale. Excessive rain.

AT my arriuall vnto the Bar of Surat, being the foure and twentieth of August, 1608. I presently sent vnto Surat Francis Buck, Merchant, with two others, to make knowne vnto the Gouvernour, that the King of England had sent me as his Embassadour vnto his King, with his Letter and Present: I receiued the Gouvernours answere, both by them, and three of his Seruants sent me from Surat, that he, and what the Country afforded, was at my command: and that I should be very welcome, if I would vouchsafe to come on shore. I went accompanied with my Merchants, and others, in the best manner I could, befitting for the honour of my King and Country. At my comming on shore, after their barbarous manner I was kindly receiued, and multitudes of people following me, all desirous to see a new come people, much nominated, but neuer came in their parts. As I was neere the Gouvernours house, word was brought me that he was not well, but I thinke rather, drunke with Affion or Opion, being an aged man. So I went vnto the chiefe Customer, which was the onely man that Sea-faring caules belonged vnto (for the government of Surat, belonged vnto two great Noblemen; the one being Vice-Roy of Decan, named Chanbana; the other, Vice-Roy of Cambaya and Surat, named Mocrebbchan, but in Surat hee had no command, saue onely ouer the Kings Customes) who was the onely man I was to deale withall. After many complements done with this chiefe Customer, I told him that my comming was to establish and settle a Factory in Surat, and that I had a Letter for his King from His Majesty of England, tending to the same purpose, who is desirous to haue league and amitie with his King, in that kind, that his Subiects might freely goe and come, sell and buy, as the custome of all Nations is: and that my ship was laden with the commodities of our land, which by intelligence of former traouellers, were vendible for these parts. His answere was, that he would dispatch a Foot-man for Cambaya, vnto the Nobleman his Master: for of himselfe he could doe nothing without his order. So taking my leave, I departed to my lodging appointed for mee, which was at the Custome-house: In the morning, I went to visit the Gouvernour, and after a Present giuen him, with great grauity and outward shew of kindnesse, he entertained me, bidding me most heartily welcome, and that the Countrey was at my command. After complements done, and entring into the maine affaires of my businesse, acquainting him wherefore my comming was for these parts: he answered me, that these my affaires did not concerne him, because they were Sea-faring caules, which did belong vnto Mocrebbchan, vnto whom hee promised me to dispatch a Foot-man vnto Cambaya, and would write in my behalfe, both for the unlading of my shippe, as also concerning a Factorie. In the meane while, he appointed me to lodge in a Merchants house, that vnderstood the Turkish, being at that time my Trough-man, the Captaine of that shippe which Sir Edward Michelborne tooke.

It was twentie daies ere the answer came, by reason of the great waters and raines that men could not passe. In this time, the Merchants, many of them very friendly feasted me, when it was faire weather that I could get out of doores: for there fell a great raine, continuing almost the time the Messengers were absent, who at the end of twenty daies I brought answer from Mocrebbchan, with Licence to land my goods, and buy and sell for this present Voyage: but for a future Trade, and settling of a Factorie, he could not doe it without the Kings commaundement, which he thought would be effected, if I would take the paines of two moneths trauell, to deliuer my Kings Letter. And further, he wrote vnto his chiefe Customer, that all, whatsoever I brought, should be kept in the Custome-house, till his Brother Sheck Abder Rachim came, who should make all the hast that possibly could bee, for to chuse such goods as were fitting for the King: (these excuses of taking goods of all men for the King, are for their owne private gaine.) Vpon this answere, I made all the hast I could, in easing our shippe of her heauy burthen of Lead, and Iron, which of necessitie must be landed. The goods being landed, and kept in the Customers power, power, till the comming of this great man, perceiuing the time precious, and my ship not able long to stay, I thought it conuenient to send for three Chests of Money, and with that to buy Commodities of the same sorts, that were vendible at Priaman and Bantam, which the Guzers carry yearely thither, making great benefit thereof. I began to buy against the will of all the Merchants in the Towne, whose grumbling was very much, and complaining vnto the Governour and Customier, of the leaue that was granted me, in buying those Commodities, which would cut their owne throates at Priaman and Bantam, they not suspecting that I would buy Commodities for those parts, but onely for England.

At the end of this businesse, this great man came, who gaue me licence to ship it: before the shipping of which I called a Councell, which were the Merchants I had, and those that I thought fitting for the businesse I pretended, demanding euery ones opinion according to his place, what should be thought conuenient for the deliuey of his Maiesties Letter, and the establishing of a Trade. So generally it was agreed and concluded, that for the effecting of these waighty affaires, it neither would, nor could be accomplished by any, but by my selfe, by reason of my experience in my former trauels and language: as also I was knowne to all, to be the man that was sent as Embassadour about these affaires. After it was concluded, and I contented to stay, I made what hast I could in dispatching away the ship, and to ship the goods. This done, I called Master Marlow, and all the company that was on shore before mee, acquainting them with my pretence, and how they should receiue for their Commander Master Marlow: willing them that they obey and reuerence him, in that kind as they did me. This done, I brought them to the water side, and seeing them imbarke themselves, I bad them farewell.

The next day, going about my affaires to the great mans brother, I met with some tenne or twelue of our men, of the better sort of them, very much frighted, telling me the heauiest newes, as I thought, that euer came vnto me, of the taking of the Barks by a Portugal Frigat or two: and all goods and men taken, onely they escaped. I demanding in what manner they were taken, and whether they did not fight, their answer was no: M. Marlow would not suffer them, for that the Portugals were our friends: and Bucke, on the other side, went to the Portugall without a pawne, and there he betrayed vs, for he neuer came vnto vs after. Indeed, Bucke went vpon the oath and faithfull promise of the Captaine, but was neuer suffered to returne. I presently sent a letter vnto the Captaine Maior, that he release my men and goods, for that we were Englistmen, and that our Kings had peace and amity together. And that we were sent vnto the Mogols countrey by our King, and with his letter vnto the Mogol, for his subiects to trade in his Countrey: and with his Maiesties Commission for the gouernment of his subiects. And I made no question, but in deliuering backe his Maiesties subiects and goods, that it would be well taken at his Kings hands: if the contrary, it would be a meanes of breach. At the receipt of my letter, the proud Rai call braued so much, as the Messenger told me, most vildly abusing his Maiestie, tearing him King of Fishermen, and of an Iland of no import, and a fart for his Commission, scorning to send me any answer.

It was my chance the next day, to meete with a Captaine of one of the Portugal Frigats who came about businesse sent by the Captaine Maior. The businesse as I vnderstood, was that the Governour should send me as prisoner vnto him, for that we were Hollanders. I vnderstanding what he was, tooke occasion to speake with him of the abuses offered the King of England, and his subiects: his answer was, that these Seas belonged vnto the King of Portugall, and none ought to come here without his license. I told him, that the King of Englands license was as good as the King of Spaines, and as free for his Subiects, as for the King of Spaines. & he that saith the contrary, is a traytor, and a villaine, & so tel your great Captaine, that in abusing the King of England, he is a bale villaine, and a traytor to his King, and that I will maintaine it with my sword, if he dare come on shore. I sending him a challenge, the Mores perceiuing I was much moued, caused the Portugal to depart. This Portugal some two houres after, came to my house, promising me, that he would procure the libertie of my men and goods, so that I would be liberall vnto him: I entertained him kindly, and promised him much, but before he departed the Towne, my men and goods were sent for Goa.

I had my goods readie, some five dayes before I could be cleare, and haue leaue, for they would not let them be shipped, vntill this great man came, which was the third of October: and two dayes after, the ship set sayle, I remaining with one Merchant William Finch, who was sicke the greater part of his time, and not able to stirre abroad to doe any businesse: the rest were two seruants, a Cooke, and my Boy. These were the companie I had, to defend our selues from so many enemies, which lay daily lurking to destroy vs: aiming at me for the stopping of my passage to the great Mogol. But God preserued me, and in spight of them all, I tooke heart and resolution to goe forwards on my trauels. After the departure of the ship, I vnderstood that my goods and men were betrayed vnto the Portugal, by Mocreb-chan, and his followers: for it was a plot laid by the Iesuite and Mocreb-chan, to protract time till the Frigats came to the Bar, and then to dispatch me: for till then, this dogge Mocreb-chan his brother came not: and the comming of these Frigats was in such secrecy, that till they had taken vs, we heard no newes of them.

The third of October. The ship departed leaving M. William Hawkins and his seruants in the Countrey. The perfidy & treason of Mocreb-chan and the Iesuite Peñero.

After the departure of my ship, I was so misused, that it was vn-sufferable, but so long as my ship was at the Bar, I was flattered withall. But howsoeuer, well vied or ill, it was not for mee to take thought for any thing, although remaining in an heathen Countrey, inuironed with so many enemies, who daily did nothing else but plot to murder me, and cosen me of my goods, as hereafter you shall vnderstand. First, misused by Mooreb-chan, as to haue possession of my goods, taking what he pleased, and leauing what he pleased, giuing me such a price as his owne barbarous conscience afforded: that from thirtie five would giue but eightene, not regarding his brothers bil, who had full authoritie from him: and how difficult it was to get money from his chiefe seruant, after the time expired, as it is best knowne to vs, who tooke the paines in receiuing a small part thereof, before his comming to Surat: and after his comming, I was barred of all: although he outwardly dissembled, & flattered with me almost for three moneths, feeding me with faire promises of payment, and other kindneses. In the meane time, he came to my house three times, sweeping me cleane of all things that were good, so that when he saw, that I had no more good things left, he likewise by little and little degraded me of his good looks. Almost all this time, William Finch was extreame sicke of the Fluxe, but thanks be to God recovered past all hope, I, on the other side, could not peepe out of doores for feare of the Portugals, who in troops lay lurking in by-ways, to giue me assault to murder me, this beeing at the time that the Armada was there.

The first plot of the Portu-gals to kill me.

The first plot laid against me, was: I was inuited by Hogio Nazam to the fraughting of his ship for Mocha, as the custome is, they make at the fraughting of their ships great feasts, for all the principallest of the Towne. It was my good hap at that time, a great Capitaine belonging to the Vice-Roy of Guzerat resident in Amadaur, being sent about affaires vnto Surat, was likewise inuited to this feast, which was kept at the water side: and neere vnto it, the Portugals had two Frigats of their Armada, which came to receiue their tribute of the shippes that were to depart, as also refreshment. Out of these Frigats, there came three gallant fellows to the Tent where I was, and some fortie followers Portugals, scattering themselves along the Sea side, ready to giue an assault when the word should be giuen. These three Gallants that came to the tents, armed with coats of Buffe downe to the knees, their Rapiers and Pistols by their sides, demaunded for the English Capitaine: vpon the hearing of which, I arose presently, and told them that I was the man, and perceiuing an alteration in them, I laid hand on my weapon. The Capitaine Mogol, perceiuing treason towards me, both he and his followers drew their weapons: and if the Portugals had not been the swifter, both they and their scattered crew (in retiring to their Frigats) had come short home.

plot.

Another time, they came to assault me in my house with a Friar, some thirty or fortie of them: the Friars comming was to animate the souldiers, and to giue them absolution. But I was alwaies wary, hauing a strong house with good doores. Many troopes at other times, lay lurking for me and mine in the streetes, in that kind, that I was forced to goe to the Gouvernour to complaine, that I was not able to goe about my businesse, for the Portugals comming armed into the Citie to murder me: which was not a custome at other times, for any Portugals to come armed as now they did. He presently sent word to the Portugals, that if they came into the City armed againe, at their owne perils be it. At Mooreb-chan his comming, with a Iesuite named Padre Pineiro in his company (who profered Mooreb-chan fortie thousand Rials of eight, to send me to Daman, as I vnderstood by certaine aduise giuen me by Hassun Ally, and Ally Pomimory) I went to visit him, giuing him a Present, besides the Present his brother had: and for a time, as I haue aboue written, I had many kind outward shewes of him, till the time that I demanded my money. After that, his dissembling was past, and he told me plainly, that he would not giue mee twentie Manadies per Vare, but would deliuer me backe my cloath. Vpon which dealings, I dissembled as well as I could with him, intreating leaue for Agra, to the King, telling him that William Finch was the man that I left as my chiefe in this place: and in what kind soeuer his pleasure was to deale with me, he was the man to receiue either money or ware. Vpon which answer, he gaue me his license and letter to the King, promising me fortie horsemen to goe with me, which hee did not accomplish. After license receiued, the Father put into Mooreb-chan his head, that it was not good to let me passe: for that I would complaine of him vnto the King. This he plotted with Mooreb-chan to ouerthrow my iourney, which he could not doe, because I came from a King: but he said, that he would not let me haue any force to goe with me. And what else hee would haue him to doe, either with my Treuchman and Coachman, to poyson or murder me, if one should faile, the other to doe it: this inuention was put into Mooreb-chans head by the Father. But God for his mercie sake, afterward discovered these plots, and the Counsell of this Iesuite tooke not place. Before the plotting of this, the Iesuite and I fell out in the presence of Mooreb-chan, for vile speeches made by him of our King and Nation, to bee vassals vnto the King of Portugall: which words I could not brooke, in so much, that if I could haue had my will, the Father had neuer spoken more, but I was preuented.

§. II.

His Journey to the Mogoll at Agra, and entertaymentat Court.

Now finding William Finch in good health, newly recovered, I left all things touching the Trade of Merchandizing in his power: giving him my remembrance and order, what he should doe in my absence. So I began to take up Souldiers to conduct mee, being denyed of Mocrebchan, besides Shot and Bow-men that I hired. For my better safety, I went to one of Chanchanna his Captaines, to let mee haue fortie or fiftie Horsemen to conduct me to Chanchanna, being then Vice-Roy of Decan, Resident in Bramport, who did to his power all that I demanded, giuing me valiant Horsemen Pattans, a people very much feared in these parts: for if I had not done it, I had bene ouer-throwne. For the Portugals of Daman had wrought with an ancient friend of theirs a Raga, who was absolute Lord of a Prouince, (betweene Daman, Guzerat and Decan) called Cruly, to be readie with two hundred Horsemen to stay my passage: but I went so strong and well prouided, that they durst not incounter with vs: so likewise that time I escaped.

Then at Dayta, another Prouince or Princedome, my Coachman being drunke with certaine of his Kindred, discovered the Treason that hee was to worke against mee, which was, that hee was hired to murder me: he being ouer-heard by some of my Souldiers, who at that present came and told me, and how it should be done in the morning following, when we begin our trauell: (for wee vsd to trauell two houres before day) vpon which notice, I called the Coachman vnto me, examining him, and his friends before the Captaine of the Horsemen I had with mee: who could not deny; but hee would neuer confesse who hired him, although hee was very much beaten, cursing his fortune that he could not effect it: for he was to doe it the next morning, so I sent him Prisoner vnto the Gouvernour of Suratt.

But afterward by my Broker or Truchman, I vnderstood that both hee and the Coachman were hired by Mocrebchan, but by the Fathers perswasion, the one to poyson me, and the other to murder me: but the Truchman receiued nothing till he had done the deed, which hee neuer meant to doe, for in that kind hee was alwayes true vnto mee: thus God preserued me. This was five dayes after my departure from Suratt, and my departure from Suratt was the first of February 1608. So following on my trauels for Bramport, some two dayes beyond Dayta, the Pattans left me, but to be conducted by another Pattan Captaine, Gouvernour of that Lordship, by whom I was most kindly entertained. His name was Sherchan, being sometime a Prisoner vnto the Portugall, and hauing the Portugall Language perfect, was glad to doe mee any seruice: for that I was of the Nation, that was enemie vnto the Portugall. Himselfe in person, with fortie Horsemen, went two dayes ioureny with mee, till hee had freed mee from the dangerous places: at which time he met with a troupe of Out-lawes, and tooke some foure aliue, and slew and hurt eight, the rest escaped. This man very kindly writ his Letter for me, to haue his house at Bramport, which was a great curtesie, otherwise I could not tell where to lodge my selfe, the Towne being so full of Souldiers: for then began the Warres with the Decans.

The eighteenth of the said Moneth, thanks be to God, I came in safetie to Bramport, and the next day I went to the Court to visit Chanchanna, being then Lord Generall and Vice-Roy of Decan, giuing him a Present; who kindly tooke it: and after three houres conference with him, he made me a great Feast, and being risen from the Table, inuested me with two Clokes, one of fine Woollen, and another of Cloth of Gold: giuing mee his most kind Letter of fauour to the King, which auayled much. That done he imbraced me, and so we departed. The Language that we spoke was Turkish, which he spake very well.

I remayned in Bramport vnto the second of March; till then I could not end my busineses of Monies that I brought by exchange, staying likewise for a Carrauan, hauing taken new Souldiers, I followed my Voyage or iourney to Agra: where after much labour, toyle, and many dangers, I arriued in safety the sixteenth of Aprill, 1609. Being in the Citie, and seeking out for an house in a very secret manner, notice was giuen the King that I was come, but not to be found: He presently charged both Horsemen and Footmen in many troupes, not to leaue before I was found, commanding his Knight Marshall to accompany mee with great state to the Court, as an Embassador of a King ought to be: which he did with a great traine, making such extraordinary haste, that I admired much: for I could scarce obtayne time to apparell my selfe in my best attyre. In fine, I was brought before the King, I came with a slight present, hauing nothing but cloth, and that not esteemed: (for what I had for the King, Mocrebchan tooke from me, wherewith I acquainted his Maiestie.) After salutation done, with a most kinde and smiling countenance, he bade me most heartily welcome, vpon which speech I did my obeysance and dutie againe. Hauing his Maiesties Letter in my hand, he called me to come neere vnto him, stretching downe his hand from the Seate Royall, where he sate in great Maiestie something high for to be seene of the people : receiuing very kindly the Letter of me, viewing the Letter a prettie while, both the Seale, and the manner of the making of it vp, he called for an old Iesuite that was there present, to reade it. In the meane space, while the Iesuite was reading it, hee spake vnto mee in the kindest manner that could bee, demanding of mee the contents of the Letter, which I told him : vpon which notice, presently granting and promising me by God, that all what the King had there written, he would grant and allow withall his heart, and more if his Maiestie would require it. The Iesuite likewise told him the effect of the Letter, but discommending the stile, saying, it was basely penned, writing Vestra without Maiestad : my answer was vnto the King, and if it shall please your Maiestie, these people are our enemies : how can this Letter be ill written, when my King demandeth fauour of your Maiestie ? he said, it was true.

Perceiuing I had the Turkish Tongue, which himselfe well vnderstood, hee commanded me to follow him vnto his Chamber of Presence, being then risen from that place of open Audience, desiring to haue further conference with me : in which place I stayed some two houres, till the King came forth from his women. Then calling mee vnto him, the first thing that hee spake, was that he vnderstood that Mocrebchan had not dealt well with mee, bidding mee bee of good cheere, for he would remedie all. It should seeme, that Mocrebchans enemies had acquainted the King with all his proceedings : for indeed the King hath Spies vpon euery Nobleman. I answered most humbly, that I was certaine, all matters would goe well on my side, so long as his Maiestie protected me. Vpon which speech he presently sent away a Post for Suratt, with his command to Mocrebchan, writing vnto him very earnestly in our behalves : coniuring him to bee none of his friend, if hee did not deale well with the English, in that kind, as their desire was. This being dispatched and sent, by the same Messenger, I sent my Letter to William Finch, wishing him to goe with this command to Mocrebchan : at the receipt of which hee wondred that I came safe to Agra, and was not murthered, or poysoned by the way, of which speech William Finch aduertised me afterward.

It grew late, and hauing had some small conference with the King at that time, he commanded that I should daily be brought into his presence, and gaue a Captaine named Houssaber chan charge, that I should lodge at his house, till a house were found conuenient for me : and when I needed any thing of the King, that he should bee my Solicitor. According to command, I resorted to the Court, where I had daily conference with the King. Both night and day, his delight was very much to talke with mee, both of the Affaires of England and other Countries, as also many demands of the West Indies, whereof hee had notice long before, being in doubt if there were any such place, till he had spoken with me, who had beene in the Countrey.

Many dayes and weekes being past, and I now in great fauour with the King, to the grieve of all mine enemies, espying my time, I demanded for his Commandement or Commission with Capitulations for the establishing of our Factory to be in mine owne power. His answer was, whether I would remayne with him in his Court, I replied, till shipping came : then my desire was to goe home, with the answer of his Maiesties Letter. Hee replied againe, that his meaning was a longer time, for he meant to send an Embassador to the King of England, at the coming of the next shipping : and that I should stay with him vntill some other bee sent from my King, to remayne in my place, saying this : Thy staying would be highly for the benefit of thy Nation, and that he would giue me good maintenance, and my being heere in his presence, would bee the cause to right all wrongs that should be offered vnto my Nation : and further, what I should see beneficiall for them, vpon my petition made, hee would grant : swearing By his Fathers Soule, that if I would remayne with him, he would grant me Articles for our Factorie to my hearts desire, and would neuer goe from his word. I replied againe, that I would consider of it. Thus daily inticing me to stay with him, alleaging as is aboue written, and that I should doe seruice, both to my naturall King and him, and likewise he would allow me by the yeare, three thousand and two hundred pounds sterling for my first, and so yeerely, hee promised mee to augment my Liuing, till I came to a thousand Horse. So my first should be foure hundred Horse. For the Nobilitie of India haue their Titles by the number of their Horses, that is to say, from fortie to twelue thousand, which pay belongeth to Princes, and his Sonnes. I trusting vpon his promise, and seeing it was beneficiall both to my Nation and my selfe, beeing dispossessed of that benefit which I should haue reaped, if I had gone to Bantam, and that after halfe a dozen yeeres, your Worships would send another man of sort in my place, in the meane time, I should feather my Nest, and doe you seruice : and further perceiuing great iniuries offered vs, by reason the King is so farre from the Ports, for all which causes aboue specified, I did not thinke it amisse to yeeld vnto his request. Then, because my name was something hard for his pronuntiation, hee called me by the name of English Chan, that is to say, English Lord, but in Persia, it is the Title for a Duke, and this went currant throughout the Countrey.

Now your Worships shall vnderstand, that I being now in the highest of my fauours, the Iesuites and Portugals slept not, but by all meanes sought my ouerthrow : and to say the truth, the principall Mahumetans neere the King, enuyed much that a Christian should bee so nigh vnto him. The Iesuite Peniero being with Mocrebchan, and the Iesuites here, I thinke did little regard their their Masses and Church matters, for studying how to overthrow my Affaires: aduice being gone to Goa, by the Iesuites here, I meane in Agra, and to Padre Peneiro at Surat or Cambaya, hee working with Moorebchan to be the Portugalls assistance, and the Vice-Roy sending him a great Present, together with many Toyes vnto the King with his Letter. These presents and many more promises, wrought so much with Moorebchan, that he writeth his Petition vnto the King, sending it together with the present, aduertising the King, that the suffering of the English in his land, would be the cause of the losse of his owne Countries, neere the Sea-Coasts, as Suratt, Cambaya, and such like: and that in any case he entertaine me not, for that his ancient friends the Portugalls murmured highly at it: and that the fame is spread amongst the Portugalls, that I was General of ten thousand Horsemen, readie to giue the assault vpon Diu, when our shipping came.

The practice of the Portugalls against our Trade.

Lying, a great stratageme.

The Kings answer.

The Vice-Royes Letter likewise was in this kind: the Kings answer was; that he had but one Englishman in his Court, and him they needed not to feare, for hee hath not pretended any such matter: for I would haue giuen him Liuing neere the Sea parts, but he refused it, taking it neere me heere. This was the Kings answer, vpon which answer, the Portugalls were like madde Dogges, labouring to worke my passage out of the World. So I told the King, what dangers I had passed, and the present danger wherein I was, my Boy Stephen Graener, instantly departing this World, my man Nicholas Vfflet extreame sicke, and this was all my English Company, my selfe beginning to fall downe too. The King presently called the Iesuites, and told them that if I dyed by any extraordinary casualltie, that they should all rue for it. This past, the King was very earnest with me to take a white Mayden out of his Palace, who would giue her all things necessary with slaues, and he would promise mee shee should turne Christian: and by this meanes my meates and drinckes should be looked vnto by them, and I should liue without feare. In regard she was a Moore, I refused, but if so bee there could bee a Christian found, I would accept it: At which my speech, I little thought a Christians Daughter could bee found. So the King called to memorie one Mubarique Sha his Daughter, who was a Christian Armenian, and of the Race of the most ancient Christians, who was a Captaine, and in great fauour with Ekber Padascha, this Kings Father. This Captaine dyed suddenly, and without will, worth a Masse of Money, and all robbed by his Brothers and Kindred, and Debts that cannot be recouered: leauing the Child but only a few Iewels. I seeing shee was of so honest a Descent, hauing passed my word to the King, could not withstand my fortunes. Wherefore I tooke her, and for want of a Minister, before Christian Witnesses, I married her: the Priest was my man Nicholas, which I thought had beene lawfull, till I met with a Preacher that came with Sir Henry Middleton, and hee shewing me the error, I was new married againe: so euer after I liued content and without feare, she being willing to goe where I went, and liue as I liued. After these matters ended, newes came hither, that the Ascension was to come by the men of her Pinnasse, that was cast away neere Suratt, vpon which newes, I presently went to the King and told him, crauing his Licence, together with his Commission, for the setting of our Trade: which the King was willing to doe, limiting me a time to returne, and be with him againe.

Mubarique Sha an Armenian Christian, Ekber Padascha.

Hee takeith a Christian Gentlewoman to Wife. Shee came ouer with him for England, but he dying by the way, shee was after married to M. Towerfon. The Pinnasse of the Ascension cast away neere Suratt. The Kings Commission in the fauour of the English vnder his great Seale with golden Letters. The Ascension cast away. The greater part of the Kings Nobles are Mahumetans. Some of the Ascensions Company and M. Alexander Sharpy their General came to Agra.

But the Kings chiefe Vizir Abdal Hassan, a man enuious to all Christians, told the King, that my going would be the occasion of warre: and thus harme might happen vnto a great man who was sent for Goa, to buy toyes for the King. Vpon which I speech, the Kings pleasure was I should stay, and send away his Commission to my chiefe Factor at Surat, and presently gaue order, that it should be most effectually written. In fine, vnder his great Seale with Golden Letters, his Commission was written, so firmly for our good, and so free as heart can wish. This I obtained presently, and sent it to William Finch. Before it came there, newes came that the Ascension was cast away, and her men saued, but not suffered to come into the Citie of Surat. Of that likewise I told the King, who seemed to be very much discontented with that great Captaine Moorebchan, my enemy: and gaue me another commandement for their good vlage, and meanes to be wrought to saue the goods, if it were possible. These two commandements came almost together, to the great ioy of William Finch and the rest, admiring much at these things. And now continuing these great fauours with the King, being continually in his sight, for the one halfe of foure and twentie houres seruing him day and night, I wanted not the greater part of his Nobles that were Mahumetans, to be mine enemies. For it went against their hearts, that a Christian should be so great & neere the King: and the more, because the King had promised to make his Brothers children Christians, which two yeares after my coming he performed, commanding them to be made Christians. A while after came some of the Ascensions Company vnto me (whom I could haue wished of better behauiour, a thing pryed into by the King.) In all this time, I could not get my debts of Moorebchan, till at length he was sent for vp to the King, to answer for many faults, and tyrannicall In-iustice, which he did to all people in those parts, many a man being vndone by him, who petitioned to the King for Iustice. Now, this Dogge to make his peace, sent many bribes to the Kings sonnes, and Noble-men that were neere the King, who laboured in his behalfe. After newes came that Moorebchan was approached neere, the King presently sent to attach all his goods, which were in that abundance, that the King was two moneths in viewing of them, euery day allotting a certaine quantitie to be brought before me:

and what he thought fitting for his owne turne he kept, and the rest deliuered againe to Mocrebchan. In the viewing of these goods, there came those Peeces and Costlet, and Head-peece, with other Presents that he tooke from me for the King of mine owne, not suffering mee to bring them my selfe: at the sight whereof, I was so bold to tell the King what was mine. After the King had viewed these goods, a very great complaint was made by a Baniaw, how that Mocrebchan had taken his Daughter, saying; she was for the King, which was his excuse, deflowering her himselfe: and afterwards gaue her to a Brammen, belonging to Mocrebchan. The man who gaue notice of this Child, protested her to passe all that euer he saw for beautie. The matter being examined, and the offence done by Mocrebchan, found to be true, hee was committed to prison, in the power of a great Noble-man: and commandement was giuen, that the 10 Brammene his priuy members should be cut off.

Before this happened to Mocrebchan, I went to visite him diuers times, who made me verie faire promises, that he would deale very kindly with mee, and be my friend, and that I should haue my right. Now being in this disgrace, his friends daily solliciting for him, at length got him cleere: with commandement, that he pay euery man his right, and that no more complaints be made of him if he loued his life. So Mocrebchan by the Kings command, paid euery one his due, excepting me, whom he would not pay, but deliuer me my Cloath, whereof I was desirous, and to make, if it were possible, by faire meanes, an end with him: but he put me off the more, delaying time till his departure, which was shortly after. For the King had restored him his old place againe, and he was to goe for Goa, about a faire ballace Ruby, and other rare things promi- 20 sed the King:

Bantam, and after for England.

LL my going and sending to Mocrebchan for my Money or Cloath, was in vaine, I being abused so basely by him, that I was forced to demaund Iustice of the King, who commanded that the Money be brought before him: but for all the Kings commaund he did as he listed, and doe what I could, he cut me off twelue thousand and fise hundred Mamadies. For the greatest man in this kingdome was his friend, and many others holding on his side, murmuring to the King, the suffering of English to come into his Countrey: for that we were a Nation, that if we once set foot, we would take his Countrey from him. The King called me to make answer to that they said: I answered his Maiestie, that if any such matter were, I would answer it with my life: and that we were not so base a Nation, as these mine enemies reported. All this was, because I demaunded my due, and yet cannot get it. At this time, those that were neere fauourites, and neere vnto the King, whom I daily visited, and kept in withall, spake in my behalfe: and the King holding on my side, commanded that no more such wrongs be offered me. So I thinking to vse my best in the recouery of this, intreating the head Vizir that he would be meanes that I receiue not so great a losse; he answered me in a threatening manner: that if I did open my mouth any more, hee would make me to pay an hundred thousand Mamadies, which the King had lost in his Customes by entertaining mee, and no man durst aduenture by reason of the Portugall. So by this meanes I was forced to hold my tongue, for I know this Money was swallowed by both these Dogges. Now Mocrebchan being commaunded in publicke, that by such a day he be ready to depart for Guzerat, and so for Goa, and then come and take his leaue, as the custome is: in this meane time, three of the principallest Merchants of Surat, were sent for by the Kings commaundement, and come to the Court about affaires, wherein the King or his Vizir had imployed them, being then present there when Mocrebchan was taking his leaue; this being a plot laid both by the Portugals, Mocrebchan, and the Vizir. For some fixe daies before a Letter came vnto the King from the Portugall Vice-roy, with a Present of many rare things. The Contents of this Letter were, how highly the King of Portugall tooke in ill part the entertaining of the English, he being of an ancient amitie with other complements: and withall, how that a Merchant was there arriued, with a very faire ballace Ruby, weighing three hundred and fiftie Rotties, of which stone the pattern was sent. Vpon this newes, Mocrebchan was to be hastened away, at whose comming to take his leaue together with Padre Pineiro, that was to goe with him, the aboue named Merchants of Surat 60 being then there present, Mocrebchan began to make his speech to the King, saying, that this and many other things he hoped to obtaine of the Portugall, so that the English were disanulled: saying more, that it would redound to great losse vnto his Maiestie and Subiects, if hee did further suffer the English to come into his parts. Vpon which speech he called the Merchants before the

the King, to declare what losse it would be, for that they best knew. They affirmed, that they were like to be all vndone because of the Englisb, nor hereafter any toy could come into this countrey, because the Portugal was so strong at sea, and would not suffer them to goe in or out of their Ports; and all their excuse was, for suffering the Englisb.

These speeches now and formerly, and lucre of this stone, and promises by the Fathers of rare things, were the causes the King ouerthrew my affaires; saying, Let the English come no more: presently giuing Mocreb-chan his commandement, to deliuer the Viceroy to that effect, that he would neuer suffer the Englisb to come any more into his ports.

I now saw, that it booted me not to meddle vpon a sudden, or to make any petition vnto the King, till a pretty while after the departure of Mocreb-chan; and seeing my enemies were so many, although they had eaten of me many Presents. When I saw my time, I made petition vnto the King. In this space, I found a toy to giue, as the order is: for there is no man that commeth to make petition, who commeth empty-handed. Vpon which petition made him, he presently graunted my request, commanding his Vizir to make me another commandement in as ample manner as my former, and commanded that no man should open his mouth to the contrary: for it was his pleasure that the Englisb should come into his Ports. So this time againe I was a floater. Of this alteration, at that instant the Iesuite had notice: for there is no matter passeth in the Mogols Court in secret, but it is knowne halfe an houre after, giuing a small matter to the writer of that day: for there is nothing that passeth, but it is written, and writers appointed by turnes, so that the Father, nor I, could passe any businesse, but when we would we had notice. So the Iesuite presently sent away the most speedy messenger that could be gotten, with his Letter to Pade Pineiro, and Mocreb-chan, aduertising them of all that had passed. At the receipt of which, they consulted amongst themselves, not to go forward on their voyage for Goa, till I were ouerthrown againe. Wherefore Mocreb-chan wrote his petition vnto the King, and letters vnto his friend, the head Vizir, how it stood not with the Kings honour to send him, if he performed not what he promised the Portugal: and that his voyage would be ouerthrowne, if he did not call in the commandement he had giuen the Englisbman. Vpon the receiuing and reading of this, the King went againe from his word, esteeming a few toyes which the Fathers had promised him, more then his honour.

None make petition to the King without some Present.

Now beeing desirous to see the full issue of this, I went to Hogio Iahan, Lord General of the Kings Palace (the second man in place in the Kingdome) intreating him that he would stand my friend. He very kindly, presently went vnto the King, telling him that I was very heauy and discontent, that Abdall Hassan would not deliuer me my commandement, which his Maiestie had graunted me. The King answered him (I being present, and very neere him) saying, It was true, that the commandement is sealed, and ready to be deliuered him: but vpon letters receiued from Mocreb-chan, and better consideration by me had on these my affaires in my Ports in Guzerat, I thought it fitting not to let him haue it. Thus was I tossed and tumbled in the kind of a rich Merchant, adventuring all he had in one bottome, and by casualtie of stormes or pirates, lost it all at once. So that on the other side, concerning my liuing, I was so crossed, that many times this Abdall Hassan his answer would be vnto me; I know wel enough you stand not in such need, for your Master beareth your charges, and the King knew not what he did in giuing to you, from whom he should receiue. My answer was, that it was the Kings pleasure, and none of my request; and seeing it is his Maiesties gift, I had no reason to looke it: so that from time to time, he bad mee haue patience, and he would find out a good liuing for me. Thus was I dallied withall by this mine enemy, in so much that in all the time I serued in Court, I could not get a liuing that would yeeld any thing, giuing me my liuing still, in places where Out-lawes raigned: only, once at Labar by an especiall commandement from the King, but I was soone depriued of it: and all that I receiued from the beginning, was not fully three hundred pounds, a great part whereof was spent vpon charges of mentent to the Lordships. When that I saw that the liuing which the King absolutely gaue me, was taken from me, I was then past all hopes: for before, at the newes of the arriual of shipping, I had great hope, that the King would performe former grants, in hope of rare things that should come from England. But when I made Arse or Petition vnto the King concerning my liuing, he turned me ouer to Abdal Hassan: who not onely denied me my liuing; but also gaue order, that I be suffered no more to enter within the red rayles: which is a place of honour, where all my time I was placed very neere vnto the King, in which place there were but fise men in the Kingdome before me.

The red Railles a place of Honour.

Now perceiuing that all my affaires were ouerthrowne, I determined with the Councell of those that were neere me, to resolute whereto to trust, either to be well in, or well out. Vpon this resolution I had my petition made ready, by which I made known vnto the King, how Abdall Hassan had dealt with me, hauing himselfe eaten what his Maiestie gaue me: and how that my charges of so long time (being by his Maiestie desired to stay in his Court, vpon the faithful promises he made me) were so much, that it would be my vtter ouerthrow: therefore I besought his Maiesty that he would consider my cause, either to establish me as formerly, or giue me leaue to depart.

His

His answere was, that he gaue me leaue, commanding his safe conduct to bee made mee, to passe freely without molestation, throughout his Kingdome. When this Commandement was made, as the custome is, I came to doe my obeysance, and to take my leaue, intreating for an answere of my Kings Letter. Abdall Hassan comming vnto me from the King, in a disdainfull manner vtterly denyed me: saying, that it was not the custome of so great a Monarch, to write in the kind of a Letter, vnto a pettie Priuce, or Gouvernour. I answered him, that the King knew more of the mightinesse of the King of England, then to be a petty Gouvernour. Well, this was mine answere, together with my leaue taken.

Will. Finch determined to returne overland for England.

I went home to my house, studying with all my endeauours to get all my goods and debts together, and to buy commodities with those Monies, that were remayning vsing all the speed I could, to cleere my selfe of the Countrey: staying only for Nicholas Vfflet, to come from Labor, with a remainder of Indico, that was in William Finches power, who determined to goe ouer land, being past all hopes for euer imbarcking our selues at Surat: which course I also would willingly haue taken, but that as it is well knowne, for some causes I could not trauell thow Turke, and especially with a woman. So I was forced to currie fauour with the Iesuites, to get mee a safe conduct or Seguro, from the Vice-Roy to goe for Goa, and so to Portugall, and from thence to England: thinking, as the opinion of others was, that the Vice-Roy giuing his secure Royall, there would be no danger for me. But when my Wifes Mother, & Kindred saw that I was to carry her away, suspecting that they should neuer see her any more, they did so distaste me in these my trauels, that I was forced to yeeld vnto them, that my Wife go no further then Goa, because it was India: and that they could goe and come and vilit her, and that, if at any time I meant to goe for Portugall, or any other-where, that I leaue her that portion, that the custome of Portugall is, to leaue to their Wiues when they dye: vnto which I was forced to yeeld to giue them content, to preuent all mischiefes. But knowing that if my Wife would goe with me, all would bee of no effect, I effected with the Iesuite to send for two Secures, the one concerning my quiet being, and free libertie of conscience in Goa, and to bee as a Portugall in all Tradings and Commerce in Goa: (this was to shew my Wifes Parents.) The other was an absolute grant for free passage into Portugall, and so for England, with my Wife and Goods, without any disturbances of any of my Wiues friends: and what agreements I made with them to be void and of none effect, but I should stay or goe, when I pleased with free libertie of conscience for my selfe. This last Securo I should receiue at Cambaya, which at my departure for our shippes was not yet come, but was to come with the Carrauan of Frigats.

Nicholas Bangham.

This and much more the Fathers would haue done for me, only to rid me out of the Countrey: for being cleere of me they should much more quietly sleepe. About this time, I had notice of the comming of three English ships, that were arriued at Mocha, and without faile their determination was to come for Surat, at the time of the yeare: hauing this Aduertisement by Nicholas Bangham from Bransport, who departed from me some six weekes before, both for the recovery of certaine Debts, as also with my Letter to our shipping, if it were possible to send it, aduertising them of my proceedings.

In this time of my dispatching, newes came of Mocreb-chans returne from Goa, with many gallant and rare things, which hee brought for the King. But that Ballase Ruby was not for his turne, saying it was false; or at the least, made his excuse for feare, that if he should giue the Portugall his price, and when it came into the Kings power, it should bee valued much lesse (which ouer-plus he should be forced to pay, as hee had done in former times, for other things) hee left it behind him. And besides, I vnderstood, that Mocreb-chan had not his full content as he expected of the Portugalls. And likewise, at this instant, the Vizir, my enemy was thrust out of his place, for many complaints made of him, by Noblemen that were at great charges and in debt, & could not receiue their liuings in places that were good, but in barren & rebellious places: and that he made a benefit of the good places himselfe, & robbed them all. For these complaints and others, he had much ado to escape with life, being put out of his place, & sent to the Wars of De- 50 can. Now one Gaibbeig being the Kings chiefe Treasurer (a man that in outward shew made much of me, & was alwayes willing to please me, when I had occasion to vse him) was made chiefe Vizir: and his Daughter married with the King, being his chiefe Queene or Paramor. This Vizirs sonne and my selfe were great friends, he hauing beene often at my house, and was now exalted to high Dignities by the King. Perceiuing this alteration, and being certified of the comming of shipping, by certaine aduise, sundry wayes. Knowing the custome of these Moors that without gifts and bribes, nothing would either goe forward or bee accomplished, I sent my Broker to seeke out for Jewels, fitting for the Kings Sister and new Paramour: and likewise, for this new Vizir, and his sonne.

Three English ships at the Barre of Surat.

Now after they had my Gifts, they beganne on all sides to sollicite my cause: at which time newes came to Agra, by Banians of Diu, how that of Diu, three English ships were scene, and three dayes after other newes came, that they were at the Barre of Surat. Vpon which newes the great Vizir asked me what Toy I had for the King, I shewed him a Ruby Ring that I had gotten: at the sight of which he bade me make readie to goe with him at Court time, and he would make my my Petition to the King, and told me that the King was already wonne. So once more comming before his Greatnesse, and my Petition being read, he presently granted mee the establishing of our Factorie, and that the English come and freely trade for Surat: willing the Vizir that with all expedition my commandement be made, vpon which grant the Vizir made signe vnto mee, to make obeysance, which I did according to the Custome. But now what followed? A great Nobleman and neerest Favourite of the King, being the dearest friend that Macrebhan, and likewise Abdall Hassan had, brought vp together from their child-hood, and Pages together vnto the King, began to make a speech vnto the King: saying, that the granting of this would be the vtter ouerthrow of his Sea Coasts and people, as his Maiestie had bene informed by petition from diuers of his Subjects: and besides, that it stood not with his Maiesties honour to contradict that which he had granted to his ancient friends the Portugals, and whosoever laboured for the English, knew not what he did; if knowing, hee was not his Maiesties friend. Vpon the speech of this Nobleman, my businesse once againe was quite ouerthrowne, and all my time and presents lost: the King answering, that for my Nation, hee would not grant Trade at the Sea Ports, for the inconuenience that diuers times had bene scanned vpon. But, for my selfe, if I would remayne in his seruice he would command, that what he had allowed me, should be given me to my content: which I denyed, vnlesse the English should come vnto his Ports according to promise, and as for my particular maintenance, my King would not see me want. Then desiring againe answer of the Kings Letter, he consulted a while with his Vizirs, and then sent mee his denyall. So I tooke my leaue and departed from Agra, the second of Nouember 1611. being of a thousand thoughts what course I were best to take: for I still had a doubt of the Portugalls that for lucre of my goods they would poyson me. Againe, on the otherside, it was dangerous by reason of the Warres to trauell thorow Decan vnto Masulipatan: by land, by reason of the Turkes, I could not goe: and to stay I would not amongst these faithlesse Infidels.

He departed from Agra the second of Nouember 1611.

I arriued at Cambaya, the last of December, 1611. where I had certaine newes of the English ships that were at Surat. Immediately I sent a Footman vnto the ships with my Letter, with certaine aduice, affirmed for a truth, by the Fathers of Cambaya, vnto me, that the Vice-Roy had in a readinesse prepared to depart from Goa, foure great ships, with certaine Gallies, and Frigats for to come vpon them, and Treasons plotted against Sir Henry Middletons person: of which newes, I was wished by the Fathers to aduise Sir Henry: which I found afterward to bee but their policie, to put him in feare, and so to depart, and withall, I wished them to be well aduised. And as for me my shifts were to goe home, by the way of the Portugalls, for so I had promised my Wife and her Brother, who at that present was with me: and to delude him and the Fathers till I had notice for certaine, that I might freely get aboard without feare, which I was assured to know at the returne of my Letter; in the meane time, I did all that I could to dispatch her Brother away: who within two dayes after departed for Agra, not suspecting that I had any intent for the ships. Nicholas Vfflet now departing from mee to suruey the way, being two dayes iourney on his way, met with Captaine William Sharpeigh, Master Fraine, and Hugh Greece sent by Sir Henry to Cambaya vnto mee, which was no small ioy vnto mee. So vnderstanding of the place (which was miraculously found out by Sir Henry Middleton, and neuer knowne to any of the Countrey) I admired and gaue God thanks: for if this place had not bene found, it had bene impossible for mee to haue gotten aboard with my goods. Wherefore making all the haste that I could, in dispatching my selfe away, I departed from Cambaya, the eighteenth of Ianuary 1611. and came vnto the ships the six and twentieth of the said moneth, where I was most kindly receiued by Sir Henry Middleton. From this place we departed the eleuenth of February 1611. and arriued at Dabul the sixteenth of the same: in which place we tooke a Portugall ship and Frigat, out of which we tooke some quantitie of goods. And from thence we departed the fift of March 1611. for the Red Sea, with an intent to reuenge vs of the wrongs offered vs, both by Turkes and Mogols: at which place wee arriued the third of Aprill 1612. Here we found three English ships, their Generall was Captaine John Saris. Hauing dispatched our businesse in the Red Sea, wee set saile from thence the sixteenth of August, 1612. and arriued in Tecu in Sumatra, the nineteenth of October 1612. and hauing ended our businesse there, we departed in the night, the twentieth of Nouemb. 1612. and came on ground the same night, three leagues off, vpon a Bed of Corall, in three fathome water, or thereabouts, and by the great mercie of God we escaped: but were forced to returne backe againe to stop her leakes, the goods being taken out, and some damage receiued. Now her leakes being somewhat stopped, and her goods in, not losing an houre of time, wee departed from thence the eight of December, 1612. and arriued at Bantam the one and twentieth of the same: where Sir Henry Middleton not finding the Trade sufficient to goe home that yeare, was forced to stay and carine her. Hauing ended account with him, as himselfe liked best. I tooke my goods and shipped them in the Salomon, which came for our Voyage, for sauing of a greater Freight: but I could not be admitted to goe in her my selfe; Captaine Saris I thanke him, accommodated me in the Thomas, and it was agreed, that the Salomon and wee should keepe company together. From thence we set saile on the thirtieth of Ianuary 1613. and arriued in Saldania Roade, the one and twentieth of April 1613. and comming neere some two hundred leagues from the Cape, we had much foule weather and contrary windes. Here we found foure sayle of Hollanders that departed Bantam a moneth before vs. There was great kindnesse betwixt vs, especially to me, in regard that they had heard much of my great estate in India, by an Agent of theirs, that was Lieger at Masulipatan. Some eight dayes after the Expedition came in, and brought mee a Letter from your Worships, and deliuered it vnto me two dayes after their arriuall. The wind comming faire, we departed from Saldania the one and twentieth of May, 1613.

The Custome of this Mogoll Emperour is to take possession of his Noblemens Treasure when they dye, and to bestow on his Children what he please: but commonly he dealeth well with them, possessing them with their Fathers Land, diuiding it amongst them: and vnto the eldest Sonne, hee hath a very great respect, who in time receiueth the full title of his Father. There was in my time a great Indian Lord or Prince, a Gentile named Raga Gaginat, vpon whose goods the Kings seizing after his death, he was found (besides Iewels and other Treasure) to haue sixtie Maunes in Gold, and euery Maune is five and fiftie pound waight. Also his custome is, that of all sorts of Treasure, excepting Coine, to say of all sorts of Beasts, and all other things of value, a small quantitie is daily brought before him. All things are seuerally diuided into three hundred and sixtie parts, so that hee daily seeth a certaine number, to say, of Elephants, Horses, Camels, Dromedaries, Moyles, Oxen, and all other: as also a certaine quantitie of Iewels, and so it continueth all the yeere long: for what is brought him to day is not seene againe, till that day twelue moneth.

He hath three hundred Elephants Royall, which are Elephants whereon himselfe rideth: and when they are brought before him, they come with great iollitie, hauing some twentie or thirty men before them with small Stremers. The Elephants Cloth or Couering is very rich, eyther of Cloth of Gold, or rich Veluet: hee hath following him his shee Elephant, his Whelp or Whelpes, and foure or five yong ones, as Pages which will bee in number some sixe, some seven, and some eight or nine. These Elephants and other Cattell, are dispersed among his Nobles and men of sort to ouer-see them, the King allowing them for their expences, a certaine quantitie: but some of them will eate a great deale more then their allowance commeth vnto. These Elephants Royall eate tenne Rupias euery day in Sugar, Butter, Graine, and Sugar Canes. These Elephants are the goodliest and fairest of all the rest, and tame withall, so managed, that I saw with mine eyes, when the King commanded one of his young Sonnes named Shariar (a Childe of seven yeeres of age) to goe to the Elephant to bee taken vp by him with his snout: who did so, deliuering him to his Keeper that commanded him with his hooke: and hauing done this vnto the Kings Sonne, he afterwards did the like to many other Children. When these Elephants are shewed, if they who haue the charge of them bring them leane, then are they checked and in disgrace; vnlesse their excuse bee the better: and so it is with all things else in that kinde, that euery man striueth to bring his quantitie in good liking, although hee spend of his owne.

The Kings
Tents as large in compasse as London.

Forty thousand Elephants

When hee rideth on Progresse or Hunting, the compasse of his Tents may bee as much as the compasse of London and more, and I may say, that of all sorts of people that follow the Campe, there are two hundred thousand: for hee is provided, as for a Citie. This King is thought to be the greatest Emperour of the East, for Wealth, Land, and force of Men: as also for Horses, Elephants, Camels and Dromedaries. As for Elephants of his owne, and of his Nobles, there are fortie thousand; of which the one halfe are trayned Elephants for the Warre: and these these Elephants of all beasts, are the most vnderstanding. I thought good here to set downe this one thing, which was reported to me for a certainty, although it seemed very strange. An Elephant hauing iournyed very hard, being on his trauell, was misused by his Commander, and one day finding the fellow asleepe by him, but out of his reach, hauing greene Canes brought him to eate, split the end of one of them with his teeth, and taking the other end of the Cane with his snout, reached it toward the head of the fellow, who being fast asleepe, and his turbant fallen from his head (the vse of India being to weare their haire long like Women) he tooke hold with the Cane on his haire, wreathing it therein, and withall, haling him vnto him, vntill he brought him within the compasse of his snout, he then presently killed him. Many other strange things 10 are done by Elephants.

He hath also infinite numbers of Dromedaries, which are very swift, to come with great speed, to giue assault to any Citie, as this Kings Father did: so that the enemies thought he had beene in Agra, when he was at Amadaur: and he came from Agra thither in nine daies, vpon these Dromedaries, with twelue thousand choyce men, Chan-channa being then his Generall. The day being appointed for the battell, on a suddaine newes came of the Kings arriual, which stricke such a present feare into the Guzerats, that at that time they were ouerthrowne and conquered. This King hath diminished his chiefe Captaines, which were Rasbootes, or Gentiles, and naturall Indians, and hath preferred the Mahumetans (weak spirited men, void of resolution) in such sort, that what this mans Father, called Echer Padafha, got of the Decans, this King Selim 20 fha, beginneth to loose. He hath a few good Captaines yet remaining, whom his father highly esteemed, although they be out of fauour with him, because that vpon his rebellion against his father, they would not assist him, considering his intent was naught: for he meant to haue shortened his Fathers daies, and before his time to haue come to the Crowne. And to that purpose, being in Attabafe, the regall seate of a kingdome called Porub, hee arose with eighty thousand horse, intending to take Agra, and to haue possession of the Treasury, his Father being then at the warres of Decan: who vnderstanding of his Sonnes pretence, left his conquering there, and made hast to come home to saue his owne. Before the Kings departure to the warres, hee gaue order to his Sonne to goe with his Forces vpon Aranna, that great Rebell in Malua, who 30 comming to parle with this Rebell, he told the Prince, that there was nothing to bee gotten by him but blowes: and it were better for him, now his Father was at Decan, to goe vpon Agra, and possesse himselfe of his Fathers treasure, and make himselfe King, for there was no man able to resist him. The Prince followed his counsell, and would haue prosecuted it, but his Fathers hast before, vpon notice giuen, preuented his purpose: at whose arriual at Agra, hee presently sent vnto his Sonne, that he make choyce either to come and fall at his feete, and be at his mercy to doe with him as he pleased, or to fit himselfe for the battell and fight it out. He well considering the valour of his Father, thought it meetest to submit himselfe, and stand to his Fathers mercy: who after affronts shewed him and imprisonment, was soone released and pardoned, by reason of many friends, his Mother, Sisters, and others.

This Selim Padafha being in his rebellion, his father dispossessed him, and proclaimed heire apparant, his eldest Sonne Coffero being eldest Sonne to Selimfha: for his owne Sonnes younger Brothers to Selim, were all dead in Decan and Guzerat: yet shortly after his Father dyed, who in his death-bed had mercy on Selim, possessing him againe. But Coffero, who was proclaimed heire apparant, stomached his father, and rose with great troopes, yet was not able to indure after the losse of many thousand men on both sides: but was taken, and remaineth still in prison in the Kings Pallace, yet blinde, as all men report: and was so commaunded to be blinded by his father. So since that time, being now eight yeares after, he had commaunded to put all his sonnes confederates to death, with sundry kinds of death; some to bee hanged, some spitted, some to haue their heads chopped off, and some to bee torne by Elephants. Since which time hee hath 50 raigned in quiet, but ill beloued of the greater part of his Subiects, who stand greatly in feare of him. His custome is every yeare to be out two moneths on hunting, as is before specified. When he meaneth to begin his journey, if comming forth of his Pallace, hee get vp on a Horse, it is a signe that he goeth for the warres: but if he get vp vpon an Elephant or Palankine, it will bee but an hunting voyage.

My selfe in the time that I was one of his Courtiers, haue seene many cruell deeds done by him. Foure times a weeke, he commaundeth his braue Elephants to fight before him: and in the time of their fighting, either comming or going out, many times men are killed, or dangerously hurt by these Elephants. But if any be grievously hurt (which might very well escape) yet neuerlesse that man is cast into the Riuer, himselfe commaunding it, saying: dispatch him, for as long as he liueth, he will doe nothing else but curse me, and therefore it is better that he dye presently. I haue seene many in this kind. Againe, hee delighteth to see men executed himselfe, and torne in peeces with Elephants. He put to death in my time his Secretary, onely vpon suspicion, that Chan-channa should write vnto the Decan King, who being sent for and examined about this matter, denied it: whereupon the King not hauing patience, arose from his seate, and with his Sword gaue him his deadly wound, and afterwards deliuered him to bee torne by Elephants.

Seuerity.

Likewise, it happened to one who was a great friend of mine (a chiefe man, hauing vnder his charge the Kings Ward-robe, and all Woollen Cloath, and all sorts of mercery, and his China dishes) that a faire China dish (which cost ninetie Rupias, or fortie five Rials of eight) was broken, in this my friends time, by a mischance (when the King was in his progresse) being packed amongst other things, on a Cammell, which fell and broke all the whole parcell. This Nobleman knowing how deere the King loued this dish aboue the rest, presently sent one of his trusty seruants to China-machina, ouer land to seeke for another, hoping that before he should remember that dish, he would returne with another like vnto it: but his euill lucke was contrarie. 10 For the King two yeares after remembred this dish, and his man was not yet come. Now, when the King heard that the dish was broken, he was in a great rage, commanding him to be brought before him, and to be beaten by two men, with two great whips made of cords: and after that he had receiued one hundred and twenty of these lashes, he commanded his Porters, who be appointed for that purpose, to beate him with their small Cudgels, till a great many of them were broken: at the least twenty men were beating of him, till the poore man was thought to bee dead, and then he was haled out by the heeles, and commaunded to prison. The next day the King demaunded whether he was liuing, answer was made, that he was: whereupon, he commanded him to be carried vnto perpetuall prison. But the Kings Sonne being his friend, freed him of that, and obtained of his Father, that he might bee sent home to his owne house, and 20 there be cured. So after two moneths, he was reasonably well recouered, and came before the King, who presently commanded him to depart the Court, and neuer come againe before him, vntill he had found such a like dish, and that hee trauell for China-machina to seeke it: the King allowed him five thousand Rupias towards his charges; and besides, returning one fourth part of his liuing that he had before, to maintaine him in his trauell. He being departed, and foureteene moneths on his trauell, was not yet come home: but newes came of him, that the King of Persia had the like dish, and for pitties sake hath sent it him, who at my departure was on his way homeward.

China-machina.

Sultan Peruis.

Likewise, in my time it happened, that a Pattan, a man of good stature, came to one of the Kings Sonnes, named Sultan Peruis, to intreat him to bestow somewhat on him, by petition deliuered to one of the Princes chiefe men, at the deliuey whereof, the Prince caused him to come neere: and demanding of him whether hee would serue him; he answered, No, for he thought that the Prince would not grant him so much as he would aske. The Prince seeing him to be a pretty fellow, and meanelly apparelled, smiled, demanding what would content him: hee told him plainly, that hee would neither serue his Father nor him, vnder a thousand Rupias a day, which is 100. pound sterling. The Prince asked him what was in him that he demanded so much; he replied, make tryall of me with all sorts of weapons, either on horsebacke, or on foote, and for my sufficient command in the warres, if I doe not performe as much as I speake, let mee dye for it. The houre being come for the Prince to go to his Father, he gaue ouer his talk, commanding the man to be forth comming. At night the Kings custome being to drinke, the Prince 40 perceiuing his Father to be merry, told him of this man: so the King commaunded him to be brought before him. Now while he was sent for, a wilde Lyon was brought in, a very great one, strongly chained, and led by a dozen men and keepers: and while the King was viewing this Lyon, the Pattan came in, at whose sight the Prince presently remembred his Father. The King demanding of this Pattan, whence he was, and of what parentage, and what valour was in him, that he should demand so much wages: his answer was, that the King should make tryal of him. That I will, saith the King, goe wrastle and buffet with this Lyon. The Pattans answer was, that this was a wild beast, and to goe barely vpon him without weapon, would be no triall of his man-hood. The King not regarding his speech, commanded him to buckle with the Lyon, who did so, wrastling and buffeting with the Lyon a pretty while: and then the Lyon being 50 loose from his keepers, but not from his chaines, got the poore man within his clawes, and tore his body in many parts: and with his pawes tore the one halfe of his face, so that this valiant man was killed by this wilde beast. The King not yet contented, but desirous to see more sport, sent for ten men that were of his horse-men in pay, being that night on the watch: for it is the custome of all those that receiue pay, or liuing from the King, to watch once a weeke, none excepted, if they be well, and in the Citie. These men one after another, were to buffet with the Lyon, who were all grievously wounded, and it cost three of them their liues. The King continued three moneths in this vaine, when he was in his humors, for whose pleasure sake, many men lost their liues, and many were grievously wounded. So that euer after, vntill my comming away, some fifteene young Lyons were made tame, and played one with another before the 60 King, frisking betweene mens legs, and no man hurt in a long time.

Proud demand

Cruell command.

Bloody experiments.

Jewels and Gemmes.

Likewise, he cannot abide, that any man should haue any precious stone of value, for it is death if he know it not at that present time, and that he hath the refusall thereof. His Jeweller, a Ban- nian, nian, named Herranand, had bought a Diamond of three Mettegals, which cost one hundred thousand Rupias: which was not so closely done, but newes came to the King: Herranand likewise was befriended, being presently acquainted therewith, who before the King sent for him, came vnto him, and challenged the King that he had often promised him that he would come to his house: the King answered that it was true. Herranand therefore replied, that now was the time, for that he had a faire Present to bestow vpon his Maestie: for that he had bought a stone of such a weight. The King smiled, and said, Thy lucke was good to preuent me. So preparation was made, and to the Bannians house he went. By this meanes, the King hath ingrossed all faire stones, that no man can buy from five Carats ywards, without his leave: for he hath the refusall of all, and giueth not by a third part so much as their value. There was a Diamant cutter of my acquaintance, that was sent for to cut a Diamant of three Mettegals and a halfe, who demanded a small foule Diamant to make powder, wherewith to cut the other Diamant. They brought him a Chest, as he said, of three spannes long, and a spanne and halfe broad, and a spanne and halfe deepe, full of Diamants of all sizes and sorts: yet could he find neuer any one for his purpose, but one of five Rotties, which was not very foule neither.

Costly entertainment.

An ineffimable rich coffre of Diamonds.

He is exceeding rich in Diamants, and all other precious stones, and usually weareth euery day a faire Diamant of great price, and that which he weareth this day, till his time be come about to weare it againe, he weareth not the same: that is to say, all his faire Jewels are diuided into a certaine quantitie or proportion, to weare euery day. He also weareth a chaine of Pearle, very faire and great, and another chaine of Emeralds, and ballace Rubies. Hee hath another Jewell, that commeth round about his Turbant, full of faire Diamants and Rubies. It is not much to be wondered, that he is so rich in Jewels, and in Gold and Siluer, when he hath heaped together the Treasure and Jewels of so many Kings, as his forefathers haue conquered, who likewise were a long time in gathering them together: and all came to his hands. Againe, all the money and Jewels which his Nobles heape together, when they die come all vnto him, who giueth what hee listeth to the Noblemens wiues and children: and this is done to all them that receiue pay, or liuing from the King. India is rich in siluer, for all Nations bring Coyne, and carry away commodities for the same; and this Coyne is buried in India, and goeth not out: so it is thought, that once in twentie yeeres it commeth into the Kings power. All the lands in his Monarchie are at his disposing, who giueth and taketh at his pleasure. If I haue lands at Lahor, being sent vnto the warres at Decan, another hath the lands, and I am to receiue mine in Decan, or thereabouts, neere the place where I am, whether it be in the warres, or that I be sent about any other businesse, for any other countrey. And men are to looke well vnto their doings: for if they be found tardie in neuer so little a matter, they are in danger of loosing their lands: and if complaints of Iniustice which they doe, be made vnto the King, it is well if they escape with losse of their lands.

Cause of so great wealth.

He is very seuer in such causes, and with all seueritie punisheth those Captaines, who suffer out-lawes to giue assault vnto their Citie, without resisting. In my time there were some eight Captaines, who had their liuing vpon the borders of Bengala, in a chiefe Citie called Pattana, which was suffered to be taken by out-lawes, and they all fled: but that Citie was againe restored by a great Captaine, who was Commander of a Countrey neere thereabouts; who tooke all those Captaines that fled, and sent them to the King, to vse punishment vpon them at his pleasure. So they were brought before the King in chaines, and were presently commanded to be shauen, both head and beard, and to weare womens apparell, riding vpon asses, with their faces backwards, and so carried about the Citie. This being done, they were brought before the King againe, and there whipped, and sent to perpetuall prison: and this punishment was inflicted vpon them in my sight. He is seuer enough, but all helpeth not, for his poore Riats or Clownes complaine of Iniustice done them, and cry for Iustice at the Kings hands. They come to a certaine place, where a long rope is fastened vnto two pillars, neere vnto the place where the King sitteth in Iustice. This rope is hanged full of Bels, plated with gold, so that the rope being shaken, the Bels are heard by the King: who sendeth to know the cause, and doth his Iustice accordingly. At his first comming to the Crowne, he was more seuer then now he is; which is the cause that the Countrey is so full of outlawes, and theewes, that almost a man cannot stirre out of doores, throughout all his Dominions, without great forces: for they are all become Rebels.

Those lands which are let pay to the king two thirds of the profit: and of those which he giueth in fee, one third remaineth to the King. In all the world is not more fertile land, then in some great parts of his Dominions. Punishment of Cowards. A chiefe Citie called Pattana. He calleth rebels (as the Mogols did) those that refused subiection, though perhaps some of them were free Kings, as this Razane, or Ranana, supposed to be the true successor of Porus, whom Alexander conquered. He is now brought, or brought rather (as they say) peaceably to acknowledge tribute to the Mogol.

There is one great Ragane betwixt Agra and Amadanar, who commandeth as much land as a good Kingdome: and all the forces the Mogol hath, cannot bring him in, for his forces are vpon the Mountaines. He is twentie thousand strong in Horse, and fittie thousand strong in Foote; and many of these Rebels are in all his Dominions: but this is one of the greatest. There are many risen at Candabar, Cabul, Moldun, and Sinde, and in the Kingdome of Baloch: Bengala likewise, Decan, and Guzerat are full, so that a man can trauell no way for out-lawes. Their Government is in such a barbarous kind, and cruell exacting vpon the Clownes, which causeth them to be so head-strong. The fault is in the Chiefe, for a man cannot continue halfe a yeere in his liuing, but it is taken from him and giuen vnto another: or else the King taketh it for himselfe (if it be rich ground, and likely to yeeld much) making exchange for a worse place: or as he is befriended of the Vizir. By this meanes he racketh the poore, to get from them what he can, who still thinketh every houre to be put out of his place. But there are many, who continue a long time in one place, and if they remaine but sixe yeeres, their wealth which they gaine is infinite, if it be a thing of any sort. The custome is, they are allowed so much liuing to maintaine that Port which the King hath giuen them, that is to say, they are allowed twentie Rupias of euery horse by the Moneth, and two Rupias by the Moneth for euery horse Fame, for the maintenance of their Table. As thus: A Captaine that hath five thousand horse to maintaine in the warres, hath likewise of Fame other five thousand, which he is not to maintaine in the warres, but onely for his Table, allowed vpon euery horse by the Moneth two Rupias, and the other five thousand, twenty Rupias by the Moneth: and this is the pay which the greater part of them are allowed.

Some suppose him author of a new sect.

Now here I meane to speake a little of his manners, and customes in the Court. First, in the morning about the breake of day, he is at his Beades, with his face turned to the West-ward. The manner of his praying when he is in Agra, is in a priuate faire roome, vpon a goodly Iet stone, hauing onely a Persian Lamb-skinne vnder him: hauing also some eight chaines of Beads, euery one of them containing foure hundred. The Beads are of rich Pearle, ballace Rubyes, Diamonds, Rubyes, Emeralds, Lignum Aloes, Eshem, and Corall. At the vpper end of this Iet stone, the Pictures of our Lady and Christ are placed, grauen in stone: so he turneth ouer his Beads, and saith, three thousand two hundred words, according to the number of his Beads, and then his Prayer is ended. After he hath done, he sheweth himselfe to the people, receiuing their Salames, or good morrowes, vnto whom multitudes resort euery morning for this purpose. This done, hee slee-<sup>20</sup> peth two houres more, and then dineth, and passeth his time with his Women, and at noone hee sheweth himselfe to the people againe, sitting till three of the clocke, viewing and seeing his Pastimes, and sports made by men, and fighting of many sorts of beasts, euery day sundry kinds of Pastimes. Then at three of the clocke, all the Nobles in generall (that be in Agra, and are well) resort vnto the Court, the King comming forth in open audience, sitting in his Seat-Royall, and euery man standing in his degree before him, his chiefeest sort of the Nobles standing within a red Rayle, and the rest without. They are all placed by his Lieutenant Generall. This red Rayle, is three steppes higher then the place where the rest stand: and within this red Rayle I was placed, amongst the chiefeest of all. The rest are placed by Officers, and they likewise be within an other very spacious place rayled: and without that Rayle, stand all sorts of horsemen and souldiers, that<sup>30</sup> belong vnto his Captaines, and all other commers. At these Rayles, there are many doores kept by many Porters, who haue white rods to keepe men in order. In the midst of the place, right before the King, standeth one of his Sheriffes, together with his Master Hangman, who is accompanied with forty hangmen, wearing on their heads a certaine quilted cap, different from all others, with an Hatchet on their shoulders: and others with all sorts of Whips, being there, readie to doe what the King commandeth. The King heareth all causes in this place, and stayeth some two houres euery day (these Kings of India sit daily in Iustice euery day, and on the Tuesdaies doe their executions.) Then he departeth towards his priuate place of Prayer: his Prayer beeing ended, foure or five sorts of very well dressed and roasted meats are brought him, of which as hee pleaseth, he eateth a bit to stay his stomacke, drinking once of his strong drinke. Then hee com-<sup>40</sup> meth forth into a priuate roome, where none can come, but such as himselfe nominateth, (for two yeeres together I was one of his attendants here.) In this place he drinketh other five cupfuls, which is the portion that the Physicians allot him. This done, he eateth Opium, and then he ariseth, and being in the height of his drinke, he layeth him downe to sleepe, euery man departing to his owne home. And after he hath slept two houres, they awake him, and bring his Supper to him, at which time he is not able to feed himselfe; but it is thrust into his mouth by others, and this is about one of the clocke: and then he sleepe the rest of the night.

Captain Hawkins, two yeeres together neere about the great Mogol.

Now in the space of these sixe cups, he doth many idle things; and whatsoeuer he doth, either without or within, drunken or sober, he hath writers, who by turnes set downe euery thing in writing which he doth: so that there is nothing passeth in his life time, which is not noted; no,<sup>50</sup> not so much as his going to the necessary; and how often he lieth with his women, and with whom: and all this is done vnto this end, that when he dieth, these writings of al his actions and speeches, which are worthy to be set downe, might be recorded in the Chronicles. At my being with him, he made his brothers children Christians; the doing whereof was not for any zeale he had to Christianitie, as the Fathers, and all Christians thought; but vpon the prophcie of certain learned Gentiles, who told him, that the sonnes of his body should be disinherited, and the children of his brother should raigne. And therefore he did it, to make these children hatefull to all Moors, as Christians are odious in their sight: and that they beeing once Christians, when any such matter should happen, they should find no subiects: but God is omnipotent, and can turne the making of these Christians vnto a good ende, if it be his pleasure.

The Mogol makes his brothers children Christians. This Christianitie is since disclaymed, & was then but a trick, rather of sensualitye, the of deuotion or state.

This King amongst his children, hath one called Sultan Shariar, of seuen yeeres of age, and his Father on a day, being to goe some whether to solace himselfe, demanded of him whether hee would goe with him: the child answered, That if it pleased his Highnesse, he would either goe or stay, as the pleasure of his Father was. But because his answer was not, that withall his heart he would would write vpon his Minstrelle, he was very well buffered by the King, and that in such sort, that no child in the world but would haue cryed; which this child did not. Wherefore his Father demanded why he cryed not; he answered, That his Nurfes told him, that it was the greatest shame in the world, for Princes to cry when they were beaten; and euer since they nurtured me in this king, faith he, I neuer cryed, and nothing shall make me cry to the death. Vpon which speech, his Father being more vexed, strake him againe, and caused a bodkin to bee brought him; which he thrust through his choeke; but all this would not make him cry, although he bled very much, which was admired of all, that the Father should doe this vnto his child, and that he was so stout, that hee would not crye. There is great hope of this child to exceed all the rest.

10 This Emperour keepeth many feasts in the year, but two feasts especially may be nominated, the one called the Nimona, which is in honour of the New-yeares day. This feast continueth

eighteene daies, and the wealth and riches are wonderfull, that are to be seene in the decking and setting forth of euery mans roome, or place where he lodgeth, when it is his turne to watch: for euery Nobleman hath his place appointed him in the Palace. In the middelt of that spacious place I speake of, there is a rich Tent pitched, but so rich, that I thinke the like cannot bee found in the world. This Tent is curiously wrought, and hath many Seminants ioyning round about it, of most curious wrought Velvet, embroidered with Gold, and many of them are of Cloath of Gold and Silver. These Seminants be shaddowes to keepe the Sonne from the compasse of this Tent. I may say, it is at the least two Acres of ground, but so richly spread with Silke

An exceeding rich Tent.

20 and Gold Carpets, and Hangings in the principall places, rich, as rich Velvet imbrodered with Gold, Pearle, and precious stones can make it. Within it fve Chaires of Estate are placed, most rich to behold, where at his pleasure the King sitteth. There are likewise priuate roomes made for his Queenes, most rich where they sit, and see all, but are not seene. So round about this Tent, the compasse of all may bee some fve Acres of ground. Euery principall Noble-man maketh his roomes, and decketh it, likewise euery man according to his ability, striueth who may adorne his roomes richest. The King where he doth affect, cometh to his Noble-mens roomes, and is most sumptuously feasted there: and at his departure, is presented with the rarest Jewels and toyes that they can find. But because he will not receiue any thing at that time as a present, he commandeth his Treasurer to pay what his prayfers valew them to bee worth, which are va-

30 lewed at halfe the price. Euery one, and all of his Nobles prouide toyes, and rare things to giue him at this feast: so commonly at this feast euery man his estate is augmented. Two daies of this feast, the better sort of the Women come to take the pleasure thereof: and this feast beginneth at the beginning of the Moone of March. The other feast is some foure moneths after, which is called the feast of his Birth-day: This day euery man striueth who may be the richest in apparell and Jewels. After many sports and pastimes performed in his Palace, he goeth to his mothers house, with all the better sort of his Nobles, where euery man presenteth a Jewell vnto his Mother, according to his estate. After the hacket is ended, the King goeth into a very faire roomes, where a ballance of beaten Gold is hanged, with one scale emptie for him to sit in; the other scale being filled with diuers things, that is to say, Silver, Gold, diuers sorts of Grain, lictle, and so of euery kind of Mettall a little, and with all sorts of precious stones some: In fine, he weigheth himselfe with these things, which the next day are giuen to the poore, and all may be valued to be worth* ten thousand pounds. This day, before he goeth vnto his mothers house, euery man bringeth him his Present, which is thought to be ten times more worth, then that which he giueth to the poore. This done, euery man departeth vnto his home.

The feast of his Birth-day.

* See hereof Sir Thom. Roe.

His custome is, that when you petition him for any thing, you must not come empty handed, but giue him some toy or other, whether you write or no: by the gift you giue him, he knoweth that you would demand some thing of him: so after enquiry is made, if he seeth it conuenient, he granteth it.

50 The custome of the Indians, is to burne their dead, as you haue read in other Authors, and at their burning, many of their Wiues will hurne with them: because they will bee registred in their bookes, for famous and most modest and louing Wiues, who leauing all worldly affaires, content themselves to liue no longer then their Husbands. I haue seene many proper Women brought before the King, whom (by his commandement) none may burne without his leaue and sight of them, I meane those of Agra. When any of these cometh, hee doth perswade them with many promises of gifts and liuing if they will liue: but in my time no perswasion could preuaile, but burne they would. The King seeing that all would not serue, giueth his leaue for her to be carried to the fire, where she burneth her selfe aliue with her dead husband.

Voluntary burning of women with their dead husbands.

Likewise his custome is, when any great Noble-man hath bene absent from him two or three yeares, if they come in fauour, and haue performed well, hee receiue them in manner

60 and forme following.

First, the Noble-man stayeth at the gate of the Pallace, till the Vizir and Lieutenant General, and Knight Martiall come to accompany him vnto the King: then he is brought to the gate of the outermost rayles, whereof I haue spoken before, where hee standeth in the view of the King, in the middelt betweene these two Nobles; then he toucheth the ground with his hand, and also with his head, very grauely, and doth thus three times. This done, he kneeleth downe touching the ground with his fore-head, which being once done, he is carried forward towards the King, and in the midway he is made to doe this reuerence againe: then he commeth to the doore of the red rayles, doing the like reuerence the third time: and hauing thus done, he commeth within the red rayles, and doth it once more vpon the Carpets. Then the King commandeth him to come vp the staires or ladder of seauen steppes, that he may embrace him; where the King most louingly embraceth him before all the people, whereby they shall take notice, that he is in the Kings fauour. The King hauing done this, he then commeth downe, and is placed by the Lieutenant Generall according to his degree. Now if he come in disgrace, through exclamations made against him, he hath none of these honours from the King, but is placed in his place till he come to his tryall. This King is very much adored of the Heathen Commality, insomuch, that they will spread their bodies all vpon the ground, rubbing the earth with their faces on both sides. They vse many other fopperies and superstitions, which I omit, leauing them for other Travellers, which shall come from thence hereafter.

and

Funerall feast or Obie for his Father?

Sumptuous Sepulchre.

After I had written this, there came into my memory another Feast, solemnized at his Fathers Funerall, which is kept at his Sepulchre, where likewise himselfe, with all his posterity, meane to be buried. Vpon this day there is great store of victuals dressed, and much money giuen to the poore. This Sepulchre may be counted one of the rarest Monuments of the world. It hath bene this foureteene yeares a building, and it is thought it will not be finished these seauen yeares more, in ending gates and walls, and other needfull things, for the beautifying and setting of it forth. The least that worke there daily, are three thousand people: but thus much I will say, that one of our Worke-men will dispatch more then three of them. The Sepulchre is some  $\frac{1}{4}$  of a mile about made square: it hath seauen heights built, euery height narrower then the other, till you come to the top where his Herse is. At the outermost gate, before you come to the Sepulchre, there is a most stately Palace building: the compasse of the wall ioyning to this gate of the Sepulchre and garding, being within, may be at the least three miles. This Sepulchre is some foure miles distant from the Citie of Agra.

CHAP. VIII.

1607.

E anchored in the Roade of Saldania all our men in good health: onely Peter Lambert the day before fell off the top-most head, whereof he dyed.

The one and twentieth, the Captain and Master went to Pengwin Iland, three leagues distant from the Roade, where wee saw such abundance of Seales and Pengwins, that it was admirable, for you may driue five hundred Pengwins together in a flocke, and thousands of Seales together vpon the shore. The Iland is not about some threemiles long, and some two miles broad: but in mine opinion, there is not an Iland in the world more frequented with Fowle and Seales then this Iland. It hath Pengwins, Wildegeese, Ducke, Drake, and Pellicanes, and diuers other Fowle, and after some pleasure taken there, we returned againe vnto our ship.

Hauing bought some Cattle, and ended all our businesse, and our men well refreshed, wee weighed Anchor the nine and twentieth day, about foure of the clocke in the morning, with very little wind, and came out of the Road of Saldania, our men in very good health, and loath to depart without the company of our Admirall and Vice-Admirall: but we were not certaine of their arriual there, which made vs make so little stay, so directing our course for S. Laurence, we left Saldania.

The thirtieth day calme all day, till three of the clocke in the afternoone, and then we had a fresh gale at South-west, and we steered away halfe a watch South and by West, and two watches and an halfe South-East, and at tenne of the clocke at night the Cape De Bona Esperansa, bare North of vs, and all that night blew very much winde, and the Sea much growne: and the ship came betwixt twelue of the clocke at night, and twelue of the clocke next day, being the one and thirtieth of Iuly, nine and twenty leagues, all this day a very pleasant gale, sometimes raine, we came foure leagues from the Cape.

August 1. 1607
Cape Agullis North fifty five fathome.

The first of August we had very faire weather, sometimes a gale, and sometimes calme, continuing so all day, and we steered away two watches South-East and by East, and three watches at East and by South, the wind variable, sometimes at South, and sometimes at South by East darke weather, and she ran some one and twenty leagues, then wee were in five and thirty degrees, and twenty two minuts of height.

The

The seuen and twentieth of August, the winde at North-west, and we steered away East, and by South; and at two of the clocke, we saw the land of S. Laurence, or Madagascar, by estimation some sixe leagues off; and then we steered away North, and by West; and at noone we obserued, and made the ship to be in twentie foure degrees, and fortie minutes, the variation at night sixteene degrees, and twentie three minutes.

The thirtieth, at five of the clocke in the afternoone, we anchored in the Bay of S. Augustine, Bay of S. Augustine, in sixe fathome and an halfe, great grauell; and we were inforced to goe to lee-ward, being to the roome-wards of the Road before we could get in, by reason of a great breach that lyes off the bay, and then came in close vpon a tacke, and had in comming in seuen, sixe and an halfe, and five fathomes all the way, and came very faire by the breach, and rid in the Road, with two Ilands in the wind of vs, and the breach both.

The one and thirtieth day, our Captaine with M. Davis went in our long boat to viewe the Ilands, and I my selfe as we went, sounded close aboard the Breach, and had sixe fathomes. One of the Ilands is very small, as it were a banke of sand, and nothing on it: the other is about a mile in length, and halfe a mile in breadth, and nothing vpon it, but some small store of Wood.

The first of September, 1607. we weighed anchor from our first place, and came within two miles of the mouth of the Riuer, and rid in five fathome and an halfe, very fast ground, for where we rid before it was very foule ground, so that we brake one of our Cables in the weighing. I iudge it to be some three leagues from our first place, where we had vrey foule ground.

20 The seuenth day, hauing ended all our businesse, being prouided of wood and water, and all things else, we weighed anchor in the morning about five of the clocke, with the wind at East and by North a pleasant gale, and we steered away, comming out West, and West and by North, til we were cleere of the Breaches, and we brought to sea with vs foure Goats, three Sheep, and a yong Heifer: here we found great plenty of victuals, both Sheepe and Beeues for little value. This day we obserued some three miles from the Iland, before the Bay of S. Augustine, and wee made it to be in twenty three degrees and fortie eight minutes of latitude, and after wee were cleare of the Breach, which lies to the North-ward of the Iland, we steered away South South-west, and South and by West, sometimes with very faire weather, the wind at South-East, and by East a pleasant gale.

A marke on shore most like a barne or a long house.

30 The eleuenth, a fresh gale at South-east, and South-east and by East, and wee stood into the shore till midnight, and then we saw a great breach, right a head hard by vs, but wee heard the rut before we saw it (God be praised) and so we tackd, and stood off againe presently. And at noone obserued, and made the Ship to be in twentie five degrees, and twentie two minutes of latitude.

The twelfth of Nouember in the morning, we saw an Iland, and stood to make it, and found it to be Ingana, and came to the North-side of it: the Iland is in length five leagues or thereabout: it lies East and by South, and West and by North: the Easter end is the highest land, and the Wester end is full of trees. It lies in latitude in five degrees and an halfe, and the variation is foure degrees and thirteene minutes. So after we had made it, hauing the wind at West North-west, we steered away for the maine of Sumatra East and by South, and East South-east a pleasant gale, but very much raine: so the thirteenth day in the morning, wee saw the maine land of Sumatra some foure leagues from vs.

Nouemb. 13. 1607.

The foureteenth, we anchored in Bantam Roade, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, being Saturday, where we found the Merchants in very good health, and all things in good order. The next day our Captaine went on shore, and spake with M. Tower on concerning the shippes businesse, and agreed to haue our Iron and Lead a shore which we brought with vs: which beeing effected, with some roomaging, and hauing fitted our ship in good order, and taken in Merchandize, and our Merchants for the Moluccos, with leaue taken of the Merchants, we set saile from Bantam Roade the sixt of December, 1607. with little wind, and came out of the Roade, and anchored that night in sight of the high land of Bantam. The next day, weighed in the morning, and sailed with a prosperous wind still continuing faire, passing many Ilands, and sunken ground. Some nights we sayled, and other-some lay a hull: raine, thunder, and lightening was no strange thing to vs in those parts, but one comfort we had, that God gaue vs a fayre wind, where-with we sayled merrily on our intended Voyage.

Decemb. 6. 1607.

60 In the beginning of Ianuarie, they arrived at the Moluccos. The rest of this Moneth was spent in entertainments and complements betwixt Ours and the Spaniards, as likewise with the Moluccan Princes. So was the whole Moneth of February also. The reason was, The Spaniards durst not admit vs trade till the Camp Master had giuen leaue. And he in those broyles twixt him and the Hollanders, except Ours would doe or seeme to doe some piece of seruice, at least accompanying their ships for greater shew (which our Captaine absolutely refused, being against his Commission) excused himselfe. Meane while they had priuy trade with the people by night, and were Ioniall and frolicke by day with the Spaniards, which both gaue and receiued kind welcomes. In the beginning of March, they were permitted open trade. But this within few dayes was countermanded, and wee commanded to be gone. And thus they spent the time till March the foureteene when they weighed anchor, and set saile.

Some

Some trade they had also in the way. This part of the Journall is long, and I have omitted it, as elsewhere in those things which I thought might be tedious.

March, 23.
Straits of Bangaya.

The three and twentieth, 1608. we entered the Straits of Bangaya. Whereunto having entered, our Captaine determined to send off his long boat to seeke for water, for here he purposed to store himselfe therewith. While he was thus determining, there came a Prow off from the Iland, with all the speed he could make, who came vnto vs, and spake with vs, of whom we demanded, whether there were any fresh water in that Iland: who made answer, that if our Captaine pleased, he would bring vs to very good water: whereupon we stood ouer for the East shore, and anchored about one of the clocke in the afternoone, in sixtie fathomes of water, where there runs a most cruell Current. Then after we came to anchor, sitting our long Boat with caske, we went 10 with the Indian to fetch water: where while they were fitting the Boat, he sold some fresh fish for China dishes, very cheape. So at night our men came aboard, and brought very good water, but had a wearisome rowth of it, being five miles distant from the place where we anchored.

The foure and twentieth in the morning, we went againe for an other Boats lading of water: and this morning by day breake, there came of the countrey people about one hundred Prowes, men and women, and brought vs fish, both dry fish, and fresh fish very good, of both kinds great plentie, and very cheape. They brought vs also Hogges, great and small, which they sold vs for course white cloth, and Hennes and Cocks in abundance at the like price: some for China dishes, and some for cloth. They brought vs also fruits, as Plantans, Cassathoe roots, and diuers other fruits, and staid aboard vs all day, that sometimes we were not able to stirre vp and downe the 20 ship for them. In the afternoone, the King sent our Captaine some Plantans, and Irea pote to drinke, which is a kind of water called by that name; our Captain gaue the Messenger great thanks in his Kings behalfe, and to requite his kindnesse, sent him a rich Pintado. Then he departed, and all the rest: and about tenne of the clocke at night we weighed anchor, and in the weighing, we broke both our Star-board anchors flocks. Then sayling away with very little wind, at length manned our long Boate, and towed our ship all night: for if we had not towed her in this calme, we had been driven to lee-ward more then we should haue gotten againe in three dayes, without a fresh gale of wind, the Current runnes so strong there.

King of Buttone.

The nineteenth of Aprill, the King of Buttone sent one of his brothers againe, to know whether our Captaine were willing he should come aboard; for he was very desirous to see both him 30 and our ship; because he had heard much of Englishmen, but neuer saw any. Our Captaine sent him word, that he should thinke himselfe much graced if he came. Presently the King came off in his Caricoll, rowed at least with an hundred oares, hauing in her besides about foure hundred men with armes, well appointed to fight, and sixe brasse pieces, and in her company five Caricols more, which had at the least a thousand men in them: so our Captaine sent according to his demand, a pledge for him, one Francis Kelly which was our Surgeon. Then he came aboard our Captaine, who kindly entertained him, and intreated him to take part of a banquet of sweet meates, which he kindly accepted; and after the banquet ended, our Captaine demanded what he had to sell: who replied, he had Pearle, and Turtell shels, and some cloth, which they make themselves, which as we thought was made of Cotton stript. Then our Captaine intreated to see 40 some of his Pearle; who said, he had none there, for he came but vpon pleasure, not thinking to haue met with any ship: but if it pleased him to goe with his ship to Buttone (which was some night and a dayes sailing thence) he should see great store of Pearle, and any thing that hee had to sell. And because (said he) the place is vnknowne to you, I will send you a Pilot, which shall bring you thither: our Captaine and Factor considering of his speeches, thought best to accept of his kind offer, in regard it was nothing out of the way to Bantam: and bestowed vpon him a Musket, a Sword, and a Pintado, thanking him for his kindnesse, that he would vouchsafe to come aboard his ship: to whom the King made answer, that he had not any now worth the giuing to bestow vpon our Captaine, but promised to requite his kindnesse before his departure: and in the meane time intreated our Captaine, to accept of two peices of their cloth, who received them 50 with many thanks. About three of the clocke in the afternoone he tooke his leaue of our Captaine, promising presently to send vs a Pilot, to carry vs to the Towne of Buttone. Then wee brought the Cable to the Capstoll, and weighed, and the Pilot came aboard. And at night the King sent a Caricoll vnto vs, to see if we wanted any thing, and to beare vs company to Buttone, by whom he sent our Captaine a Goat. Then we stood away for Buttone with a small gale, but at night it was calme, and the tyde against vs, and we came to an anchor in two and twenty fathomes of water, because we would not driue to lee-ward, and in the morning weighed againe, and stood for the Towne of Buttone.

The King of Cobina.

The one and twentieth, about tenne of the clocke, our Purser (who had beene sent ashore the day before) came aboard againe, and brought with him Hennes and Cocos, and told vs that the 60 Indians had carried him vnto a King, who when he came vnto him, was very glad to see him, because he was the first Englishman that euer he had seene. At his first comming to his house, hee found him drinking and carowsing with his Nobles, and round about where he sate, all hanged about with diuers mens heads, which he before had conquered: so after some little stay, hee tooke his his leaue, and came to the Caracoll againe, and lay all night aboard her. This night we anchored in twentie fathomes of water, the place not halfe a mile broad.

The two and twentieth in the morning, it was very little wind, yet wee weighed, and our long Boat towed vs through the Straits, seeing the tide was with vs, and she went a head amaine: so about eleven of the clocke, we came in sight of the Towne of Buttone, and came to anchor in five and twentie fathomes of water, some mile and an halfe from the Towne, where wee staid the Kings comming, but he came not that night. Here we sent our Boat ashore, and bought fresh fish for our Companie.

The three and twentieth, about one of the clocke in the afternoone, the King came vp vnder our sterne, and with him some fortie Caracells, and rowed round about vs, very gallantly set forth with his colours and pendants: and after this, they rowed toward the towne, and our Captaine entertained him with a volley of small shot, and all his Ordnance; and after, caused his long Boat to be manned, then accompanied with M. Siddall and his followers, went ashore to the Towne of Buttone. The King likewise entertained our Captaine with his smal shot, and his Ordnance, affirming that his heart was now at rest, seeing he had seen the English Natio: promising to do our Captaine all the kindeesse that in him lay: whereat our Captaine gaue him humble thanks, and for that time tooke his leaue, and came aboard, and in the morning weighed, and stood further into the Roade, and anchored in seven and twentie fathomes of water, some halfe a mile from the shore.

They goe on shore to Buttone.

The foure and twentieth in the morning, there came aboard our ship a Iana Nokeyday, which had a Iuncke in the Road laden with Cloues, which came from Amboyna, with whom our Factor M. Siddall talked: this Ianan promised our Captaine (if so he pleased) hee should haue all his Cloues. The King intreated our Captaine to take part of his dinner, and to beare with the homely fashion of their Countrey: for comming into the Roome where they sate, their meate was serued in, in great Chargers made of a kind of wood, close couered with clothes; thus their meat being set before them, the King, our Captaine, and M. Siddall dined together, where we had great cheare, and our drinke was Iera pote, very pleasant and sweete in tast, and the King was very merry. And after dinner he had some talke concerning the Cloues which wee should haue, and promised the next day to come aboard himselfe, or send some one of his attendants, to see a muster of all his Cloath: then our Captaine giue him great thanks, and tooke his leaue, and came aboard.

The five and twentieth, the Kings Vncle came aboard of vs to see our ship, where our Captaine kindly entertained him; and after him came the Kings brother, and stayed dinner with our Captaine, and after tooke his leaue, we still expecting the Kings comming, but he came not himselfe, but sent his Sonne and the Pilot, and they had a view of the cloth, and liked it very well.

The sixe and twentieth, the King and his Sonne came aboard, and dined with our Captaine, and had great cheare, and the King was very merry, and much desired dauncing, whereupon some of our men danced before him, who was well pleased, both at their dauncing and musique: at night the Kings Vncle sent our Captaine foure fat Hoggies.

The seven and twentieth, there was another King of an Iland thereby, which came in his Caracoll, and his wife with him, who viewed our ship, but we could not intreat him to come aboard. Our ship being laden to the full with Cloues, bought in this place of the Ianans, our Captaine bought some slaues of the King, and as we were busie this night, one of them stole out of our Captaines cabbindore, and leapt into the sea, and swumme ashore, and was neuer heard of. Then our Captaine the next morning sent Augustine Spalding our Iurabassa, to certifie the King of his escape, and in what manner, who presently made restitution for it, and gaue him another; and then taking leaue of the King, came aboard. May the second, we proceeded for our intended and wished port of Bantam, and gaue the Towne of Buttone three pieces of Ordnance for a farewell. The third we had sight of the Straights of Celebes, and stood into it with all the saile wee could make; but could not get so neere before night approaching.

The ship full laden with Cloues.

May the two and twentieth, we anchored in the road of Bantam. We found not one Christian ship there, but foure China Iunckes which came from China, as their vse is with Taffaties, Damaskes, Sattens, and diuers other Merchandises.

Iuly the fifteenth, 1608. the Captaine and Merchants hauing ended all their businesse, tooke their leaues. After whose departure, we presently set saile out of the Road of Bantam, now bound homewards to our Natiue Countrey England, after our long and tedious Voyage. And to auoide the Readers like long and tedious voyage, the rest of this Voyage homewards is omitted, and in steed thereof, we haue set downe a Table of the Iournal of this ship from the Lizard to Bantam, as it was set forth by Iohn Davis.

CHAP. IX.

A briefe Narration of the fourth Voyage to the East-Indies, with the two good Shippes, the Ascention being Admirall, and the Vnion Vice-Admirall, vnder the commaund of ALEXANDER SHARPEY Generall, and RICHARD ROVVLES Lieutenant Generall, with the discovery of the Redde-Sea in the Ascention.

§. I.

Relations of the said Voyage, written by THOMAS IONES.

IN an vnfortunate houre, the foureteenth day of March, in the yeare of our Lord 1607. with the two tall Shippes, the Ascention and the Vnion, we weighed anchor at Woolwich.

The sixth of May 1608. hauing spent some daies in refreshing our men at Maio, we directed our course for the passing of the Equinoctiall, and so for the Cape of Bona Speranza South-east, and by South, and South South-east. The Equinoctiall we passed very speedily, and then you haue the generall wind, that bloweth continually, between the South-east and South-east and by East: so that the further you sayle to the South-ward, you shall finde the wind to Easter the more, as betweene the Equinoctiall and the Tropicke of Capricorne. The eleuenth day of Iune, in the Latitude of sixe and twenty degrees, being vnder the Tropicke, we met with a Caracke that was bound for India, her name was the Noue Palma. This Caracke was cast away afterward vpon the Coast of Soffala, within twelue leagues of Mosambique: the Captaine of which said ship came Passenger home in the same Caracke that I came out of India in; being Admirall of the Fleete of foure sayle. So according to the custome of the Sea, hauing spent some complements in friendly manner, we departed from him, to follow our Voyage.

The Capt. hereof came home in a Carack.

The Bay of Saldania.

The thirteenth of Iuly, we came to an Anchor in the Bay of Saldania, and staying there vnto the five and twentieth of September, in building of a Pinnasse (at which time the Westerly Monsons haue done blowing, and then the wind bloweth more betweene the South and the South-east.) The five and twentieth of September, wee came out of the Bay, and the sixe and twentieth of the same moneth, we were incountred with a mighty storme, at the South South-east, which blew so vehemently, that we split our fore-corse that night, and lost the company of our consort the Vnion, and our Pinnasse called the Good Hope, which we had built at the foresaid Cape, and neuer heard of them afterward, onely the Pinnasse excepted, which came to vs to Aden in the Red-Sea. Thus with contrary winds, hauing before neglected our season of time, we beate vp and downe the Sea in following our Voyage, vnto the eighteenth day of Nouember, before we could get the great Iland of S. Lawrence. But there wee beate two daies to get about Cape De S. Roman, but could not. This altered their minds, that they bore vp for the Iland of Comora, which standeth betwixt the Iland of S. Lawrence and the Maine, in the Southerly Latitude of eleuen degrees. The sixe and twentieth day of October, we came to an Anchor on the Wester-side of the Iland, in sixe and thirty fathomes water. Heere we were vsed of the King and people, with all the kindnesse that might be: but could get no fresh water; yet had maruellous good refreshing of Linies, & some Hens, and Coco Nuts, which was a great comfort vnto vs. The last day of the said moneth we weighed Anchor, and departed from the Iland of Comora, and directed our course for the Iland of Zanzibar, minding there to relieue our wants of water. But through the default of our Master, wee ouer-shot the Iland of Zanzibar, and fell with the Iland of Pemba, hauing almost runne ashore in the night before we did see it, the winds being by the East North-east, we cast about, and stood off till day, thinking it to bee the Iland Zanzibar. When it was day, we found a place on the South-side of the Iland, hauing a Ledge of Rockes to the Eastward of vs, here we road in seuen or eight fathome water, being the seuenth day of December. The Latitude of the place is sixe degrees to the South-ward, being the South-west end of the Iland. The eight of the said moneth, I went ashore to seeke for water, of which we could not fill aboue sixe Tuns aday. We plyed our businesse with great recourse of the people, and familiarity with vs, but all was in treachery. Hauing almost done our businesse, and onely lacking some foure or five Tunnes of water to fill, being the eighteenth day, day, I went ashore to fill those empty Caskes with water, where against my comming they had laid an Ambush of some two hundred men, which brake out vpon vs, yet, praised be God, wee did escape their hands, onely my Seruant John Harington excepted, whom they tooke and murdered most cruelly, I not being able to rescue him. Also, they wounded a Seruant of John El-mors, being one of our Masters Mates: but the youth recovered of his wounds, being eleuen in number. Also a little before they did put their treachery in practice, one of the chiefe of the came vnto me, desiring me to send one of our men with him to fetch a present for our Generall, which I granted, but the fellow neuer came againe. The young-man that went was borne in Greenwich, his name being Edward Church-man, who after ward dyed in Mombasa of a Bloudy-fluxe, as I was credibly informed of the Portugals. Also, while wee made our abode at Pemba, the Portugals were about to man a Flemmish Hulke, (which had wintered in Mombasa) to come to take our Shippe: but hearing of the force of our shippe, they altered their minds. The people of this Iland of Pemba be very cowardly people, and dare doe nothing of themselves without the inciting of the Portugals. We departed from thence the nineteenth day of the said moneth, determining to beate vp betweene Pemba and the Maine of Melinda, in hope to finde the Current the stronger. But that night (to our great dismay) wee came aground vpon the Coast of Melinda, but at that very instant the wind did lander, so that with the backing of our Sayles a sterne, our ship went off to our no little comfort: so that night wee stood to the East-ward till day, our shippe (praised be God) hauing receiued no harme at all. When it was day, wee saw certaine showlds, that lay off the Easter end of Pemba, that we could not weather. Then wee cast about and stood to the North-ward: but in the end we had sight of three Barks of Moores, which in their language they call Pangaies, which we gaue chase vnto with our Ship and Boats, and in the end fetched them vp: they stricke saile without any resistance, and with our Boates we fetched them all aboard our shippe, who were in number fifty men, or thereabouts. These Moores had thought to haue betrayed our shippe, as afterwards did appeare. For the chiefe of them being in the Cabbin with our Master, and our chiefe Merchant William Renet, and my selfe, he with his long Knife which he had hid priuily about him, did stab our Master Philip Groue so fore, that we had thought he would not haue liued: but contrary to the Moores expectation, I ended his daies in the place. The rest of the Moores likewise that were within the ship, did at that very instant put their Tragedy in practise, in stabbing of our Preacher, and one of our Merchants, but (praised be God) in a small time wee vanquished them all, so that there did not escape aboute five or sixe at the most, to carry newes of their fellowes, being a iust reuenge for our former wrongs. For when they did put this wickednesse in practise, we had not aboard our shippe aboute fiftene or sixteene men at the most, all the rest being imployed in our Boates. Afterwards, I was credibly informed by the Portugals, of the great lamentation which was made for these Moores, because they were of the cheife Gentlemen of all the Coast of Melinda, and of the blood Royall. Now after the spoile of these Barks, we determined to stay no longer on the North side of Pemba: so we put out of the West-end of the Iland againe, determining to beate vp for the Iland of Socotora: but the winds hanging betweene the East, and East South-East, and finding small helpe of the Current, did altogether frustrate our determination. Then we determined to stand off to the South-ward, some two hundred or three hundred leagues, thinking to finde the windes at East South-east. But heere likewise we were frustrate of our hopes. For in the Offing we found the wind to hang at the East North-east, and at the North-East, and by East, that we lay beating in the Sea, from the twentieth day of December, vnto the sixe and twentieth day of January, and then it was our good hap to meete with certaine Ilands, which wee named the Desolate Ilands, because there are not any Inhabitants vpon them. These Ilands are (at the least) some twelue or thirteene in number, and ought very diligently to be sought of them, that shall trauaile hereafter, because of the good refreshing that is vpon them. Water is there in great abundance, also great store of Coco Nuts, great store of fresh Fish, and likewise store of Turtle-Doues, which are so tame, that one man may take with his hand twenty dozen in a day: also great store of Palmeto-trees, so that these Ilands seemed to vs an earthly Paradise.

Hauing refreshed our selues at the aforesaid Ilands, wee determined to follow our Voyage, but still were crossed with contrary winds, vntill the thirtieth day of March, and then beginne the Westerly Monsons, then we got the Iland of Socotora. But hauing espyed a Sayle which was bound for the Red Sea, we gaue chase, and in the end fetched them vp, being bound for Aden, being glad of his company we consorted with him, and determined to goe both in company together. This ship did belong to Diu: but hee told vs that hee did belong to Surat, telling vs certaine newes of Captaine Hawkins and of his being at Surat, whereof wee were very glad. Thus we held on our determined course vntill the eight of Aprill, at which time we came to an Anchor in the Roade of Aden, against the Citie. This Citie of Aden is vnder the Dominion of the Great Turke, and is the Key of all Arabia felix. The same day wee came thither, the Captaine of the Castle came aboard of vs with twelue Souldiers to guard our Generall ashore: where when he came, he was receiued with all the honour that might bee, not suffering him once scantly to treade on the ground, but mounted him vpon a faire Arabian Horse, and so in triumph he was carryed to the Gouvernour of the Towne: where after kind intertainment, the Gouvernour vnderstanding that he had Letters from the Kings Maiestie of England to the Basha of Zennan, whose abode is fiftene dayes iourney vp into the Countrey from Aden, whither they were sent.

We remayned in the Road of Aden vntill the tenth day of May, and then our Pinnace the Good Hope, which we had lost before at the Cape of Bona Esperanza, came to vs, hauing indured great misery, and they had murdered most shamefully their Master John Luffken, because (they said) he would not put in with the shoare to relieue them, beeing then at the Easterne end of Saint Lawrence (but the chiefe cause was for his prouision) and the next day they put in with the shoare, and came to an Anchor where they got both water and other prouision. But heere they left my Seruant Edward Hilles behind them, who (as they said) going to cut wood, could not be heard off. The parties that did the Murther, so soone as they came to vs had their reward, according to their deserts, being both executed aboard the Pinnace where they did the Murther, whose names were Thomas Clarke who was his Mate, and Francis Driner Gunner of the said Pinnace. Thus we remayned at Aden vntill the fiftenth of the said moneth, and then our Generall and Master determined to goe for the Citie of Moka, which standeth vp higher in the Red Sea some fortie leagues or thereabouts.

But at our departure from Aden, the Gouvernour did detainne two of our Merchants, whose names were John Jordan and Philip Glascocke, and certaine Cloth, and so sent them vp altogether to the Basha, where when they came, they were vsed most kindly; the Basha demanding of them, whether they had brought the Great Turke his Letter with them, they answered him no: whereupon he told them, he could not giue them any leaue to settle a Factorie: but for the cloth which you haue heere, I will take this for a present, because your ship is the first of the English Nation, that euer came into these parts. And seeing you are come, I giue you leaue to sell your goods, and buy what you will, and so to depart at your pleasure Custome free, because of the cloth which I detainne in my hands. Thus with much trouble, because the Westerly Monson beganne to come in, and then the Current runneth out of the Red Sea in the end we passed the Straights being not aboue one mile and an halfe broad at the most.

The eleuenth of Iune we came to anchor in the Roade of Moka, where we were most kindly entertayned, and the same day our Generall went ashore, where he was most louingly receiued. This Citie of Moka is the chiefe Staple for all Indian Trade. For all the goods that are brought to Cairo and to Alexandria come from thence. We stayed in this Roade of Moka in trimming of our Pinnace vntill the sixe and twentieth day of Iuly, and then our Generall and Master determined to follow their Voyage for Cambaya, fore against the mindes of the Company, being the chiefe Officers of the ship. That night through the head-strongnesse of our Master, we lost two Anchors.

The seuenth day of August we came to the Iland of Socotora, where we had so much winde at South, and South South-east, that we were hardly able with our ship to keepe the shore, which our Pinnace not being able to doe, was blowne off, hauing not aboue two or three dayes victuals in her at the most. Whilest we lay at this Iland of Socotora to get in a Boates lading of water, and two or three Boates of stones for ballast, we had such forcible gales of wind, that we broke two more of our best Anchors, hauing lost (as is aforesaid) two before in the Red Sea: so vehemently doe those South-west windes blow at that Iland. In that time of the yeare, we now hauing but two left to supply our vies withall. We stayed at the Iland of Socotora vntill the twentieth day of August, and then we wayed and directed our course for Cambaya.

The second day of September we fell with the Coast of Diu, some eight leagues to the Eastward of Diu, we steered alongst the shoare some seuen leagues more to the Eastward, and then came to an Anchor a head-land. The third day we sent our Skiffe ashore, where the people resorted vnto vs, hauing certaine conference with them, as also buying of them sheepe and other things. They vnderstanding that we were bound for Surat, one of them came aboard desiring of our Generall passage to Surat, as also certifying our Generall, that the way was very dangerous, offering him for seuen pieces of eight, to fetch a Pilot which should conduct the ship safely to the Port. But (being ruled in most things by our Master) hee not regarding the words of the aforesaid Moore or Bannian. The fourth day we wayed Anchor about three of the Clocke in the afternoone, at the last quarter Ebbing; (if we had taken the first quarter flood, we should surely haue had water ouer all those shoulds) so that night we runne on the shoulds and strooke our Rudder off, and the next day being the fift day of September, wee lost our ship also, that night we forsook our ship, and betook vs to our two Boats, being a thing most miraculous, that so many men should be saued in two such small Boates, wee beeing at the least eightene leagues from the shore. Thus was this tall ship lost to the great hinderance of the worshipfull Company, and to the vtter vndoing of all vs the poore Mariners, being altogether ouerthrowne with all the treasure and goods, both of the Merchants and the poore Companies, beeing so farre from our Native Countrey. We remayned vpon the Sea in our Boates, vntill the sixth day about foure of the clocke clocke in the afternoone, and then we discovered Land which we made vnto, with all the means we could possibly, endeavouring the best we could to fall with the Riuer of Surat. But note how the Lord did preferre vs, hauing as I said before, deliuered vs from the danger of the Sea, hee would not now suffer vs to fall into the hands of our Enemies, I meane the Portugalls, who lay at that time at the Barre of Surat, with five sayle of Frigats to take our Boates at our comming ashore, for they had intelligence of our ships comming before. For contrary to our mindes wee fell with the Riuer of Gandee some five leagues to the Southward of the Barre of Surat, where we were kindly entertayned of the Gouvernour of the Towne. Heere wee heard likewise of the comming of our Pinnace into the same Riuer, and of her fetching away by the Portugalls: but 10 all the men had forsaken her, and were gone to Surat by Land.

Gods mercifull
deliuerance.

Gandee.

The Gouvernour of this Towne of Gandee is a Bannyan, and one of those kind of people, that obserue the Law of Pythagoras. They hold it a great sinne to eate of any thing that hath life or breath, but liue of that which the Earth naturally affoordeth of it selfe. They likewise honour the Cow and haue her in great estimation among them, and also obserue the ancient custome of burning of their dead. It hath likewise in old time beene a great custome amongst them, for the women so soone as their Husbands were dead, to burne themselues aliue with him: but now of late yeares, they haue learned more wit, and doe not vse it so commonly. Yet those women that doe it not, haue their haire cut, and euer after are held for no honest women, for that they will not accompany their Husbands into the oher World, as they say.

The Towne of
Gandee.

The seuenth day wee departed out of this Towne to trauell for Surat, which might bee some 20 fortie miles or thereabout, and the ninth day came thither where William Finch keeping the Factorie, met vs: but Captaine Hawkins was gone vp to the King to Agra. This Citie of Agra is from Surat some thirtie dayes iourney: there the King is resident and keepeth his Court. Heere at Surat our Generall with our Company stayed till the latter end of September, and then himselfe with the rest of our Company went from Surat, and tooke their iourney vp for the Citie of Agra, so to trauell by the way of Persia for England. But I holding no fit course for mee, determined with my selfe to take some other course for the getting into my Countrey. Whilest I was in many determinations, it pleased God of his goodnesse to send a Father of the Order of Saint Paul being a Portugall, who was come from Cambaya to Surat by Land, with whom I came acquainted, he promising me, that if I would commit my selfe 30 into his hands, hee would send mee home into my Countrey, or at the leastwise into Portugall, which promise he did accomplish most faithfully. In company of this Father, my selfe and three more of our Company, (Richard Mellis who dyed in the Caracke in the way homeward bound, John Elmor and one Robert Fox) departed from Surat the seuenth day of October, and came into the strong Towne and Fortresse of Daman, where once againe I saw our Pinnace the Good Hope, that wee had built at the Cape of Bona Esperanza: from Daman wee came to Chaul from thence to Goa, the eighteenth day of Nouember. The ninth day of Ianuary we were imbarcked in a Caracke called Our Ladie of Putie, beeing the Admirall of the Fleet of foure sayle, and so departed the Coast of India. The eight and twentieth day of Ianuary wee passed the Equinoctiall vpon the Coast of India, and the one and twentieth of March we fell with the land 40 in thirtie three degrees and an halfe, some five leagues Eastward of Cape de Agulas, where wee lay with contrary windes, vntill the second of Aprill, and then wee were incountred with a mightie storme at the West South-west, which blew so vehemently that wee were forced to beare vp sixe houres before the Sea, and then it pleased God to send vs faire weather. The fourth day of Aprill we fell with land againe in thirtie foure degrees and fortie minutes. Then we lay driuing to and againe in the Sea, with contrary windes, and in sight of the shore, so that wee were twice within three or foure leagues of the Cape of Bona Esperanza, yet could not possibly get about. Thus we lay driuing to and againe in the Sea, and in sight of the shore, vntill the nineteenth day of Aprill, and then it pleased God that we doubled the foresaid Cape of Bona Esperanza, to our no little comfort, being in great despayre before, and fearing our wintering at Mozambique, which is a common thing amongst the Portugalls. The seuen and twentieth of Aprill we passed the Tropicke of Capricorne, and the ninth day of May wee came to an Anchor at the 50 Iland of Saint Helena, which standeth in fiftene degrees of Southerly latitude; where we stayed vntill the fifteenth of the said moneth in watering: and then we weighed and directed our course for the passing of the Equinoctiall: and the second of Iune we passed the same.

The sixe and twentieth of the said moneth we passed the Tropicke of Cancer with the winde at Northeast, which the Portugalls call the generall wind, and the sixteenth of Iuly we passed by the Westerly Ilands by iudgement of the Pilot in the Caracke, beeing in the latitude of fortie degrees and odde minutes to the North-wards, we not seeing any land since our departure from Saint Helena. So (prayed be God) the third day of August, wee made the Land of Portugall, being not about two leagues off the Rocke, to our no little comfort. And the same day we came to an Anchor in the Road of Caskalles. I the same day imbarcked my selfe in a Boat, and went ashore, and so escaped the hands of the Portugalls. I remayned in Lisbone secretly vntill the thirteenth day of the said moneth, and then I imbarcked my selfe in a ship of London, with Matter

And the same day wee wayed Anchor in the Bay of Wayer, there was a Boat full of Portugalls to haue taken the ship, and so to haue carryed vs ashore, hauing had intelligence of our departure. The report of WILLIAM NICOLS a Mariner in the Ascension which trauelled from Bramport by Land to Maſulipatan, written from his mouth at Bantam by HENRY MORIS, Sept. 12. 1612. The former and greater part is the ſame in ſubſtance with that of T. IONES, and therefore omitted.

The Company diuide themſelues.

W. Nichols trauelleth to Maſulipatan.

Hee arriueth at Maſulipatan, & is kindly intreated at the Hollanders Houſe.

He arriueth at Bantam the 6. of Sept. 1610.

He Company departed from our Generall, not able to prouide for them, and left the reſt to ſtay by him being very ſicke. Some went to one place, and ſome to another, and ſome backe againe for Surat. And I my ſelfe being one of them that were willing to take the beſt courſe for my ſelfe that I could, I told them I would trauell (God-willing) to Maſulipatan, for I knew there was an Holland Factorie there, as I had heard at Surat before we came from thence. I could not finde any Chriſtian to trauell ouer Land with me; and inquiring at Bramport; if there were any that would trauell to Maſulipatan, I met with company which were traueilling that way: but it was ſuch company that few Engliſhmen would trauell with them. For they were three Jewes: but neceſſitie hath no law. After I had agreed to trauell with them, I thought, if I trauelled with any money the Dogges would cut my throat. So I made away with all my money, and attyred my ſelfe in the Habit of a Turke, and tooke my iourney with thoſe Dogges, without any peny of money in my Purſe: and traueilling with them, foure monethes, had nothing to eate but only ſuch food as the Jewes gaue me, and many times, when I was hungry they would giue mee no meate, ſo that I was inforced to eate ſuch meate as they gaue their Camels, and no better, and glad I could get it, nay, ſometimes I was inforced to be in fee with the Camell Keeper to giue mee a little. In this miſerable caſe I trauelled with theſe Dogges foure monethes: ſometimes they would ſay, come let vs cut this Dogges throat, and afterwards open his belly, for he hath eaten his Gold: two would haue cut my throat, but the third was an honeſt Dogge, for he would not conſent vnto it. So with many a weary iourney and hungry belly, after a long and dangerous trauell we came ſafe vnto Maſulipatan, where I preſently diſcharged my ſelfe from theſe cruell Dogges, and came vnto the Dutch houſe where the Captaine vſed mee very kindly, and gaue mee clothes, and meate and drinke ſixe moneths before any ſhipping came there. At length there came three ſhips to Maſulipatan, the one called the Hay, the other the Sunne, and the third was a Frigot, which they had taken in the Streights of Malacca, and the Sunne and the Frigot being bound for Bantam. I intreated the Maſter to grant me paſſage, and I would labour for my paſſage, who told mee very kindly, that he would not only giue me paſſage, but would alſo giue me wages: for the which I gaue him great thankes, and ſo came aboard. Not long after, we ſet ſayle from thence, and came to Bantam the ſixth day of September, 1610. being Thursday, and came preſently to the Engliſh Houſe with ioyfull heart. 1610.

In my trauell (with the three Jewes) ouerland, theſe faire Townes I paſſed, which I bare in minde, for I could neyther write nor reade.

Fiſt, after I came from Bramport, I came to Ienaport, from thence to Huidare, from thence to Golasande, and ſo to Maſulipatan.

¶ III.

The unhappie Voyage of the Vice-Admirall, the Vnion outward bound, till ſhee arriued at Priaman, reporeed by a Letter which Maſter SAMUEL BRADSHAW ſent from Priaman, by HUMPHRY BIDVLPH, the eleuenth day of March, 1609. written by the ſaid HENRY MORIS at Bantam, Sept. the fourteenth, 1610.

You haue already heard of the paſſage of the two ſhips (the Ascension and the Vnion) from England, to the Cape De Bona Eſperanza, but after their departure out of the Roade of Saldania, and of their looſing one another in doubling of the Cape, as yet you haue not heard. Therefore I thought good to make ſome relation thereof, as well well as of the other, and that truly, as from other men report I have heard; and thus it was. After they had lost one another by stormy weather, in doubling of the Cape, the Union in that storme sprang her Main-Mast, and in the midst of the storme they were enforced to fish it againe: by reason whereof, they lost the company of their Admirall, and at last, being without hope either to meete with Ship or Pinnasse thereabouts, considering that the storme continued; they shaped their course for the Bay of S. Augustine, being vpon Madagascar. Where being arrived, they went ashore, and had good refreshing, and stayed there twenty daies, being in good hope to have met our Admirall and the Pinnasse there, but all their hopes were frustrate. Then being out of all hope to have their company, they set sayle from thence, and directed their course for Zanzibar, in hope to meete their Generall there: where being arrived, they went on shoare, and at first were kindly entertained: but at their next going ashore, they lay in Ambush, and as soone as they landed, sallied out vpon them, and killed the Purser presently, and one Mariner, and tooke one of their Merchants Prisoner; yet by great chance, they gat off their Boate and came aboard. The names of them that were slaine, were Richard Kenn, Purser, the Mariners name I have forgotten, but the Merchants name that was taken Prisoner, was Richard Wischam: they put to Sea about the moneth of February 1608. with the winds at North-east and Northerly, iust against them as they should goe for Socotora.

The treachery of the people of Zanzibar.

Now after they had spent much time at Sea, and little or nothing in the way, (and the most part of the men very much troubled with the Scurvy) the Captaine purposed, and accordingly bare vp the Helme for the North part of S. Laurence, determining to goe for the Bay of Antongil: but they fell on the West side of the Iland, intending to recouer their almost-lost men there, and spend the vnprofitable Monson. Vpon which end of S. Laurence, they fell into an exceeding great Bay, which afterwards they vnderstood to be called by the Countrey people Canquomorra, a Countrey very fruitfull and pleasant to behold. The very first view thereof, gaue great content to all their men in generall: who no sooner arrived in the Bay, but within short time had conference with the Countrey people, and at first they profered them great kindnesse, but after it proued to the contrary. Whereupon Master Rowles the Captaine, and Master Richard Rene, chiefe Merchant, and Jeffrey Carlel, with three others, which were attendant vpon the Captaine, aduentured to goe ashore vnto the King: and that made them the more venterous, because diuers times before, all the Merchants had bene ashore at the Kings Palace (in their Skiffe and long Boate) and spake with the King, who profered them great kindnesse, and came aboard againe, as safe as if they had bene in their owne Natiue Countrey of England. Samuel Bradshaw had bene often imployed about businesse vnto the King: yet (it pleased God) at this time, the Captaine had some other occasion of businesse for him, and so staid him aboard (a happy turne for him:) for they no sooner came ashore, but they were betrayed by the Countrey people: but by the great Prouidence of the Almighty the Boates escaped, and presently came aboard, and informed them of all that happened: Where they no sooner had made knowne vnto them this dolefull newes, but presently they saw such abundance of Prawes, and great Boates, comming out of the Riuer vnto them, that it was admirable to behold. The Master spake vnto the Gunner to make the Ordnance ready, which was soone effected. This Fleete of Infidels came rowing vp vnto their Shippe, as though presently they would haue boarded them: but by the diligence of the Gunner and his Mates, he made them retire, by sinking of some halfe dozen of their Boates, and they retired backe againe as fast, as if they had bene Sheepe chased by the Wolfe. But before we made such massacre amongst them, they came vp in the face of our Ordnance, and we thought verily they would haue taken vs all: for the fight continued (at least) two houres very dangerous, till we plagued them so with our Ordnance: and then, he accounted himselfe happiest that first could cleere himselfe, and wee continually sent after them, as farre as the Ordnance would reach. After they were gone from vs in this first attempt, we stayed in the Bay some foureteene daies, being in good hope to recouer our lost men againe, in which time we lost seuen men more through a suddaine disease, which daunted vs more then the malice of those Infidels. The men which died, were they that wrought so lustily about the Ordnance in the fight, that within two daies they were all throwne over-board. These crosses comming together, and no hope to recouer our lost men, they thought it folly to make any longer stay there, and therefore presently made hast away. And being not thoroughly watered, they thought good to spend a little time in another place thereby: but before they could dispatch, they attempted against them the second time, with a great multitude of Boates, and many of them great vessels, and so thicke pestered with men, that it was wonderfull: but they liked their first entertainment so well, that they cared not for comming too neere them the second time, but went all on shoare, and placed themselves to looke vpon the Ship. Then presently perceiuing what their intended purpose was, and fearing some mischief in the night, they weighed and stood in for the shore (where all the Infidels sate) and gaue them a whole broad side for a farewell: which fell among the thickest of them, and in their sight made such lanes among them, that they soone forsooke their places, and gat out of their sight with as much speed as might be: From thence they tacked and stood off at Sea, leauing behind them foureteene men, seuen betrayed, and seuen that died with sicknesse. Then being cleare from these Infidels, they directed their course for Socotora, but by some negligence, for want of hulling in betimes, the winds tooke them short, that they could not fetch it, but they fell more to the East-ward vpon the Coast of Arabia, which was about the fourth of June, and the Winter Monson being come, they could not, nor durst goe for Cambaya: Moreouer, vpon that Coast, they could not finde any good place to harbour themselves in, untill the Winter were past. Wherefore, keeping within sight of the Coast foure daies, sometimes being in danger of the shore, they thought it but folly to neglect the time any longer; and therefore resolved vpon some course to be taken, for the best performance of the Voyage. So the Master calling the best, and most principall men in the shippe, and such as were best experienced in those affaires, they presently concluded altogether to goe for Achen: and being in hope there, to meete with some Guzurats, to barter their English Commodities with them, directing their course for that place, they arrived there the seauen and twentieth of Iuly. And within seuen daies after their arrivall, they had admittance to the King, with a Present that was giuen, (which they were enforced to doe somewhat largely) because the Hollanders sought to crosse them, and debarre them from Trade. Their aspiring minds could not haue any to Trade into India, but themselves; therefore after Master Bradshaw had beene with the King, and spent some time with them at Achen, he fell to Trade with the Guzurats for some of their Commodities, for our English Cloath and Lead, in trucke for Baftas, blacke and white, which is Guzurat Cloath, which they sell in those parts. After they had stayed there some small time, and trucked with the Guzurats for some Commodities, they tooke their leaue, and set sayle from thence, and came vnto Priaman, and had Trade there in short space, to their hearts content. And although Fortune had crossed them all the Voyage, yet God at length brought them vnto a pleasant Port to make some Trade and benefit of their Voyage. Heere they staid and tooke in Pepper, and at length laded their shippe, and might long before, if there had not beene a mutiny among the Company, for the Saylers would doe as pleased themselves. But Master Bradshaw vied them with such faire words, that (at length) they gat that they came for. Heere Griffin Mauris (the Master) dyed: all businesse being ended, Master Bradshaw sent Humphrey Biddulph vnto Bantam, and Siluester Smith to beare him company, with some remainder of goods, which they could not sell at Priaman, nor at Tecoo: not long after that he had taken his leaue of them, they shaping their course for Bantam, in a China lunk, he presently set sayle for England, in the month of February 1609.

The lamentable successe of the said ship and Voyage, appeareth by the Letters following.

Laus Deo in Morlaix, the first of March 1611.

Brother Hide, this day is come to our hands a Letter from Odwen, written by one William Bagget an Irish-man, dwelling in the same Towne, aduising vs of most lamentable newes of a shippe of London, called the Vnion, which is vpon this Coast, about two leagues from the said Odwen: which the men of the Towne perceiuing, sent out two Boates vnto her; and when they came there, they found that it was a shippe come from the East-India, richly laden with Pepper and other goods, hauing in her but onely foure men aliue, of which foure men, one is an Indian, and other three dead in the shippe: which the foure liuing men through feeblenesse, were not able to cast ouer-boord, nor were scarce able to speake: so the men of the two Boates haue brought the shippe into the Roade of Odwen. And as this Irish-man writeth, they of the Towne haue vnladen the most part of the goods, and hauing directed his Letter to some English Merchants in this place, to repaire thither with all expedition, to see the ordering of the ship and goods, as belonging to the East-Indian Company. This Letter, is confirmed by one other Letter written in French by the Bayliffe of Kimper, and directed to one of this Towne, which I haue seene: And therefore we thought it good to send three Copies of this Irish-mans Letter, by three severall Barks, to the end that the Merchants may be aduertised, and giue order that their goods and shippe may be in safetie, for it is to be doubted that the rude people will make a wracke of her. I thinke it not amisse therefore, that they send to the Court of France, to procure the Kings Authoritie, for I feare there will be much trouble about the matter. In the meane time, my selfe, with George Robbins will ride downe to see in what state all things are, and doe the best we can in the Merchants beha'fe, till they send some one with procuration, good and ample for the following of this businesse, as in their discretion shall see me fitting. The ship is reported to be of three or foure hundred Tunnes, and hath three Deckes, I doubt wee shall finde her shrewdly riffled when we shall come there. The importunate writing both of the Irish-man and the Bayliffe of Kimper, hath caused vs to take this iourney: And we doe it the rather in consideration of the Company, presuming that they will consider our charge, because we haue both employed friends, and procured Money in the place, to satisfie such as haue taken paines in saving of the shippe and goods if need be. Notwithstanding, I would wish that they send some with expedition by way of Rouen, with other prouision of Money: for that this is no place of Exchange as you know, where Money may be had at all times. I had rather giue fiftie pound, then take this iourney at this time, because I haue much goods vpon my hands as I partly

I partly wrote to you in my last. The Masters name of the shippe is Edmund White, the Masters Mate, Thomas Duckmanton, and the other Samuel Smith, and the Indian. They are in very pittifull taking, and in great want of Money, neither can they be masters of their goods: therefore let them send men of good experience about this businesse. And thus being in some hast readie to take Horse, I commit you to the Lords protection, resting your assured friend alwaies to command,

BERNARD COUPER.

Neglect no time in making this knowne to the Company.

Directed to Master Thomas Hide, Merchant in London.

February 1610. touching the Vnion at Andierne.

THE eighth day of February, I came ouer the Pole-head of Bourdeaux, and the eleuenth of the same I lost my fore-mast, my Boatsprit, and my Ruther: the same night I put into Olderyearne, the thirteenth day the French-men brought the Vnion of London vpon the Rockes: the foureteeneth day I went aboard the Vnion with my Boate, and the French-men had bene aboard foure daies; the same time I brought Samuel Smith on shoare, Thomas Duttonton, and the Master Edmond White. The fifteenth day I got William Bagget my Merchant, to write me a Letter to Morles; the eighteenth day the Letter was sent, and I paid two Crownes for the carriage: the twentieth, the Indian dyed, and the same day I buried him: the one and twentieth day, the Master died, and I buried him: the two and twentieth came Master Roberts, and Master Couper: the sixe and twentieth, Master Couper and Master Roberts went to Morles. Againe, the fourth day of March, William Coarey, the Hoast of Master Couper and Master Roberts: the fifth, I went aboard with my Boates, and William Coarey, at low water, I went into the shippes hold at low water, and I brought an Example of the worst Pepper: the sixth day, I came from Olie-yearne; the eighth, I came to Morles: the seuenteenth, came Master Hide to Morles: the one and twentieth, I came from Morles; the two and twentieth at night, I came into the Ile of Wight: the foure and twentieth, I came to Hampton: the eight and twentieth day, I came to London.

Your louing Friend,

WILLIAM WOTTON.

They saued after the spoile of the Brittons almost two hundred Tunnes of Pepper, some Benjamin, and some China Silkes, which they bought at Techou in Sumatra, out of a shippe of China. They touched outward bound at Saldania, where they stayed long in setting vp a Shallop or Pinnasse, they lost Master Rowles in S. Laurence: they lost more men at Zanzibar: they laued Pepper at Achen, Priaman, Passeman, and Tecou: there they bought Silke of a shippe of China. In their returne, they met with Sir Henry Middleton, hauing thirtie sixe men in reasonable good state aboard then: they deliuered vnto him certaine Chests of Silver: They missed the Ile of S. Helena, most of their men dyed, on this side Cape Verde: ten English, and foure Guzarats. were taken out of her by a Barke of Bistol and a Scot. There landing in the Road of Anderne, and other matters are before set downe: The shippe after the Pepper goods were taken out and dried was found by Master Simonion, a skilfull Ship-wright, sent thither of purpose, to saue it if it might be, utterly unseruiceable: The Ordnance, Anchors, and other furnitures were saued.

Thomas Duckmanton the Masters Mate, Robert Wilson of Detford, Bullock the Surgeon, Iacob Peterfon, and fine English-men more remaine aline, of seuentie fine that went out of England: three or foure Guzarats also came home aline.

The Voyage of M. Ioseph Salbancke through India, Persia, part of Turkie, the Persian-Gulfe, and Arabia, 1609. Written vnto Sir Thomas Smith.

Andene was the first Towne, where after the wracke and descension of the Ascension, we* arriued, hauing a very faire hauen, and great store of shipping, whereof some are of fine hundred tunnes burthen. From thence we iournied to Sobay, a Village that consisteth altogether of Spinners and Weauers, and there is much Calico cotten cloth made.

* Robert Couert was his companion to Bagdat, and hath writtten a Treatise of this whole Voyage, which being printed I haue omitted. Sabay.

Surat.

From thence we came to Surat, which hath been a Citie of great trade, and hath great store of shipping. Those of the greatest burthen are laded not at the Towne, but are carried ouer the Barre with their ballast onely, and there are laden. At an high water, they haue sixteene foot ouer the Barre.

Agra.

From Surat we trauelled toward Agra, the principall Citie of the Grand Mogal, and came first to Nabon, where Sugar groweth in great abundance, and Cotton-wooll, and all manner of Graine. Here all kind of victuals are very cheape. Then to a Citie called Daytaot, where are sold great store of Drugs, Pintados, and Calico-lawnes. Afterward we came to Netherberi, where is a Market of all Brasen wares, shirts of maile, Swords and bucklers, Lances, Armour for Horses: also Cotton-wools, Cotton yarne, Pintados, Shashes, and all manner of drugges. In this place cloth would be very vendible, because course cloth is there exceeding deare.

From thence we proceeded to a Village called Saylor, where is store of Sugar, and fruites of all sorts. We departed thence to Sadise, a Garrison Towne. Here the Riuer Tynde runneth downe to Surat. From Sadise we came to the great Citie Bramport, gouerned by Can Canow. This Citie standeth in eight and twenty degrees, where Muskets, Snaphanses, Pistols, Petronels, and Swords are very saleable. Woollen cloth in this place wil prooue a great commodity, as also cloth of Gold and Siluer, Veluets, Broad cloths, and Bayes, because there are there so many Gallants. From thence we came to Caddor, and so to Sambon. Then we trauiled to a great Citie, named Cannow, where is much trading for Cloth, Swords, Shashes, Pieces, and Armour, besides colours for Diers of all sorts. Here our clothes would sell well: for it beareth somewhat to the North-ward, and is very cold in Ianuary, February, and March.

About a dayes iourney from this place, we passed ouer the great Riuer Ganges, which runneth into the Gulfe of Bengala, issuing out of the North-west, and running directly East into the said Gulfe. From hence we set forward toward Agra, & spent eleuen dayes traueiling through a pleasant Countrey, and abounding with seuerall kinds of Indian commodities, and so arriued at Agra.

Agra is a very great Citie, and populous, built with stone, hauing faire and large streets, with a faire Riuer running by it, which falleth into the Gulfe of Bengala. It hath a faire Castle, and a strong, entrenched round about with a ditch. Hither is great resort of Merchants from Persia, and out of India, and very much Merchandize of Silkes, and Cloths, and of precious stones, both Rubyes, Diamonds, and Pearles. The Diamonds are found in diuerse places, as in Bishnagar, in De-li, and here at Agra. But Rubyes, Saphyres, and Spinels are found in Pegu. In this Citie, without all question, our richer Silkes and Veluets, but especially our clothes of light colours will sell very well, beeing a place of great trading, being not aboue twelue miles from Fatipore, a Citie as great as London, and very populous; besides Lahor, and many other important Cities in this Kingdome.

Fatipore, a citie

ReureeBuckar a citie.

The Riuer Damiadee

of Sinde.

Suckar.Candabar.

At Agra we abode thirteene dayes, and then set forward toward Hissan in Persia, by the way of Biani, beeing but two Moneths iourney, leauing the way by Lahor, which is foure Moneths iourney. From Agra to Biamy, we spent two dayes trauell. Biamy is the cheifest place for Indico in all the East India, where are twelue Indico milles. It groweth on small bushes, and beareth a seede like a Cabbage seed. Being cut downe, it lyeth on heapes for halfe a yeere to rot, and then by Oxen it is troden out from the stalkes, and afterward is ground very fine, and then boiled in fornaces, and so sorted out into seuerall sorts. The best Indico is there worth eight pence a pound.

From Biamy, we spent eight dayes iourney to Merta, passing by many Townes and Villages. In some of them there was store of course Indico, in others Calicoes, and store of Cotton-wools. Also we passed ouer the faire Riuer Paddar, which runneth to Guzerat, and falleth into the Sea to the East-ward of the Persian Gulfe. In Merta there are three Basars or Markets euery weeke, where is sold great store of Indico, Cotton-wool, yarne, and Cotton cloths. From Merta or Menta we trauelled fve and twentie dayes, through these three chiefe Townes, Reuree, Buckar, and Sucker. Reuree is a Towne consisting of husbandmen, and painfull people, who deale also in Merchandise, as Cotton cloth, Indico, and other commodities, and are a peaceable people to deale withall.

Buckar stands toward Lahor, where we receiued kind entertainment of the Gouverneur. Sword-blades are very good chaffer in this Towne: my selfe hauing experience, who might haue had ten pounds sterling for my Sword, the blade being but worth a Noble in England. Close by this Citie of Buckar runneth the Riuer Damiadee, which within eight dayes iourney runneth into the Riuer of Synde, which falleth into the Ocean Sea, between the Countreyes of Gnadel and Guzerate. On this Riuer passe Barkes of fortie or fiftie Tunnes, by meanes whereof, there is trafique vnto diuerse parts of India.

Suckar is situated on an Island in the middle of the Riuer, and consisteth most of Weauers and Diers, which serue the Countrey round about. At Suckar we stayed foure and twentie dayes for a safe conuoy to Candabar, and passed to Candabar in twentie dayes, through many defarts and woods, and with no small difficultie. Candabar is a Citie of importance, which is frequented with Merchants out of Turkie, Persia, and the parts of India, and is gouerned by a Vice-roy. Here we abode abode twelue dayes, and from hence set forward toward Hispahan in Persia, and trauelled fve dayes till we came to Grees, the first Towne in the Countrey of Persia, passing ouer the Riuer Sabaa, which diuideth the Mogol and the Persian. Here we paid a custome for our Cammels.

Grees is a frontier Towne, where the Persian hath a Garrison of a thousand souldiers. From Grees, we spent eight dayes to the Citie Parra, passing through a vast countrey, sometimes passing by Villages: one of most note was called Vea, for the store of Felts and Carpets made there, and for the plenty of Dates, and all sorts of fruits. Parra is a Citie of great traffique, but especially for raw silke. Here we rested two and twenty dayes onely for a Caravan.

From Parra we spent eightene dayes to Iesd, a Citie of Persia, passing through a very desolate country. Not farre from this Towne is Pabanaunis, where is made great store of raw Silke: as also at Godana foure dayes iourney off. From Iesd we spent seuentene dayes to Hispahan, passing by Gora, a faire Towne, where is store of raw Silkes, Quilts, Silke-carpets, and Turkefhes. And so we arriued at Hispahan. Haspahan is one of the greatest Cities in Persia, where the King sometimes keepeth his residencie. The people are industrious and curious in all Sciences, but especially in weauing Girdles and Shalhes, in making of Veluets, Sattens, Dammaskes, very good Ormuzines, and Persian Carpets of a wonderfull finenesse. Here you may buy all manner of Drugs, and Spices, and Turkefhes, with store of Pearles, Diamonds, and Rubies, as also all sorts of Silkes, as well wrought, as raw. Here might be planted a profitable trade, if our ships with safetie might lade in the Persian Gulfe: where fiftie in the hundred may bee gained from Ormuz to Hispahan, and that in eightie dayes trauell: whereof I was throughly informed by diuerse Prisoners, and Merchants of the great Towne of Iulpha. These commodities are to bee carried from England into Persia; Tinne, Copper, Brasil: as also Carries for the Common people: Broad cloths for the Merchants and better sort of people, blacke clothes for womens garments, good Chamlets and Veluets died in graine, with purple colours, and fine reds: cloth of Gold and Tissue, Veluets imbroydered with Gold: fine Holland cloth for the King and Sultans; Dagges, and Pistols, compleat harnesse, targets of Steele, shirts of maile, stone bowes, brasse and yron Ordnance. The colours of Cloth must be Scarlets, Violets in graine, fine Reds, Blacks, browne Blues, London Ruffs, Tawnies, Lyon colours, faire liuely Greener; all which will be vented at Haspahan, Calhan, Cashin, and Tauris, and other Cities in Persia. I am perswaded, that Hispahan will vent a thousand clothes yeerely. At Hispahan I abode thirteene dayes, and spent a moneths iourney to Bagdat; which is a Citie about two English miles in compasse, seated on Tigris: neuerthelesse it is very populous, and of great traffique of strangers, being the way to Persia, Turkie, and Arabia. Here I imbarqued my selfe for Balsara; and was twentie eight dayes in passing downe the Riuer; but it is to be done in eightene or lesse, if the water be high. Many Ilands are in this Riuer, which I omit to speake of.

Balsara is a Citie neere vnto the Persian Gulfe, a mile and an halfe in circuit. All the buildings, Castles, and Walls are made of bricke dried in the Sunne. The Turke hath here five hundred Ianizaries, besides other souldiers continually in garrison. But his chiefe strength is of his Gallies, which are twentie five or thirty in number, very faire and furnished with goodly Ordnance. To this port of Balsara come Monthly diuerse ships of fortie or fiftie tunnes from Ormuz, laden with all sorts of Indian Merchandizes. Also there is great store of Wheate, Rice, and Dates, growing thereabout, with which they serue Bagdat, and all the Countrey, Ormuz, and many Parts of India.

From Balsara, I passed by Sea to Catiffa, on the Coast of Arabia Felix, gouerned by a Turke, but a rebell against the Grand Signior; where is great plenty of sundry sort of fruites, as Dates, and others. And from thence we sayled by many Ilands, but among the rest, to that famous Iland Baharem, sixe dayes sayling from Balsara, and in the midway to Ormuz; where they fish for Pearles foure moneths in the yeere; to wit, in Iune, Iuly, August, September. And here are the best Pearles, which are round and Orient.

From the Ile of Baharem, we sayled to Calara on the coast of Arabia Felix, and so passed by land with Camels, to Shiriff Din, (with a purpose to haue gone to Aman) where one John White an Englishman, which refused my company, was poysoned) to haue giuen some intelligence to Sir Henry Middleton, of our hard vsage before in those parts. But hearing that he was traterously taken in Moha, in the mouth of the Red Sea, and carried in chaines vp to the Bascha of Sinan, into the maine land of Arabia, I returned to Lima another Towne on the Persian Gulfe, and there imbarqued my selfe to haue passed to Socotora, an Iland neere the mouth of the Red Sea: But I was taken by Pirates, and so was driuen to land at Snar or Soar, a coast Towne not farre from Lima.

At Snar, certaine Portugals, whose Barkes were there cast away, informed the Gouvernour that I was a Spie, and prayed him to deliuer mee vp into their hands; who hauing obtained their request, carried me to Azibo, and so to Mascate or Muscat, an Iland, where they haue a small Garrison of some fortie men, besides their gallies, as also one Church, and two Friars. And here I had abiden for euer, if one Father Drurie, an English Iesuite, which I found there, had not procured my libertie.

Grees the first Towne of Persia.

The riuer Sabaa diuideth the Mogols and Persians Dominions.

Vea a Village. The Citie of Parra.

Iesd a Citie. Pabanaunis.

Godana Gora a faire Towne.

Hispahan the chiefe citie of Persia.

Commodities to be bought at Hispahan.

Commodities for Persia.

Bagdat.

Balsara.

Catiffa in Arabia Felix.

The Ile of Baharem, where the best pearls are.

Calara or Catara.

Shiriff Din.

John White an English Merchant poysoned.

Lima a Port Towne in the mouth of the Persian Gulfe. Snar or Soar a coast town in the entrance of the Persian Gulfe.

Azibo an old

Mascate or Muscat.

Father Drurie an English Iesuite. He a Mascate in Arabia.

From

Ormuz.

From thence, I was conueied in chaines to Ormuz, crossing the mouth of the Persian Gulfe. Ormuz is an Island in circuit about thirtie miles: and is the driest lland in all the world: for there is nothing growing in it but salt: for their Water, Wood, Victualls, and other necessities come out of Persia, which is about twelue miles from thence. The Portugals haue a strong Castle here, which standeth neere vnto the Sea, where there is a Captaine set by the King of Spaine, hauing vnder him a conuenient number of souldiers, whereof some part remaine in the Castle, and some in the Towne. In this Towne are Marchants of many Nations, and many Moores and Gentiles. Here is very great trade of all sorts of Spices, Drugs, Silkes, cloth of Silke, fine Tapistries of Persia, great store of Pearles, as also Horses of Persia, which serue for all India. And all ships which passe from hence to Goa, wherein are horses, pay no custome in Goa: but if they bring no horses, then they pay eight in the hundred for their goods.

He was at Sinde, which is an excellent place for our Trade.
The best In-dico.
The safetie of Sinde from the Portugals.
A good vent of all sorts of Cloth.

From Ormuz they sent me prisoner to Goa. And we sailed first to Sinde, which lieth between the Countreyes of Guadel and Guzerate, hauing a great Riuer called Damiade falling into it, which Riuer commeth from Labor, and so to Bucher, and Suchar. In these places is the best Indico sold. You may transport all the goods which the Countrey doth afford, by water to Sinde: where your shippes may ride as safely as in the Riuer of Thames. The Portugals haue no fort in this Riuer.

The place, (by report of the Gouvernour, who gaue me a Passe at my first beeing there to bee a pledge, that whensoever I should returne with these and these goods, I should bee well entertained) doth vent cloth of all sorts in reasonable quantitie both fine and course, beeing all light colours; Tinne, Lead, Iron, and Elephants teeth, and Spices of all sorts, especially Pepper and Cloues. The commodities that the Countrey doth afford in great plentie, and cheape price, are fine Calicoes of many sorts, Pintadoes, Quilts, Carpets, and other Silke in great plentie. Many of these stufes are very good for the trade at Bantan, and the Moluccos. Besides, there is great store of Opium, which is a very good commoditie in Bantan, and those parts. And many other drugs fit for our Countrey. The people are of a good disposition, and desirous of trade: victualls are very good cheape: as tenne hennes for tenne pence, a good sheepe a shilling. On the shore the Portugals are subiect to the Countrey people: and if they doe not behaue themselves well, they are seuerely punished.

Diu.

Passing this coast of Sinde, we arriued at Diu in the Kingdome of Cambaya. And it is the strongest Towne that the Portugals haue in these parts. It is but little, but well stored with Merchandise: for here they lade many great ships with diuerse commodities, for Ormuz and for the Straight of Mecca, and other places: and these be ships of Moores and Christians. The Moores passe by Passeport from the Portugals.

Goa.

From Diu we sailed for Goa: which is the principall Citie which the Portugals haue in those parts, and it is gouerned by a Vice-Roy. It standeth in an lland, which may be thirtie miles about, replenished with Orchards and Gardens, Palme trees, and some Villages. Here be Marchants of many Nations.

The Voyage of M. DAVID MIDLETON to Iaua, and Banda, extracted out of a Letter written by himselfe to the Company, this being the fifth Voyage set forth by them.

§. I.

Their affaires at Bantam, Botun, Bengaia.

1609.
They arriued
at Saldania.
They arriued
at Bantam.

By the alteration of State, their debts were almost desperate, nor would this Gouvernour suffer them (as before) themselves to imprison debtors, and distraine.

WE set sayle in the Downes the foure and twentieth of April, 1609. in the Expedition of London, and got sight of Forteuventre, and the Lansaros, the nineteenth of May, and with such winds as blow (some faire, some fowle) we arriued at Saldania the tenth of August, and watered, and made hast, and set sayle the eighteenth of the same. We proceeded for Bantam, and arriued there the seuenth of December, missing Captaine Keeling very narrowly that we had not sight of him: for hee passed vs in the night, elsie we should haue surely seene him. As for our bulineffe, I made all the dispatch that might be (both by day and night) to get the Iron a shore, and would not stay, to set vp my Pinnasse, and left M. Hensworth in the house, and was driuen to giue a great many of gifts more then was requisite, if the State of the Countrey had beene as in former time: and left Edward Needles, would this Gouvernour suffer them (as before) themselves to imprison debtors, and distraine. He also exacted vnreasonable summes for rent, whereas the ground had been giuen, and the houses built at the Companies charge.

and three more of my Company with Master Hemsworth (as his desire was) being in a strange place, and knew none in the House. So I tooke such Commodities as I thought most vendible in those places wherunto I was to goe; and what hope was of making a Voyage, I trust Cap- taine Keeling hath long since made manifest, yet for all this, I must try their curtesie.

The eighteenth of December I tooke my leaue of Master Hemsworth, who was very loath to stay behind me, but I perswaded him to be of good courage, and doubt nothing, seeing I was to take Master Spalding with me for his Language, and had no bodie to leaue in the House but him- selfe: and told him that if the Gouverneur sent for him, hee must tell him plainly that I had left expresse order in any hand, not to yeeld to any of his former demands, yet hee might take what he would, for he must deliuer him nothing. Then I set saile that euening for the Maluccas (as I supposed) and the winds fauouring vs; the seuen and twentieth of the same, wee passed the Streights of Desolam, and being through them, lay becalmed tenne dayes, which was no small grieue to me, in much heate vnder the Line, being doubtfull of the Westerly Monson, which (if it should faile me) would be the ouerthrow of my Voyage.

The eighth of Ianuary, we came before the Towne of Botun, and sent to know some newes, and there the King was gone to the Warres, and very few people in the Towne. So I anchored not, but we through the Streights the same day. The next day we saw a great company of Caric- colles, which we imagined to bee the King of Botunes Armie, which proued so indeed. The King sent a small Prow (when we drew neere vnto him) to see what we were. I sent him word who I was, and it proued little wind, and wanting water I demanded whether there were any neere hand, so the people shewed me where there was great store of good water. Then I stood with the place, and the King and all his Cariccolles came vnder sayle after mee, and came to an Anchor faire by vs, and sent one aboard in his owne name to bid mee welcome, and desired mee to send Master Spalding with the Messenger to come, and speake with him to heare some newes. The Kings desire was that I would ride all night, and in the morning hee would come, and see the ship and me, It proued calme, so we ride still, and the next day the King came aboard, and I made him, and all his Nobles a Banquet, and gaue the King a gift worthy such a person: and a gale came fitted to be vnder sayle: then the King wept, and said I might thinke him but a Dissem- bler, seeing he had no Merchandize for me, for foure monethes before my comming, hee had his House burned to the ground, where he had prouided of euery thing somewhat, both Nuts and Mace, and Cloues, and great store of Sander wood an whole house full, and a great Ware-house full of the cloth of his Countrey, which is very vendible in most part of the Ilands thereabout: and all the losse which formerly he receiued, grieued him not halfe so much, as when I told him that I came, and had caused the ship to bee fitted of purpose to come and buy his Commodities, that he should prouide for me.

He further said, that I had kept my promise, and swore by the head of Mahomet, so would he haue done, if God had not laid that crosse of fire vpon him, hauing sundry of his Wiues and Women burned. But now he was abroad at Warres with his forces, he could not tell the issue of it, and as the case stood with him, hee could not spare any of his people, to make any prouision for me: and said, that if I had not come by the night afore, he had beene in the field against another King his Enemy, whose Towne he shewed me, and requested to shoot at it, as I went by. I said I was a Stranger, and knew him not, and to procure my selfe Enemies, I had no reason: but if the other King should come and offer him, or any of his Subjects wrong, while I was there, I would doe my best to send them away: which speeches of mine gaue the King great content, so the King tooke his leaue, and we set saile presently.

The foure and twentieth of Ianuary, we arrived at the Iland of Bangaia, where the King and most of his people were fled for feare of some Enemy; and certainly I could not learne the truth. There was a Hollander there that told mee that the King was fled for feare of the King of Makasar, who (as he thought) would force the King to turne Moore, for he is a Gentile: but I rather thinke they fled for feare of the Hollanders, who would haue built a Fort there, but when they perceiued the people were fled, they left it vneffected. This one Hollander bore such a sway, that neuer a man left vpon the Iland durst displease him. He hath as many Women as he plea- seth, two Houses full of the choice of the Countries Daughters, and many Men and Women Slaues, and is a pleasant Companion, and will dance and sing all day long, neere-hand naked, as their manner is: and winneth the hearts of the people, and will be drunke two dayes together, amongst the people of the Iland: and is of himselfe, and hath liued long in the Countrey, and will not be commanded by any Hollander, and dwelleth ouer against Amboina. If the Gouver- neur of Amboina would speake with him, hee must send two or his Merchants to bee kept in pawne till his returne: He taketh vp the Kings Duties of Tarnata, in all the Ilands thereabouts, and serueth his owne turne, and sends the King what he may spare. Heere wee had good refresh- ing for my people, being (I prayse God) in better estate then when I set saile from England, and haue not had a man sicke to that present. There I sheathed my Long Boate, which wee towed for feare of the Wormes that would haue spoyled her, and after set saile the nine and twentieth of Ianuary. Comming to Sea, we found the windes right as we should goe, so striuing (all wee might)

Kindnesse of the Bandanefes to the English.

THe fifth of February, we got sight of the Ilands of Banda, and made all the sayle wee could, to get neere before night: and drawing neere, I sent my Skiffe to heare some newes, of some of the Country people, who sent me word that the Hollanders would not suffer any Sayle to come into the Roade, but they would take all hee brought, (if it were such things as they stood in need of) and make payment at their owne pleasures: But if any Iuncke came and brought Commodities very vendible for the Countrey people, they were not permitted to haue any speech with any of the Countrey: but the Hollander would bring them to the backside of the Castle within Musket shot of their Ordnance, that one must not set his foot ashore, but they would send a Bullet at him: They had fifteene great Iunckes, which they kept in that manner. What hope is there to make a Voyage there, seeing they dealt so with all, that came into the Roade, and banished Captaine Keeling, not permitting him to stay to gather in his debts, but gaue him Bills to receiue his money at Bantam, as (I hope) from his owne mouth, your Worships haue heard at large. Yet for all this, I stood into the Roade with Flagge and Ensigne, and at each Yard Arme a Pendant, in as comely a manner as we could deuise. There came a small Piinnalle of thirtie Tunnes sent from the Gouvernour of the Castle, thinking it had beene one of their Countrey ships: but comming neere vs stood into the Roade before me, after they had hailed vs, I could haue no other speech with them.

As soone as I came thwart of Lantor, I saluted the Towne with Ordnance, and came to an Anchor within shot of their ships: then presently a Dutch Boate came aboard vs from the Gouvernour, to haue me come into the Roade, and come ashore to him, and shew him my Commission: I made answere, I was but new come, and to shew my Commission to the Gouvernour, or to make any man acquainted with those busineses, which belonged to the making of my Voyage, I would not. They further asked, whether I was a Merchant, or a Man of Warre? I answered I would pay for what I take: then they threatned me: who told them I was there, and would ride there, doe as they should please, I hoped I should defend my selfe: so they returned to the Castle in a great rage. The Hollanders no sooner gone, but great store of the men of Lantor came aboard me, and bade me welcome. Then I vnderstood the whole Estate of the Countrey, and the Countrey would be willing to deale with me, if I could procure leaue of the Hollanders, for they are now friends, but Pulaway and Polatronu are at Warres with them.

Now knowing well, that in troubled waters it is good fishing, there being one of Pulaway amongst them, I had priuate conference with him, and gaue him money in his Purse, to certifie them of the Iland, that I would giue them money or Commodities for all their Spice, and that the Hollanders and I were like to be Enemies, and let them not doubt, but that I would get their Spice aboard, one way or other. In the meane season, there came another Boate from the Vice-Admirall, and the same Boate from the Castle, with expresse Commandement from the Gouvernour to me to come in. Being dinner time, I caused them to stay dinner, and after dinner told them that I would ride there, and stand to the danger of the Roade: For I knew full well, that our Nations were friends in Europe, & for vs to be Enemies amongst the Heathen people, it were not good, being Christians. Whereupon they told me plainly I must not ride there, and if I did, they would fetch me in perforce: I said I would ride there, till I found the inconuenience of the Roade (as by their speeches it was foule ground) then would I come into the best of the Harbour: for neither of our Princes giueth any such authoritie to any of their Subiects, but that euery man may ride, and goe at their owne perils. They said that the Countrey was theirs, then may I the more boldly (say I) ride heere, for we are friends: so they departed in displeasure.

This Euening, I was about to land Ordnance vpon the side of an Hill, where wee rid and began to fit the ship to fight with them that should molest mee: and sent out some to see what ground there was round about the ship, and it was all Rockes, so by no meanes the shippe could ride there: so we left our pretence of landing Ordnance. In the morning I sent my Skiffe with Master Spalding, and the principall of the ship with a Letter to the Gouvernour, and bad them say nothing more then I had written, and make no long stay, but bring an answere presently, for we ride very bad: the Copie of which Letter hereafter followeth.

MAY it please your worship with patience to consider, That whereas you have diuers enemies (and few friends in this place) I being a Christian; if your worship stand in need of any thing that I haue, I pray you make bold so demand it; and I will be as readie to performe it to my power. For whereas there is amitie betweene our Princes at home, I should be unwilling that we their Subjects should be at enmities here. Further, forasmuch as you command me to come under the command of the Castle, I hope I haue that Priviledge that both Princes allow their Subjects, to come and goe at their owne pleasures, and stand to the danger of the Roade, at their owne perils. And whereas you demanded to see my Commission, I am a Gentleman; and willing to shew it upon equall termes, for if you would meete me securely, as I would doe you, appoint our meeting on the water, in our Boates equally manned; or in any other convenient place, where I may be as neere my force as you are to yours. And whereas it is reported, that a contract is to be made with the Inhabitants of Lantor, and your worship; my desire is, that you would use me as an Indian for my money: then should I thinke my selfe much beholding to your worship; and am more willing to deale with you then with them. Furthermore, forasmuch as you be at enmities with the Islands of Puloway, and Polaron; my desire is to bee resolved, whether I may haue their Spice without your hinderance. Thus desiring your answer to these particulars, and the same to bee returned by these Bearer, I bid you farewell, from aboard my ship, this seventh of February, 1609.

Yours in friendship, DAVID MIDDLETON.

All my Companies comming to the Castle were brought to the Gouvernour; where they sat in Councell, so they deliuered my Letter: which being openly read they would send mee no answer but by word of mouth, yet detayned my Letter. They had determined by Councell (having three great ships of one thousand tunnes a peece, and three Pinnasses of thirtie tunnes a peece) that one of the shippes (being vnseruiceable) called the great Sunne, should clap me aboard; and there set her selfe a fire: and had for the same purpose sworne sundry persons to come and make her fast with chaines, and had put into her thirtie Barrells of Powder for the same intent: which beeing manned out of the Castle with all the ships, and boates, to take vp the men when shee should fire, the Great Horne should come and ride within Musket-shot, and batter vpon vs, and the Frigots round about vs, to keepe vs doing on all sides. My folke seeing their speed they made to warpe out the Great Sunne, made small stay but came away, and told me what preparation was made to haue vs. I thought it fit to goe and speake with the Gouvernour my selfe, and before wee would try it by Battaile, to see what hee would say to my selfe. And so taking my Commission with mee, I came to the Castle, and was met at my landing by the Gouvernour, and all the principall men, that were in the Castle and ships and was brought through a Guard of small shot of three hundred Souldiers, who gaue mee three Volleys of shot, and the Castle shewen Peeces of Ordnance for my welcome: so wee came to the Gouvernours Chamber, where for vs two, there were Chaires set, the rest had formes, and after many Salutations, and Complements of welcome to the Castle, I began, and said,

I vnderstand by my Company, which was with them before my comming, that they would not be perswaded but that I was a Pirate, and had no Commission: and that it should appeare to the contrary, I came my selfe, and brought my Commission with mee, to manifest that I was no such person, but had the Kings Maiesties broad Seale to my Commission, and called to my man for it, and shewed it them, reading the first line vnto them, and lapped it vp againe. Then they said, that they would see it all. I said, they should not while I liued, The Commission was mine; you all apparantly see, and the great Seale at my Commission, and my selfe nominated therein; and if they would see more, it is not my Commission they should expect it. Wee would haue bin gone aboard, but were willed to stay awhile. So there passed words betweene vs, some sharpe and some sweet: but at the length they began to be more mild, & called for a Cup of Wine, then the Company rose all vp, dranke a cup of Wine, and went to walke, and view the Castle, the Offices whereof were very neat and very wel furnished with Armor and great store of Munition.

Taking my time, I put in practice to see what money would doe (which often maketh Wise men blinde) that so I might attayne vnto my lading by large proffers. I offered one thousand pound to be sure to haue my lading, and to giue my chaine from about my necke to one to procure it, offering to pay more then they paid for their Spice. Hauing set this matter abroad, (knowing the ship to ride in danger) I told the Gouvernour, now they apparantly saw, I was no man of Warre, I would bring in my ship: hee replyed with the residue, that all the friendship they could doe me, I should find them willing to pleasure me therein. It drawing late I tooke my leaue to goe aboard, at what time, the Gouvernour caused all the Ordnance in the Castle to bee shot off, and as I passed by the ships, they and the Frigots shot off, till I came aboard. The next day being the eight of February, I brought my ship into the Roade, and rid betweene their ships and the Castle, and gaue them all my Ordnance, and was answered from the Castle, and shippes, and Frigats with great store.

As soone as we came to an Anchor, the Gouvernour with all the chiefe of the Castle and Ships came aboard of me: so I intreated them to dinner, to such as we could prouide, which they very kindly accepted: and after dinner the maine point (which was my lading) I could not by gifts, nor any meanes I might deuise, haue any grant to buy one pound of Spice. And hauing prouided sundry meanes to induce them to heare reason, the Gouvernour told me plainly, he durst not giue me leave to deale for any Spice, vnder paine of losse of his head. I seeing no good to bee done in riding at an Anchor amongst them, determined to take in water, and take my Fortune: but they would not suffer my Boate to goe ashore for water, but they would send a man with vs, to see that we had no conference with any of the Countrey people. After I had water aboard, I sent Master Spalding to shew the Gouvernour that I would be gone and that I had sent him to acquaint him therewith: for my selfe would not come out of the ship.

Dutch Crupulosity,

The Gouvernour marvelled whither I would goe, the winds being Westerly: Master Spalding said, he knew not. So I warped till I could get Sea-roume to set saile. The Gouvernour sent three Pinnasses to go out with me, and one came in a Boate aboard vs, sent from the Gouvernour to command me, that I should not come neere any of those Ilands: I sent him word I would not be at his commanding, for I was bound to Pulaway, as soone as possibly I can, and bade him send his ships to send me away, for I would quickly send the Frigots further from me. Hee went aboard one of the Frigots, and I caused our men to get vp their small shot, and fit themselves to fight with their ships which were fitted, and their sailes brought to the yard of purpose. I called all my Company to know their mindes, and told them plainly that if they would stand by mee, I meant to set vp my rest, to make my Voyage at those Ilands, let the Hollander doe what hee could: and promised them, if any man were maymed, hee should haue maintenance during his life, which (if it pleased God) I would haue performed: and further promised, that if they would fight it out, to giue frankly amongst them, those things that were mine owne, which were in the ship. So with one consent, wee were all willing to try what force the Hollander would send out to drive vs away. The Pinnasses seeing my folke to bring vp their small shot, thought it would be smal to their ease to guard me any longer, and therefore bore vp for the Harbour. While we were a warping out, the Admirall had beene twice aboard the Pinnasses, and the Vice-Admirall, and the Lieutenant Gouvernour of the Castle also, what they did there I know not.

His purpose for Pulaway.

English resolution,

It fell calme, and the winds Westerly, and a great streame set to the East North-East, and we droue a great pace. So I manned my Boate, and sent Master Spalding away with Money, and my Purfers Mate, and five more, to goe, and certifie them of the Iland of Pulaway, that we had parted enemies with the Hollanders, and that I had sent him to know their minds, whether they would sell me their Spice, and I would giue them Money for it: and would haue come my selfe, but would faine see the shippe in some place where she might ride, and then I would come either in the ship, or in a Pinnasse that I had within boord to set vp. While my Boat was absent, there came two Prawes from Lantor, to know why I went away; I told them, the streame set the ship away: I would faine haue gone to Pulaway, if the streame had not hindered me, and had sent a Factor thither to buy Spice; they said, they were glad that I went not away for altogether: then I prayed them to tell them of Lantor, that I would giue them Money or Commodities for all their Spice which they had, if they would sell it me before the Hollander, that came to take their Countrey from them. One of them said, that hee would goe to the Iland and see my people, and then he would shew them of Lantor.

M. Spaldings welcome,

The Ile of Ceran, Gelagula.

The Hope-well.

They lade Spice.

At Master Spaldings comming ashore, the Countrey flocked about him, and bad him welcome, but would make no price with him till I came my selfe: but would deliuer Spice vpon an account, till God should send me thither, to goe through with them my selfe. I bid Master Spalding hire me a Pilot (if he could) to harbour my ship neere hand; who spake to the Countrey for one, and they hired him a couple, to whom the Countrey gaue twenty Rials, and I must giue them as much. So Master Spalding sent them aboard, and writ to mee to send him more Money and Cloath, which I did the same night, and bare vp the Helme for Ceran, and came to a place called Gelagula, being thirtie leagues from Banda, a reasonable good Road: and as soone as possibly we could, we tooke an house, and brought our Pinnasse ashore to set vp, hauing had her within boord thus long, and could neuer haue time to set her vp, because the time of the yeare did so fast slip away, and the Monson was at an end. Labouring all that night to get her dispatched, being fitted, I named her the Hope-well. The seuen and twentieth of March, we made all things readie to set saile to the Iland of Pulaway, and arriued there the one and thirtieth of the same in the night, and could not lade any Spice, till I had agreed with the Countrey people.

The Countrey asked many duties, and great gifts; but in fine, I agreed to pay as Captaine Keeling paid: after the chiefe had what they looked for, (for euery one must haue somewhat, that all must not know) and a man must euer be giuing, for they neuer cease begging: and it is not for a mans ease to deny them any reasonable matter, especially, as the case stood with mee. After we had agreed, we laded the Hope-well with Mace, and sent her away, she being but nine Tunne, could carry but little of such Commodities, which she presently: wherefore I was driuen to looke out for more helpe to get ouer the Spice; so I hired a great Prow, and was to build her, which we laded with Nuts, and sent to the ship, and there builded her higher, and made her one of five and twentie Tunne. But she made but one Voyage, and then wee heard no newes of her in three moneths, still expecting her comming to Pulaway a long time. The Hope-well making two Voyages, could bring mee no newes of her, so that I verily thought she had bene sunke: for I came in company with her in the Hope-well my selfe, and hauing a great storme, was perfectly perswaded, that the Sea had eaten her vp, and gaue her for lost, hauing twelue of the lustiest men in the ship in her. It was no small grieft to mee, to see the time of the yeare to weare away, and could not get my lading ouer to the ship, nor durst bring the ship ouer (for there was no riding for her, and she past the Iland oft) all hope was past for fixe moneths. I made enquire for other Vessels, and heard of a Iunck that belonged to Lantor, but she was old, and lay neere the Hollanders ships: I went and bought her, and got such helpe as I could to trim her.

The want of my twelue men put me to much trouble, if I had had them with mee all the while, it had beene a great shortning to our Voyage: for most of our men were downe vpon sore Legges, and as soone as one was any thing well, hee must into the Hope-well, and another poore lame man take his roome, hauing some three times well and downe againe. Thus I was driuen to my wits end, not knowing which way to turne me, being euery houre in danger of the Hollander to come and take the Iland, who (as by intelligence from time to time we heard) sought sundry meanes to make me away, by offering large Money for Rogues to effect it, either by poison, or otherwise. But (I praise God) I had some friends vpon the Iland, who gaue mee secret warnings of such men, or to be aware of such men-slaues, for they would do me some mischief, and came for the purpose. Whereupon I was faine to get all the Ilands to draw to an head, and fit their Caracols, and keepe the Hollanders Pinnasses from comming aboard: so the Pinnasses durst not stirre, and the Ilanders landed secretly vpon Nero, and cut off sundry of the Hollanders, that they durst not stirre out of the Castle, except they were many, and well fitted.

Sore legges.

These Ilanders built a Fort vpon the side of an hill, from whence they shot into the Castle, which troubled the Hollander much. So we were sure that the Pinnasses could not come out as in former time, to cut vs off as oftentimes they had attempted, making nine Voyages in her my selfe, and neuer could spare aboue seuen men to goe in her, and but fiae at Puloway: the rest in a manner lame and sicke, in a most villanous Countrey, where all things were so deere, that one should eat, and not to be had but at some times, which was a great grieve vnto vs all: with such foule weather of raines continually, which was like to haue made an end of vs all. The Iunke which I had bought at Lantor, I was faine to get away vntrimmed, for the Hollanders sent me one of their ships, seeing men at worke vpon her, (when they had fitted her) to batter her to peeces. So that night she waighed, I got the helpe of two Townes to lanch her, and was to carry her a great way vpon Rowlers. This we did by night, and got her out of sight by day, and brought her to Puloway, and were faine to buy Sayles for her, and all things else, for she had nothing belonging vnto her but the bare Hull. I set the Countrey Carpenters aworke, which did her little good, as proued afterwards: and had sent to the ship by the Hope-well, that they should bring ouer some rigging for the Iunke, and that Master Davis should come and carry her ouer, fitting her (as well as I could) with those silly Carpenters which the place affordeth.

Treacherous offers.

The Hope-well stayed three weekes, and wee neuer heard any word what was become of her, being doubtfull whether any mischance had befallen her: and wee might stay long before they aboard could hire any to come ouer, the Hollanders haue so sealed them, that they haue taken carrying of victuals to the Bandanesses. Being reasonable faire weather, hauing the Shippes Skiffe at Puloway, I determined to goe ouer my selfe, and make some shift, and not to let the time passe doing nothing. For I could not hire men to carrie ouer the Iunke, if I would haue laded her with Siluer. So I put it in practise, seeing the Hope-well came not, and not hauing a sound man with me that could stand on his legges, I hyred three Blackes and put to Sea: being out of sight of Land, there arose a grieuous storme, that I was faine to spoone afore the Sea, to saue our liues: yet (God be praised) wee got sight of the Land of Ceran, and kept her right afore the Sea, cleane from our ship, and comming neere the shoare (the Sea aloft) did breake, and tooke away all hope of comming safe ashore. Night being at hand, we stroue all we might to keepe her vpon the Sea till day, the storme increaseth, that no remedie but wee must hazzard all to put into the Breach, ouer a ledge of Rockes. Which we did, and no man durst forsake the Boat, for being beaten to peeces against the Rockes. So the next day we set her ashore, being brim-full, and had all things that we had washed ouer-board: we laid hands on the Boat, and got her out of the Suffe of the Sea, and gaue God thanks for preserving vs from so apparant danger. Being extreme foule weather, with much raine, wee could not tell what to doe.

M. Iohn Davis.

The Ile of Ceran. Sea-perill.

The Blackes came and told vs, that we must goe to Sea presently, if wee meant to saue our liues. I asked one of them the reason; who said, it was the Canibals Countrey, and if they got sight of vs, they would kill vs and eate vs, and nothing would ransom a man if they take him: and all Christians that they get, they roist them aliue, for wrongs that the Portugals haue done them: and therefore if we would not goe to Sea, they would go hide themselves: for the Canibals would be at the water side as soone as they can look about to desery: if they can discover any Fisher-men or Passengers, that by stealth passe by in the night. Wee hearing this (and the Moone began to shew the wind to Duller, and a Tyde of flood with vs) we got a-head a good reasonable pace, and by day we were cleere of their Watches, & keeping the shore close aboard, we espyed a Hul of a Bark, came & rowed neere it, & knew it to be the Diligence, So we came & hayled her, & there were a couple of Englishmen in her, who told me that the same night (that we had the storme in the Skiffe) she chopped to an Anchor there, and the Cable burst, & she draue ashore, & that M. Herniman was gone to the Towne to get men to haue her vp, & saue her. I landed my selfe to goe to the Gouvernour of the Towne, to come and bring some helpe to saue her. The Sand was full of people which came of purpose to haue pillaged her, & I willed them to make a shot now & then, which stayed them from comming neere them: & comming to the Town, M. Herniman was gone by land to the ship. I offered the Gouvernour mony to haue help to saue her, who said, he would gather the Country together within two or three daies, but I told him that if it blew, she would be lost within an houre. One of Puloway being there, who knew the Barke, and was earnest with the Gouvernour to saue her, plainly told mee, that he gaped only to haue her bulged, that hee might haue the Planke to build him a Prow.

Then perceiuing there was no helpe, but must come from the shippe, I hired Guides to follow Master Herniman, and tooke one of myne owne men to keepe me company, and so proceeded by land, being twelue miles from the ship. Being halfe way, we came to a great water, which we must swimme ouer: my man could not swimme, so I sent my clothes back, all but a Scarlet Mandilian, which these Blacks must carrie ouer for me, who told me, the Riuer was full of Aligats, and if I saw any, I must fight with him, else he would kill me: and for that purpose did carry a great Knife in his mouth. I being weary, not hauing slept in two nights, tooke the water before the Indians, knowing they would bee ouer before me. The Riuer being broad, and a swift current, which the great raine (that had fallen) had made, the Indians would haue had me turned backe, but being the better halfe way, I was very vnwilling: being in the water, one of the Indians that carryed my Mandilion, had got a great Cane (which I knew not of) and strooke me on the side, who feeling the stroke, suspecting it had bene an Aligata, diued vnder water, where the current got such hold on mee, that before I could come vp, I was in the Sea, and there the Sea threw mee against the Beech, and bruised my backe and shoulder, till the time that hee came, and gaue me the end of the Cane, whereof I got hold, and he pulled mee out, neere hand d rowned: being tossed with the Sea, that euery Suffe washed mee into the Sea againe. I prayse God, I escaped this danger and got aboard, after I had rested my selfe a reasonable space, to the amazement of all my Company. So that night, I sent all that were able to crawle, to saue the Bark: which (God be praysed) they did with much toyle of so small help. The Country would not let any man lay his hand to saue her, expecting we would forsake her, that they might enioy her.

The next day after my comming aboard, the Hopewell arriued with her lading of Spice, who told me, they had been driuen to the East-wards of Banda thirtie leagues, in a most cruell storme, which continued long, and caused them to haue a long passage to get to the wind-wards, but arriued the next day after. I went from Puloway in the Boat, and laded presently, and M. Davis was taking in of his lading, making all dispatch that might be, with a poore lame Crewe (the whole being absent as your Worships haue heard, about the Diligence) we presently vileded her, and that night set saile in her my selfe, to see if I could come before M. Davis came from thence: for they told me, the Luncke was very leaky, and I desired to haue the Hope-well come in her company, whatsoeuer should befall: for she had neuer a naile in her, but such as we our selues put into her: and hauing none there of our owne, we caused the simple Smith that the countrey afforded, to make some Iron pinnes, for nayles they can make none; and in most needfull places wee bestowed them. As for my selfe in the Hopewell, struiuing to attaine to Puloway, I was put by it by the streame, in a mighty storme; the more the wind, the stronger the Current: beeing put to Lee-wards, we were long before we could fetch the ship, and were faine to seeke to the Ceran shore, or else had been quite blowne away. Hauing made many Voyages, and still fallen to Lee-ward of the ship, I caused M. Davis to search the land for some Harbour, that when those prouisions (that we could make to get ouer the goods) should come ouer, they might come from Puloway to the ship directly, and not to boult it vp to windwards when she was deepe laden, which beeing emptie, hauing discharged her burden, might better ply it to wind-wards: for beeing light, she would feele her oares, which was effected.

Fears of the Hollanders,
cause of cruell
handling.

In my long stay from Puloway, and the Islands of Banda, they had intelligence, that the ship had weighed anchor, and were perswaded, that I was gone in the ship for feare of the Hollanders, who were determined to come and looke me out, and surpise mee. Whereupon, the countrey people would not deale with my people any more, nor sell them victuals, and beganne to abuse them, and rayle vpon them and said, that I was gone in the ship, and left them in the Countrey as the Hollanders did, and would come with a Fleete, as they haue done, and take their Countrey from them. Then they were determined to seize vpon the house, and take the people, and keep them prisoners vpon an high Rocke, and sent for the Sabandar, that by whole consent they might come, and take possession of all the goods. When the Sabandar was come, M. Spalding went vnto him, to shew him of the hard vsage of the Islanders, who began to take things out of the house by force. He said, They would be sure we should not doe as the Hollanders had done, and were determined to lay them fast: for the ship was gone, and our meaning was not good. All that Master Spalding could doe, would not periwade them, but they were left of purpose.

The next day, being in counsell in the Church: they resolved to send the men vp prisoners to the Rocke. Then there came one and told them, that I was in sight in the Hopewell; whereupon they broke vp their deuillish determination. At my comming ashore, M. Spalding told mee of their hard vsage of them, and what feare they were in. The Chiefe of all the Hands fate before our doore to stay my comming: I went vnto them, and asked the reason, Why they dealt so with my people in my absence? They told me plainly, that if I had not come my selfe, they would haue taken taken the goods, and kept the men safe. So I told them the reason of the remoouing of the ship, and said further, No manuell that the Holanders built a Castle to defend themselves, when I beeing in friendship with them, and leauing men amongst them, with Commodities that the countrey stood in neede of, and made the Holanders mine Enemies, which were their enemies, and sought all the meanes that in me lay to doe all the Ilands good, (as they all very well knew) should receiue such hard measure at their hands. They said plainly, I must not blame them to be iealous of Christians: for many yeeres, the Portugals and Holanders haue done as I haue done; but in the ende they saw apparantly, they would haue their Countrey from them: yet now I was come my selfe, they hoped I would not thinke the worse of them. So wee became good friends, and bought Spice apace: and had bought my whole ships lading. Hauing an ouer-plus of Stock left I thought I could not doe your Worships better seruice, then in laying out your money, and therefore made shift to send the ships lading away: and laded thirtie Tunnes more in a Iuncke, and bought another Iuncke of fortie Tunnes (and Spice to lade her) which was not then launched, but men at worke ypon her: and left M. Spalding to come in her, and M. Chapman, for Master (a very honest and sufficient man) with twelue persons in the whole.

After this, I came and tooke my leaue of all the Countrey, in most louing manner, and gaue them diuers gifts for a farwell, intreating them to helpe Master Spalding, if hee should stand in need of them: for I beeing gone, hee must rely vpon them. So with many promises of all kindnesse, I tooke my leaue both of Master Spalding, and of his company, and all the Iland. Leauing Master Chapman for Master in the new Iuncke. I was faine to carry ouer the Hopewell my selfe, and set saile the seuenth of September from Puloway, with the Iuncke Middleton in my Company (hauing stayed longer in the Countrey, then euer any Englishman did) arriued at the ship the tenth. And there I heard that the ship was not fully laden: for there were seuen Tunnes of the Nuttes spoyled, that came last from Puloway, and lost. There I laded the ship out of the Hopewell, and the Iuncke, and turned off the Hopewell, which had done vs very good seruice, and brought an hundred Tunnes of goods aboard; being so wormeaten, that we pumped alwayes in her, being but halfe inch planck, and neuer could stay or haue any time to sheath her. After the shippe was wholly laden, wee set saile from Keeling Bay the same day, hauing neuer a top-sayle ouer head: For I had caused Master Davis to remoue the ship from whence I left her, to another Bay, seuen leagues to the Westward, where I said I would come with the Hopewell; and the Iuncke where I found them: now the ship, in remoouing had her top-sailes blowne from the yard, hauing beene at the yard euer since we came into the Countrey for feare of Treason, and the Hollanders who would seeke our overthrow. The Iuncke going better then we, hauing no top-sailes, I sent for the Master of her aboard, and wrote a Letter to Bantam by them: and requested them to make all the speed they could thither, and I hoped I should come after them, and ouertake them, when I could make my top-sailes, which wee plyed night and day: and made Master Musgraue his Mate: wee in the ship hauing our top-sailes finished, did ouertake the Iuncke the sixteenth of the same, and coming vp to them, they could not keepe vs company, except wee should take in our top-sailes: and to presse the Iuncke with a saile they durst not. I called vnto them, and bade them beare such saile, that they doe not wrong her (for feare a leake should breake vpon them) and come to Bantam: for mee to keepe by them, could doe them small pleasure, for wee had long businesse at our comming to Bantam, to trimme the shippe for England. So wee tooke leaue of them, and bore ahead, and the ninth of October arriued in Bantam Roade, where Master Hemsworth and Edward Neetles were both dead, within a short space after my going away from Bantam: so that all the goods I left at Bantam, were yet there, and not a yard of cloth sold to the Chineses. At our comming to Bantam, being very weake (for most part of the company had sore legs) I was driuen, that all men that had any sores, or were sickly, should remayne aboard by the Surgeon, and manured the Iunkes with all my choice men, being all in perfect health. There came a small ship, that had heene at China, and at Iapan, Tarnata, Makian, Coramandell, Patane, and Ior, and came to Amboyna, and so to Banda to seeke for lading, but could get none, so was faine to go for Bantam to lade Pepper. This ship when she came to Banda, came neere the Iland of Puloway. and let flye all her Ordnance, and a shot came through another mans house, through two Suckles of Mace in our house, and strooke the Purfers Mate vpon the shinne, yet broke not his legge, but went into a Chest of fine Pintados, and spoyled many: the poore man lay long vpon it (sixe monethes at the least) not able to stand.

He departed from Puloway
the seuenth of September.

Bantam the ninth of October.

The Hollanders seeing vs to passe by them at Banda, day by day with Spice (who after my comming bought not one pound, I wrought such meanes to procure my lading first) were starke madde, hauing two great ships halfe laden before I came into the Countrey : wherefore they determined to come with their ships and Pinnasses, and take the Iland, and all the Spice that I had there, knowing I had store bought, and fitted such a time, as that they might easily haue done it. The *Bandanese*s being fleshed with the slaughter of some of the straggling Hollanders, which they had murthered, tooke all the able men to giue assault to the Hollanders Castles : and determined to fire their ships, at an Anchor, and burne the old Sunne close to the Castle gates. All able men being gone to the Warres, and not passing fortie men left, beside women and children, the two great ships and three Pinnalles came out vnder saile, with three Boates apiece at their sternes, and the Frigots, two Prowes a piece to land men : They chose such a time, that they might haue come ashore, and taken euery man, one, in their armes, and carryed them quite away, for there were no Weapons left in the Iland, but what we had. But it pleased God to deale better with vs, for being come out of the Harbour, they could not get in againe, it prooued calme, and the Tyde of Ebbe (being Springing Tyde) did fet the shippes to the Southwards of the I-land, and the Pinnalles must follow the ships, for feare the Caricols would haue had them. Two dayes they did what they could to come backe, so they were forced to proceed for Bantam to lade Pepper : Being long becalmed by the way to Bantam, they descried a shippe right to Leewards of them, which they thought could not be any Saile, but wee : wherefore it was agreed by counsell that they should come and fight with mee, and take me, and all the Spice from mee :

and what their determination was to haue done with the ship and Company, I could not learne.
It proued to be the Provincia of Holland, a great ship that was bound to Banda, to looke for la-ding, and had beene at the Moluccoes, but could not get one pound of Spice. So those two ships told him, that they came from thence, with halfe their lading, so all three came to Bantam to lade Pepper : thus the Lord kept me out of their hands.

There came eight ships to Bantam for Pepper, and must stay a yeare for it : so the shippes that must stay a yeare for their lading, tooke in planks and prouision of building, and were sent with them to Banda and Tarnata, (for their Castles, and to make Flankers to make themselves strong) and were sent away after I came to Bantam. My lame Company being very weake fell sicke, and my Gunner, and one of my Quarter Masters dyed, and three more presently after them.
The Carpenters fitting the ship, and the Westerly Monson come, there was no hope of the Iunckes comming till May : Master Danis being sicke, and very hardly escaping with life, Master Clayborne weake and sicke, and my selfe not well with grieffe, to see in what poore estate we were, made all speed that we might to be gone from that contagious Countrey, hoping, that if we were out at Sea, my people would mend. Now seeing the Iuncke came not, which if but one of them had come, I would haue remayned in the Countrey, and fitted her to goe for Succadania, (a place where the Hollanders haue made great Voyages) but seeing they came not, I thought I should doe your Worships as good seruice to come home in the ship, (if it should please God to take Master Danis, and Master Clayborne away) to bring home the ship : and therefore set vp my rest to come home. Three dayes before we set saile from Bantam, foure Saile of a new Fleet of Hollanders came in (which brought in great store of women, to inhabite those places which they had conquered) and were nine in the whole, and fve remayned behind. Those that came into the Road, were very weake, so that the other ships company that were in the Road, were faine to fetch them in one by one.

That same day came a Slupe from Tarnata (sent with Letters to Amboyno, and so to Bantam) with newes, that the Hollanders had lost their Admirall, which went to Manilia : for his head was shot off, and the ship taken and two more, and another (that would not yeeld) set himselfe a fire : so they lost three ships by fight, and one burned, being all great shippes of one thousand Tunnes apiece. Four dayes before these newes came from Manilia, a Generall of the Hollanders, which came into the Indies foure yeares passed, called Paulus Vancarles, who had beene taken by the Spaniards at Tarnata, by Spanish Gallies (within foure monethes after I came from thence the last Voyage) remained a Prisoner in the Master of the Campes House at Tarnata and all his company were chained in the Gallies. These Prisoners the Hollanders would haue ransomed with money, offering a very great rancome : which the Spaniard would not accept, but would haue them deliver vp the Forts, and be gone ; so they would set their Generall, and the rest at libertie, or otherwise not. The Hollanders would by no meanes withdraw their forces, so the Generall remained Prisoner a yeare and a quarter, and then was released by the new Gouer-nour that came from Manilia, to take the Gouernment of the Moluccoes, who was intercepted, and taken by two ships of the Hollanders, which released their Generall with exchange of man for man. This Generall was the second time taken by the Spanish Gallies (after a long fight) and presently sent Prisoner to the Manilia.

Hauing left Richard Wooddies for Chiefe in the house, and order for Master Spalding (when God shall send him to Bantam) to determine a Voyage to Succadania in Borneo for Diamonds, I tooke my leaue of them of Bantam, and set saile the the sixteenth of November, and had a very good passage to the Roade of Saldanha ; where I came to an Anchor the one and twentith of January, and tooke in water, and made all dispatch that I could for England : and found that my Bre-

Brother Sir Henry Middleton had beene there, and came in the foure and twentieth of Iuly, and departed the tenth of August, and there I found the Copie of a Letter, which my Brother had written to your Worships, and sent home by a Hollander the next day that hee came into the Road: which if you haue not receiued, you may apparantly see, that they will detain all your Worships Letters, and you shall haue the Copie. Thus haue I at large certified your Worships of all matters in ample manner, which I thought no lesse then my dutie to doe, hauing made relation of all those places from whence I came. And (I prayse God) I haue aboard one hundred thirtie nine Tunnes, six Cathayes, one quarterne two pound of Nutmegs, and sixe hundred two and twentie Suckettes of Mace, which maketh thirtie sixe Tunnes, fifteene Cathayes, one quarterne, one and twentie pound, and haue left in the Iuncke with Master Herrman, foure and twentie Tunnes, seuen Cathayes, two quarternes and eight pound; which co<sup>t</sup> with the charge 25071.  $\frac{1}{4}$  Rials, of which summe I haue disbursed fve hundred of mine owne, for Spice which lyeth most vpon the Orlope: and being in bond vnto your Worships, shall remaine vntill I know your pleasures, whether I shall enjoy it.

§. I.

HHe first of May 1610. wee came to an Anchor in the Roade of Cape Verde, vnder an Iland: where wee found a Frenchman of Deepe, that was setting vp a small Pinnasse vpon the Iland.

The second, the Carpenters of all the shippes went in hand with my mayne Mast pulling off the fishes, we found the Mast exceeding bad, and aboue the vpper Decke some three foot wrung more then halfe asunder: had wee met with any foule weather, it must needs haue gone by the boord. I sent one of my Carpenters a-land to the maine to search for Trees, who returned that night, and brought mee word that hee had seene some which would serue our turne.

The third, we beganne to vnlade the Samuel, and sent Carpenters a-land to cut downe Trees, hauing leaue of the Alcayda, who came aboard and dined with me, I gaue him a piece of Roan cloth, which I bought of the Frenchman, and other Trifles.

The fifteenth, we made an end of watering, all our Caske being full: we stowed all our Boats this night and fitted to be gone the next morning. This place of Cape Verde is the best place I know for our outward bound ships: for that the Road is excellent good, fit for dispatch of any businesse, and fresh fish to be had in great plentie: besides it is not any thing out of the way. I called a Countell of Captaine Downton and the Masters what course was best to hold till wee came to the Line, so it was concluded South South-west for sixtie leagues: and then South South-East til we grew neere the Line, and then to hale ouer Easterly. We dismissed the Samuel.

The foure and twentieth of Iuly, we came into the Road of Saldanha, and saluted the Dutch Admirall with fve Pieces of Ordnance, and hee returned the like, there were also other two Holland ships which came to make traine Oyle of Seales: they had made three hundred Pipes.

This day I went a-land and found out the names of Captaine Keeling, and others bound home in Iauary, 1609. And also my Brother Dauids name bound out in August the ninth, 1609. And also a Letter buried vnder ground according to agreement made betweene him and mee in England: it was so consumed with the dampe of the aire, that I could not reade any part thereof. The fixe and twentieth, we set vp a Tent for my sicke men, and then we had them all a land to aire our ships. From this day, till the day of our departure, not any thing happened worth the writing.

The bay of S.
Augustine in S.
Lawrence.

The sixt of September, latitude twentie three degrees thirtie minutes, the winde all Southerly a good gale: this day after dinner we saw land, and before night wee came to an anchor in S. Augustines Bay, where we found the Vnion distressed for lacke of victualls. The seuenth day, I went in my Pinnasse a land to see if I could get any fresh victualls: but we could not get any: wee got wood and water aboard, and so returned to our Ships.

The tenth, we steered alongst the land with a good gale of wind at South-east, making account we should haue gone at least twentie fixe leagues, but we went but twentie two leagues, by reason the Current setteth to the Southward: her course North two and twentie leagues. The eleuenth, we steered from noone till night North North-east along the land, which was North  $\frac{1}{2}$  a point Easterly way, and till midnight North North-west. From midnight till day North by West, and so till noone North, all her true way North North-west  $\frac{1}{2}$  a point, North twentie seuen leagues. We haue a great Current against vs: for I made account wee should haue gone five and thirtie leagues: I obserued, and the latitude was one and twentie degrees five minutes, wind East South-East. The twelfth, we steered betweene the North North-east, and North by East, her true way North Westerly  $\frac{1}{2}$  of a point, latitude nineteene degrees, fortie eight minutes, shee ranne twentie seuen leagues. The Current we find this last foure and twentie houres, setteth to the North-ward, the wind variable.

Queriba in 11.
degrees tenne minures, neere
the coast of Africa.

The thirteenth, we steered with little wind and calmes for the most part North by East, her true way North  $\frac{1}{2}$  part West, the wind as the day before: she went fifteene leagues more then I would haue giuen her; so that I find the Current setteth to the North-ward, by my obseruation, latitude nineteene degrees tenne minutes. The twentieth at noone, her latitude eleuen degrees ten minutes, the wind vering Easterly, with calmes, variation twelue degrees fortie minutes. This afternoone we saw land, being the Iles of Queriba, which are dangerous low. Ilands, environed with rockes and shoales.

The first of October, 1610. wee steered North-east, her way North-east by North  $\frac{1}{4}$ . North twenty seuen leagues, the wind for the most part South-east. The second, we steered North-east, her way North-east by North  $\frac{1}{4}$ . North fiftie seuen leagues. Note the Current hath carried vs these eight and fortie houres to the North-ward, more then by reckoning we could giue her by twentie eight leagues, which we found true by our latitude, which was three degrees thirtie minutes South latitude: variation twelue degrees twenty foure minutes, wind South and South-east. The third, we steered North-east by East, her true way North-east  $\frac{1}{4}$ . North fortie one leagues, which is twelue leagues, carried by the Current to the North-wards: for I should haue giuen her but nine and twentie leagues, latitude two degrees South, the winds variable betweene the South and South-east.

We crost the Equinectiall.

The fourth, we steered North-east by East, her true way North-east  $\frac{1}{4}$ . point Northerly fortie five leagues; whereof foureteene leagues carried with the Current, South latitude foureteene minutes, variation thirteene degrees, wind variable, betweene the South-east and South, we crost the line this afternoone. The fifth, we steered twelue houres North-east by East, and twelue houres East North-east, her true way North-east, little Northerly fortie seuen leagues: shee hath been carried to the North by the Current at the least twenty leagues, latitude North one degree thirtie minutes, the wind for the most part South South-east, with sometimes almost calme. The sixt, we steered East by North, and East North-east: her true way North-east by East little Easterly thirtie eight leagues, helped by the Current to the North-ward eightene leagues: latitude two degrees thirtie minutes, the wind South South-east, variation foureteene degrees two minutes.

They loose the

The seuenth, we steered East by North, her true way East North-east  $\frac{1}{4}$ . point Northerly, eight and twentie leagues: latitude three degrees five minutes, wind all Southerly: variation fifteene degrees, by the Current tenne leagues. The eighth, we steered East North-east, her true way North-east by East  $\frac{1}{4}$ . point, Northerly fortie leagues: latitude foure degrees twentie seuen minutes, the wind South-west, variation sixteene degrees foure minutes. The ninth, wee steered North-east by East, her true way North-east  $\frac{1}{4}$ . a point Northerly twenty seuen leagues, latitude five degrees, three and twentie minutes, wind South-west, variation sixteene degrees foure minutes.

The tenth calme: Latitude in five degrees, one and twenty minutes. Here we lost the Current that set to the North-ward, and were carried to the South-ward two miles, variation seuteene degrees tenne minutes. The eleuenth, calme, latitude five degrees twentie minutes, lost one mile. The twelfth, calme, latitude five degrees, lost by being carried to the South-ward twentie miles. The thirteenth, we steered two watches North-east, and foure watches North North-east: her true way as I gueſt North North-east, by reason the Current counteruailes the variation, shee ranne seuteene leagues: latitude five degrees, fiftie five minutes, the wind West by North, variation nineteene degrees tenne minutes.

The foureteenth, we steered North, her way allowing her variation, which is nineteene degrees

grees fortie minutes, should be one point  $\frac{1}{4}$ . to the West-ward; but the variation daily rising, sheweth we are carried to the East-ward by the Current, more then the variation commeth vnto, A Current. she went this day forty leagues, the wind West South-west, latitude seuen degrees fifteene minutes: her true way North-east, carried to the East tenne leagues. The fifteenth, wee steered North, our latitude eight degrees fifty five minutes, her true way North-east fortie five leagues, her way should haue been North by West, Westerly by the variation, but the Current hath carried her to the East-ward of her course seuentene leagues: the variation nineteen degrees five minutes, the wind West South-west.

The sixteenth, we steered away North, her way by the Current, North by East thirtie sixe Dua Irmanas, leagues, carried contrary to the variation five leagues to the East-ward, as I imagine: the wind South South-west, variation nineteene degrees eight minutes. The seuenteenth, wee steered North, and ranne nineteene leagues: in the morning early wee did see the Dua Irmanas sixe The Ile of Ca- leagues off, bearing North by West of vs: the wind at South-west, variation eightene degrees cotoia. fiftie five minutes. The eighteenth at night, we came to an anchor in a sandy Bay, in the Ile of Zacotora, whose latitude was twelue degrees twenty five minntes: in the euening we went on land with our Sayne, and got great store of fish: wind East.

The one and twentieth, we weighed for to ply for the road of Tamarin, the chiefe towne of Tamarin. the Iland, but we found the wind at the East, and East by South, which was right as wee should goe, so that we could not get the place till the five and twentieth day. The latitude of Tamarin The casting a- is twelue degrees thirtie minutes, the variation is nineteene degrees eightene minutes. The way of the A- Towne standeth at the foote of high ragged hills: the road is all open betweene the East by scension. North, and West North-west. We anchored in ten fathomes water, good ground. The five and twentieth in the afternoon, I sent M. Femel well accompanied ashore, with a present to the King, which was a vest of cloth, a peice of Plate, and a Sword blade; he promised all kindneses.

The fixe and twentieth, I went on shore with the chiefe Merchants with me, and a good guard of armed men: I was conducted to the Kings house, where at his chamber doore he came and entertained me: he brought me into his Chamber, where being set in a chaire by him, there passed many complements, which I omit. I enquired concerning the trade of the Red Sea; and he commended it highly, saying, the people of Aden and Moha were good people, and would bee glad The King en- of trade with vs; and that the Ascension had sold all her goods there at good rates, and came so ertaineth Sir lightly to this place, that they tooke in good store of Ballast. This newes gaue me good content: Henry Middle- I demaunded leaue to set vp my Pinnasse vpon his Iland, but he would not graunt it in this roade; ton. but if I would returne, and doe it at the place where we first anchored, he was content: he feared if we stayed in this roade of Tamarin to let her vp, we would feare all men for comming thither. He had sent all his Alloes to Fartaque to his Father, King of that part of Arabia Felix: his chiefe Fartaque in A- Citie is called Chushem, where he is resiednt. I asked him leaue to wood and water: for the one, rabia. which was water, he gaue me free leaue; but for wood I must pay very deare, if I would haue any; Chushem or saying withall, That all other Nations which came thither, payed for their water; but of mee he Cainem. would not demaund any thing. He confirmed the losse of the Ascension, and her Pinnasse, which 60 was no little grieffe to me to heare. I demaunded if they had left any writing behind them; hee answered me, he had one, but his seruant had lost it; I was very earnest to haue seene it; but it could not be found. He animated me to goe for the Red Sea, but diswaded me from seeking trade in the Countrey of Fartaque: for that he doubts his Father would not permit vs. I and all my people dined with the King, which beeing done, I tooke my leaue, and went aboard.

The seauenth of Nouember, we steered West by South, and West South-west alongst the Land: we sawe about tenne of the clocke an high land, which we imagined to be the high land of Aden, Aden. it riseth like Abbadel-Curia, and may be seene a great way off. In the euening about fixe of the clocke, we came to an anchor before the Towne in twenty fathome water, sandy ground. The Towne standeth at the foote of a Mountaine in a Vale, and maketh a faire shew: it is inuironed 50 with a stone wall, and Forts and Bulwarks in many places; but how they be appoointed we know not. This night there came a small Boat from the Towne to view vs, but came not aboard: the wind East South-east we stood in, standing ouer we were carried to the East-ward with the Current at least twentie leagues, contrary to our expectation, who rather thought the Current would haue set to the West-wards.

The eighth, came a small Boat off the Towne aboard, with three Arabians in her: they said they were sent by the Lieftenant of the Towne, to know what Nation we were, and wherefore we came thither, sending vs word by them, if we were Englishmen, we were heartily welcome, and that the yeere before, Captaine Sharpeigh had been there, and from thence went to Moha, where he made sale of all his goods: I demaunded of one of them the name of the Basha, and Captain Shar- whether he were a good man: he answered, his name was Jeffer Basha, and that the Basha that last peigh had been was, was very bad, this a little better; but all the Turkes in generall starke naught. I asked, if Moha at Aden and were a good place of trade: they answered, that there was one man in Moha, that would buy Moha, in the all our goods: I sent my Pinnasse a land, and John Williams one of my Factors in her, who spake yeere 1609. the Arabique language, at their comming a shore they were kindly entertained.

The

The ninth in the morning, I sent my Pinnasse ashore for a Pilot for Moha: in the meane while the Boate was ashore, we brought our selues loose, and vnder sayle: they returned without a Pilot, and would not let vs haue any, without three of our chiefe Merchants to be left for pledges: they intreated me not to depart with all our ships, but to leaue one for that Port; and that they would buy all the goods in her; we beeing desirous of trade vpon good consideration, thought fit to leaue the Pepper-corne there, and the other two to goe for Moha, whereupon we did what we could to get the Road againe, but could not, beeing carried to Lee-ward with the Current: wee anchored to the South-ward of the Towne: I sent M. Fowler and John Williams aland, to tell them I minded to leaue one of the ships there to trade, so that they would let me haue a Pilot. They seemed very glad that one of the ships should tarry, and promised me a Pilot the next day.

The twelfth, I seeing no hope of any Pilot to be had (which had been often promised, but not performed) dispatched my businesse with the Pepper-corne: and about noone, I and the Darling set saile for Moha: the wind East South-east, wee steered alongst the land sometimes West South-west, and West by North, in twentie eight and thirtie fathome, we saw a small sayle going before vs, which we followed till we had lost sight of her by night. This coast is high land, with many head-lands.

The thirteenth, we haled on our course alongst the land, all this night steering betweene the West by North, and most by South, her true way West. The next day betimes we saw the head-land going into the Red Sea, rising like an Iland; about eleuen of the clocke wee were thwart of the entrance, being but three miles broad: on the North side is a ragged land like an Iland, and on the other side is a flat low Iland, called Babelmandel: vpon the South of the Iland there seemeth to be a broad channell or entrance. After we had passed this straight of Babelmandel, vpon the North shore in a sandie Bay is a Village, to which place I sent my Pinnasse for a Pilot: they staid not long, but returned with a couple of Arabs, who tooke vpon them to be very skilfull. Our depth in the straights was betweene eight and eleuen fathome water (betweene the straight and Aden is thirty leagues) we steered alongst the land North by West, and North North-west, betweene eightene and twentie fathomes deepe: about foure of the clocke we discied the Towne of Moha: and about fise a clocke in luffing in beeing much wind, we split our maine toppe sayle, and putting abroad our mizen, it split likewise: our Pilots brought our shippe a ground vpon a banke of sand, the wind blowing hard, and the Sea somewhat high, which made vs all doubt her comming off. This night came a Boat aboard of vs from the Towne, with a Turke in her, a proper man, sent by the Gouvernour of the Towne, to know what we were, and wherefore wee came thither. I told him we were English Merchants, that came to seeke trade: he answered, if we were Englishmen we were hartily welcome, and should not faile of that we looke for: for Alexander Sharpeigh had sold all his goods there, and we might doe the like. And for the grounding of the ship, he made nothing of it, saying, It was ordinary for great ships of India to come a ground, and yet neuer heard that any of them sustained any harme thereby: he made hast to goe ashore, to certifie the Aga what we were, with promise in the morning to returne with Boates to lighten our ship. This man, as I afterward vnderstood, is called Lord of the Sea, for that his office is to go aboard all ships that come thither, and to see Lighters sent aboard to discharge the ships, and to search that they steale no custome: for which Office, hee hath diuerse duties, which is his onely maintenance.

The fourteenth in the morning early; he returned with three or foure Turkes more in his company, whereof two of them spake Italian, they brought me a small Present from the Aga, which commendations and offer of any thing the Countrey could afford me, with heartie welcome to his Port, saying, we should haue as good and free Trade as wee had in Stambola, Aleppo, or any part of the Turkes Dominions, with many other Complements: there came with them foure or fise Lighters, in which we put any thing that came first to hand, to lighten the ship. Master Femell went a-land in one of them before I was aware thereof, carrying all he had in the ship with him. Wee sent all our Money, Elephants teeth, and all our shot aboard the Darling: wee laid out our Anchors to passe, and in the Euening proued if we could heaue her off, but could not make her stirre, which was no small grieffe to me.

The fifteenth, we did what we could to lighten our ship, sending some goods a-land and some aboard the Darling, I had a Letter from Master Femell, wherein hee certified mee of kind enter-taynment by the Aga, and that he had agreed for Custome to pay fise pound the hundred for all we should sell, and that we could not sell to be returned aboard custome free. Likewise the Aga sent me a Letter vnder his hand and Seale, proffering himselfe and any thing the Countrey afforded to bee at my disposing, with many other Complements; about fise a clocke wee began to heaue at our Cap-staynes, and by Gods great mercy shee went off to all our comforts.

The nineteenth, came two Boates from the shore sent by Master Femell for Iron, which I caused them to fetch from the Darling. I writ to Master Femell not to send for any more goods a-land, for that I would see sale of those he had already before I would depart with any more. I receiued a Letter from Master Femell, if that I minded to haue Trade, I must come a-land according to the custome of the place, otherwise they would not be perswaded but that wee were men men of Warre. Likewise, the Aga sent our Interpreter to me to intreate me to come a land, if I were a Merchant and friend to the great Turke, and hoped for Trade: Alledging that Captaine Sharpeigh and all the Indian Captaines did the like.

The twentieth, I went a land, I was received at the water side by diuers chiefe men, and with Musicke brought to the Aga House; where were assembled all the chiefe men of the Towne: my entertaynement by the Aga and the rest, was with extraordinarie great kindnesse, I was seated close to the Aga, all men else standing, where he held me with Complements, many times bidding me welcome, offering himselfe and the Countrey to be at my seruice: I deliuered his Majesties Letter with a Present to the Basha, which I desired might be sent him vp with all speed. Likewise I gave the Aga a Present, which he tooke very kindly, telling me, I and my people should haue as good and peaceable Trade, as any of our Nation had in any parts of the Turkes Dominions, and that if any man in the Towne offered me or any of my people wrong, he would see them seuerely punished; he caused me to stand vp, & one of his chiefe men put vpon my backe a Vest of Crimson silke and laker, saying, Enadde not to doubt of any euill; for that was the Gran Seniors protection. After some few Complements I tooke my leaue; I was mounted vpon a Gallant Horse with rich Furniture, a great man leading my Horse; and so, in my new Coate with the Musicke of the Towne conueiged to the English House: where I stayed Dinner, and presently after went aboard. Much he intreated my stay on shore, which I yielded to for building my Pinnasse, the daies following being also forced by foule weather.

§. II.

Turkish treacherie at Moha and Aden with the English.

Ne day past not, but I had some small present or other sent mee by the Aga, with commendations from him, to know if I lacked any thing. On the eight and twentieth day twice he sent me commendations, willing me to be merry, and when their time of Fasting was done (which was almost expired) hee would haue me ride abroad with him to his Gardens, and other places of pleasure to make merry. This afternoone came Master Pemberton a land for Coco Nuts. I caused him to stay Supper with mee, which beeing done, he tooke his leaue to goe aboard, but the Turkes would not permit him, saying, it was too late, but in the morning he should goe as timely as he would. I sent to intreate that he might go, but it would not be granted. All this time we suspected no harme, but thought it was ouer-much curiositie in the Officer, who wee thought had done it without order, of which the next day I thought to haue complayned to the Aga.

The Sunne being set (according to my wonted order) I caused stooles to bee set at the doore, where my selfe, Master Fennell, and Master Pemberton sat to take the fresh aire, expecting nothing of the present ensuing harme that did befall vs. About eight of the clocke, came a Ianizary from the Aga to deliuer some message to mee, but wee could not vnderstand him for lacke of an Interpreter; I sent my man to looke for one of my company that spake the Turkish Tongue, my Interpreter presently came, by whom I vnderstood the effect of the Ianizaries message, which was, that the Aga had sent me commendations, willing me to be merry, for that hee had received good newes from the Basha. And as hee was about to say somewhat else, my man returnes in great feare, telling vs wee were all betrayed: for that the Turkes and my people were by the eares at the backe of the House. The Turke that sate by, was desirous to know what was the matter, which wee tolde him, hee presently rose vp, and willed my man to shew him where they were, diuers of my Company running after them, to see what was the matter. And I my selfe ranne after them, calling vpon them as loud as I could, to returne backe and make good our House: but whiles I was thus speaking, I was strooke vpon the head downe to the ground by one which came behind me; I remained as dead till such time as they had bound my hands behind mee, and so strait that the extreame paine thereof brought mee to my memorie. As soone as they saw me stirre they lifted me vpon my feet, and led me betweene two of them to the Agas: where I found diuers of my Companie in like taking as I was my selfe. By the way the Souldiers pillaged mee, and tooke from mee such money as I had about mee, and three gold Rings, whereof one was my Seale, the other had seuen Diamonds which were of good worth, and the third a Gimmall Ring. When all of vs that escaped with life in this bloudie Massacre, were brought together, then beganne they to put vs in Irons: my selfe with seuen more were chained by the neckes all together: other some their feete, other their hands; this being done, they left two Souldiers to guard vs, the rest departed, these Souldiers had compassion of vs, and eased vs of our bands, for the most of vs had our hands so strait bound behind vs, that the blood was readie to burst out at our fingers ends, with pain vn sufferable, but we were bound to endure it. After I had received this ease of my hands and armes (though still ouer-charged with griefe of heart) not only for my owne necessitie (and these with me) but also for the safetie of the ships, which I greatly greatly doubted, knowing the couetous Turkes would leaue no Villanie nor Treason vnattempted; for the surprizing of them, we began to reason amongst our selues, what should be the reason or cause of this their villanous vsage of vs; and withall, I demanded how it began, and if any of our Company were slaine. I was certified by those of my Company that did see it, and hardly escaped themselves, that Francis Slanny, Iohn Lanslot, and sixe more were slaine, and that foure- teene of our Company there present were grievously wounded, and that our House was round begirt with armed Souldiers, who, at the instant I was strooke downe, sallied out vpon vs, and their merciless crueltie towards vs, that had not where withall to defend our selues, much lesse to offend them. Now hauing gone through their first pretence of mischiefe, not being satisfied with Christian blood, they aymed at our ships and goods. For about ten of the clocke, they armed three great Boates with one hundred and fiftie Souldiers in them to take the Darling, who rode somewhat neere the shore. The Boates put from the shore altogether, the Turkes tooke off their white Tuckes, because they would be thought to be Christians, and all ioyntly boarded her, and entred most of their men: it was so sudden, that three of the Darlings men were slaine, before they could get downe: the rest betake them to their close fight. Now it pleased God in mercie to looke vpon vs, and not to suffer any more Christian blood to be shed. For the Captaine of them, which is called Emier-bahare or Lord of the Sea, called to his Souldiers to cut the Tables in the House, the Souldiers not understanding him, many of them leapt into the Boates, and cut the Boate Ropes, and so droue away: by this time our men had gotten them to their Weapons, and to their close fights, the Turkes standing very thicke in the waste, hallowing and clanging their Swords vpon the Decke, one of the Company threw a bigge Barrell of Powuer amongst them, and after it a Fire-brand; which tooke so good effect, that it burned diuers of them: the rest for their better safetie (as they thought) retyred to the halfe Deck and the Poope, where they were set off with Musket shot, and entertained with another trayne of Powder, which put them in such feare, that they leaped into the Sea, hanging by the ships side, desiring mercy, which was not there to be found, for that our men killed all they could finde, and the rest were drowned, only one man was saued, who hid himselfe till the furie was past, who yeilded and was receiued to mercie. Thus God of his goodnesse and mercie deliuered our ship and men out of the hands of our Enemies, for which his holy Name be blessed and prayesd euermore, Amen.

Now let vs looke backe to vs imprisoned at Moha. The Boats returning brought newes the ship was taken, for which there was great reioycing. The Gouverneur sent off the Boats againe with order to bring the ship: when they came so farre off as where the ship did ride, they found her gone from thence vnder saile standing off, so that they returned and told the Aga the ship had escaped and was gone, and that they thought Emier Bahars and his Souldiers were taken Prisoners: which newes was nothing pleasing vnto him. Before day he sent our Interpreter to tell me the small ship was taken: which I did verily beleue to bee true; when it was day I was sent for to come to the Aga, so I and seven more which were chained by the neckes with mee came before him. He with a frowning (and not his wonted dissembling) countenance, asked mee how I durst be so bold as to come into this their Port of Moha, so neere their holy Citie of Mec- ca; I answered, it was not vnknowne vnto him wherefore I came thither, hauing long before certified him thereof, and that I came not a-land but at his earnest instigation with many promises of kind and good vsage; he answered it was not lawfull for any Christian to come so neere their holy Citie of Medina, this being the Port or Doore thereof, and that the Basha had expresse order from the great Turke, to captivate all Christians that should come into those Seas, although they had his owne passe. I told him the fault was his, that he had not told mee so much at the first, but deluded vs with faire promises: he gaue me a Letter to reade of Captaine Downton that came from Aden, dated long before, the effect whereof was, that two of his Merchants and Purser were detayned ashore, and that they would not be releated without landing of Merchandize, or paying of fifteene hundred Venetianos for Anchorage, and withall, to be aduised by me what he had best to doe, after I had read it, hee bade mee tell him the effect thereof: which I did, hee told me since the writing of this Letter, the ship was comming from this place, and that she was cast away vpon a Rocke, and that all the goods and men were lost (this was cold comfort to mee to heare) he willed me to write a Letter aboord, to know how many Turkes were in the small ship. I told him that should not need, for that they had taken the ship, hee answered that shee was once taken and possessed by them, but shee was rescued by the great ship and taken from them againe, and therefore willed me to write to them aboard the great shippe, to come all of them a-land, and yeeld the ship into his hands, and he would let vs haue the small ship to carrie vs home. I said it was a folly to write any such thing: for they that were aboard and had their libertie were no such Fooles, as vpon my Letter to forsake the ship and goods, and come a-land and bee slaines. He said, he knew if I did write a Letter to that effect, they durst not disobey me. I told him I would write no such Letter, he enquired what store of money was in our shippes. I answered, little, and that was not for Merchandize but to buy Victuals. Hee asked what store of Victuals and Water? I told him enough for two yeares, which hee would not beleue. He vrged mee againe to write, to will them to come all ashore and yeeld the ship, or he would cut off my head. I bade bade him doe so: for therein hee should doe me a great pleasure, for I was weary of my life, but write to that effect I neuer would.

I was taken out of my Chaine and Celler, and a great paire of Fetters clapt vpon my legges, and Manacles vpon my hands, and so separated from the rest of my company: they stowed mee all that day in a dirty Dogges Kennell vnder a paire of staires: at night, at the intreatie of Sher-mall Consul of the Bahians, I was taken out and placed in a better roome, one more of my Company which spake Turkish being with me. My lodging was vpon the hard ground, and my pillow a stone, my companions to keepe me waking were grieffe of heart and multitude of Rats: which if I chanced to sleepe, would awake me with running ouer me. About mid-night came the 10 Lieutenant of the Aga, and our Trugman entreating me very fairely to write my Letter aboard, to know how many Turkes were aboard Prisoners, and what were their names, but in any case willed me not to write any thing of the losse of our men, nor of my owne and my peoples hard vsage, but to say we were detayned in the Aga House (where wee lacked not any thing) till further order came from the Basha. This Letter I did willingly write, and to the same effect they willed me, but withall willing them to looke well to their ships and Boat, and to haue a care to their men, that not any of them came aland for feare of Treason. This Letter they had with them, and examined two or three of my men whether I had so written.

This Letter was not sent; for that they could not get any man to goe aboard with it, but now they had found a man who was there present would undertake to carrie it aboard, so that I 20 would write they should vse him well and doe him no harme; this man was borne in Tunes in Barbary, and spake good Italian. I writ the Letter as they desired; which was perused as was the former, and the next day was sent aboard, and answere returned, the effect was that all the Turkes were slaine and drowned saue one, whose name was Ruffman, a common Souldier, and that they were glad to heare I was aliue: for the Prisoner Turke told them, he thought we were all slaine. We continued in this misery till the fifteenth of December, not hearing any thing from the ships, nor they from vs. The Aga came diuers times to me, sometimes with threats, sometimes with faire meanes, to haue me write that all our people should come ashoare and yeeld vp the shippes: I still answered him as I did at the first. Hee was desirous to know what money was in the shippe, and what store of water. I answered him, Money had we little, but 30 victuall had we enough for two yeares. He was in hope for lacke of water and victuals to haue the ships yeeld vnto him, knowing that we could not haue a wind to carrie vs out of the straight till May: he said, he marvelled how so great a charge could be borne with so small a stocke. I answered, we had Factories in diuers places in India, who had stocke enough in their hands to loade vs if we had brought neuer a peny worth of Commodities with vs, and that stocke wee had was sufficient to lade our ships with Pepper, which in India was good cheape.

They in the ships were very euill to passe riding in an open and wide Roade, the wind blowing continually hard at South South-east, enclosed round with shoales, their water beginning to faile them, for that we had staued fiftie Tunnes to lighten our ship at our comming a ground: and hearing nothing from vs aland made them at their wits ends, not knowing well what to do:
40 they being in this perplexitie, an honest fellow in the ship called John Chambers offered them to goe ashore to see what was become of vs, and to put his life and libertie in venture rather then see men liue in this discontent, which he effected; & also this day being the fifteenth of December, with a Flagge of Truce was set vpon a small Island, a little to wind-ward of the Towne, he had one of our Indians with him for his Interpreter: they were brought before the Aga, who asked him how he durst be so bold to come ashore without leaue; he answered he came with a Flag of Truce, & was but a Messenger, which was permitted amongst enemies. He asked what message he had to deliuer. He said, a Letter to me, and likewise if he would giue him leaue to see how wee did. They examined him and the Indian very strictly what store of victuall and water was in the ships, they both answered as I formerly had done, that there was enough of all sorts of victuals for two yeares.

This being done they brought him to my darke Cell; who comming out of the light was a great while before he could see me, Hee deliuered me the Letter with watery eyes to see mee so fettered hands and feet in Irons. I demanded how he came ashore? He told me after what manner, and how he was examined by the Aga. I told him I thought they would not permit him to returne aboard, for that not few dayes before one of the Pepper-Corne men was come from Aden with a Letter to me, and they kept him Prisoner, and would not permit him to returne, nor giue him leaue to goe aboard our ships. He answered he came with that resolution from aboard, to take such part as I did, if they would bee so villanously minded to stay him being but a Messenger.

60 The sixteenth, I returned answere of my Letter sent me, and deliuered it to Chambers, and contrary to my expectation, they let him and the Indian returne to the Boate, with leaue to come againe the next day if they had occasion: the next day Chambers returnes alone, for the Indian was so frightened that he durst not come: my man sent me diuers things by him, but the Aga was my Receiver and kept them to his owne vse, thinking them too good for mee; hee returnes aboord, and leaues vs to our wonted miserie, attending daily what should become of vs; looking euery houre for the sentence from the Basha, of Death, or perpetuall imprisonment or captiuitie. Yet God dealt more mercifully with vs, who neuer faileth them that put their trust in him.

For vpon the twentieth of December, came downe from Zenan an Aga, Captaine or Chiefe of the Chawffes, with order to bring vs vp all. At his first lighting he was desirous to see me & my poore Company; there were three Chaires brought into my Roome, wherein Regib Aga, Ismael (which was the Meflenger from the Basha) and Iasfer Aga leated themselues. Regib Aga began to aske me how I durst be so bold as to come into that Countrey so neere their holy Citie, without a Passe from the Gran Senior? I answered, the King my Master was in league and amitie with the Gran Senior, and that in the Articles of peace, it was allowed vs free Trade in all his Dominions, and this being part of his Dominions there needed no passe. Hee answered, this was the doore of their holy Citie, and therefore not lawfull for any Christian to come hither; Likewise, he asked me, If I did not know the Gran Seniors Sword was long; I answered wee were not taken by the Sword, but by Treason, and if I and my people were aboard, I cared not for the length of his or all their Swords; he said it was proudly spoken of me. Also he willed, as formerly he had done many times, to write a Letter aboard to command all the men out of the ships, and yeeld themselues to the Basha; and receiued like answer.

Ismael Aga broke off this idle speech, by telling me he was come from the Basha, with expresse order from him to conduct me and all my people to Zenan, and therefore willed mee to send aboard for warme clothes, for that wee should find it very cold in the Mountaine Countrey. I prayed him if it were possible that my poore men might bee sent aboard, and that I and some few more might be sent vp. Hee said it was not in him to remedie it, for it was the Bashes order we should all goe vp: Regib Aga said I should haue my desire, that I and five more should goe vp with me, and the rest must abide where they are, till further order from the Basha. This was the eighteenth day of December.

He two and twentieth of December, our Irons were knockt off all our legges, saue the Carpenters and Smithes, and some sicke men that were not able to trauell: the Carpenters and Smithes were kept there to build vp the Pinnasse; and my selfe, and foure and thirtie persons more of vs, were appointed to goe vp for Zenan, the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, where the Basha is resident. About foure of the clocke we set out of Moba, all my Company beeing mounted vpon Asses, and my selfe and M. Femel vpon Horse-backe. About ten of the clocke in the night, being tenne or twelue miles from Moba, Master Pemberton slipt away from vs; we missed him our selues presently, but said not any thing, the best helpe we were able to doe him, he had; which was in beseeching God to send him safe aboard, for the attempt was very desperate. About one of the clocke after midnight, we came to our Inne at a Towne called Mowssi: they told vs all at our comming thither: yet missed not him that was wanting. We continued in this lodging till foure of the clocke in the afternoone the next day. At our setting out of doore they told vs, and found one missing: the Aga inquired of me how many we were that set out of Moba. I told him I could not well tell, but as I thought we were foure and thirty of vs: he said, we were five and thirtie, and that one was missing: I said, it was more then I did know. The chiefeft cause that mooued M. Pemberton to take this desperate action in hand, was to see so many of vs carried vp together manacled, with a Captaine, and a guard of Souldiers to conduct vs, which he could imagine to no other end, then death or captiuitie, which was the opinion of vs all. I found a great friend of one Hamet Aga, who sent me diuers Presents, and willed me to be of good comfort, for my cause was good: he sent me and my people prouision of Bread for our iourney, and withall his letters to the Kaba.

Likewise, the Consul of the Bannians, who came euery day to visit me, and neuer came empty handed, and Tookebar was our great friend all the time we were there prisoners, and euery day failed not to send to each man, being one and fiftie in number, two cakes of white bread, and a quantitie of Dates, or Plantans: he departed from Moba two dayes before vs for Zenan, promising me at his departure to doe all he could with the Basha for our good: which promise, I thinke, he well performed: for at Zenan I was told by diuers, he laboured hard in our buinesse, both with the Basha and his Cayba, which is a verie discret man, and gouernes the Kingdome.

day: where we were marshalled into the Citie two and two in a ranke, as they doe at * Stambola with captives taken in the warres, our Aga riding in triumph as a great Conquerour, beeing met a mile out of the Towne with the chiefe men of the Citie on Horse-back, multitudes of people standing all the way gazing and wondering at vs: thus were we vsed in all Cities and Townes we passed through. A youth of M. Pemberton fell sicke in this Towne, and was left with the Gouvernour thereof, for that he was not able to trauell. I kept no Iournal from this time forward; but this I remember, we found it very cold all the way from Tyes to Zenan, our lodging being the cold ground; I bought most of our men, which were slenderly clothed, furred gownes to keepe them from the cold; otherwise, I thinke, they would haue starued. I would not beleuee at Moba, when I was told of the cold wee should haue vponwards, and that made me goe but thinly clothed my selfe; but experience taught me otherwaies, wishing when it was too late, I had come better provided. Zenan is from Moba an hundred and eightie miles, or thereabouts, as I iudge, North North-west. It is in the latitude of sixteene degrees fiftene minutes, which I obserued by an instrument I made there.

Euery morning the ground was couered with horie frost: and in Zenan wee had Ice a finger thicke in one night, which I could hardly haue beleueed, had I not seene it. Wee were fiftene dayes betweene Moba and Zenan. The fifth of Ianuary two houres before day, we came within two miles of the Citie, where we lay vpon the ground till it was faire day, being much pinched by the cold, not beeing able scarce to stand we were so benumbed. About a mile from the Towne we were met by the Subbassie or Sheriffe, with at least two hundred Shot, Drummes, and Trumpets: we were caused to goe one by one in order, a pretty distance one from the other, to make the better shew; our men had their gownes taken from them, and were caused to march a foote in their thinne and ragged suites: the souldiers lead the way, after came our men one by one; our Trumpeters were placed next before me, and commanded by the Aga to sound; but I forbad them: after the Trumpets came M. Femel and my selfe on Horse-backe; and lastly came our Aga riding in Triumph, with a spare horse richly furnished led before him. In this order wee were led through the heart of the Citie till we came to the Castle, all the way beeing so full of people, we could hardly passe for them. At the first gate, there was a good guard of armed souldiers: the second gate had two great pieces of Ordnance, readie mounted at the entry thereof: after we had passed this gate, we came to a spacious yard, twice the length of the Exchange in London; the souldiers at the entry of the Gate discharged their shot, and placed themselves amongst many others that were there before them, some on the one side, and some on the other, and a lane left in the midst. At my first comming in I alighted, and was placed on the one side with my men; where I had not staied long, but I and M. Femel were brought before the Basha: it was their Dinano or Counsell day: at the vpper end of the yard, we mounted vpon a paire of staires some twelue steps high: at the head thereof, two great men came and tooke me by the wristes, and held mee very hard, and so led me to the Basha. The place where he was seated, was a long spacious gallery; at the vpper end thereof he was seated alone, many great men standing on each side of him, and others stood on either side, from the lower part of the Gallery to the vpper end, which made a good shew: the floore was couered all ouer with Turkie Carpets. When I came within two yards of him, we were stayed; He, with a frowning and angry countenance, demaunded of what Countrey I was, and what I made in thole parts? I answered, I was an Englishman, and a Merchant, and friend to the Grand Senior, and came to seeke trade. He said, It was not lawfull for any Christian to come into that Countrey, and that he had giuen warning to Captaine Sharpeigh, that no more of our Nation should come thither. I told him, Captaine Sharpeigh was cast away vpon the Coast of India, and came not to England to tell vs so much, which had we knowne, wee would neuer haue put our selues into that trouble we were in: I told him Regib Aga was the man that had abused me, in telling me we were welcome into the Countrey, and that we should haue as free trade as our Nation had in any part of Turkie, with many other faire promises, and that contrary to his word he assaulted vs with armed souldiers, and murthered diuers of my men, and tooke me and the rest prisoners: he said, Regib Aga was but his slaue, and had no such power as to passe his word to me without his leaue, and what was befallen to me and my people, was by his order to Regib Aga; and that he himselfe likewise had such order from the Gran Senior, so to chastise all Christians that should come into those parts. I told him we had receiued great harme, and if it pleased him to let vs returne to our ships, it would bee sufficient warning to our Nation, for euer comming in those parts againe. Hee said, No, hee could not so let vs depart, but that I should sit there and write my letters to the Ambassador at * Stambola, and he would likewise write to the Gran Senior, to know his pleasure what should become of vs, or whether he would permit vs trade, or no: he dismissed me for that present, and bad me goe to my lodging which was appointed for me, and take with me foure or fife more, such as I thought good: I and those I made choise of, were conueyed to the Keeper of the prisons house, and the rest carried to the common prison, where for their welcome they were clapt in waightie Irons; one of our youths at such time as I was brought before the Basha, thinking I was so led to haue my head strook off, fel in a sound with

For vpon the twentieth of December, came downe from Zenan an Aga, Captaine or Chiefe of the Chawsses, with order to bring vs vp all. At his first lighting he was desirous to see me & my poore Company; there were three Chaires brought into my Roome, wherein Regib Aga, Ismael (which was the Messenger from the Basha) and Iasfer Aga seated themselves. Regib Aga began to aske me how I durst be so bold as to come into that Countrey so neere their holy Citie, without a Passe from the Gran Senior? I answered, the King my Master was in league and amitie with the Gran Senior, and that in the Articles of peace, it was allowed vs free Trade in all his Dominions, and this being part of his Dominions there needed no passe. Hee answered, this was the doore of their holy Citie, and therefore not lawfull for any Christian to come hither; Likewise, he asked me, If I did not know the Gran Seniors Sword was long; I answered wee were not taken by the Sword, but by Treason, and if I and my people were aboard, I cared not for the length of his or all their Swords; he said it was proudly spoken of me. Also he willed, as formerly he had done many times, to write a Letter aboard to command all the men out of the ships, and yeeld themselves to the Basha; and receiued like answer.

Ismael Aga broke off this idle speech, by telling me he was come from the Basha, with expresse order from him to conduct me and all my people to Zenan, and therefore willed mee to send aboard for warme clothes, for that wee should find it very cold in the Mountaine Countrey. I prayed him if it were possible that my poore men might bee sent aboard, and that I and some few more might be sent vp. Hee said it was not in him to remedie it, for it was the Bashes order we should all goe vp: Regib Aga said I should haue my desire, that I and fise more should goe vp with me, and the rest must abide where they are, till further order from the Basha. This was the eighteenth day of December.

very feare, thinking his turne would not bee long after; hee fell sicke vpon it, and shortly after died.

The sixth of Ianuary, I was sent for to the Basha Caya, or Lieftenant generall of the Kingdome, to breake fast with him: after breake-fast I told him euery particular, how treacherously and vilely I was vsed by Regib Aga; he bad me be of good cheare, and not thinke of things past, which could not be remedied; and he doubted not but all would be wel in the end, and his best endeauours to do me good should not be wanting. Shermall the Bennian of Moha, had made this man our friend; then I departed with my Keepers to prison, where I was of better comfort then before.

A Moore of Cairo our great friend.

The seuenth day, I was sent for to the Caybas garden, where he feasted me and M. Femel, telling me, that shortly I and my people should haue libertie, and be sent to Moha, where I should haue redresse of all my wrongs, promising me to be my friend, and before many great Personages, Turkes and Arabs said, what kindnesse he did me was onely for Gods sake; but I well knew it was in hope of some great reward from me. Hamet Aga his letter did vs no small good. This day came to towne a Moore of Cairo, an old acquaintance of the Bashas, and one that had lent him great summes of money at his comming from Stambola, when he was but poore: this man was our next neighbour at Moha before, and when we were betrayed, and had a ship in Moha roade, bound for India, which he greatly doubted our ships would haue taken, in regard of the wrongs offered vs, but they let her quietly depart, contrary to his expectation, so that hee became our great friend: he writ his letter in our behalfe to the Basha, and therein did much blame him in vnting vs so hardly, saying, he went about to destroy the Countrey and trade, in taking such courses with vs: at his comming before the Basha, he iterated what he had written, and much more; willing him to haue a care, the Trade of the Red Sea were not destroyed by his meanes, and therefore counsell'd him to returne me all my goods, and to send me and my people away contented. His letter preuailed much with the Basha: for when he sent for vs vp, it was his purpose to haue put vs to death, and to haue made slaues of all the rest: none in the Countrey durst speake so boldly as he. Of this which I haue written concerning the Moore of Cairo, was I enformed by Shermall and Hamet Waddy, who were both present at reading the letter, and likewise heard the conference betweene the Basha and him. This Hamet Waddy is an Arabian Merchant, very rich dwelling at Zenan, and is called the Bashas Merchant: he stood my friend very much, in perswading the Basha that we might be kindly dealt withall, and suffered to depart.

The eighth, I made petition to the Basha, requesting, That whereas at my comming from Moha, I had willed the Commanders of my ships to forbear hostilitie for fise and twentie daies, and after to vse their discretions, if in that time they heard not from me; the time beeing almost expired, that the Basha would vouchsafe speedily to censure my cause, or giue me some comfortable news to write them, to stay them from doing harme, to which they might easily encline, being without Head or Gouverneur.

The eleuenth day, I was sent for to the Cayba, who told me that now all things were ended, and that my stay there was for the rest of my company which were comming from Aden, and that presently after their comming vp, we should all be sent to Moha.

M. Fowler, and eighteen more arriued at Zenan.

The seuenteenth, M. Fowler and eightene more of their Company arriued at Zenan; they were presently brought before the Basha, and such like questions demanded of them as hee did of me. Afterward, M. Fowler, John Williams, and Robert Mico were sent to keep me company, and all the rest to the Common prison to the rest of my men, where they were all put in irons, and their allowance from the Basha, browne bread and water, they would haue all died with hunger and cold, had not I releiued them better then the Basha.

The twentieth fifth, I was sent for to the Cahays garden, where we spent some houres in conference: he told me I should presently goe with him to the Bashas garden, where the Basha would haue conference with me: he counsell'd me to sooth him vp with faire words, and not crosse him in any thing; I asked him what he thought, whether he would surrender me all my goods: he said, he could not tell: I asked him whether I should haue my Pinnasse againe: he said likewise he could not tell: but in any case he willed me not to speake of it to the Basha, but at my comming to Moha to write my letters to him, and he would sollicite the Basha in my behalfe, and doubted not but to obtaine it for me: I told him, I thought it fitter to demand it now, then hereafter; for that I was desirous to know what to trust vnto: he bad me vse my discretion. The chiefeft cause that made this man our friend, was for a summe of money which I had promised to giue him: he would not be seene to meddle therein himselfe, but appointed Shermall, Consull of the Bannians, to treat with me concerning the same: he demaunded much, and I was willing to part with nothing. We spent three or foure dayes consulting this businesse, in the ende I was constrained to giue them content, in promising after my deliuerie to pay him fiftene hundred Venetian shillings: which beeing done, the Cayba tooke Horle and rid to the Bashas garden, and bad our Truchman bring me and M. Femel thither. When we came to the garden doore, wee staid an houre before we were admitted to the Bashas presence: we found him seated in a Summer-house, in a chaire, his Cayba standing at his right hand, and halfe a douzen others at the backe of the Chaire. I was lead lead by two men, which held me by the cloake till I came within two paces of him; and there they stayed me, M. Femel comming behind me at libertie, without his leaders: he demaunded of me how I did, and bad me be of good cheare, for that shortly I and all my people should haue their libertie, and be sent to Moha, where I with twentie nine more should remaine, till all the ships of India were come into Moha, and the rest to be sent aboard; and when all the said ships were come in, and the winds setled Westerly, I and the rest of my company should be permitted to go aboard, and proceed on our Voyage to India. I belought him he would not detaine so many of vs: he answered, thirtie haue I spoken, and thirty shall stay: then I demaunded, if our goods should be surrendered; he answered, no: for they were all put to the Gran Seniors accompt. I demaunded my Pinnasse, he said likewise she was put to the same accompt. I told him, diuers provisions belonging to the ships were aland at Moha, and desired I might haue them surrendered: he said I should: then I spake to M. Femel, willing him to speake againe that our goods might be surrendered; which he did, and was answered as I was: then I prayd him to assure me of one thing, and that was, whether all my people should be permitted to depart aboard the ships, the time of our abode being expired, he promised me vpon his word, not any one should be stayed, but be all sent aboard, and all things, had I a Turke to my slave, hee would not detaine him: for which his kindnesse I gaue him thanks: then he beganne to excuse himselfe, praying his owne milde nature, in that it was our haps to fall into his hands, he had dealt merciftlly and fauourably with vs, which had it been in the time of any of his Predecessors, we had all suffered death for our presumption, in comming into that Countrey so neere their holy Citie: and that which now was befallen vs, was by order from the Gran Senior, he being vrged thereto by the complaint of the Bashaes of Cairo and Snachen, and the Sheriffe of Mecca, who had certified the Gran Senior at the being here of the Ascension and her Pinnasse, that they had bought all the choice ware of India, whereby his customes were much diminished, and would be the ouerthrow of the Trade of these Seas, if it were permitted; and therefore wished it might be carefully looked vnto: whereupon the Gran Senior dispatched his letters with a commandement to him, That if any more Englishmen, or any other Christians did come into those parts, to confiscate their ships and goods, or to kill or captiuat all the men they could get into their power: but he minded not to deale so with me, but more fauourably, in permitting vs without further harme to returne to our ships, hoping it would be a warning, that neither we nor any other of our Nation, would repaire thither any more.

The first of February, I and M. Femel were sent for to the Cayha, who gaue me counsell to goe to the Basha, to bid God giue him ioy of his late receiued Dignitie: which was, the Gran Senior had made him a Vizir, and sent him letters of great fauour, with a Sword, and rich Robes belonging to a Vizir, which Robes and Sword are a confirmation of him in so high a place and calling. These Presents from the Gran Senior, were receiued two daies before with great solemnitie: and the party that brought them, was met by the Basha, and all the chiefe of the Citie, with all the souldiers, horse and foote, fixe miles without the Towne. Where a Tent was set vp, where the Basha disrobed himselfe, and vested him in those which were sent him by his Master; and so in great pompe came riding through the Citie to his owne house: I and others of my company, by the appointment of the Cayha, had a place appointed vs, where we did see his comming into the Citie: our Trudgman, by the appointment of the Cayha, conducted vs to the Vizirs house, where we stayd not long, but were admitted to his presence: I told him, my comming was onely to see him, and to congratulate his new receiued honour, and to pray God giue him ioy: hee gaue mee thanks, and bad me be merry: for what he had promised me, he would performe, and be better to me then his promise: he was very pleasant, and tooke this our comming kindly: and so, as a great fauour, Master Femel and I were permitted to kisse his hand, and dismissed, returning to our lodging.

February 1:
1610.
The Basha
made a Vizir.

Many of our people in the meane while fell sicke and weake through grieve, cold, naughtie aire, bad diet, euill lodging, and waightie Irons; I neuer ceased soliciting the Cayha, till hee had procured their liberty out of that loathsome prison, so that the eleuenth day they were all free of prison and Irons, and had a house in the Towne, and libertie to walke abroad, and take the fresh aire: also the next day the Cayha sent me halfe a dozen of Beefes, to bestow among my men; so that in fewe dayes all of them, I thanke God, recovered their former health and strength. The Cayha informed me, that Regib Aga had writ earnestly to the Basha, that we might all be sent downe to Aden, and there taken into our ships: by which meanes his Towne of Moha, and such ships of India as should passe the Bab, should be secure from danger or any harme our ships might doe them. This wicked counsell had preuailed with the Basha, had not God rayfed the Cayha for our good to perswade the contrary.

at libertie.

The seuteenth in the morning early, the Cayha sent for me, M. Femel, and others, and told me, the next morning I and my people should depart for Moha. After wee had broke fast, hee brought vs to the Basha to take our leaues: he beganne againe to extoll his owne clemencie, and the power of the Gran Senior; saying, he had a long Sword, straightly charging me I came no more into those Seas: adding, that neither Christian nor Lutheran might come thither, no, though they had had the Gran Seniors Pass; for so had he commanded him: then I requested, if any of our Nation came thither, before I could giue aduise to England, that they might not be betrayed, as I was, but plainly denied Trade, that they might know what to trust to, and to be permitted quietly to depart; which my request he would in no wise grant: then I intreated him to write to Regib Aga, to effect what he had promised me, otherwise he being my mortall enemy, would wrong me and my people: he answered with great pride, Is not my onely word sufficient to turne a whole Citie vpside downe? if Regib Aga wrong you, I will pull his skin ouer his eares, and giue you his head: is he not my slaue? and therewithall appointed the Cayba to write my dispatch. I demanded answer of his Maiesties letter, but he would giue me none. This done, I departed. I told the Cayba I had neuer a weapon, and therefore I desired leaue I might buy a Sword, and ride downe 10 as I came vp like a prisoner: he acquainted the Basha therewith, and he sent mee one of his cast Swords. The Cayba also this morning gaue me an hundred peices of gold of fortie Madines the peice: and fiftie peices had he giuen me not many dayes before: so that I receiued from him in all an hundred and fiftie peices of gold, and from the Basha nothing but his rusty Sword: the Cayba is of a liberall disposition, and the Basha exceeding couetous: if any man be knowne to bee rich, he had need to carrie himselfe vprightly: otherwaies the least occasion will cost him his head, that the Basha may enioy his goods, as lately befell a rich Aga, whom he caused priuately to be cruelly murdered, and presently after seized vpon all he had.

They depart
from Zenan.

The eighteenth, I paid all duties of the Prison, and went to the Caybas Garden, where wee brake our fast, receiued my dispatch, and a Letter to the Gouernour of Aden for re-deliverie of 20 the Pepper-Cornes Boate; I requested his Letter to the Gouernour of Tayes for deliury of a Youth of Master Pembertons, which was l. ft sicke there, (I was informed hee was inforced to turne Turke, hee writ his Letter and sealed it: the effect I know not) which being done I tooke my leaue and departed: my selfe, Master Femell, and Master Fowler were mounted on Horses, and all the rest vpon Asses and Camels, we had two Chausers to conduct vs, and a Horseman, the other afoot.

The description
of Zenan.

This Citie is somewhat bigger then Bristol, of good building of stone and lime, with Churches or Meskits: it is enuironed with a mudde wall full of Battlements and Turrets. On the West-side there is a great deale of spare ground enclosed within the walles, there they haue their Gardens, Orchards, and Houses of pleasure, it standeth in a barren and stony Valley, with high 30 Hills enclosing it, not being farre off, whereof one which is to the Northward ouer-looketh the Towne, whereon is built a small Castle, to keepe it from the mountaine people, who accustomed from thence to offend the Citie. It hath no water but Wel-water, which they digge deepe for; Wood is very scarce, and fetcht from farre, and very deare; In the Easter-most part is the Castle inclosed with mudde Walles full of Turrets, in which Turrets euery night they place their Watch, which keepe such a hollowing one to another all night long, that a man that is not acquainted which it can hardly sleepe; the Basha and some other principall men dwell within this Castle Wall, the Keepers House wherein I was imprisoned, ioyneth to the wall, and at the foote of the Wall is a spacious yard, wherein a great number of people, for the most part Women and Children, are kept Prisoners or Pledges, to keepe their Parents, Husbands, and Allies 40 from Rebellion. The Boyes while they be little goe loose in the yard, but after they bee come to bignesse they are clapt in Irons and carryed to a strong Tower, where there bee many more kept in like case, there they remayne during the Bashas pleasure, those Women and Children which remayne in the yard liue in little Cottages, which they haue made of purpoe, the Children goe for the most part naked, without it be very cold, and then haue they Sheep-skinne Coates to keepe them warme, they be as wilde and rude as if they were brought vp in the Mountaines.

Siam a small Towne and Castle.

This night we arriued at Siam distant from Zenan sixteene miles: which is a small Towne with a Castle vpon the side of a Hill, the place and Countrey about it is very barren, and yeeldeth small reliefe to Trauellers.

Surage.

About midnight we departed from Zenan, and the next day being the nineteenth, we came to 50 Surage, about ten a clocke in the forenoone: it is likewise a small Village distant from Siam about eighteene miles, the Countrey barren and the people poore, and goe almost naked, saue a cloth about their waistes reaching downe to their knees. We departed from hence at mid-night.

Damare a good Citie.

Wee came to Damare the twentieth, about eight of the clocke in the morning: it is a Citie bailt of lime and stone, but separated in fise parts one a prettie distance from the other, so that it seemeth to be so many Villages. It is seated in a spacious Valley or Plaine, hauing plentie of water and all kind of graine, with all other prouision for sustenance both for themselves and their poore Neighbours, who liue in great penurie and want. It is distant from Surage twentie miles. We tarried heere two dayes by order of Abdela Chillarby, the Bashas Cayba, who is Gouernour of this Prouince. 60

The two and twentieth, we departed from Damare about two a clocke after mid-night, and came to Ermin betimes, it being a small Village and distant from Damare some fiteene miles.

Naqual Samare
an Inne.

The three and twentieth, we arriued at Naqual Samare, being a common Inne for all Trauellers. The Turkes call them Censors; which are built at the cost of the Gran Signior, for the reliefe of of Trauellers. There be many of these Censors betweene Moha and Zenan, this Censor is seated in the middle of a very steepe hill called Nackhi'samar, and some few scattering poore houses about it, vpon the top of this hill is a great Castle, wherein the Gouernour of the Prouince which is an Arabian dwelleth. These craggie Mountaine Countries, are for the most part gouerned by the Arabians, for the people of these Mountaines cannot brooke the proud and insolent Gouernment of the Turkes: no Turke may passe this way, neither vponward nor downeward without a Passport of the Gouernour of the Prouince from whence they come, this Censor is distant from Ermin, some fourteene miles.

The foure and twentieth wee arriued at Mobader, which is a little Village at the foot of the great hill, being distant from Nackhi'samar, some thirteene miles. Our Chaufes had warrant from the Basha, to take vp Asses for our men to ride vpon, which accordingly they performed ouer-night; but the next morning the Arabians lay in ambush in the way, and in despite of our Chaufes tooke their Asses away, neither of our Guardians daring to giue them a foule word.

The five and twentieth, being arriued at Rabattamaine a Censor with some Cottages and shops adioyning thereunto: it is seated on the side of a hill and is distant from Mobader sixteene miles, groweth Poppie, whereof they make their Oppium: but it is not good.

Rabattamaine an Inne.

The sixe and twentieth, we arriued at a Coughe house in the middle of a Plaine: it is called Merfadin, and distant from Rabattamaine sixteene miles.

The seuen and twentieth, we arriued at Tayes, being a Citie of halfe the bignesse of Zenan, and walled round with a mud wall: here we stayed all this day and the next, in which time of my abode there, I vsed the best meanes I could for recovery of a Youth of Master Pemberton, whom the Gouernour Hamet Aga had forced to turne Turke, and would by no meanes depart with him. But Walter Talbot hauing the Turkish Tongue was permitted to speake with him in a Chamber amongst other Boyes and Youthes, who weeping, said vnto him he was no Turke, but was deluded by them, they telling him that I and all my people were put to death at Zenan, and if he would turne he should saue his life, but he would not yeeld vnto them: But afterward some of the Agas seruants carrying him to a Hot-house, when they had him naked circumcised him perforce. When I saw I could not get him, I deliuered Abdel's Chillarby the Cay's Letters, which was, if that he was not turned he should deliuer him me. When the Aga had read this Letter, he told me the effect saying, that Letter was warrant sufficient for keeping of him. I suspected the Letter was to that effect when it was giuen me, and that made me not deliuer it at first. This Citie standeth in a Valley vnder very high hills; and vpon the top of one of the highest hills is a faire and strong Castle: all kind of victuall is very cheape here, in the Countrey thereabouts is made some Indico, but what quantitie or of what goodnesse I could not learne. This Citie is very populous, and so is all the Countrey and Cities we trauelled through.

Tayes a Citie.

Indico made

The first of March, we departed and came to Eufas about noone, being sixteene miles from Tayes; the Countrey we trauielled Mountainous and stoney. The Towne little, seitate on the side of a hill. About the first of January great multitude of people resorteth hither from farre, where they doe some foolish Ceremonies to one of their Saints and holy men, which lyeth buried there: which being done they goe all in company to Mecca on Pilgrimage. The Gouernour of this Towne is a Turke, and vsed mee and my people very kindly at our going vp, and hearing of my coming downe, he sent one sixe miles to a place, where two wayes meete, to bring vs to his Towne, where we were most kindly vsed by him.

March, 1. 1610.
Eufas.

The second, we departed thence and lodged at a Censor called Assambine, some eleuen miles from Eufas. Here is no Towne but a few poore Cottages.

Assambine.

The third, we went from thence and came to another Censor some thirteene miles off: it is called Accomoth standing in a barren common with a few Cottages by it.

Accomoth.

Mousa a towne.

The fourth in the morning, we departed thence and came to Mousa, seuiteene miles from Accomoth: the Countrey we trauielled plaine and barren, and small store of Inhabitants. The Towne of Mousa is not great, and vnwalled, but very populous. It is seitate in a plaine indifferent frutfull; hereabouts likewise is made some Indico. We departed thence about mid-night.

The fifth in the morning about eight of the clocke we came to Moha. We rested two or three houres by the way at a Church or Coughe house called Dabully built by a Dabull Merchant. If we had not stayed here, we had come to Moha before day. A mile without the Towne, we were met by our Carpenters, Smithes, and such others as were detayned there, the day before their Irons were taken off, and they had libertie to walke abroad. The first question I demaunded was to know what became of Master Pemberton. They told mee hee lighted vpon a Cannoa, and got aboard, whereof I was not a little glad; for I was very doubtful neuer to haue seen him more. At the Townes ends, and all the way to the Agas house, the people stood very thicke, and as wee passed by bad vs welcome backe, for it was nothing pleasing to the people of the Countrey to heare how treacherously the Turkes had vsed vs: we rid till wee came to the Agas house where wee alighted, my selfe, Master Fennell, Master Fowler, were brought before him, where I deliuered my Letters from Zenan. He receiued me after his wonted dissembled shew of loue and kindnesse, bidding me and the rest welcome, saying, he was glad of our returne safe, and sorrie and ashamed of what was past, and prayed me to pardon him, and that hereafter he bad me assure my selfe he would be my friend, and that the harme that had be fallen vs was not long of him, for hee did nothing but what his Master commanded him. I soothed him vp, but beleueed nothing he said, he read the command of the Basha, and said all things should be performed accordingly. Whereupon he called in for Breakfast, and caused vs to sit downe with him, bidding mee eate and be merry: for now he had eate Bread and Salt with me, I need not doubt of any harme. After breakfast, he went to seeke for a House for me, we had a faire large house appointed vs neere the Sea-side, where we continued two dayes, but afterward wee were remoued from thence to a great strong House, standing all alone in a spacious Church-yard in the middle of the Towne: and for our Guard a Captaine and his Company were appointed to that charge, who warded all the day, & by night our house was enclosed round with his armed Souldiers. The cause why we were remoued from our first house, was because it was too neere the water side, they doubting from thence we might attempt an escape.

The description
of Moha.

This Towne of Moha is one third part lesse then Tayes, vnwalled, very populous, and seated close by the Sea-side in a salt, sandy, barren soyle. The Gouvernours house is close by the waters side, and here by the same is the Key or Bridge which shooteth a prettie distance into the Sea: to which Key all Boates belonging to any shipping, are enioyned to land for feare of stealing of Custome. And close adioyning to the Key is a platforme, whereon are planted some dozen of Braille Peeces, at the Westerne end of the Towne there is a Fort wherein is the like quantitie of Ordinance: this Fort was ruinate at our first comming thither, but since pulled downe to the ground and new builded. This after-noon came the Darling into the Roade, who brought vs 20 newes of the wel-fare of the rest, which was no small comfort to me after so many troubles.

The Darling
came into the Roade.
The Captaine
of a ship of Dabull.

The sixth, Nobuda Melech Ambor, Captaine of a great ship of Dabull, which came into the Road two dayes before my arriual at Moha, came ashore with a great many of Merchants with him, he with the rest were carryed about the Towne in pompe, and afterwards feasted by the Aga. I likewise was sent for to this Feast and entertayned with all loue and friendship. The Aga in presence of them all called for the Alcoran, kissed it, and voluntarily swore and protested, that he ought me no euill will but wished me all good, and would endeouour himselfe to pleasure me the best he could, his heart being cleere of malice or hatred, and was much grieved for what was past: I returned him thanks, seeming greatly satisfied therewith, although I gaue no credit thereto, but was forced to indure with patience what I could not remedie, till it pleased God 30 to prouide better.

The seuenth day, the Aga made a great Feast at his Garden-house for the Dabullians, to which I and Master Femell were likewise inuited. The Dabullians were all mounted vpon gallant Horses with rich Furniture, and we vpon a couple of tyred lame lades, which wee brought from Zenan.

The eight, wee were all sent for to come before the Aga, my selfe with all the Merchants, Carpenters, Smithes, and others, whom he (to the number of thirtie) thought good, were appointed to stay aland; and the rest which were thirtie sixe, were sent aboard the Darling.

An excellent Roade on the Coast of Habashe, called Affab Roade.

The ninth, had I made an escape, had I not beene more carefull for others, which I should haue left behind me, then for my selfe. This day the Darling hauing taken in thirtie sixe men as afore said, and prouided of some necessities they lacked, departed towards the other ships on the Coast of Habashe: where they had found out in the time of my absence an excellent Road, for all windes that blow in these Seas, it is called Affab Road, where they had wood and water enough costing nothing but the fetching, the water is a little brackish, but seemed fresh enough to them that had liued in want thereof, the people of the Countrey bee as blacke as the Negroes of Guinea, they be all Mahometans alongst the Sea-coast: but vp in the Land they bee Christians and Subiects to Prester Iohn, they goe almost naked saue a cloth about their waistes, which reacheth to their knees. They were at first comming of our people very fearefull, but after they were acquainted, and a peace confirmed by oath on both sides, they daily repayed with refreshing, as Beefes, Sheepe and Goates, and sold them for money at reasonable rates. And afterward 50 they desiring course Callico rather then money, I furnished them therewith from Moha: In trucke whereof they sold their Cattle farre better cheape then before for money, dealing faithfully and kindly with our people, notwithstanding the Turkes sought to worke them to the contrary, by meanes of small Barkes which passe to and fro. The King of this Countrey hath his abiding at a Towne lying vpon the Sea-coast called Rahaita, some fortie miles to the Southwards neere the Bab, hee sent some of his chiefe men to the Commanders of the shippes with presents, they returned them the like: who entertayned those which were sent very courteously, with promise of any thing his Countrey yeilded. Their vulgar speech is not vnderstood by the Arabians, the better sort of them speake and write the Arabian Language, in which 60 Tongue their Law of Mahomet is written.

Rahaita.

Indian ſhipping at Moha; Sir Henry Middletons eſcape from the Turkes, and enforcing ſatisfaction.

Prill the firſt, 1611. the Darling departed for Aſſab, with leaue euery ten dayes to returne, to ſee how I did: this his vnlooked for kindneſſe I hoped in God would bee a meanes to worke my freedome. The ſecond, came into the roade another ſhip of Da- bul, full of people. The Nohuda rid about the Towne in a painted coate, as the manner is. Theſe robes are but lent them for the preſent, and afterward returned to the keeper of the Ward-robe, to whom belongs a dutie for lone of them. The third, came a Iebba from Aden, which brought the Pepper-cornes Boat.

Another ſhip of Dabul.The third ſhip of Dabul.

The fourth day, came an other ſhip of Dabul, which laded at Achin with Pepper: theſe three great ſhips belong all to the Gouverneur of Dabul, who is a Persian, and a great Merchant, and hath many ſlaues, whereof Melick Amber is one, and is in great credit with him: he had the managing of the goods belonging to theſe three ſhips; he is a Negro, borne in Habſſe, and might coſt his Maſter ſitteene or twenty royalls of eight, and now neuer goeth out of his doores, but with great troopes of followers, like ſome great Lord.

The ſixth, I ſent to the Cayba Abdela Chillarby a faire peice, and a ſmall barrell of powder, which I promiſed to ſend him at my coming from Zenan. The ſeuenth, came from India a ſmal ſhip laden with cotton. The eleuenth, came from India two ſmall barks Mallabars, of one of the Iles of Maldinia: the chiefe of them came often to viſit me, till he was forbidden by the Aga our enimie. The twelfth, there came two Barks from India: for then the wind was Weſterly; which continued ſo for five dayes, and afterwards came to the South South-eaſt againe. The fourteenth, came in a ſmall Barke laden with Cotten, for the Bannians. The fifteenth, came another from Baſſanor: the Nohuda came to viſit me at my houſe, which the Aga repined at. The ſeuteenth, came into the Towne a great many Cammels, and diuers Merchants, which came from Damaſco, Sues, and Mecca, to trade with the Merchants of India. The nineteenth, came in a ſhip and a barke of Cananor, the Captaine of the great ſhip came to viſit mee with great troopes following of him: which the Aga ſtomaking, ſent for him while he was talking with mee, and forbad ſuch reſort vnto me. The twentieth, came in a ſhip of Calicut and the Darling. The three and twentieth, came in a ſmall barke of the Kings of Zacotora, which came from Goa.

Cancamarra in S. Laurence, where Captaine Rowles Capt. of the Union was betrayed.

The ſecond of May, 1611. I diſpatched Letters for England of all our proceedings in thoſe parts: one Copy to the Engliſh Conſul at Aleppo, and another to the French Conſul at Cayro: which letters I deliuered to a Guzerat. The tenth, came in a ſmall barke from the coaſt of Swa- bell or Magadoxo, with ſlaues, Elephants teeth, Amber: there had wont to come euery yeare hither from thence foure barks with like lading, but this yeare would come no more, for that their Countrey are in warres, and the Portugals had burned their ſhipping. Theſe men buy their Ne- groes and Amber at Cancamarra, in S. Laurence, where Captaine Rowles was taken and betrayed; we enquired of them if they could informe vs of any thing touching him. Alſo this day about noone came in the Darling, and according to her wonted order ſhot off a peice for a Boat; the ſhot grazed vpon the water to the Towne-wards, whereat the Aga was diſpleaſed; but gaue leaue I might ſend aboard. I writ my letter, and ſent one of my ſeruants aboard with it, commanding him to tarry aboard, and come no more aſhore, and withall to tell M. Pemberton, hee ſhould not ſend his Boat a land till he heard further from me.

The eleuenth in the morning, at the dawning of the day, the Aga with all the chiefe men of the Towne, were rid abroad in great ſtate to his Garden to be merrie: which I ſeeing, did not a little glad my heart, and gaue God thanks, which offered me ſo faire meanes to put that in practiſe, which long before I had determined: For Hamet Aga, and others had told mee the Baſha would not performe his word, but for feare. I writ my letter to M. Pemberton, wherein I certified him, I minded as this day to make an eſcape aboard, and that I would conuay my ſelfe into an emptie But, and ſo be carried downe to the Boat as an emptie Caſke: and therefore willed him the Boat ſhould be ſent with all ſpeed, manned with choiſe men; and withall to ſend me a bottle of Aquanita, and an other of wine, to make drunke my Keepers; which he accordingly performed:
before I made M. Femel acquainted with my determination, I made him ſweare vnto me to be ſecret, and to uſe no perſwaſions with me, to with-draw my mind from that I had reſolued vpon:
whereupon I ſhewed him what I had written to M. Pemberton; and withall, ſhewed him how that himſelfe and others ſhould walke out of the Towne to the water ſide, to ſuch a place as hee well knew, and I appointed, where I would not faile, God ſending mee into the Boat, to take him and the reſt in. Alſo I acquainted him, that the Carpenters and others I had appointed to embarque themſelues to the South-ward of the Towne, where lay a Boat hard by the ſhore, with maſt and ſayle ready fitted for their purpoſe; but withall, I had giuen the Carpenters warning not to imbarque themſelues, till ſuch time as they ſaw the ſhippes Boat put off from the Bridge. All things ſorting out well to our purpoſe, the Subaſha (which was our guardian, and left in Towne onely to looke to me) fell to drinking hard at a Racky-house: and I beeing doubtfull of any good performance from my enemies the Turkes, had long bethought me of all the meanes I could deuise from time to time to make an escape, but could not light vpon any proiect, that had not apparent danger, both to my selfe, and those that should attempt to escape away with me. Onely this deuise it pleased God to put into my head, whereby I might bee secretly conueied into the boat without beeing discouered: for my Keepers and Souldiers eyes were onely vpon me, wherefoeuer I went: all the rest of my company might walke abroad any where by day time without suspition, or any great regard: I neuer went out of doores, but two or three souldiers attended vpon me wherefoeuer I went. The Boat being come, and Keepers all drunke, and all things fitted, about twelue a clocke at noone the Subasha returns from the Aracke-house, and being in one ende of our house, but a wall betweene vs, where his abiding was, the better to guard vs, I began to put my businesse in execution: and appointed the Carpenters to take others with them, and to go by two and two in the best manner they could to auoid suspition, and shift for themselves in the Boat aforesaid; but in any case not to meddle, before they saw the ships Boat vnder sayle. To M. Femel, and those that I appointed to take into Lee-ward of the Towne, I gaue order likewise, to goe two or three in company alongst the Sea side, to the place I had appointed them to take them in, and there to tarry my comming. After I had giuen these directions, I was conueied into my Tub, and safely set aboard the Boat: which beeing done, I forced out the head of the Caske, and came aboard, causing them to beare vp with the leeward point, where I tooke in John Fowler, Beniamm Greene, Rowland Webbe, Ro. Mico, Ro. Conwey, William Bownes, John Wright, Arthur Atkinson, Thomas Enans, John Wood, and Henry Fortune. M. Femel and other beeing too slacke in comming out of the Towne, were taken before they could come to the boat. The Towne beeing raised, partly by the vndiscreet running of some of our people, and partly by seeing the Boat beare vp to Leeward, contrary to their wonted course, M. Femel and those with him, had likewise escaped, had he come by land to the point, and not taken water, so soone as others which were both sicke and weake did, which were behind him when he tooke the water. I came to an anchor, and brought the Boat a ground in tarrying for them, to the no little danger of vs all: I caused men to leape ouer-board to reskue him, but before they could get a Pikes length from the Boat, he and those with him were all apprehended: M. Femel discharged a Pistoll in the face of one of them that hardly pursued him, and mortally wounded him before he was taken; it booted me not to stay longer, hauing all the Town in pursuit of me, and a very narrow and shoald channell to passe betweene a small sandie Iland, and the maine: it pleased God wee lighted vpon the right channell, which quickly brought vs into deepe water, and out of danger of our enemies, for which his great mercie towards vs, his holy name bee blessed and praysed for euermore.

They in the Darling kept good watch in the tops, which so soone as they saw the Boat vnder sayle, let slip and set saile, bearing vp to Lee-ward, to haue releiued vs if need had bin: being come aboard, we espied the Boat wherein the Carpenters were comming towards vs: I sent the ship Boat to bring them and their Boat aboard of vs. In this Boat escaped George Collinson, Robert Pinnis, Nathaniel Symonds, and John Taylor; but Walter Talbot, who was appointed to come with them, tarried so long before he came, that the Boat was put off, he thought to swim aboard, and was drowned. About two houres after our comming aboard, came two poore Arabs in a Canoa, but so fearefull, they durst not come nigh the ship till they were wonne by faire words, and so with much adoe, one of them entered, and deliuered me a letter from M. Femel, shewing that they were in great danger of beeing slaine or ipoyled by those that apprehended them, but some of the souldiers, through former acquaintance, bearing them good will, saued them, and brought them to the Agaes, where they tarried his comming. At the first sight of them, he looked as pale as ashes, telling them they should all looke their heads, asking them how they durst attempt such a thing? They answered, they came out of England vnder my command, and did nothing but what I had commanded, which in no wise they durst disobey. He againe threatned them with losse of their heads, and presently caused them all to be chained by the necks, from which chaine they were quickly released, at the intreaty of Nobuda Melicke Amber, & Nobuda Mahomet of Cananor, and others, and permitted to remaine in our former house, but with a stronger guard then before. This their kindnes proceeded not of loue, but for feare of their ships in the road, which were then vnder my command. I returned answer of the letter, and sent the Aga word, that if he did not send me all my people, with those prouisions of the ships which he detained contrary to the Bashas order (for I minded not to be put off with Farriga) I would fire the ships in the road, and do my best to batter the Towne about his eares: likewise I sent word to the Nobudas, that they should not send any Boat aboard the ships, without first comming aboard of me, and to acquaint mee with their businesse, nor to carry any thing out of them aland, without my leaue and order.

After my departure, there was no small disturbance in the Towne: the Aga not knowing how to answer the Basha, feared it would cost him his head, the Subasha which was my keeper at his wits end, and knew not whether he might stay or flee for his life. The Emeryor bahar (or Lord of the Sea as they terme him) in little better taking, beeing accused of consenting to my escape; one of our Porters tooke Sanctuary in one of their Churches, and would not be gotten out from from thence till hee had his pardon, and the Nobudas and Merchants in great feare of losse of their ship and goods, most of them sending Presents of victuals, and refreshing to Master Femell and the rest, which before tooke scorne to speake to them. At night I sent the Boat well manned to carrie the newes to our ships, with order for their comming ouer with all speed. I plyed to wind-ward in the Darling, when the Tyde serued, and rid a little without the great ship, so that I had her and all the rest vnder the command of our Ordnance.

The twelfth, came aboard Nobuda Mahomet of Cananor with Letters, telling me the Aga was sorrie I was so departed (which I knew to be true) for that he was determined within few dayes to haue set mee at libertie, and all my people, to my owne content: and for the prouisions belonging to our ships which were ashore, hee would deliuer them, but for my people hee could not deliuer them without order from the Basha, intreating fifteene dayes respite: in which time if I had not all my men in safetie sent aboard, they desired no fauour. I told him likewise, I must haue my Pinnasse surrendred me, for that I would not depart the Road without her; he sayd hee would acquaint the Aga with my demand of the Pinnasse, and doubted not but that I should haue her at the time limited. I yeelded to his request, vpon his promise that I should haue both men and Pinnasse within the time prefixed, I durst not as yet demand restitution or satisfaction for my goods, till such time as I had all our men from the shore. At his comming ashore, hee acquainted the Aga, that he had concluded a peace for fifteene dayes, vpon his promise that I should haue my men and Pinnasse restored within the same time. The Aga was very angry that I demanded the Pinnasse, and sent for Master Femell and John Williams, and asked what I minded in demanding the Pinnasse, which was the Bashas by agreement with mee, saying, I might as well demand the goods as the Pinnasse, both which were put to the account of the Gran Signior: they said I could not well proceed on my Voyage without the Pinnasse, but for the goods they assured him I would neuer demand them; In the meane time, the Darlings Cables, Anchors, Pitch, Tarre, and other things being ashore, were brought aboard: And few dayes elapsed that I had not one present or other of refreshing from the Aga, Dabnullan, and other, which would scarce take knowledge of me whilst I was ashore, but now glad to flatter me. This morning early came a Boat from shore aboard the innermost ship: I caused the Gunner to make two shot at her, which caused them to come aboard mee. I threatned them if they did so any more to hang them, and burne their ships; so that afterward they durst not attempt the like.

The thirteenth, the Increase and Pepper-Corne toward night came to anchor in the sight of the Roade: for they could not fetch in that night, the Lee-ward tyde beeing come against them.

The fourteenth, they got into the Roade and I went aboard the Increase, where I was receiued with great ioy of all my Company.

The eighteenth, there came into the Roade, a ship of Diu, belonging to Shermall the Shabander; laden with India Commodities, which I did imbarque both people and goods, and caused her to ride hard by me. The next day being the nineteenth, at the intreatie of Shermall, I licensed all the people (saue some few to looke to the ship) to goe ashore. This day being the twentieth day, I heard nothing from the shore. The one and twentieth, Master Femell writ to me they had bin all chained by the neckes.

The five and twentieth, came aboard Nobuda Mahomet and certified me, that the Basha had giuen order for release of my people and Pinnasse, and promised to bring them aboard on the morrow. I shot off three Peeeces at his departure. This day all our people ashore were chained by the neckes, and the next day released. The cause they were so vied they could not learne.

The six and twentieth, Nobuda Mahomet returned, saying, the Pinnasse was lanced, but the Aga would neither deliuer her nor the men, till I had giuen him a writing firmed by my selfe, and foure or five more of the principall in our ships with oathes to performe the same, to containe in effect a perfect peace with the Turkes his Subiects and Indians, and not to meddle in this Sea or elsewhere in reuenge of any thing that had passed, nor to demand restitution or satisfaction for any goods taken from me: I told him, I marvelled hee came euery day with new matters, he had the day before promised, as this day to bring me all my men and Pinnasse aboard, which I looked to haue had performed, and for better securitie he and those with him should remayne Hostages aboard till I had them, and therefore willed him to aduise the Aga: he alledged that he being employed of his owne voluntary motion in this businesse, should reape much discredit and be laught at for his forwardnesse, if he should write to that purpose, and therefore hee told me plaine he would not write whatsoever betyde him, but promised, if I would giue him such a Writing as he demanded and send him ashore, he would bring me all my people aboard before night: I seeing I could get him by constraint to yeeld to nothing, thought best to giue him some content, though it were somewhat that might but carrie the name of what hee desired. I thereupon caused a Writing to be made in English, firmed by my selfe and five more, containyng a brieue Relation of the treacherous vsage of vs in this Countrey and nothing else, wee setting to our hands as Witnesses of truth of the same Writing: withall I sent aduice to Master Femell, how

how he should interpret it vnto them. I deliuered him the Writing he desired, but I weare I would not, saying, my word should be truer then a Turkes oath at all times. Ashore hee went, leauing some of the better sort of his Company for Pledges, whom he had hang if he brought me not all my Company aboard that night: comming ashore he handled the matter so, that a little before night he returned with Master Femell, John Williams, Christopher Cunningham, Water Woodward, John Clarke, Henry Bauldin, Edmund Glouer, Tobie Birch, Alexander James, and Merciline Longfield. Three of them were vested, to wit, Master Femell, John Williams, and Cunningham, with paltry Vests of little worth. Another was sent to me, which they said came from the Basha, the Nobuda would haue put it vpon my backe, desiring mee to weare it as a fauour Tent me from the Basha: I refused it, telling him, I scorned to weare any thing that should come from so vnconscionable a Dogge and my Enemie, by whose order I had receiued so much wrong: he seeing I would not take it, left it with my man, and so departed, carrying with him the Turke taken in the Darling, which had remayned aboard the Increase, till that present: hee promised to returne in the morning with our Pinnasse.

The Pinnasse restored.

The fouen and twentieth, according to promise the Nobuda came aboard and brought my Pinnasse, and demanded of me if all he had promised were performed. I told him no, for that I had not all my company, they keeping from me the Boy at Tayes, which they had forced to turne Turke, and him would I haue before I would release the ships: he told me he would tell the Aga, and returne me his answer, and so departed. This morning early I called a Councell, wherein I propounded whether I should release the ships according to promise, or detainne them till restitution were made me. It was concluded that I should release all the ships which were of India, and our friends; and set our hopes vpon the ship that was to come from Sues. Likewise I demanded what course were best to take for recovery of the youth at Tayes; by some it was thought bootlesse to demand him, but to hope of taking some Prisoners of worth, which might procure his libertie. I was of a contrarie opinion, and thought it fittest to demand him, now when wee should haue many to sollicite for him, rather then depend vpon hopes of taking of Prisoners, which we might faile of, and so it was concluded to demand the Boy presently, and no speech at all to be made of our goods restoring.

M. Femell dyed.

The eight and twentieth, there was a Writing sent me from the Aga, wherein he, Nobuda Mahomet, and Shermall Shebander bound themselves ships and goods, that I should haue within twelue dayes the Boy from Tayes, so that I would release the ships; I gaue them leaue to vnlade the ship of Diu, and goe and come to the other ships at their pleasure. This night Master Femell dyed of a Calentura, or rather poysoned by the Turkes, as the opinions of our Chirur-gions are.

Iunc 1. 1611.

Exceeding heat
in the Red Sea.

The first of Iune, were discharged out of the ship, three Boats lading of Cotton. This euening we had a guff with much wind, which came from the shore, which brake our Land Cable. The wind was so hot we could hardly indure it. I was faine to flye to my Cabbin, not being able for heate to stay aloft. I writ a Letter to the Basha in Italian for restitution of my goods, and satisfaction for damages; I was answered afterwards, the Letter was not vnderstood for lacke of an Interpreter. I againe imbarqued the ship of Diu, and would not permit them to vnlade any more goods out of her, till the Basha had satisfied me to the value of seuentie thousand Rials of eight, which I had lost and was damnified by him: I considered with my selfe, that this was the surest way to attayne to somewhat in lieu of our losse, and not soly to relye vpon the taking of the ship of Sues, which the Turkes might easily preuent me of, by giuing aduice by land.

The second, came Ally Haskins, my Interpreter at Zenan, aboard, and brought mee commendations from the Basha, saying, he was sorrie I was gone after that sort away, for he was minded to send me away better content, and that he had prepared a rich Vest to be sent me and a Horse: and likewise the Cayha had him commended heartily, and desired mee not to take any violent courses here, but seeke for Iustice at Stambola, for if I did any thing which might be displeasing to the Basha, it would cost him his head, that was the chiefe cause of my sending backe to Moha; and told me he had brought the English youth with him from Tayes, by order from the Basha, which the next day he said should be sent aboard, conditionally I would permit the ship of Diu, and the rest to discharge. I answered him I would in no wise release the ships, till I had restitution or satisfaction for my goods and damages to the value aboue-said.

The third, the Aga desired peace for twelue dayes till the Basha had knowledge of my demands. The next day Ally Haskins, Tocoursie a Bannian, and others came aboard, and withall desires I would draw out the particulars of my losses, that they might consider thereof ashore. I fulfilled their desire, and by writing set downe my losse and hinderances to bee seuentie thousand Rials of eight, and withall sending the Aga word, whereas at first I was receiued by him, and came aland at his intreatie, and vpon his word and promise of kind enteraynement and free and peaceable Trade, he like a treacherous Dogge, without any cause or offence giuen, had cruelly slaine diuers of my people, and villanously imprisoned my selfe and others, and robbed and spoiled all he could seafe vpon to the value of seuentie thousand Pessos, beside great charges and losse losse of time, if therefore he did not presently make mee restitution or satisfaction for the same, I would doe my best to batter the Towne about his eares, take all the goods out of the Diu ship into mine owne, and burne all the ships in the Roade, and not depart thence till I were sufficiently reuenged; all which I could doe without breach of promise, the time of Truce being out, and they not hauing performed Couenants with me.

This day being the sixt, the Aga sent mee a peremptory answere, demanding who gaue mee leaue to come into those Seas, saying, sith I came without leaue I was iustly dealt withall; and touching the goods, and whatsoeuer else, he had done nothing but what he had order from the Basha, who himselfe told me so much: and if I were not pleased with what was past, the best way were to referre it to the hearing of our Betters at Stambola. And if I shot at the Towne, he would shoot againe at my ships; and for the ships and goods in the Road they were none of his, but if I did either hurt the Towne or ships in the Road, it would not be pleasing to the Sultan, who would be sure to be recompenced for any harme I should doe them. To which I answered, to come into this Sea, I needed no leaue but Gods and my Kings, but for my comming ashore, the Aga had not onely giuen mee leaue, but much intreated mee. And for my goods I knew nothing I ought the Basha, neither was I his Factor, neither had I at any time receiued any thing of his or any the least curtesie, neither had I done him or his any wrong, and therefore no way his Debtor wherby he might challenge any of those goods which by his order I was robbed of; wherfore I must and would be paid for them, not at Stambola (where neither the Basha and Aga durst shew their faces to answere such shamefull wrongs, which they had falsly charged the Sultan to haue commanded them to doe) but euen there where I had beene wronged, would I be righted: and if they found themselves agriued, they might goe to the Court of England to seeke their remedie: for to Stambola I minded not to goe.

The eight, I sent Master Pemberton to Affab to buy fresh victuals, we hauing very many men sicke in our ships: I was afraid to haue my provision from Moha, doubting poysoning, which by friends I was warned to take heed of.

About my demands and the Agas alligations and answers, messages, and Letters passed betweene vs day by day, and at his intreatie I granted Truce for twelue dayes: in which time he certified his Master of my demands.

Feare of poysoning by the Turkes.

The nineteenth, came aboard Shermall Sabander, Ally Tocorsie, and many others of the chiefe of the Bannians, to make agreement with me, and brought with them Master *Pemberton*s youth decently apparelled in new clothes after the Christian fashion, which the Sabander bestowed vpon him. After some kind gratulations passed on either side, the Sabander began to tell me, that he had alwayes loued and fauoured me and my people, and was alwayes readie to doe me what kindnesse he was able, and for the iniuries done mee by the Turkes, it did as much grieue him as if it had beene done to his owne people, for which his loue and pittying of me in my miseries, he was like to pay at too deare a rate, without I would now shew my selfe fauorable vnto him, For that the Basha had enioyned him to giue me satisfaction, or had sent order to cut his throat, and seafe vpon his goods: and this he protested was not fained, but the verie truth. I answered, it was the Turkes that had robbed me, and done me many iniuries, and from them would I looke for satisfaction, and not from any other: he willed me to leaue those talkes, and come to my demands. I told him he knew what I demanded, for that I had sent it ashore in the Arabick Tongue in writing; he said, if my demands were answerable to that Writing, it were but labour lost to haue further conference there abouts. We spent most part of the day in beating the prizes of our lost Commodities: and in conclusion, with much adoe, we came to agreement that all the Lead and Iron should be surrendered, and eightene thousand Rials of eight in money, within fifteene dayes for satisfaction of all our goods and losses sustayned, and thereupon a peace concluded betweene vs and them for two yeares, from the Port of Moha to Cannanor, vpon the Coast of India, conditionally, that the Basha giue mee a Writing vnder his hand and Seale, for confirmation of this peace betweene our Nation and theirs, for the time before specified. In this moneth, and about this time beganne a generall and most grievous sicknesse in our ships, few or none escaping, it beganne with a great paine in the head and stomacke, bereauing them of sleepe: the best remedie for it was vomiting and bleeding, but some were taken with Feuers withall, who were long before they recouered their healths: the rest that escaped the Feuer quickly recouered, and God be prayfed, few died thereof.

And the second of Iuly, we receiued the last payment, the Sabander being there himselfe, I Iuly 2. 1612. cleared all reckonings with him, as well for money borrowed of him whiles I was Prisoner, as for money disbursed afterwards by him. He demanded of me the money I promised the Bashas Cayba, which was a thousand Venetianos: which I would in no wise pay, although hee much vrged me with my word and promise, and that he should be forced to pay, for that he had passed his word for the same. I told him the Cayba had not performed what hee promised mee, in setting me and my people at libertie. How the Cayba and he will agree, I know not, but I doubt the Cayba will constraime him to pay it. Drawing towards night, the Sabander and the rest tooke their leaue of me to goe a-land: and for his farewell, I caused three Peeces of Ordnance to be discharged.

The thirt, came againe Tacaroy and Ally, and bought some Vermillion of mee, for which I gaue them credit: they promising to come ouer to the other side within fourteene dayes, and make me payment, also to bring me some prouisions of Graine, as I had giuen them order to buy me at Moba, and a Writing from the Basha for confirmation of peace concluded. In the afternoon we warped out of the Road, and that night set saile toward Affab, but could not get thither till the fift day in the morning.

The sixth, I went a-land and caused all the Wells to be emptyed and clenfed for feare of poysoning, for it was often told mee at Moba, the Turkes practised with the people of Affab, to poyson the Wells. From this day till the thirteenth day wee spent in watering and buying refreshing, not any thing in that time happening worth writing.

The thirteenth, the King of this Countrey hearing of my escape at Moba, and my arriual in his Countrey, sent three of his chiefe Seruants, being attended with thirtie Souldiers, with a Letter, and a Present of refreshing to me. The effect of his Letter was to bid me welcome into his Countrey, with offer of any thing I stood in need of, and that his Countrey did afford: as also not a little reioycing of my escape from my Enemies, with many other Complements. I feasted and rewarded the Messengers, and returned them with a Present to the King their Master: which was a Vest of broad-cloth, and a faire looking Glasse.

The seuenteenth, came Afelba from Moba, wherein was Tocorcie the Sabanders man, and another Bannian. They brought with them diuers prouisions, which I left order with them to prouide me; as also the money they ought me, but the Writing from the Basha, for confirmation of peace on his behalfe they could not get, but made excuse the Basha was so busie in the Warres, he could not intend it, so that it was manifest he intended to keepe no quarter with our Nation.

The foure & twentieth, we all set sayle out of Affab Road, to put that in practice which long before I had determind, which was to ply to wind-ward as high as Camaran, & there to abide the comming of a great ship, which yearly commeth about this time richly laden from Sues to Moba: hoping to bee sufficiently reuenged for all my losses and disgraces offered mee by the Turkes: and the rather did I desire to meete with her, for that I vnderstood the Traytor Ieffor Basha, and his Disciple Regib-Aga, had great aduentures in her. From this day till the last of this moneth, wee plyed it to wind-ward, the wind still opposite to vs, wee sayled by day, and commonly anchored by night: we past many and sundry dangers for lacke of a Pilot, and many times were like to haue come a-ground, to the hazard and losse of all, had not God preferred vs. And yet she escaped vs in the night, as we found in our returne.

Their departure from Surat, and what happened there with the

He ninth of August, 1611. in the morning we set sayle, and in the euening about eight of the clocke we anchored three leagues thort of the Bab-mandell. The tenth, the Darling and Release appointed to goe out at the Westler channell, which they found to be three leagues ouer, from the Mayne of Habeske to the Iland Bab-mandell; one third of way ouer from the Iland they had no ground at forty fathoms, the channell cleere without dangers, & not as all the Turkes & Indians reported, to be full of sholes and Rocks, and not navigable for shipping. This their false report was to make vs belecue there was no other passage in and out into that Sea, but at the Easter channell, which may be so fortified that no shipping can passe that way, but shall be in danger of their Ordnance, for it is not passing one mile & halfe ouer between the Arabian shore, and the Ile, and vpon the Mayn lyeth sholes a good distance off; we in the Increase and Pepper-Corne passed out at the narrow channell where we came in. About foure a clock in the afternoon we all met without the straights, and were in nineteene fathome, being some foure miles from the Arabian shore, we steered all this night our course alongst the Land.

A greater current setting
South-west Westerly.

From the twelfth day, till the seuen and twentieth, much wind with calmes and contrarie winds with a great current, setting South-west about foure miles an houre: for looke in all this time what we got when we had a fauourable gale, we lost that and more when it fell calme, being carryed backe by the current.

Mount de Felix.

The seuen and twentieth, we had a gale of wind to carrie vs off. Wee had sight of Mount Felix a head-land to the West-ward of Cape Guardafui, at sixe a clocke this night, This hill bore South halfe West: about ten at night it fell calme with a great Sea, out of the South-east. At mid-night came vp a gale at South South-east, and South, ending still as we sailed, this great Sea which was a manifest signe wee brought our selues open of Cape Guardafui: for so long as the land was in the wind of vs we felt none of this Sea.

The Road of
colata.

The thirtieth, we plyed into the Roade of Delisha, and about noone came to an Anchor in the Roade, wee found there riding a great ship of Diu, and two small ships, one of Naggina, the other the Kings, both ships of India, both bound for the Red Sea, taken short with the Monsoon. The Captaine of the ship of Diu came aboard mee with diuers others, who certified mee our people at Surat were well, and very well intreated, and were daily expecting shipping from England: and that Captaine Hawkins was at Court with the King, where hee was made a great Lord, and had great allowance from the King by the yeare. And for Captaine Sharpeigh, the King had giuen him money to build a ship, which then was almost readie at Surat to bee lanchd, this and many other things he told me, which I doubted were too good to be true.

The Monson was farre spent, and therefore I desired the Nobuda of Diu, to helpe mee with his Boates and people to ballast and water, which hee with the others most willingly granted, proffering me all the water in their ship: so willing were they to haue mee gone from them. I had all the water out of his ship, and imployed his people to fetch some from the shore.

I was often in hand with the King to sell mee his Alloes: I could not of long time bring him to aske reason for it. In the end, with much adoe, I bargained with him for all, paying dearer for it, then Captaine Keeling did for his. I thinke the Indians were in hand with him for it, and that was the cause he held it so deare. I left Letters with the King, which hee promised to deliuer to the first English ship that should come there.

The third of September, hauing finished my businesse, I made haste to bee gone: I had with much adoe a simple fellow out of the ship of Diu, to pilot me vpon the Coast of India, who took vpon him to be a good Coaster, in the afternoone about two a clocke wee weighed Anchor and plyed out of the Roade.

Sept. 3. 1611.

The six and twentieth, betweene nine and ten of clocke wee weighed, hauing a gale of wind, which brought vs into the Roade of Surat, we ridde by the three Indian ships in seuen fathom. A mile from vs, ridde seuen sayle of Portugall Frigats or men of Warre: there were thirteene more of them which were within the Riuer of Surat; the Portugalls long before our comming thither, had intelligence that we were in the Red Sea, and bound for this place, so that these Frigats were purposely sent to keepe vs from Trade at Surat, or else where, vpon that Coast. The Captaine *Maio*r of them is called *Don Francisco de Soto Maio*r, is intituled Captaine *Maio*r of the North, he reapeth great benefit to himselfe by giuing Cartasses or Pasports to all ships and Frigats, which trade vpon that Coast. Any ship or Frigat which hath not the same Passe, are confiscate or lost. This night I discharged my Pilots, paying them well for their paines: I sent by them Letters to such of our people as they should find at Surat, for I could not learne how many (or who they were) that were there resident.

The nine and twentieth, there came a small Portugall Frigat from the Admirall of the Arma- da, (as they terme them) wherein was one Portugall and his Boy, who brought mee answere of my Letter sent the day before from the Captaine *Maio*r, wherein hee vsed some complements, certifying me that he was glad to heare I belonged to a King a Friend, and that he and his would be readie to doe mee seruice in any thing hee might, provided I brought a Letter or Order from the King of Spaine, or the Vice-Roy, for my trading in these parts, which if I could shew him, he would willingly obey: if otherwise, he must guard the Port he had in charge, where the King his Master had his Factorie. I returned answere by word of mouth by the same Portugall, that I had neyther Letter from the King of Spaine or Vice-Roy, neyther had I need thereof, for that I was sent by the Kings Maiestie of England, with Letters and rich Presents to the Great Mo- goll, and to establish the Trade begunne in those parts: and for the Factorie they had there, I came not to harme the same, but that they might continue in the same estate they were: and for our Factorie or Trade, I see no reason why the Portugals should oppose themselves against vs, for that it was a free Countrey for all Nations, and the Great Mogoll nor his people any way in Vassallage to the Portugals. And therefore willed him to tell his Captaine, he should in friendly manner permit those English which were at Surat to come aboard, and conferre with me concerning our Affaires, and that he would not vrge me to vse force, for by the one meanes or the other, I must and would haue them: many other speeches past which were here too tedious to write, I bestowed a Vest of broad-cloth vpon the Messenger, and so dispatched him away, hee promising the next day to returne.

Answere from the Portugalls.

We seeing it was not possible without Pilot to goe ouer the Barre, set saile from the Barre foot (where I had beene to discover in the Darling) and in the euening came to an anchor in the Roade. I went aboard the Increase, where I found Letters from the shoare: they came from Sur- rat from Nicholas Bangham, formerly a Ioyner in the Hector, wherein I was certified that wee had no Factorie there, and that he was sent from Captaine Hawkins from Agra, to recouer some Debts that were owing there, and likewise hee had Letters from Captaine Hawkins, but durst not send them aboard, lest they should be intercepted by the Portugals. What was become of the Factors and goods he mentioned not: I wrote to him, to send mee those Letters and other particulars concerning our businesse.

The third of October, Hoia Nassan the Gouvernour of Surat, and the Gouvernours brother of Cambaya, sent a Mogoll vnto me with a present of refreshing, and in their names offered to doe me all the kindnesse they could, but the Portugals, hee said, were the cause they could not doe what they would, but for their part they desired to trade with vs, which they see no way possible to effect, so long as we should ride there, and the Portugall Armado by vs, and therefore they would counsell me to goe for Goga, a better place, where wee should ride nearer the shore with our ships, where the Armado could not hinder our landing; and likewise it was nearer Cambaya, where there were more Merchants, and greater and better store of merchandize for our turnes: hauing to this effect deliuered his message, hee was desirous to know what I determined to doe, whether I would stay heere, or goe thither: I answered, as yet I had receiued no answer from the shore, saue a letter of small import, and till I knew what was become of our country-men and goods formerly left in the Countrey, I could not resolue him; and therefore I desired him to be a meanes, that some one of our people might come aboard to conferre with me, and Pilots to conduct vs thither, and then would I quickly resolue them what I would doe: in the meane while I could say nothing, I gaue him and his Interpreter a small reward, and dispeeded them.

A letter of Captain Ham-lyn from Agra.

A letter of William Finch from Labor.

The fift, a Braminey, or Priest of the Bannians, which came with the Mogoll for an Interpreter, came in a Boate of the Towne with a letter from Nicholas Bangham, and Captaine Hawkins letter from Agra, dated in Aprill last, relating the manner of his fauouring and dis-fauouring by the Great Mogoll, his ficklenesse in granting vs Trade, and afterward disallowing the same, giuing the Portugals Firmas against vs, contradicting thereby what formerly he had granted to vs and our Nation. By the same Messenger came two letters of a latter date from William Finch, from Labor, the one to the Commanders of any English shipping arriuing at Surat, the other to the Company in England, relating his proceedings, and intent to goe home ouer Land, the vnconstancie of the King and people of the Countrey, the practice of the Portugals, and many other circumstances, aduising me in any wise not to land any goods, nor hope for Trade in those parts: for that the people were all fickle and vnconstant like the King, and durst not offend the Portugals. I hauing perused these letters, grew hopelesse of any Trade in that place, yet resolued to trie the vttermost what might be done before I would depart: I vnderstood by Nicholas Banghams letters, that Captaine Sharpeigh, Iohn Iordayne and others, were comming from Cambaya to Surat, to goe along with me; and although I could haue no Trade, yet would I endeavour my selfe in all I might to get them all aboard, and not leaue them behind me. The Indian shippes which rid by me had giuen ouer their Voyage to the Southward; for that the Monson for the Southward was past. The Braminey desired my leaue that they might carry their ships into the Riuer, which in no wise I would grant, willing him to tell the Gouverneur and the rest of the Owners, that their ships should not depart thence, till I had all the Englishmen at Cambaya and Surat aboard of me; if I had permitted them to haue gone, I should haue frustrated my selfe of either sending too, or hearing from our people ashore: The Portugals intercepting both letters and men as much as they could.

The two and twentieth, the Portugals had laid them in ambush to cut off some of my men sent on shore: which when they saw their best time of aduantage brake out, and came in great heapes, confusedly running toward our men and boates; they discharged their shot at vs, and we answered them againe with ours, both from those my men a shore, and also from my Frigat, which rid close to the Land, all my men retired in safetie to my boats and Frigat, and the Portugals after some hurt receiued, returned behind the hills out of shot, and so in worse case then they came, went backe to their Frigats. There were of them seuen Ensignes, and might be in number about three hundred men; at this instant when they came vpon vs by Land, five of their greatest Frigats which rid a little way off to the Northward, came running vpon vs, and shot at vs, being nothing neare within shot. We went with our Frigat and boats aboard our ships to dinner, little hoping of any newes, as at that day, from our people ashore: the Portugall Frigats rowed to the Northward, and anchored where they rid before: I aduised with Captaine Downton, Master Iordayne and others, what course were best to take, and it was thought fit to abide no longer there, but to returne to the roade of Surat, where rid the Increase, and there to determine what we had best to doe.

1611.

An hundred sailes of Portu-gall Frigats.

The eight of Nouember, Nicholas Bangham came from Surat, and brought with him some refreshing, which with himselfe were very welcome: the newes held of the comming of Mocryb Can. The Vice-royes sonne came into the Riuer with an hundred saile of Frigats, the greatest part of them being Merchants bound for Cambaya: I caused this night our ships which rid within to come off and anchor by me, lest the enemies, whose strength I knew not, might attempt ought against them.

The ninth, The ships riding without the Sand, Hoia Nassan came downe to the Sea-side: I went to him with my Frigat and boats, and had conference with him; he promised mee (not to faile) two dayes or three at the furthest, hee would returne and bring goods with him to Trade with me; I told him I had been heere a great while, and could get no refreshing of victuals for my money, and therefore desired him to giue order the countrey people might bring me some, which he promised to doe, and vpon the same tooke his leaue and departed.

The eighteenth, I receiued a letter from Nicholas Bangham, wherein he wrote that there was little or no hope of trade to be expected.

This last letter of Nicholas Bangham, together with the breach of promise of Hoia Nassan, brought me out of hope of Trade, thinking all their former promises to be nothing but inuentions to delude and weary me, and in the end to turne me going without Trade, which they durst not not let me haue for feare of offending the Portugals, and yet loath to offend mee with absolute deniall. These things considered, I determined to be gone, and therefore had often writ to Nicholas Bangham to come away, but Hoia Nassan would not permit him: he seeing he could not get leaue to come, he stole secretly out of Towne, and as this day arriued heere. Anone after Hoia Nassan missing him (as it seemeth) and doubting at his comming that being hopelesse of Trade I would be gone, sent Iaddan the Broaker presently after him with a letter from himselfe, and another from Mockrib Can, promising speedily to come both vnto me. To which, in regard of his former promise breach, I could hardly giue credit, yet I resolved to spend some few dayes more to see the euent thereof. The Portugals lying all in the Riuer, not daring to come nigh vs by Sea, thought to entrappe vs by Land, and therefore a great number of them ambushed themselves behind a row of sand hills, not farre from our landing place, where they kept close, but God be thanked they failed of their expectation, all our people without hurt recouering the boate. In the meane season they in the ships were not idle, but let flye apace at them, both with great shot and small: the Portugals thinking to find vs vnprepared to bid them thus welcome, presently betooke them to their heeles, and fled behinde the hilles, where they lay lurking a while, not daring to shew their heads: they left one lying vpon the Strand being mortally wounded in the head, which our people brought aboard.

The foure and twentieth being Sunday, Iaddan the Broaker came aboard, and brought me word Mockrib Can was comming, and would be with me before night. After dinner I went to the shore side with my Frigat, where I found Hoia Nassan, who sent me word Mockrib Can was comming, and would be presently there. I returned aboard and made choyce of a good Present to giue him; which being effected, being well accompanied, I went directly aland, where I found Mockrib Can, Hoia Nassan, with great troupes of men abiding my comming, at our meeting we embraced each other; our ships at the same time discharging some Ordnance to bid him welcome, which he seemed to take kindly. After I had deliuered him a good Present, we sate downe vpon Carpets spred vpon the ground, where passed some conference betweene vs: being neare Sun-set, I entreated him he would be pleased to go aboard my ship, and there take his lodging for that night, which he presently granted, carrying with him his owne sonne, Hoia Nassans sonne, and diuers others his chiefe Followers, but Hoia Nassan would not goe: it pleased mee well to see him so confident, and made mee conceiue better hopes then before, he hauing all this part of the Countrey vnder his command. I gaue him the best entertainment I could, setting before him such Cates as vpon such a sudden I could prouide, which he, and those with him fel roundly to. After they had done eating, I deliuered him our Kings Maiesties Letter directed to him, and told him the effect thereof. He seemed to be very much pleased that his Maiestie would vouchsafe to write vnto him, and promised me to doe vs all the good he could, not onely for our present Trade, but also to giue vs any place or harbour I would appoint or name, where wee might fortifie our selues, if we so pleased. In fine, I not demanded any thing, but I found him as ready to grant, as I was to aske: growing late, I left him to his rest and departed.

The five and twentieth in the morning, Mockrib Can busied himselfe in buying of Knives, Glasses, or any other toyes he found amongst my Company: I went with him and shewed him the ship aloft and below: any thing he liked belonging to the ship, he carryed with him away gratis, besides many toyes of my Companys, which he liked, I bought and gaue him, endeavouring in all things I might to giue him content: after he had been fore and after, he returned to my Cabbin, where he would needs see all my Chests, Trunkes, and Lockers opened and searched. Whatsoeuer he saw there of mine that he tooke liking to, I gaue him for nothing. By this time victuals being readie, he went to dinner, which being done, hee was desirous to be gone to see the other ships, and there behaued himselfe in like sort.

The thirtieth and one and thirtieth, I sent Master Fowler, John Iordayne, and other our Merchants to see the goods: they returned and brought Mustrels and the prices: we set downe what we would giue for each sort, desiring them to doe the like by ours, that so we might come to agreement for both: they held me off with delayes, posting me off from day to day, but concluding nothing, they would neither offer for our commodities, nor abate in theirs. And whereas I had sold Mockrib Can all our Sword-blades the cheaper, because he should take the one with the other, they had chosen out the best of them, and returned me backe the worst, being the better halfe, and no speech when we should be paid for them: which done, they remoued their goods to bee gone for Surat. And vpon the same made Proclamation vpon great penalties, that no victuall or other thing should be brought vs; leauing me without cause thus abused.

The eighth of December in the morning, came Mockrib Can with all his crew vpon the strand, and about some fortie packs of their goods; I came a land with a good guard of shot and halberds: I went to him to his tent, where after friendly salutation and complements past, wee fell to treat of businesse: and agreed for prices of all our Lead, Quick-siluer, and Vermilion, and for their goods likewise in lieu thereof. It is to be noted, that all these goods did not belong to these two great men, but also to the Shabander, and diuers other Merchants; yet for the most part, the businesse were carried soly by Hoia Nassan, no man daring either to buy or sell with vs, without his preuention and leaue, by that meanes aduancing the prices of their goods, and abasing ours, to their great aduantage, and our great hinderance and losse.

Mozulls letter. The ninth in the morning, we began to land our Lead, and to receiue some of their goods: as also to be in good forwardnesse to make price for the rest, when a Letter came to Mockrib Can from his King, which dashed all his mirth and our proceedings for that present. Hee was very pleasant before he receiued and perused it; but afterwards became very sad: hee sate a good pretie while musing, and vpon a sudden riseth vp, & so goeth his way, without once looking towards, or speaking to me, I being seated hard by him. Before he tooke horse, he better bethought himselfe, and sent for me: when I came to him, he embraced me, telling me hee was my Brother, praying me to excuse this his sudden departure, for that he had earnest businesse, and must be gone; but he would leaue Hoia Nassan with me, to receiue and deliuer those goods already bargained for, and to bargain with me for more: shortly after, we heard he was put out of his gouernment of Cambaya, Hoia Nassan being lately put out of his gouernment of Surat (and others put in their places) this afterward we iudged to be the effect of the Kings letter, and the cause of his discontent. Mockrib Can being of late Gouvernour of Cambaya, and all the Sea-coast thereabouts, hath now nothing left him in this Countrey, but the place of the Customer of Surat.

The tenth, the new Gouvernour of Surat, and Affan Ally came aboard the Pepper-corne to mee to see the ships. After they had been there a while, we went to the Trades-increase, the Factors being ashore to see the weight of the Lead, which with no little trouble was neere-hand all landed, and imbarqued ready to bee sent a shore: they intreated Hoia Nassan that he would be pleased to goe in hand therewith, for that it would aske a great time in doing: the Factors would haue weighed with our English weights, which he would in no wise agree vnto: the Weigher of Surat was there with the weights of the Towne, and with that weight would he haue it weighed. In the end, seeing no other remedie, they gaue him way, and began to weigh with the countrey beame. After some fewe drafts, they desired they might vnderstand the beame before they proceeded any further, to know whether the Weigher told them the truth what it weighed: for he knowing it, and they not, he might giue them what weight he list: likewise they made triall of those they had weighed by his Beame, by ours, and found very great difference, in fve Pigges tenne or eleuen Maunds, each maund being three and thirtie pound English weight. Hee seeing he might not haue the Lead at what weight he listed, began to cauill, saying, he would haue halfe money, halfe goods for his commodities, otherwise we should not haue them, rayling and railing like a mad-man, calling for the Carmen to drawe away the goods, saying, he would none of our Lead, nor other goods, but instantly be gone: I being aboard the Increase with the Gouvernour and Sabandar, the Factors which were a shore sent one aboard a purpose, to aduise me of their proceedings, and how that Hoia Nassan was causing the Carmen to yooke their Oxen, to draw away all the goods they had brought, and if I did not take some speedie course for preuening the same, he would goe from his bargain, and returne all our goods vpon our hands againe: I thought hee was apt enough to doe so, by that little experience I had of him, as also a custome they haue in this Countrey (and by report in most parts of India) that what bargain soeuer is made betweene Merchant and Merchant may be rouoked, so it be done within the compasse of twentie foure houres, yea although he haue giuen earnest, and carried away the goods bought, yet hee may returne them, and haue backe his earnest. I vnderstood this bad custome before I landed any of my Lead, and doubting to haue such a trick put vpon me, I did purposely send vnto Hoia Nassan, Iohn Fowler and others, to know whether he would stand to his bargain, before I landed any Lead, which would put vs to much trouble to land it, and therefore I would be at a certaintie with him: he before many witnesses, promised them to take it all, and be as good as his word, and that with all speed they should land it. And now comming to the point of performance, hee flies from all he had formerly promised: I aduised with such as were about me what we had best doe, and it was thought the surest way, to keepe those men which were aboard me for pledges, till they had performed with vs, and if we could get Hoia Nassan into our possession, to keepe him, and free those: whereupon I detained the Gouvernour and Sabandar, telling them how Hoia Nassan had dealt with me, going about to delude me as formerly, and therefore there was no other remedie, but to keepe them for pledges for performance of the bargain. The Gouvernour counsell'd mee to goe a shore, and fetch the man himselfe, which I did, giuing the Gouvernour a good Present, I let him depart, keeping Hoia Nassan and the Sabandar for pledges aboard the Pepper-corne.

The nineteenth, Hoia Affan Ally the Sabandar came from Surat: he shewed mee a couple of Letters, which were sent from the Vice-roy from Goa, one of them directed to himselfe, the other to the Captaine Maior of Diu: I opened and perused them both. The effect of the letter to the Captaine Maior was, that he had receiued his letter, whereby hee vnderstood the especiall good seruice done against the English, in putting the English Captaine and his people to swim to his Boates for their safetie, otherwise he had taken them prisoners or slaine them: for the which he highly commended him, hauing done the part of a valiant Captaine, and worthy souldiour; which good seruice done to his King and Countrey, would redound to his great honour: for the which hee gaue him as many thanks, as if hee had taken the English Captaine prisoner: and partly partly to gratifie him, he bestowed those Frigates, which hee lately before had taken from the Mallabers vpon him, certifying him he had sent his sonne in the Armie, which was young, praying him to assist him with his counsell, whereby he might gaine a great name. Thus was the Vice-Roy and my selfe abused, by the false reports of a lying Braggard. The other letter to the Sabandar, was to thanke him that he would not permit the English Nation to trade at Surat, willing him to continue in that mind, and he should doe the King of Portugal great seruice, for the which he should not loose his reward. This day came diuers Carts laden with prouisions for the ships from Surat, bought by Nicholas Bauggam.

10 The foure and twentieth, the accompts on both sides were cleered, and businesse finished, the pledges on either part released, they promised vs to deale with vs for the rest of our Commodities: they tarried till the sixe and twentieth day, but did nothing worth noting. The seuen and twentieth, came a Jew aboard me, which brought me a letter from Massulipatan, dated the eighth of September, from one Peter Floris a Dantiscan, employed by the Company, shewing his setting out in February, his speedie and safe passage and arriuing there in the beginning of September.

A letter of Peter Floris.
Januar. 2. 1611

The second of Ianuary, 1611. I wrote to Captaine Hawkins, from whom I had receiued a letter the eight and twentieth of December: and sent Captaine Sharpeigh, Hugh Fraine, and Hugh Greet, to let the minde of Captaine Hawkins in some better course, then he seemed to aime at in his last letter to me. As also to buy some Indicoes, and other commodities, if they might be had at reasonable rates.

20 The sixe and twentieth, Captaine Hawkins and Captaine Sharpeigh came to the water side: they had left their carriage behind them fiae miles off: I landed with two hundred armed men, and went to meet them, to safegard them and their goods from the Portugals, which I doubted would doe their best to intercept them; we met them about some three miles off, and brought all in safetie aboard our ships, not seeing any Portugals.

Capt. Hawkins cometh aboard our ships.

The seuen and twentieth, I sent John Williams and one of our Factors to Surat vpon businesse. This day Mockrib Can came to Towne; he had been to meet a great Commander, which was comming from the warres of Decan, and was to passe by Surat. Before his going out of the Towne, he sent for M. Jourdain, and willed him to commend him to me, and to certifie me that he was to goe out of the Towne, but would not tarry out about three dayes, and at his returne he would be as good as his word, for what he had promised concerning our Factory. Now at his returne, he sends for him againe, and with a frowning countenance, contrary to his expectation, demands of him what he did there, and why were we not all gone: he answered, that hee staid vpon his word and promise that we should leaue a Factory, otherwise he had not been there: he said againe, we should haue no Factory there, and that the long staying of our shippes there, had hindered him in his Customes tenne hundred thousand manueys, and therefore in the Kings name charged them to be gone with speed out of the Towne: for neither trade nor Factorie was there to be had for vs. John Williams returned this morning, and two carts with prouisions came from Surat. The nine and twentieth, I sent for the Factors at Surat to doe as Mockrib Can commanded, to hast and come away, for that I would be gone.

¶ VI.

His going to Dabul, and thence to the Red Sea, and enforced trade with the Guzerates.

10 THe ninth of February in the morning, beeing calme, we warped ouer the sand with the Increase: had we not got ouer this tide, we had lost the whole Spring. This road of Swally standeth in the latitude of twentie degrees fifty seuen minutes: variation sixteene degrees thirty minutes. The eleuenth in the morning, we set sayle for the road of Surat, and anchored there in the afternoone, by a new ship of Surat lately launched, and came out of the Riuer, she was bound for the Red Sea. The latitude of this roade is twenty degrees fortie two minutes.

The road of Swally is in twenty degr. fiftie seuen min. Variation sixteen degrees thirty minutes.

60 The twelfth, we weighed and droue to the South-ward, & anchored two leagues from the road by a ship of Calicut bound for Surat, out of which ship I tooke a Pilot for Dabul. The thirteenth, we weighed & droue down; at noon came a gale Northerly: at the comming of the wind we had seuentene fathome: we halled off West by South, in twelue and foureteene fathome: after steered South West by West till foure a clocke; betweene which time wee had from foureteene to twentie fathome: vpon a sudden we came to eight fathome, and then to sixe, being then in my opinion from the ship that rid in the road of Surat tenne leagues: then we haled in East, and East by South three quarters of a mile, and found from sixe fathome to twentie againe: then wee steered South-west by South, till one a clocke after midnight, being for the most part against the tide. At that time the water shoaled in two casts from twentie to fifteene fathome, hauing run in nine houres some seuen leagues and a halfe: then we haled off three houres (being little wind)

till we came to twentie fathome: then we steered South South-west, at which time we see the land, with two hammocks thereon, bearing East South-east some eight leagues off: which wee iudged to be Damon. At fixe in the euening, we haled in South South-east, the wind Northerly: it suddenly fell calme, and so continued till past midnight. This morning our latitude nineteene degrees fifteene minutes, hauing steered all night South by West, and our depths between twelue and fourteene fathome, five leagues off the shore, in the morning little wind, at noone came a gale; we steered South, the winde West North-west. In the euening being betweene foure and five leagues from the shore, we had thirteene fathome; at Sun-set we iudged our selues thwart of Chaul. We steered South all night with a faire gale of wind.

Chaul.

He arriveth at Dabull, and there hath Trade.

The sixteenth, wee steered alongst the coast South and by East, till six a clocke in the euening, keeping for the most part in ten fathome or there about, at which time we arrived in the Road of Dabull, which standeth in the latitude of seuentene degrees, two and fortie minutes, variation sixteene degrees and thirtie minutes.

The seuenteenth, the Pilot which I had out of the Mallabar, I sent ashore in a Fisher-boate with a letter which I had at my being at Moha, from Mollich Abor, Captaine or Nobuda of a great shippe of this place. The letter was to the Gouverneur, to intreat him to vse me kindly, and to Trade with me. In the afternoone, the Gouverneur and Mellick Amber, each of them sent me a small present of refreshing, and many complements, offering me any thing the Countrey did afford; and if I pleased to send ashore, he would deale with me for our commodities: I sent a couple of Merchants ashore with a good Present, who were bid kindly welcome, and well entertained whiles they were there.

The eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth (Boats passing each day betweene the shippes and shore) were spent about the sale of some goods, the particulars with each dayes businesse, I referre to the account of the Merchants, holding it not fit here to be expressed. By the three and twentieth, we had deliuered all our goods we had bargained for, and no hope of further sales in this place; I determined with all speed to be gone from hence.

The foure and twentieth, I called a Councell to aduise what we had best to do: I propounded whether it were better to goe from hence directly for Priaman, Bantam, &c. or to returne to the Red-sea, there to meete with such Indian shippes as should be bound thither, and for that they would not deale with vs at their owne doores, wee hauing come so farre with commodities fitting their Countrey, no where else in India vendable: I thought wee should doe our selues some right, and them no wrong, to cause them barter with vs, wee to take their Indicoes and other goods of theirs, as they were worth, and they to take ours in lieu thereof. All mens opinions were for the Red-sea, for diuers reasons. As first, the putting off our English goods, and hauing others in place thereof fitting our Countrey. Secondly, to take some reuenge of the great and vn sufferable wrongs and iniuries done me by the Turkes there. And the third and last, but not the least, to saue that ship, men and goods (which by way of Massulipatan) wee heard was bound for those parts; which we held vnpossible to escape betraying. These things considered, we concluded to goe backe for the Red-sea: from this day to the seuen and twentieth, wee spent in getting fresh water aboard: they had bought all my Red-lead, and it was carried ashore and deliuered, but afterwards disliking it, they returned it backe. In the euening we saw a ship in the Offing, two or three Mallabars which rid by vs, told vs there was a Portugall ship of Cochin bound for Chaul: I sent the Pepper-corne, Darling and Frigat to fetch her in to me.

A Portugall
shippetaken.

The eight and twentieth, my men in the Frigat had pillaged them, which I tooke from them and returned to their owners: her lading was Coco-nuts, having little else in her. This day we spent in romaging the Portugals ship, I could find no bills of lading in her; some small matter I tooke from her, in regard of former iniuries offered me by the Captaine Maioir Don Francisco de Soto maior at the barre of Surat, as namely, taking my goods, and hindering my Trade. In that I sustained no further harme by them, it was not for lack of good will, but lacke of meanes, as manifestly appeared by letters of the Vice-roy and others, which came to my hands by chance; what I had from them, I haue vnder the hands of the chiefe men in her.

March 24.
Zacotora.

Anno 1612.

Currents.

The foure and twentieth of March wee had sight of the Iland Zacotora, and at foure in the afternoone, the point of Dellashaw bore South South-west six leagues off, variation nineteene degrees. From the foure and twentieth at noone till this day at noone, wee steered North-west and by West, and West North-west, and West all night, thinking by day-light to haue bene neare the Westermost part of the Iland; but contrary to our expectation, wee found wee had gone little a head, hauing had a faire gale, which shewes we haue had a great currant against vs. From noone till foure in the next morning, wee steered alongst the land with little wind, and then it fell calme, the currant carrying vs directly vpon a rocke, which lyeth foure or five leagues from the wester part of Loccatra: we were forced to anchor till we had a gale to carry vs from it; about two houres after came the wind Easterly, wee weighed and stood to the Westward, and at noone we were foure leagues from the Rocke, here wee found a currant setting to the Northward.

The seuen and twentieth, we steered West South-west, we met with a great currant setting to the the Northward; in the morning we were thwart of Abba del Curia, and before night had sight of Cape Guadaſui, being ſome ſeven leagues off: from yeſterday noone till this day night, our courſe Weſt South-weſt, we might go in that time eight and twentie leagues our true way Weſt little Southerly: we ſtood in till midnight, and then hailed cloſe of a wind to the Southward, and ſo ſpent the night till day.

Abba del Curia.

The eight and twentieth, by eight of the clock we were faire by the ſhore, mid-way between the two Capes of Guadaſui & Felux.

The ſecond of Aprill, Maſter Pemberton came aboard of me, and told mee that he had been at Soccatora, and the King ſhewed him a writing left there by Captaine Iohn Saris (who was General of three ſhips) wherein he related what time he came out of England, his places of reſreſhing by the way, and his arrivall there; as alſo his proceeding to the Red-ſea to ſeeke Trade; ſpecifying likewiſe that he had peruſed a writing left there by mee, wherein were alleged many reaſons to diſſwade him from going thither; yet hauing the Gran Signiors Paſſe, he hoped of better entertainment then I had. Hearing this vnexpected newes, I called a Councell to aduiſe what we had beſt doe; whereabout we ſpent but ſmall time, for that we were quickly reſolved to proceed as formerly we had determined, hauing now no other way left: for backe we could not returne till the Weſterly wind were come, which could not be before midde May. Whereupon I preſently diſpeeded Captaine Nicholas Downton, and left him in the Pepper-corne to tarrie there abouts till the fifth of this moneth, for the keeping of the Port of Aden. And I with the Trades-Increase and Darling to keepe the two-fold entrance of Babbe/mandell. We ſteered from thence with the head of Aden, being about ſeven leagues off: about foure in the evening wee were thwart of Aden: this evening variation thirteene degrees and ſortie minutes latitude of Aden, twelue degrees and fortie ſeven minutes.

The third, from foure a clocke the ſecond day, till this day morning little wind, wee ſteered alongſt the Channell Weſt by North, and Weſt North-weſt, towards the heat of the day it began to blow, we continued our courſe as before. About Sun-ſet we anchored in twentie fathome foure leagues ſhort of the Bab, where we rid till the next morning.

The fourth, in the morning about eight a clocke we weighed and ſet ſaile, and about ten in the forenoone wee anchored within Bab-mandell in eight fathome water. Faire by the Channell which wee came in at, is halfe a league ouer betweene the maine of Arabia and the Iland. Preſently at our comming to an anchor, there came a Boat from the ſhore aboard of me, wherein was a Turke and three or foure Arrabian ſouldiers. This Turke was chiefe of the place, ſent by the Aga of Moha to guard it. He promiſed that if I would haue a letter ſent, he would preſently diſpatch a foot-poſte away, who ſhould returne within three dayes with anſwere, whereupon I writ a letter to Captaine Saris at Moha, wherein I certified him the cauſe of my comming, and what I determined to doe.

The ſixth, came in a Ialba of Zela, a place without the Bab, vpon the Habaſhe ſhoare, bound for Moha: her loding was Mats. I bought of her twelue ſheepe, and ſo permitted them to depart. This day much raine.

The ſeuenth, came in a ſhip of Baſanor, in the morning early before day, which I cauſed to come to anchor by me, one of Captaine Saris Merchants called Richard Wickam, came this morning with Letters from his Captaine, the effect thereof I omit to write here. I returned him anſwere thereof, by a Turke which came in his company, but Wickam I ſtayd with me, for that I doubted they of Moha would haue kept him Priſoner, for that I imbarqued the India ſhips.

The eight, in the after-noone came in a ſhip of Dix, (bound for Moha) I ſent off my Frigate to fetch her in, who brought her to an Anchor by me. This was the ſame ſhip I detayned the laſt yeare in Moha Roade. This day we romaged theſe two fore-ſaid ſhips, and tooke out of them ſuch goods as were for our purpoſe, which were brought aboard me.

A ſhip of Dix.

The ninth, came in a ſmall Frigate of Shaber, laden with courſe Ollibanum, wee bought ſome part thereof, and paid them Rials for it to their content: we continued romaging the India ſhips for more goods. The eleuenth, I ſtayd a ſmall Barke of Sinde.

Note that euer ſince our comming into the Bab till this twelfth day, the wind kept ſtill vpon the South-eaſt quarter; but now at North-weſt, and likely to blow hard: the laſt yeare the ſame day the wind came vp at North-weſt, and continued ſo for three dayes. This courſe the wind holds euery yeare: the reſt of the day, and the next we ſpent in moring of our ſhip, as alſo the Indian ſhips which were readie to driue aſhore, had not we layd out moring for them, the wind blowing hard at North-weſt.

The fourteenth, came Captaine Saris into the Road about eight in the morning, and anchored by me with his three ſhippes. They ſaluted me with their Ordnance, and I them; Captaine Saris, Captaine Towerſon, and Maſter Cox (their chiefe Merchant) came aboard of me, where we ſpent all that day in friendly communication: I acquainted him with my great lacke of Cables, which he promiſed to ſupply. At night they departed to their ſhips, Captaine Saris inuiting me and others the next day to dinner with him.

The fifteenth, I went aboard the Cloue, where I and thoſe which came with me were kindly enterteyned, entertayned, he shewed me the Gran Signiors Passe, and read it to me. Many words passed betwixt vs, he promising to himselfe much good Trade at Moba if I had not come, which my experience found to the contrarie. At last wee agreed and sealed it in Writings interchangeable, that he should haue one third part of what should be taken, paying for the same as I did, for the seruice of his three ships in the Action: leauing the disposing of the ships afterward to me, who had sustayned the wrongs.

The sixteenth, came in two ships, I sent my Frigate and brought them to anchor by mee, the one was of Calicut, laden with Rice, bound for Moba, the other was of Carapatan, laden with Pepper, which ship came from Achen; and was bound for Aden, but by Captaine Downton being chased to Lee-ward of the place, they determined to goe for Moba. This Carapatan is a place neere Dabul, they being subiects to the same King.

The eighteenth, came in a ship of Cananor bound for Moba, she came from Achen, her lading for the most part Pepper.

The nineteenth, came in two ships of Surat, the one called the Hassain, belonging to Abdela-san, bound for Zidda, the other a small ship of my old friend Hoia Nassan, bound for Moba. I caused them to anchor by me, taking their Sayles from their yards, and kept some of the chiefe men aboard of me; by them we vnderstood the Great Mogols Mothers ship, called the Rhemy, was shortly to come.

The twentieth, came in a ship of Diu, laden with India Commodities, bound for Moba, and presently after came in a ship of Dabul: shee passed by vs, I sent my Pinnasse after her, which caused them to come to an Anchor.

The one and twentieth, I sent away Passengers out of the Surat ships: about noone came in a small ship of Calicut, bound for Moba, which ship we stayd.

The two and twentieth, came in a Frigate of Shehor, which came from Goa, bound for Zidda, laden with grosse Ollibanum: and presently after came in sight a great shippe which passed the great Channell, and was chased by the Darling, who caused her to anchor by the Hector, she was of Diu, bound for Swaken, laden with India Commodities.

The three and twentieth, came in the Rhemy of Surat, the Queene Mothers ship laden with India Commodities bound for Zidda; she was stayed with the rest. In this ship were fiftene hundred persons. In the after-noon, I made signe to the Darling to come to mee, which presently she perceiued and came; I deliuered each ship their Sayles, and willed them in the morning betimes to be ready to saile with me, for that I would go to Lee-ward to the Road of Affab.

The foure and twentieth, we weighed and set saile from the Bab, and all the India ships with vs: leauing the Thomas and Darling, to ply vp to the Bab, and went for the Roade of Affab:
we arriued at Crab Island about five a clocke, and came to an Anchor with all the Fleet, in twelue fathome water; where we rid all night, the wind at South South-west.

The five and twentieth, in the morning wee weighed and all the Fleet, and stood in for the Road of Affab, and about one of the clock we came to an Anchor in seuen and a half of fathoms.

The seuen and twentieth, we fetched good store of Indicos out of the ships of Surat and Diu, the Cloue being in the offing in sight, plying to and fro, and not seeing vs, I caused the Gunner to shoot off a Peece of Ordnance: which they hearing, answered mee with another, and presently bore vp for the Road.

East-Indies, set forth by the said Company, his Iournall, or certaine Extracts thereof.

§. I.

Their comming to Saldania and thence to Socatora.

July, 22 1611.

He two and twentieth of July, at foure in the after-noon, wee had sight of the Table and point of Saldania, bearing East, distant twelue leagues, but by reason of calmes and vncertaine winds, it was the foure and twentieth day before wee were mored in the Roade, where we found three Hollanders, one whereof was bound for Bantam, and in her Peter But Generall of thirteene Saile outwards bound, who hauing spent his maine Mast, and lost company of his Fleet, put into

to the Road for to refresh his sicke men. The other two hauing made traine of Scales at Penguin Island bound home.

Saldania is a Bay some fourteene leagues North North-east, from the Cape Bona Speranza, Bay of Saldania and North by West ten leagues from Cape Falso, which is East-ward of the former, and may both be seene in the said Bay: these two Capes are also diuided by another great Bay, the distance betweene these two Bayes, is some three leagues being low marshie ground, extending South and North, which on either side is inuironed with Mountaines. In this Bay of Saldania, when you haue brought the Norther point thereof, West North-west, North-west and by West, for a small ship North-west, thwart of the ledge of rockes (or watering place) neere the shore, which will be laid (as it were) in the swampe betweene the high Mountaines, called the Table and the Sugar-loafe, in fixe, fise, or foure fathome according to the draught of your shippe, in cleane ground, and good anchor-hold you may safely ride. Penguin Island with his ledge distant three leagues off, bearing North North-west halfe West, and stretching to the North and by West of you in the road. The maine land also, though it be thirteene leagues distant, trendeth a way to the West and by West, so that there is little about three points open to let in the North-west Sea, which is the greatest stormes. Saldania hauing in former time been comfortable to all our Nation traueilling this way, both outwards and home-wards, yeelding them abundance of flesh, as Sheepe and Beeues brought downe by the Saluage Inhabitants, and sold for trifles, as a Beife for a piece of an Iron hoope of foureteene inches long, and a Sheepe for a lesser piece, whereby weake sicke men in former Voyages haue been easily recouered and made strong: now contrariwise, whether our Trade here were spoyled by the Dutchmen we here found, who vse to spoyle all places where they come (onely respecting their owne present occasions) by their ouer-much liberalitie; or whether the Cattell in former times so abundantly brought downe, were preyes taken by warres from one another, or other differences which might make them greedy of yron, to make heads for their Launces or Darts, which now by peace or reconciliation they haue little need of; the true cause, for want of vnderstanding in their language, I know not. But well I found, that all the demises we could vse by bribes or otherwise to them, which daily came downe to our tents in faire weather, would procure nothing from them for our sicke mens reliefe, but foure Cowes, and those foure Cowes which we did buy, were so old and leane, that there was but little goodnesse in the flesh; for which they would take no yron, but thin pieces of Copper of fixe inches square, and some seuen sheep at peice three inches square of copper, cut out of a Kettle, whereof they make rings by fixe or eight together, which they weare on their armes, which being bright and smooth, vnto them seemeth very braue.

These people are the filthiest for the vſage of their bodies, that euer I haue seene or heard of: for besides the naturall vncleanness (as by sweat or otherwise) whereto all people are subiect, which the most by washing cleare themselves of, contrariwise this people doe augment, by anointing their bodies with a filthy substance, which I suppose to be the iuice of herbes which on their body sheweth like Cow-dung, and on their wool of their heads is so baked, like a scurfe of greene herbes. For apparrell, they weare before their priuities the taile of a Cat, or some other small beast, and a cloake made of a sheeps-skin, reaching downe to the middle of their thighs; and according to the weather, they turne some time the hairy side, and sometimes the drest side to their bodies.

Their Sheep haue no wooll, but haire, and are partie-coloured like Calues; their legges are longer, and their bodies larger then our sheepe in England, but not so fat. The Principall of these people weare about the bight of their armes, a thin flat ring of Ivory, beeing very smooth, and wrought compasse neere sixteene inches wide, and on their wrists some fixe, eight, tenne, or twelue rings of Copper, bright and smooth, all either fastned together, or wrought in one. Other toyes also, as Bracelets of blue glasse, and pearle shels, which are either presented them, or by idle people giuen them for Estridge eggshels, for quills of Porcupines, which without restraint the Dutchmen did ordinarily buy, also an other most strange and filthy wearing, to what purpose I know not, as the guts of Cattell about their neckes, which makes them smell like a Butchers slaughter-house. In their hands they carrie a small Lance or Dart, that hath a small yron head, and a few Estridges feathers as a fan to keepe away the flies: they haue also Bowes and arrowes, but when they came downe to vs, they would leaue them in some hole or bush by the way. They are straight made people, and nimble of foote, it seemeth that their habitation is moouable, to places of best pasture for their Cattell, as in the Valley betweene the Mountaines, whose tops (farre vp into the Countrey) were couered with snow at this time, but those neere the Sea-side are cleare thereof, notwithstanding they are very high.

Wild beasts there are of diuers sorts, but these we haue seene, Fallow-deare, Antilopes, Porcupines, land Tortesses, Baboones, (also the Dutchmen told vs of Lyons, but wee saw none) Snakes, and Adders.

Fowles also abundance, to wit, Wild-geese, Duckes, Pellicans, Passea, Flemingos, and Crowes, which haue in their neckes, as it were, a white band, and small birds greene coloured, and diuers other sorts vknowne. Also Sea-fowles, to wit Penguins, Gulls, Pentados, which are spotted Prouisio more scarce at Saldania then in times past, and why.

Filthy people and loathsome.

Saldania sheep. Jewels and Ornaments.

ted blacke and white; also a grey fowle, the Pinions whereof are blacke, which the Portugals call Alcatrasses, and Shags or Cormorants at the Iland in great abundance, and an other kind of fowle like Moore-hennes.

Great numbers of smal Whales

Fishes there are of diuers sorts, but these following haue I seene, to wit, in faire weather there are a small sort of Whales in great numbers; at the Iland Seales in great abundance. With the Saine, we tooke fish like Millets, being as large as a Trought, Smelts, Thornebackes, and Doggs; and on the Rockes, Limpets, and Mussels abundance. In the fresh water the Vnions men caught with a Saine, abundance of Millets, as when we met with them they told vs. It is a very wholesome aire, and aboundeth with good fresh water, both for filling in the roade, and for trauellers in the land, which in small streames descendeth from the Mountaines.

The Table.

One morning by my instigation, my Generall and I, accompanied with thirteene men more, whereof foure were small shot, went to see if we could find place where we might cut wood; and beeing gone some three miles, and finding none but small Greene wood, whereof we in the Peper-corne, by reason of our great want, were forced to cut: my Generall desirous to get refreshing for our weake sicke men, determined to walke about the Table, to see if wee could see any Cattell, that we might by any meanes buy for our reliefe, not thinking it would haue beene so long a iourney, where we past through a most vneasie, vnequall, stony, vnbeaten (and as it were) ouergrowne wildernesse, wherein often we were to descend and ascend, through many deep and hollow water-courses, ouer growne with trees from side to side, which were made with the raines swift descent from the hill called the Table, and after a while found a beaten path (where in we past, seeing many pens wherein Cattell had been kept) which for that it lead from-wards our ship, we were forced to leaue, and againe had a most vile tiresome trauell for a while, till we hit into another path, which led along the Mountaines towards the roade, and hauing past a while betweene the Mountaines, as neere as they would giue vs leaue, still following the beaten path which was our best guide, at length we passed ouer in the Swamp, betweene the Southermost Sugar-loafe, and the Table, at which time we had sight of the Sea side, alongst which wee went ouer the sides of the Clifles, which at length we forsooke, going by iudgement East towards the Swamp, between the Northermost Sugar-loafe and Table, where in the morning (after we had rested our selues a little by a fire) we made haste, and past ouer the aforesaid Swampe; and before breake of day we came to our Tents, where we found all our men that could be spared, disturbedly in armes, diuided into two Companies, the one halfe vnder M. Thornton, the other vnder M. Pemberton, determining at day light to separate themselves, and againe to meete on the other side of the Table, to goe and seeke vs, which intent our approach did preuent, refreshing our selues with what our friends had prepared for their intended iourney. All the day we kept the Table on our right hand, and the Marsh on our left hand, which neere the Mountaines is much pestered with rockes, which haue fallen from the top of the Mountaine. It is moist ground, and seemeth to be good pasture for Cattell. In diuers places scatteringly wee sawe some trees of small stature, somewhat broad topped, bearing a fruit in bignesse and proportion like a Pine-apple; but the huske not so hard, and spungie, the seed whereof were deuoured by the birds, and the husks remaining on the trees, the leaues whereof were in forme of our Housleeke in England, but not so chicke.

Garden-seeds to be set at Saldania.

At this time was their Spring, both Trees and Herbes blowing ouer the earth. It much repenteth me that I came vnprovided of all sorts of Garden-seeds, which might be helpfull or necessary for reliefe of any Christians, which hereafter might come hither, which though the Saluages should somewhat spoyle, yet euery Christian Captaine would seeke to augment, and re-edifie the same. Also Acornes, which in time may doe good to posteritie, for trees are not here so long in growing, as in our cold Countreys. I will not contradict all such as vwill esteeme it more idlenesse in me, to wish to sow where it is many to one I shall neuer reape; yet for my selfe I esteeme it more idlenesse in me, that I had not bin so prouident as to haue sought means in England to haue performed the same. And I would to God I could or had meanes, to leaue a profitable remembrance for Christian Trauellers vnto the ende of the world, in any place where I shall come.

They depart
from Saldania.

Now hauing to our vtmost endeaours here finished all our necessary busineses, to wit, watering, and somewhat relieved our weake sicke men with what refreshing wee could get, which was principally Mussels, we prepared our ships to set saile the ninth of August, which by contrary winds was crossed, vntill the thirteenth day following.

The thirteenth of August at foure in the morning, we set saile from the roade of Saldania, hauing the wind faire at South South-east: and at sixe a clocke in the afternoone, the Cape Bona Speranza bore South-east, distant sixteene leagues.

Cape des Aguilhas.

The sixteenth in the morning, Cape Bona Speranza bore North-west and by West, distant twelue leagues, and by foure a clocke in the afternoone, wee had brought the Cape Aguilhas North-east sixteen leagues distant, our course being South-east. The eighteenth day, little wind, but an high Sea flowering on the top like a breach in shoald water. The nineteenth, we had a very strong gale of wind.

The

The sixth of September, at three of the clocke, wee discied the Iland of Madagascar, or S. Laurence, in the latitude of twentie three degrees, thirtie eight minutes, and at fixe a clocke we anchored in twelue fathome water in the bay of S. Augustine, where we found the Vnion of London, the Vice-Admirall of the fourth Voyage (whose people was distressed, wanting victuals to carry them home) who related vnto my Generall, their infortunate loosing company with their Admirall and Pinnaffe betweene Saldania, and the Cape Bona Speranza, and neuer since heard of them, how they put into this bay, outward bound to seeke them, followed also after them, and put into Zanzibar, (an Iland bordering on the Abaxin coast) where the Portugals made shewes of fauour and trade, inticing them to land with their boat, where they betrayed and tooke three of their men; the rest seeing the danger, fled with the boat vnto the ship, who proceeded on their iourney, till with contrary winds, before they could recover any fit Port, for want of water they were forced to return towards the bay of Antongil on the East South-east side of Madagascar, but the wind or the course not suiting with their determination, they put into a good Harbor or Bay of Iungomar, on the North-west corner of Madagascar, where they were a while fed with good words, and faire promises, and kind entertainment by the King; that in short time the Cape Merchant, in hope of trade for Ambergreece and other things, grew so conceited of this heathen Kings plaine meaning, that at the Kings request went not alone to him, but perswaded his Captaine and other Merchants to accompanie him, who being brought to the Kings presence, hee sent also for the Chirurgion, Trumpet, and Drum, who refusing to goe to him presently, there sallied out of the woods a great number of people, which attempted to force the boat and men in her, with Darts, Arrowes and Lances, who perceiuing themselves preuented by the good care and endeauours of them in the Boat, they pursued the Boat with armed Canoas out of the river, vntill by many shot from the ship she was rescued. And few dayes after while they lingred in hope of some good newes from their Captaine and Merchants, they attempted the ship with a demy army of some hundred Canoas, which came in order and forme of an halfe Moone, which to preuent brought themselves vnder saile, and shooke them off, and departed on their iourney. It seemed that they could not fetch Socatra, or the Master vnwilling to go to the Red Sea, or Surat, but went to Achin, and there dealt for some fit commodities with the Guzerates, & from thence to Priaman to lade Pepper: where the Merchant made bargaine to receiue it at Tecco, an Iland three leagues distant from Priaman, at fiteene, foureteene, and thirteene Ryals and an halfe of eight by the Bahar of Pepper, euery Bahar is three hundred and twelue there. This ship the Generall plentifully supplied with victuals, for whose reliefe he made the longer stay; he also vniited them in loue one vnto another, who at our comming in were diuided, to wit, Samuel Bradshaw for his sober, discreet, and prouident carriage in the Companies busines much enuied by their factious Master, and his adherents; whom wee left in the said Bay, as seeming louers and friends.

In this Bay we continued seuentie houres; it is for the most part all deepe water, and vncertaine, no ground in diuers places (by diuers reports) in two hundred fathome; by vs further examining of deeps had beene in vaine, but we found all the South shore in a manner, from the Wester point to the high Cliffe-land, all flat rockie, whose ledges are to be seene dry at the low water. At the Easter end of the rockes neere the cliffe, wee anchored in twelue fathome, and might haue rid neerer the shore in seuen fathome: we came in out of the Sea with a strong gale at South South-west, but comming neere vnto the land, the wind grew duller, yet blew reasonable fresh in the day, but in the night ordinarily calme the time we were there; but that beeing the newe Moone, which makes the fowlest weather in the Countreyes, I cannot say of other times. On the land it seemes alwaies to be very hot, especially when the Sunne is to the South-wards of the Equinoctiall.

In this place are two trees of diuers kinds, some so full of fat sappe, that fire beeing put to it as it standeth greene, of it selfe it will runne vp, blazing in the leaues and branches: the Timber is soft, and the leaues and boughes yeelds a yellow sap. An other sort also of trees, whose timber is neere as hard as Lignum vita, and of colour white, with a small brown heart, whether any kind of white Saunders I know not: that wood which we cut off for fire-wood in the Peppercorne, which was the most plentiful of any sort there, did all hang trased with cods of greene fruit (as big as a Bean-cod in England) called Tamerim: it hath a very sowre tast, and by the Apothecaries is held good against the Scuruie; our Admiralls men who had more leasure gathered some as it was greene, for their particular vses. Here is also plentie of an herbe (which for his forme is scarce to be discerned from a Semperviuum) whereof the Alloes, called Alloes Socatrina is made of all sorts, but I know not whether these saluage people haue either the knowledge or the vse thereof.

The people, by what occasion I know not, forbore to come to vs, so that wee gat no kind of Cattell for refreshing, neither beife nor mutton, whereof others heretofore haue been offered for a Ryall of eight an Oxe; but now it is said, that for want of gouernment in the Vnion, when any was brought downe, what the Factor did prouidently forbore to keepe downe the price, dis-ordered fellowes for their owne particular, gaue what the saluages demanded; so that now they can scarce get any for tenne shillings a piece. It seemes, that in all places of this Iland, men must stand vpon their guard, for the people are treacherous. Yet by report, stout and valiant, and not ignorant in ordering of their people in battell array, as it seemed by their order at Gungmar, when they assaulted the Vnion. Their weapons are Bowes and arrowes, Lances, and small Darts which they carry in bundles.

Now hauing performed all our necessary busineses, as wooding and watering, and relieved our Countrey-men to the utmost of our powers, we set saile out of the said Bay.

September.

The ninth day of September, at foure a clocke after-noon, we set saile out of the Bay of S. Augustine, leauing the Vnion there as afore-said.

Note.

The one and twentieth, the wind beeing at East South-East, and the Current by my iudgement setting South-west, wee were intangled with a Lee-shore, which we called the Carribas, which are diuers small Ilands, of which also lieth diuers ledges of Rockes that are by the breach of the Sea onely discerned; and spent sixe dayes before we could quit our selues of them, beeing betweene tenne and eleuen degrees South latitude.

Mozambique.

This Coast lieth neereft North-easterly, and South-westerly, and the wind all these sixe daies betweene the East North-east, and East South-east; so that against our wills wee were still forced to Lee-ward, though by towing with our Boates, and otherwise, we endeauoured to get off. This place by my iudgement may be to the North-ward of Mozambique, somewhat more then seuentie leagues: by night for the most part we were neereft those dangers, which were alwaies betweene vs and the shore, that wee could neuer discouer neere the maine, nor giue any good iudgement of the distances betweene Iland and Iland, neither set them downe their true forme.

Current.
October.

The greatest danger is in the strength of the Current setting on, and no place to anchor in, beeing deepe water close aboard the Rockes; and though somewhat neere these Rockes you haue ground, yet it is so deepe and foule ground, that there is no anchoring; and on the Norther part hereof, though by my estimation wee were little more then two leagues from the shore, yet wee had no ground in an hundred and fiftie fathome. These are sandy Ilands, and (for the most part) were full of Trees. After it grewe darke euery night, wee might see the fires on shore made by the Countrey-people, but wee had no list to spend so much time as to goe on shore to speake with them. After it pleased God that we had once got cleare of these dangers, wee to our great admiration, found the Current to carry vs to the North-wards, as much more as by our iudgement the shippe went: as when by our iudgement wee might goe some fiftene leagues, we went thirty leagues. The second of October we had much raine.

The ninth, we found the Current to cease, except it set to the East-wards, which we could not discern. The tenth, eleuenth, and twelfth, we found our selues to loose euery day, more and more by the Current.

Duas Irmãos.

The seuententh at Sun-rising, wee descried two Ilands, which for their likelihood are called the Duas Irmãos (or the two sisters) which lie one from the other West by South, and East by North, and are distant from the West point of Zacotora some seauen leagues and an halfe; we steering North North-east with the West point of Zacotora, had these depths, twentie three, twenty foure, and twentie sixe fathome, distant from the said point some three leagues and an halfe. After wee had got about the Wester point, wee found the wind to shorten, so that it would not permit vs to leade it alongt the coast, but by the helpe of a Current we were put off, the Admirall and the Darling anchored in twelue fathome, while I in the Pepper-corne, through calmes, and a gale of the land, could not get into shoald water to anchor in, till the ninth day at noone, what time wee anchored in twelue fathome, neere to a Towne called Gallanzee, and toward the coole of the euening, I went with the Pinnasse and Saine, vnto a low sandie point, thwart the Admirall and Darling, a league to the East-ward of our Shippe, to trie to get Fish for refreshing of our people; hoping in the coole of the Euening there to meete with my Generall, which fell out accordingly to my desire, God blessing vs with abundance of Fish, which serued all the whole Fleete two meales, and much longer if it would haue kept. Heere my Generall informed mee, how that the people with whom in the Morning hee had spoken, had confirmed that which hee greatly doubted: which to our grieve would prolong our Voyage: which was, that the Easterly Monson was already come, and all our hopes of getting to Cambaya were frustrate for this nine Moneths, of which wee expected to bee better informed by the King at Tamcrin, the place of his residence.

fish.

Tamcrin.

The twentieth day being Saturday, we anchored at a point neare six leagues short of Tamcrin, and five leagues from the point of Gallanzee, which we did by the helpe of a Sea-turne, which continued long that night, but not contented by gaining and holding that place, till we could by day bee better aduised, by reason of an edy tide by the shore on the West-side; by the shore where where wee rode, on the West-side thereof, which forced our sternes to wind-ward, and a little flattering gale of the land, wee weighed, and were forced off into the Currant: So that the one and twentieth day wee were carried backe thwart of the Towne of Gallanza, and farre off in great depth.

The two and twentieth, we in the Pepper-Corne were like to haue bin put cleane off the Iland, but the Admirall and Darling got into shoald water, and there anchored, and about two a clock I also anchored in the Bay Westward of Gallanza in six fathom, & presently went on shore with my Pinnasse, carrying Barricos to seeke fresh water; going with a flagge of truce, to see if any of the Inhabitants would come to mee, for I earnestly desired to speake with some of them, in hope to haue procured some Goates, or other refreshing for our people, but none, as it seemeth, durst come to vs, for feare of the Kings displeasure, who will haue nothing sold to any stranger, but from himselfe; it seemeth he would haue none of his people haue to doe with any strangers, but that all intelligences, allowances, for fresh victuals and prises, must come from himselfe, as afterwards I found, though now I wondered to see the people stand as farre off in troupes, and came not neare vs, which made me thinke they had spies attending on them by the Kings order to be the cause. So at night hauing filled thirteene Barricos of water, I returned aboard: this night being a high water at nine of the clocke, at a full Moone, I esteemed it flowed vpright, betweene ten and eleuen foote; all the time of flowing the streame sets to the Northward, I meane close by the shore: and with the ebbe and a small gale of the shore, we set saile, and stretcht it alongst the shore some foure or fve mile, thwart of the sandy Bay of our fishing, and neare our Admirall, and finding the Currant there to set off to the Westward, we anchored till the next helpe of the tide or wind.

The fve and twentieth being Thursday, as the wind serued we set saile, and about eleuen of the clocke we anchored in eight fathome, a mile from the land, right against the Towne of Tamarin, where the Kings house is North from the Casile, on the top of the hill aboue the Towne; at our anchoring the Generall shot off fve peeces of Ordnance, I three, and the Darling one. The Generall sent Master Femell on land, handsomely attended with the Pinnasse, fitted with a red Crimfon tilt, presenting the King with a Present, which was from the Generall, a faire gift Cup of ten ounces, a Sword-blade, and three yards of Stammell broadcloath. The King to receiue them, had by the water-side in readinesse fitted, an Orrange-tawny coloured Tent, where he sate attended on by the principall of his Countrey-men, the Arabs and a guard of small shot; they continued conference more then an houre: hee thankfully receiued the Generalls Present, bade him welcome, shewing desire to see him on land, promising him water free, and what else the Iland did afford, at reason, according to the drought of the Iland, which continued two yeeres without raine; for Alloes not a pound to be had, his owne Frigat being gone to sell it in the Red-sea. For the Ascension, he saith, came first hither in the moneth of February, and finding a Guzerat ship here, within eight dayes shee departed in her company towards the Red-sea, and eight dayes after came in her Pinnasse, who made no stay, but followed her Admirall, and in Iuly, both the Ascension and Pinnasse returned out of the Red-sea to Zacatora, where they hastened to take in water: and soone after departed towards Cambaya. Further hee saith, that his Frigat being at the Port of Bazain, neere Damon in India, they were informed by the Portugals, that the said shippe and Pinnasse arriuing on the Coast too soone, before the Winter and foule weather was past, were both cast away, but the men saued. The King sent the Generall a Present of twelue Goates.

The six and twentieth being Friday, my Generall went well attended on, and with a guard to visit the King; our ships gaue him, as before, fve; three and one peeces of Ordnance, and hee was receiued on land by the Kings order, with ten great shot, & otherwise he was receiued by the King, in orderly and ciuill sort, and had both for him and his followers so good cheere provided, as the place could presently afford: but the King shewed no willingnes that we should here make any longer abode, for he would not yeeld that wee should set vp our Pinnasse heere; his excuse was this: that neither his own ship, nor any other, as the Guzerat, which he hath great profit by, dare not come into this place while we are heere: and further, I suppose the time we stay heere is very chargeable to him in this respect; for to shew the strength of his Towne, he hath drawne downe the Arabs and others from all parts of the Land, and while they stay heere, they liue on his charge, which I thinke is the only occasion he would haue our abience: this day wee filde a great part of our water. Saturday, we almost made an end of watering out of a pond, fed by springs descending from the hilles. Sunday our people went on land to recreate themselves, and did no other businesse.

This King of Zacatora is called Mulli Amore Bensaide, and now is here but Vice-roy vnder his father, who is King of Fartac in Arabia not far from Aden, and comes into the sea at Camricam. Hee saith, that his father holds warre against the Turkes of Aden, in his owne defence, for hee denied vs a letter to the Gouvernour of Aden, saying, hee would not doe vs so much wrong. The people that he vseth for his Honor and strength in Zocatra, are the Arabs, the rest that liue in most seruile flauery, are the old Inhabitants of the Iland, which haue been banished people.

And Dates which serue them for bread, which the King sells at five Rialls of eight by the hundred. Cattell for mans sustenance these, Bulls and Cowes at twelue Rialls of eight a piece, Goats at one Riall a piece, Sheepe at halfe a Riall a piece, and Hennes at halfe a Riall a piece; all exceeding small, according to the drie rockie barrenesse of the Iland: wood at twelue pence a mans burthen; euere particular is a very deare pennyworth: and what else this Iland may yeeld, I am yet to be informed of, but of rockes and stones, drie and bare, it seemes the whole Iland is composed.

Nouemb. 5.

His day all our important businesse being done, wee set saile, directing our course to Aden-wards in the Red-sea, taking leaue of the King with three shot out of the Admirall, one out of the Pepper-Corne, and one out of the little Darling. Our course, after wee gate off the land, alongst by Abba del Curia, to Cape Guardafui, which is the Eastermost point of Abax, was nearest West, distant foure and thirtie leagues, to wit, from the Wester point of Zacotora, to the East end of Abba del Curia, is fourteene leagues. And Abba del Curia a long narrow ragged Iland, may be in length East and West, some five leagues; from the West end of Abba del Curia, to Cape Guardafui, is fiftene leagues; on this Iland, Abba del Curia, the King of Zoccatra hath some people and Goats; North from the middle thereof, neare three leagues, are two great white rockes, neare adioyning one to the other, and are some halfe a mile in length; these rockes are not white of themselves, but made white with the filing of Birds.

The one and thirtieth, being Wednesday, at eleuen a clocke we were thwart of the Wester point of Zacotora, and at two a clocke, the white rocke, called Saboyna, wee left North on our Star-boord side, which beareth North-west and by West, foure leagues of the most Wester point of Zacotora; and at three a clocke after-noon, we descried the two highest Mountaines of Abba del Curia, bearing West South-west distant ten leagues.

The first of Nouember, being Thursday, at Sun-rising we were thwart of the middle of Abba del Curia, leauing it on our Larboord side, two leagues and a halfe off, and the two Rockes on our Star-boord side distant halfe a league; at noone wee were in North latitude twelue degrees and seuentene minutes, the variation seuentene degrees and five and thirtie minutes: this after-noon we met with a currant, which set vs to the South-ward. At one in the after-noon, we descried the Cape Guardafui, but it was night before we came neare it; so that we past it by night, without any true discouery thereof.

The second, being Friday, in the morning wee were thwart of an high Mountaine, nine leagues Westward from the Cape Guardafui, and betweene that point, and another high point, five leagues distant West southerly by the Compasse, there is a low sandie point, lying one league and a quarter off, into the Sea; and some three leagues more Westerly, we anchored, and went on land with all our Boats for to cut wood; whereof we in the Pepper-Corne had great need: heere we met with some of the Inhabitants, who informed vs that the last Mount we past, is called Feluck, or by the Portugals, Felix: but so soone as they knew we were Christians, they fled from vs.

The third day, being Saturday, we landed againe, and cut more wood; and after-noon we set saile, standing on our way Westward towards the Red-sea, continuing our course till the fifth day ten a clocke, at which time we descried the Coast of Arabia Fœlix, bearing North North-west, and North by East, being distant from the nearest land, some twelue leagues; at noone I found my selfe in thirteene degrees eight and twentie minutes North latitude: at Sun-set wee were distant from the land some twelue leagues; the Mountaines within the Land all high, very rough, without shew of grasse, wood, or any other fruitfulness: wee now directing our course West and by South, as the Coast lyeth, soone expecting to see the Citie of Aden, for that with my first fall with the land, I esteemed my selfe not about foure and twentie leagues short to the Eastward thereof: but whereas I esteemed the ships made their way North-west by North, ouer the Gulfe, by reason of the Currant, we finde they haue made a little better then North; and that at our fall with the land, we were little lesse then threescore leagues short of Aden, we continued our course alongst the Coast with a good saile all day, and a short saile all night, to the end not to over-shoote Aden all the way, for the most part in five and twentie, twentie, fiftene, twelue, ten and eight fathoms.

Wednesday at Sun-setting, below the Mountaine, being very neare it, on the sudden we descried Aden, which is situate vnder the foote of an vnfruitfull mountaine, a place where I should scarce haue looked for a Towne, but it is set there for strength, where it is very defensible, and not by any enemy easily to be wonne, if the defendants within be men of resolution, and so that it be formerly victualled, and provided of munition; and to Sea-ward, though it be in a manner drie at low-water, there stands an high Rocke somewhat larger then the Tower of London, which is not by enemies to be in hast ascended, by reason it is so steepe, and that but one way by narrow steps to get vp, where foure men may keepe downe a multitude: this Rocke is so walled, flanked, and furnished with Ordnance, as it seemeth to me, it may command both the Towne and Roade: yet who will auoid it, may ride in nine fathome water without their command, or within their command, from nine fathome downward. Also a lit le distance to the Northwards of the foresaid Rocke, is another rocke, being low, almost euen with the water, which is of small compasse, whereon is a Fort built and well furnished with Ordnance, the souldiers vsually continuing in this Garrison of Aden I could neuer vnderstand, but according as occasions are, they are drawne down from other Inland Townes. The low countrie adioyning within it, doth supply it with prouision, and partly with their Barkes, which passe in Trade from Aden to Barbora, a Towne right ouer on the Abessin side, from whence they bring Cattell, and much fruit, and prouision, with Mirrh and Incense, and what else I must conceale till further information gotten.

This Towne standeth in the Latitude of twelue degrees, and five and thirtie minutes, the variation Westerly, is twelue degrees and fortie minutes; it floweth, by estimation, vpright between six and seuen foote water on the change day: a South-east by East, or North-west by West Moone, maketh a full Sea: this mountaine, at whose foote the Towne standeth, is a Peninsula pointing out into the Sea, and toward the maine is first a narrow necke of sandie ground, and within of the like, a larger marsh-like ground stretching vp to the Mountaines, which may be from the Towne sixteene or twentie mile. At our first anchoring, the Gouverneur in the darke of the euening sent an Arab in a Canoe to view our ships, who refused to come aboard, though he were called.

Thursday morning, the same Arab came aboard the Admirall from the Mir or Gouverneur, to vnderstand what we were: if friends, we should be welcome to land: this while was a Present making ready to send the Gouverneur, which was a graued Turkie-fashioned Peece, and a principall sword blade, sent to land by John Williams, and one M. Walter, Linguists, with other Factors to accompany them. The Turkes not permitting them to come into the Towne, entertained them without the Gate, neere the waters side, yet with great shew of ioy, pretending much kindnesse to our Nation, with whom they say they haue had much familiaritie in Stambola, Aleppo, and other places, but vsed not one word of any trading with vs, but framed their speech to make vs vnderstand, that they euery day expected the comming of thirtie thousand souldiers: which to vs seemed very strange, that so barren a Countrey as that seemed to bee, could yeeld prouision for so many people. But vnderstanding their speeches proceeded of feare, it was signified, that our Generalls request vnto the Gouverneur was, that for his money he would giue him a Pilot, to carrie his ships to Moha: then he told them that he was but Deputy to the Mir or Gouverneur, which was out of the Towne, and the next morning would be returned; and then the Generall should be thereof informed. He sent the Generall a Present, which was two Barbora sheep, with broad rumps and small tailes, some Plantains, and other fruits, wherewith our people returned.

They send a Present to the Gouverneur of Aden.

Friday, the Generall sent againe betimes in the morning, to require a Pilot for Moha; then they were brought into the Mirs house, and still continued with faire words; but the Mir was not yet returned: but when the Deputie-gouverneur heard our ships were vnder sayle bound away, he sent no Pilot, but a request that if the Generall would not stay and trade with all his ships, yet that he would stay one there for their supply, demanding the prizes of diuers of our Commodities, which gaue present shew of content, if performance might follow accordingly, with glozing shewes of Indico, Ollibanum, Mirrh, and diuers others things there fit for vs; but before the Messenger came to giue knowledge to the Generall, our ships were so farre about the point, that by reason of the Current, we could not againe get about the Easter side of the point in sight of the Towne, but anchored thwart of a Bay on the South side of the Towne: The Generall seeing diuers people fishing in the Bay, and great store of people of fashion on the hill, went to the shore side in his Pinnasse, to enquire of them when the Current might change, and that we might get about. The Deputie-gouverneur shewed himselfe angry, pretending our comming was to discouer their strength, and with no good intent, in so much that John Williams was in doubt they would haue staied him: but the Mir now present being lately come to Towne, seemed not so rigorous, but dissembled the matter, giuing good words, granting a Pilot for Moha; yet desired that one of our ships might stay for their supply, saying, that that Towne by former Gouvernours ill vsage of strangers was growne out of Trade, which he did endeavour to set on foote againe, hoping by vs to make a beginning: and further, that as he was a Gouvernour, so had he a Balha was superiour ouer him, from whom if all our ships departed without trading at his Towne, he should haue blame, in that it would be imputed to his ill vsage of vs, to driue vs away. And for that we vnderstood by others, that the former part of his speech was true, our Generall and we thought the latter part to be true also (which was meere to delude vs) which the Generall by the Messenger did in a manner grant, so we could find safe riding for our ships, the dangerous Easterly Monsoon on this shore, which he made slight or little regard of, wishing our ruine, and no safetie.

Munday morning early, John Williams was againe sent to the Gouvernour for his Pilot, according to the last nights promise, and had now answer from the Gouvernour, that the Pilots wife would not permit he should goe, vnlesse we left foure of the principallest men in the shippes in pawne till his safe returne; which bred in vs a generall dislike of their inconstancie, yet the Generall, for performance of his former promise, determined to leaue me behind in the Pepper-corne, but altered his determination in my direction; for whereas before I was directed not to carry aboue a quarter part of our goods on land at one time; now we were to carry none at all: for since they will not trust vs with one of their rascall people, but on such disgracefull termes, therefore he thought fit not to trust them with any of our goods; but if they had need of any of our commodities, as they pretended to haue, they should buy and pay for it aboard the ship; and in case they mistrust any euill dealing, we should exchange pledges; so that for so many as for doing their businesse they should need to haue aboard, we should deliuer on land so many of the neereft like in qualitie: if not liking of this, that we may follow our Admirall to Moha. The same day about noone, all things being determined of, the Generall with his owne ship and Darling, departed towards Moha, and as they prepared to set saile, they discied a saile in the Offing, which they supposed to be a Guzerat bound to Moha, out of which the Generall had hope to procure a Pilot, stood off with her a little while, till perceiuing it to be a smaller saile then before they expected, gaue ouer their chase, and stood on their course towards Babel-mandel.

was a small ship of 90. tunnes.

Mir, or Amir, or Emir, signifieth Lord.

Three of our men staid on shore.

Tuesday, we laboured with long warps to get vp, both against wind and Current, whereby we got well vp (as men struing to hasten their owne harmes) beeing thwart of the fishing Bay. The Mir of Aden sent a Boat and a Messenger aboard, to desire to speake with the Merchants, to know whether they purposed to trade with them or no: whereupon M. Fowler, John Williams, and the Purser (for other businesse) went on land, the Merchants declaring to the Mir in what manner we had direction to trade with them. The Mir not liking of that way, in no wise accepted of such trading: this seemed a contradict to his purpose and policie; therefore least after their returne aboard, I should depart for Moha, as they said, he thought best to detaine those three men, thereby to procure him some thing, though he pretended that he staid them for anchorage, and other duties, amounting to fifteene hundred Venetianoes of gold, euery one at one Ryall and an halfe of eight.

Before this Towne of Aden, I made my vnprofitable aboad vntill the sixteenth of December, liuing in continuall danger, if any storme had happened, which is there euer very doubtfull on this Monsoon, or time of the yeare: by romaging I omitted no meanes for bringing our goods in readinesse, if so it should happen that in the end we find sale or trade with them: for notwithstanding by the varietie of tricks, whereby from day to day they falsly deluded our people in their hand, as to send Messenger after Messenger to my Generall to Moha, to obtaine licenſe to bring our goods into their Towne, and then the Merchants would resort out of all places in the Countrey neere-hand, to buy the same, which might be said, least we had discouered the vnlikelihood of any Merchants in that Towne, likely to doe the same; yet could I neuer conceit hope of trade or honest dealing amongst them.

All the time I lay there for the most part, I sent my Pinnaſſe euery two or three daies to land, to know how my Factors did, with some one or two men besides the Cocks gings, which whatsoever they had to doe, they were curteously dealt withall, the souldiers frequenting their company, giuing them drinke; and if any man Iew or Bannian had ouer reckoned them in the price of any thing, they would euer be readie to do them right: all which I make account was done by the Gouvernours direction, the better to abuse vs, by drawing our people to conceit well of them, and trust their flatterie and lyes, wherein they excell: and on the resort of any extraordinary people into the Towne, they would tell our men, that they were Merchants, come to see if we had landed any of our goods for the to buy, when they were souldiers called in out of some other neere adioyning Inland Townes, vpon some plot in their head newly deuised. And likewise our Factors in person were most times kindly vsed, and were resorted vnto by such as the Gouvernour appointed, and that should tel his tale: whereas he had so provided, that not any, not so much as an Arab fisher-man nor other, were permitted to come neere vnto me, least they should tell me the truth, to his disaduantage. By my people in the Pinnaſſe I sent of purpose to discouer, by whom I am informed, this Citie in times past hath been great and populous, but at this time, the houses both great and small are greatly ruinated and sunke in euerie part of the Towne, shops of merchandise there are none of any account, Merchants none to be diuerſed worthy of that calling: for money

ney seemeth to be very scant amongst them, which appeared when our men offered to change a peece of eight for Aspers, they vse to take it from hand to hand, gazing as at a strange thing; an ill signe in a place where a ships lading of merchandize is brought to sell.

This present Gouvernour time growing neere out that he must be gone, and therefore before his departure, would haue been glad to haue seene vs so foolish as to land some of our goods by any deuise, would often commend Captaine Sharpeighs confidence in them, who was here in the Ascension sixteene moneths before vs, and how at first he brought goods on land without mistrust, and sold it, and his men came boldly on land like Merchant men, of which since wee did not the like; he made doubt whether we were so or not, and that he tooke delight to heare his 10 Trumpets sound on his walls; all which I tooke to be no other then hooking deuises, and vntrue delusions, for I cannot thinke, but that if at the first, like harmelesse men they trusted much, they repented it before they went away. Captaine Sharpeigh was the first of our Nation that came here, and perchance might passe away in some reasonable sort: but since then they haue had time to aduise themselues how to doe more villanie,) which they haue, nothing else to plead. My conceit is, that at our first comming they made account to buy our goods without money, and that their plot in desiring first one shippe to stay, was two-fold. First, it was more likely for them to worke their wills on one shippe, then on three. Secondly, in procuring the stay of this heere, the other two were the better to bee dealt withall at Moha, since what villanie could be wrought on them at both places, was for the seruice-20 and benefit of our Basha: And they knowing that we were ignorant, that this winter time now ensuing was so tempestuous, and vnfit for any such businesse of Commerce, and that no ship could long stay there without their fauour and friendship, as in the case of fresh water to drinke onely, if there were no wind or Sea to be dreaded, which are both often most vehement, and at Aden is low shoare, nothing to hinder the mayne Sufte and violence of the mounting billowes, whereby they might with good iudgement thinke, that in little time we might bee forced from our Road at nine fathome, into five fathome neere to the Towne, in some shelter of the Iland, and vnder command of their Ordnance. From whence without their leaue, we could not haue carryed her out againe, or if this faile, he might thinke by coloured kindnesse, or some other deuice for our owne pleasures, or by want of water, sometime to draw some store of our people, and that of 30 the better sort on land to them, which already he hath: whereby to force them to procure the rest to bring in the ship, but indeed hee had ill counsell. For his haste spoyled his Market at the first, by staying our three men, doubting our ship would be gone: which made me very suspicious and warie in sending but few men on land at once.

Capt. Sharpeigh
the first of our Nation at Aden

Saturday, I sent my first Letters to the Generall to Moha, by a Souldier of Aden, fitted for the Gouvernours turne, whose returne was so ordered, that he neuer came neere any of vs with an answer: he pretended that the Gouvernour of Moha promised deliury of the same, but presently sent him backe with a Letter to Aden.

Thursday, the Gouvernour rid out of Towne, who remayned absent till the first of December, in the meane time our people in Prison were more hardly vsed, paying in a manner as much 40 to the Messenger for fetching their victuals, as it cost besides, hauing little countenance or fauour any way shewed them: and it was told them that the Mir was gone, and a new was to come in his stead, but it prooued not so for that time.

Capt. Downton
Letters to Sir
H. Middleton
suppressed.

Saturday, about mid-day, the same Mir returned againe into the Towne, and came to our men in Prison, speaking kindly vnto them, and causing good prouision to bee made for them, at his owne cost, whereby he guld vs by pretended friendship, promising nothing but kindnesse and good dealing, so soone as we should begin to trade, and then they shall haue their full libertie without payment of the aforelaid fifteene hundred Venetians formerly demanded; the custome five in the hundred, all other charges reasonably, and readie Gold for what wee sold, and therefore wishing that as before we had sent a Foole of our Message, that now we should send a 50 man of our owne, with a guide of his, whom wee might be sure would bring true answer from our Generall. This day I made shew to bee preparing to bee gone with the ship: aboard came a Letter from John Fowler to impart to mee this ioyfull newes, vrging mee againe to write to the Generall, to know his pleasure herein for landing of our goods, wherein I was not so streightly tyed, but I might haue done it my selfe, if I had seene any signe or likelihood of good dealing: which seeing no cause of encouragement I kept to my selfe, to the end not to bee vrged by the importunitie of others to doe any thing vnaduisedly, which might either preiudice my friends or wrong my selfe; now seeing the time was before me till May, to goe to Moha (for so long the Easterly Monson lasteth) at such time as rigorous weather, or being wholly frustrate of trade, should driue me hence, and being once gone, I cannot come hither againe till the first of May or 60 Iune, whatsoever thereby were to bee gotten, wherefore, for diuers respects, I desired to heare from the Generall.

Munday, I dispatched away the Messenger with a Letter to my Generall (which prooued an after-griefe to me) and eight dayes after we had nothing, but shewes of kindnesse and good quarter, thinking long till our Messenger returned, that we might beginne our good Markets.

Sat-

Saturday, my Boat-swaine informed mee of his great wants of small Cordage, for diuers purposes, wishing that he and some others might goe ashore, to lay some on the strand by the Towne wall, now while we had leisure, before our greater businesse came in hand, for which I sent to land to intreate the Gouvernour that our people might doe such a businesse in safetie vnder his wall: which was promised with great fauour, in the best and conuenientest place they could find, with a house at night to put vp their things till the next day. In the meane-time the Gouvernour set Smithes to making of shackles for our people, and some of them were by signes told of it, which suspecting nothing, tooke it as a merry jest, which afterwards they found in earnest.

Twentie more of our men betrayed.

Wednesday, after-noon, my men were all betrayed that went on shoare, bound, shackled, and pinioned, and some put in the Stockes: all tortured and grievously abused, stript of their money 10 and all else they had: my Pinnasse lost, the gings gone amongst the Rope layers. So there was two Merchants, a Purser, and one to attend on them, a gadding Apothecarie, my Chirurgion, and Master Caulker (who carryed my Letter to Moha as aforesaid) my Boat-swaine, and one of his mates, two quarter Masters, the Cooper, Carpenter and Gunners mate, and my Cock-swaine, and five more of the Cokes ging, which in all are twentie persons, some few for their pleasures, the rest to worke, saw the gings who were most of them appointed to keepe the Pinnasse, but being out of my sight, they did what they list, and the Boat-swaine seemed to want their helpe about his Ropes.

Munday, I set saile out of the Southermost Road of Aden, directing my course towards Moha (through the streight of Babel-mandell, in the entrance of the Redde Sea, being distant from 20 Aden (West by South) thirtie two leagues. The Arabs both here and in all other places of Arabia, of all degrees, are in great seruitude to the Turkes.

An Eclipse of the Moone.

Thursday, at foure in the morning, the Moone was eclipsed, and at one in the after-noon, I past the Bab, or streight being halfe a league ouer, hauing in the midst ten fathome water, and towards both sides eight, sixe or foure fathome depth, as one list to borrow to, and may be some two miles through which sets a good strong tyde, both ebbe and flood. I left on my star-boord side, a Mountaine and Rockie Peninsula, extending from the Mayne, beeing all neere low-land, with a low narrow necke of sand, and on the lar-boord side, I left a low Island of some five miles long East and West, being also Rockie; betweene the West end thereof, and the Abaxin Coast, for ought I can discerne is a cleere channell of three or neere foure leagues broad, but I thinke not 30 much vsed by the ships, for that the water is deepe, and not for anchoring, besides the other is the neerer way. We being past the Bab, were ignorant what dangers lay in our way, or how farre within the streight the Towne of Moha stood, whether in a Riuer or Bay, or how else we knew not, but discovering we kept by our lead betweene nine and seuen fathomes, all alongst the Arab Coast, and as the day light ended we anchored in eight fathome, nine leagues within the Bab, against a little Mount standing alone by the Sea-side.

Moha eighteen leagues within the Bab.

Friday, at sixe a-clocke in the morning we set sayle, standing alongst North, and North by West, as our depths directed vs, first betweene nine and seuen fathomes, and lastly, betweene sixe and foure fathomes, when wee came to haue the shoales without vs; but as wee came neere to 40 Moha, which is scituated eightene leagues within the Bab: on the verge of a low sandy barren ground. Our Admirall we saw rid alone (and no Darling) some foure mile into the Sea, in sixe fathome, and riding with two shot ahead, by reason of the vehemencie of the weather, which erst I suspected not: My present cares were somewhat in this vnknowne passage, for the safetie of the ship, which without great vigilancie and regard to our depths, might haue beene set fast to our further famine: but the neerer I came, the more my griefe gnawing at my heart, as one while reuiuing my griefe for the losse of so many of my men, and then casting doubts, what might befall my friends here; their Pinnasse mand, I see lye along by the ships side wherein was Master Thornton the Master, but durst not put off till wee were thwart of them, for feare they should not recouer their owne ship againe, being once put off by reason of the wind and currant. I being somewhat neere, as a signall of heauie newes, they puld downe their Flagge, whereby I 50 vnderstood some misfortune was befallen my Generall, I beeing anchored, hee with the Pinnasse came aboard; where after the blasts of passion and griefe (by the defects and frailtie of the flesh) somewhat blowne ouer, he began by degrees to informe me of all things that had happened since wee parted at Aden: as first of their quicke passage from Aden to the Bab, where they tooke in a Pilot to bring them to Moha, where the fourteenth of Nouember they arriued, that was from Aden in thirtie houres, yet their misfortune was such, that against the Towne and very neere the Road, whether by mis-vnderstanding, or the Pilots neglect to the depths, or being not acquainted with the working of our shippes, it is not materiall to examine, but on the sands the shippe came aground, and so sticke fast that her bilged stood on the shoalest of the bankes; so as notwithstanding the great Sea by force of the wind, the head and sterne being in deeper water, did heaue and set without any painful striking, but to get her off without lightning they could not, wherefore they could not be precise in trusting themselves without pledges in the hands of the Turkes, who omitted nothing to preuent our doubt of being welcom, with great great varietie of friendly promises in euery thing we demanded, and request once made, they were plyed with Barkes to lighten the ship, wherein they vsed great expedition, we landing as well our Wheat-meale, Vineger, Sea-coales, Pitch and Tarre, with our vnbuilt Pinnasse, and other prouisions which came next hand, or in the way, as well Tinne, Lead, Iron, and other merchandize to be sould, and staued neare all our water. And of all others, Master Laurence Femell seemed most fearefull, for that in a priuate Boate he speedily carryed all his things on land, leaving nothing that he regarded aboard of the ship of his owne.

The ship now hauing laine a ground                      houres, with great trauaile to lighten and shift the ship, they got her afloat. The Trades-Increase a float.

10 It is also to be vnderstood, that this part of Arabia, from                      Eastward of Aden, and vp the Red-sea to Cameran, which is threelcore and ten leagues within Bab-mandell, and I know not how farre within the Land, is called the Land of Teoman, and now gouerned by one Ieffor Basha, whose residence is in the Citie of Zenan, which they account to bee by moderate trauaile fifteene dayes iourney; by poste, I thinke they goe and come in that time. And the Gouernours of Aden and Moha, which is the better place, in that it is of more resort of ships; and these Gouernours are yeerely placed by him; as at this present in Moha is one Regib Aga by his place or office, who was his seruile slaue attending on him, and he was preferred to Aden, where he commanded the other yeere, when Captaine Sharpeigh was there, and for that he was a beneficiall Knaue to his Master; he was preferred to Moha, a better place.

20 Now at our first arriual, he sent to giue knowledge vnto his Master, with what informations best pleased him, and was to stay for directions from his Master how to deale with vs; wee trusted them as men of humane feeling, being ignorant of what was against vs. Now while the messenger went to know the Basha's pleasure how to dispose of vs: The Aga was laying the ground of his Treason, and drawing euery thing toward readinesse, for the effecting of his desired haruest, omitting nothing which might further his villanous purpose. Also by drawing into the Towne from the nearest neighbour Iland Townes and Countrey adioyning, such and so many souldiers as might fit his turne, whose rigour and malice against vs hee neglected not to pro-
uoke, by scandalous reproches, as might best serue for his purpose, as that wee were Pirats and Christians; (which they account as bad enemies to their holy Prophet Mahomet and his Lawes)
30 and that our comming was to discouer how to ruinate and destroy the holy houses of their god, as Meca and Medina, and what seruice they should doe to God and their Country in destroying of vs; as also informed them that wee had so much money and goods, as if they would behaue themselves valiantly when time serued, will make them and their Countrey happie, with so many other deluding deuices, as seemed fit for such an action; meane while our innocent distrustlesse men hired and fitted their house, and preparing against the returne of the Basha his answer, for present sale of their commodities, by the abundant shewes and promises of fauour to them. The Aga euer vrging, by wondering at our small quantitie of goods in the ship of so great burthen, and euer were Boats sent for goods, after the shippe was afloat, and that there was no more, till further occasion to be landed; his greedinesse seemed to be such, as the poore Arab Barque-men 40 shewed feare to returne without lading; but when he perceiued there was no more at present to be had, he went another way to worke; which was, he informed our Merchants, that all ships that came to this Towne in Trade, their Captaine, for their better assurance, as a pledge of good dealing, receiued the Gran Segnors Vest for their better securitie, which being once inuested in the view of the people, no man after durst offer them any wrong; as all the principall officers of euery ship had signes of curtesies, the which vnlesse our Captaine doe come on land and accept of, he should neuer thinke him the great Turkes friend, nor beleue his meaning was good, as hee pretended, and therefore should doubt to giue him Trade, lest hee being a Man of warre should turne them to further mischief; which vnlesse he receiue such right, according to the welcome and custome of the place, he could not but thinke his end not for their good.

50 The ship now moored in a place, from whence within seuen or eight months was no returning, the vehemencie of the stormes so great, the vnkowne dangers in these Seas such, no place of more comfort knowne, and no man permitted to come neare vs, that either could or would better informe vs of the contagious weather ensuing, the dangers there to bee expected, or more comfort elsewhere to be found, but as it were, must stand at the Turkes mercy, whether they will giue vs life, or restraîne water or other reliefe to maintaine the same; our house hired, our Factors and goods on land in readinesse and present sales after answer brought excepted: And now this vnexpected doubt cast, whether we be true men or theeuers: And no way left to approue the former; or to shunne the latter; but the comming on land of our Generall, on whose safetie depended the carriage and estate of the whole voyage, which could not but crosse their minds and conceit, since they knew his determination was otherwise. Master Femell gaue the Generall know-60 ledge of the Aga his words, and further gaue him to vnderstand, that the Companies businesse, without his presence on land, could take no effect, but must rest without doing any thing. Which once knowne, Sir Henry Middleton, notwithstanding the little trust he had in the faith and honesty of the Turkes in these forren places, and the infinite regard and care he had to follow and purſue the plot and benefit of this his iourney, as well here, as in India, and places now being vrged that his abſence was likely to proue preiudiciall to the Company that all his endeauours during the Voyage, were wholly intended for the benefit, dice of the company, and were it not for the ſafetie of the ſhips, and good of the Voyage, take delight to recreate himſelfe on land, as well as others: wherefore, now ſince there might further the buſineſſe, and not be imputed vnto him for his pleaſure, he niggardly of his preſence amongſt them. Therefore he prepared himſelfe to land, without doubt, and to receiue that Veſt of the great Turke, as the badge or aſſurance of ſuch as with like ſolemnitie had it put on their backes. And before his going came aboard to informe the Generall of what he thought fit to prepare him in, againſt the ſudden apprehenſion of feare (as in faint-hearted people neuer wants) of any violence the Turkes to be attempted, the firſt day of the Generalls landing, or what elſe he intended at the Generalls going to land, hee being Cape-Merchant, and ſwaying the buy, would haue ſtayed aboard, but could not in ſuch a caſe bee ſpared, being ſo great a buſineſſe.

Maſter Femels
feare

Sir Henry Middleton dilection on land.

The Generall being come to land, was met by the Gouvernour and principal officers, who were caried to the Gouvernours houſe, where he had a rich Veſt of Cloath of Gold, and a horſe very richly furniſhed for him to mount vpon, the Gouvernour holding the Generall gat vp, all which was reaſon Sir Henry Middleton ſhould accept of, beſides the Badge of their friendſhip.

The communication, after the ſolemnitie was ended, was ſuch, and ſo ſolemn, ſuch proteſtation and ſhewes of kindneſſe and friendſhip, as might deceiue any man, which is not a deceiuer himſelfe. Sir Henry Middleton in ſhort time after ſeeing ſuch kind ſhewes by the Gouvernour toward him, and in regard of the long time he had deſired leaue of the Gouvernour, that he might there ſet vp his Pinnacle, which he had framed out of England; the Gouvernours anſwere was, That the Countrey was bound whatſoeuer pleaſed him, as if he were in his owne Countrey; ſeeming glad that he ſhould command him any thing which might content him: for which, forthwith Sir Henry cauſed preſently all things to be brought to land, which need to be vſed in the ſervice, all his Carpenters, Smithes, or other that might further that worke in hand, and haſt poſſible might bee vſed for diſpatch of the ſame. Sir Henry Middleton, with his ſervants and furniture, kept houſe on land, by his continuall preſence to further the ſaid worke, ſo cauſed many more to reſort on land, for their ſeueral ends, then otherwiſe would haue done. The eight and twentieth of Nouember, Regib Aga his plot growing to ripeneſſe, ſtrengthened by the directions of his Maſter Jeſſor Baſha, ſent the Generall word in ſecret that he had receiued ſo good newes from the Baſha concerning our buſineſſe, that he altogether conceale the ſame, but thought good, for his content, to ſend him a ſervant, who by his better leaſure ſerued him to reueale the particulars; this ſeemed to be done, to make Sir Henry Middleton more ſecure, whoſe vpriſt thoughts gaue him no cauſe to ſuſpect any treachery, as at preſent was prepared for him and his. But in the euening, inſtead of ſervant from the Baſha, he effected his predeterminate treacherie with iron maces, knocking downe the Generall, Maſter Pemberton, and the Merchants, with all the reſt that at that time were on land, where they alſo murdered eight of our men, who by reaſon of their former friendſhip, of kindneſſe, not deeming any ſuch treaſon to be intended towards them, were unarmed, and had no weapons to reſiſt ſuch vnexpected murderers. Thus they without mercy, not only killed the ſervants, but kept priſoners, both by the necke, hands and feete, the Generall with eight of his company, and Maſter Pemberton with nine of his company; but alſo with three of ſouldiers attempted to ſurpriſe the Darling, who rided nearer the Towne the ſame night, by a ſmall creek by the ſea ſide, who (not knowing of the betraying of their Maſters Boat) being a Boat coming aboard, eſteemed it to be their own boat, but preſently deſcended, and all full of people, began to miſtruſt falſe meaſure. But the Turkes ſeeing no man ſtirring, thought themſelves ſurely poſſeſſed of her, murdering the ſervants, whom they found aſleep; but in the end our mercifull God turned their miſchiefe toward vs, vpon their owne pates, and made them fall into the hands of our ſouldiers, made for vs, for in repelling theſe vnexpected enemies, though to the loſſe of ſome of our owne men, who were ſlaine in the conflict, were ſlaine and crowned of the Turkes ſixteen and twentieth, whereof the Admirall of the Towne, who was their Leader, was ſlaine, thus hauing cleared themſelves of them quite, they cut their Cable, and ſet ſaile, and anchored by the Trade, who as yet knew not of the betraying of the Gouvernour, till they of the Darling had informed them thereof, by which means they prevented another miſchiefe, for that the Trade Boat, with a men, some to fill water, and others for pleasure were going on shore: also this morning in the Darling, on her gallery, they found one of the Turkes souldiers, who had escaped with life, but their Boats gone was left behind: him they carried prisoner aboard the Trades-Increase. From this eight and twentieth of Nouember, till the fourteenth of December, by reason of the continuall stormes, they heard no newes from the Generall. But the fifteenth day, John Chambers one of the Trades quarter Masters, with a Flagge of Truce went on shore, where he found the Generall, and the rest in Chaines as afore-said, in most inhumane manner so that one could not goe aside to ease himselfe, but the rest in a row must goe with him, to their great annoyance; yet at his returne brought hopefull newes of the enlargement of all saue the Generall and Master Fe-10 mell, who were to goe vp to Zenan, the place of the Basha's residence, there to answer to such matters as should be objected against them. Also the seuenteenth day, the same Messenger went againe on shoare (in manner afore-said) carrying with him certaine prouisions and other necessaries for the Generals reliefe, and the rest there with him, who returned with varietie of newes, but none good. Thus much Master Thorneton at his comming aboard me, as afore-said informed me of.

The one and twentieth day in the afternoone, by the same Messenger I sent a Letter to the Generall, to giue him knowledge of my mis-fortunes at Aden, who returning brought me a letter from my Generall, in briebe informing me of the business before repeated, as willing me if by any meanes I could get out of this Sea, and to stay at Aden, till I had heard what would be-20 come of them: also he had sent the Darling to ply out towards Aden, to giue mee information of his betraying, and to preuent my comming to Moha; also that he and sixe more of his compa-nie were the next day to take their iourney towards Zenan, the Basha's Court, as afore-said.

The two and twentieth, the Generall with all his company, except the Carpenters, who wrought still in Chaines vpon our Pinnasse for the Basha, and vnable hurt men, who remayned still in Chaines at Moha, set forth in their iourney, attended on by a strong Guard of Souldiers, lest any of them should escape: yet the same euening, notwithstanding their narrow looking to our men, M. Pemberton slipt aside among the bushes with so much haste, as his weak sick bodie was able, made to the waters side, where, although tyred with running, it pleased God that he found a Canoe hauing in her a paddle wherewith to rowe in her, hee put off to 30 Sea, committing himselfe to the danger thereof, rather then to stand to the Turkes mercie, and through rowing, his faint wearinesse increased so, that in the morning his inabilitie forced him to giue ouer rowing, hauing nothing to refresh himselfe but his owne water, it so pleased God that the same morning aboard the Trades Increase, was descryed a Canoe in the offing, which seemed to drine, vnto which being reasonable faire weather, the Trade sent off her Pinnasse, who brought both Master Pemberton and his Canoe aboard their own ship, being scarce able to speake through faintnesse.

From this day to the seuen and twentieth day, the weather continued for the most part boysterous and stormy. Also this seuen and twentieth day, the Darling through foule weather, ha-uuing lost Anchor and Cable, and not able to performe what the Generall (as afore-said) had sent 40 them about, returned vnto Moha Roade: where I, whom they were sent vnto, in the Pepper-Corne did ride.

The second of Ianuary with all three ships we set saile out of Moha Road, intending to ply vp towards Bab-mandell, for three respects. First, for ease of our ground tackle, being through long boysterous weather much decayed: and secondly, to seeke place to fill water for our people to drinke, by want whereof wee were very much distressed; and thirdly, and lastly, there to stop the passage of all the Indian ships entring this Sea, whereby to draw the Turkes to release our Generall, people and goods, our great necessitie constrained this our present attempt in this faire seeming weather; at our first setting sayle, we stood ouer to the Abaxin Coast, where wee left the Darling to looke her Anchor and Cable formerly lost, we with the Trades and Pepper-50 Corne plying vp to wind-ward, but hauing scarce any aboard, the better in the euening anchored on the Arab side in eight fathome, some three leagues to the wind-wards of Moha, and some four mile from the shoare.

The third, in the morning, the tyde of ebbe in hand, we set sayle working to wind-ward, as before in the afternoone, the wind so increasing that I in the Pepper-Corne spent my two top-sayles and constrained to bring other two new ones to the yard, before which was effected, the the night approched, and wee more then halfe Seas ouer towards the Abaxin Coast, where in regard of the foule weather we formerly had at Moha for two respects. I must desire to stop; first, the next morning if the weather were faire, to haue the Darling Company to proceed on our former purpose; secondly, the weather vnfit, by the place and sight of the Darling to finde 60 easier Roade to anchor in this day betweene eight and nine at night, so soone as we could get into sixteene fathome water by our sounding lead in fast seeming ground wee anchored, the Trade somewhat to the North-ward, or Lee-wards of the Pepper-Corne, and as towards morning the wind increased with a churlish Sea, with cloudie darke weather, in which wee lost sight of the Trades Increase, but by reason of the darke weather doubted nothing, at which time shee had broke an Anchor and droue, and let fall another Anchor, which afterward driuing from sixteene to fixe fathome, they were forced to cut a way to flat the ships head to the offwards to preuent further danger.

The fourth of Ianuarie, day light approaching, wee preparing to weigh our Anchor suddenly, the ship droue from sixteene to eighteene fathome, and before wee could flat our ships head to the offwards, we had lesse then fixe fathome: which soone after increased to eight, ten, &c. We then seeing the Trade: (to my disturbance) standing ouer towards Moba, and seeing William Pemberton in the Darling, riding in an easie Roade, to whom I would gladly haue gone, both for quiet to my minde, and ease to my ground takle, but that I knew not what need the Trades Increase might haue of my Carpenters, in case of any casualties whatsoever I know not of, in my hastening after her the weather rigorous, wee split both our new top-layles, the night before brought to the yard. They being sowed with rotten twine, as all our layles for the most part hath beene, through which meanes it became night, by what time I got into the Road, where presently to my griefe I vnderstood of the Trades: misfortune to lose two Anchors and Cables as afore-said, wherefore I sent my Carpenters aboard to stocke some other Anchors, from this to the eighteenth day with little ease, we continued a wearisome Road, to the spoyling of our Cables, as afore-said.

From the sixth day, to the eleuenth day, euery day came Canoes from the Towne, bringing Letter from the Carpenters with varietie of forged newes, informed them by the Aga, who permitted their sending the rather for that most commonly it was to get wine or beere, where-with they pleased the Turkes, and sometimes sent some little fresh victuals, according as they had wherewithall to buy or were permitted to send aboard.

The twelfth, the Darling returned into Moba Road to vs, saluting me with three Peeeces of Ordnance, as a signe of good newes, and by Master *Pemberton*s instant comming aboard of me, to my great comfort confirmed; for that hee had found a good watering place, and a very easie Roade for our ships, and his Anchor and Cable that he went to seeke, which as afore-said: they in his absence were forced to let slip.

A good watering place found.

The eighteenth, in the morning there came certaine from Moba to vs, bringing two Bullockes, two Goates, certaine Hennes Egges, and some fruits, but no newes from our Generall; This day at one in the afternoone we let saile, standing ouer towards the Abazin Coast (where Master Pemberton found the safe Roade and wattring place, and at night wee anchored three leagues short of it, vnder an Iland (which for the abundance of great Crabs, thereon wee called Crab Iland.)

Crab Iland.

The nineteenth, we weighed againe, and stood neerer into the Bay, and anchored vnder another lesser Iland.

The twentieth, we weighed againe, and stood further into the Bay, and anchored right against the watering place, some halfe a mile from the shoare, in eight fathome water. I sent George Ieff before in the Pinnasse to seeke out the Riuer, and to see if hee could speake with any of the Countrey people, who no sooner landed, but by and by there did present them selues vnto our mens sight, at least an hundred of the Countrey people armed with Lances, whereof one came to our people beeing of a bolder spirit then the rest, who not onely spake with them, but also desired to goe aboard with them, who at his comming aboard informed mee by an Interpreter, how that the Turkes had sent word vnto them, how they had betrayed and murdered diuers of our men, and wishing them also to doe the like to as many of our men as they could lay hand on. This yong-man was a principall mans sonne, and was very kind vnto vs all the time we were in this Bay: he this night did lye aboard the Trades Increase, where he was very kindly vsed to his great content.

Turkish Pesticence.

The one and twentieth, I with all our Boats, and most part of our men went on shoare, setting some to digging of Wells, some to fetching of ballast, others to filling of some little water out of a little Well wee there found made readie to our hand, and the rest being armed to guard them that wrought, and soone after our landing came downe vnto me the Priest, the father and brethren of the yong man afore mentioned (who as yet was not gone from vs) whom at his comming ashore they very ioyfully receiued, presenting me with a Goat, I also gaue vnto them foure of the Trades: shirts put in by the Merchants for the Companie, which they very kindly receiued; promising to bring downe the next day some Goates, to sell vnto vs for our money, which they very honestly performed, as by the sequell may appeare.

The two and twentieth, I hauing continued ashore all night with a good Guard, to see that there should no harme be done to our water, I appointed our men to their businesse as the day before, but by reason of the boysterous weather, none of the Countrey people came downe to vs: the cause of my present continuance on shoare, was for that I see such ill vsage of my Generall, and his people betrayed both at Aden and Moba, although they had made such faire shewes and promises, I hauing no assurance of the honesty of this people to vs, bred in mee suspicion what harme might be attempted against vs here by the Turkes, or by their perswasion to this Countrey people, eyther by poysoning our water or other wayes; therefore further then needs must I trusted trusted none, so also I continued this night ashore with a good strong Watch.

The three and twentieth, having settled our Company to every particular businesse, there came downe to vs the same men, who the other day had beene with me, and after them followed some others, driving before them diuers Goates to sell to vs according as they had promised. I very kindly entertayned them, and caused the Purser to buy their Cattle, and in the evening they departed very well satisfied, promising every day to bring downe more, of which they made good performance. This day we made an end of watering.

From the foure and twentieth to the six and twentieth day, they brought downe every day both Goates and Sheepe, whereof we bought according to our occasions and spending, they returning well satisfied.

The nine and twentieth, the wind at North North-west we set saile, I determined to get vp to the Bab with all our three ships, there to make stay of all the Indian shippes, that this yeare should enter this Sea, by them to force the Turkes to re-deliver my General, and the rest of his Company our goods and Pinnasse, as aforesaid; but being thwart of Crab Iland it fell calme, the tyde setting right on the Iland, of this time I made the best vse I might, for so soone as we had anchored, I accompanied with Master Thorneton and Master Pemberton, went on shoare with all our Boates, and most part of our men, whom I appointed to cutting of wood, both for dressing our victuals and other needfull vses. This after-noon we descried comming ouer from Moha, two Ielbas, one whereof came directly aboard the Trade, bringing me a Letter from my Generall, dated the fifteenth of Ianuary, informing me of his safe arriual at Zenan, with all his companie, saue Richard Phillips, Master *Pemberton*s youth, whom hee left very sicke at a place called Tyes, who desired to be informed of Master Pemberton, whether he were safely escaped aboard or no, for that he doubted the Arabs attending on their Asses, to haue murthered him for his Ass he rid on; of the varietie of hopefull seeming promises of his enlargement, being onely delusions; this Letter being kept till the seuenteenth of the same, also mentioneth of the safe arriual of Master Fowler, and the rest of my Company (betrayed at Aden) at Zenan; how God had raised him friends among the midst of his enemies, to wit, the Raha, who is next in degree to the Basha, with diuers other that fauoureth his iust cause; contradicteth my present determination of staying the Indian ships, for that as yet they haue no iust cause to object against him, it might proue preiudiciall, not only to him and his Company, but also to our Nation trading in the Mediterranean Sea, but that the Basha had cleared Regib Aga of the betraying and murthering of him and his Company, taking it vpon himselfe, as that it was done by his warrant and command. To this my Generalls letter by the same messenger, I returned an answer; first giuing him to vnderstand of Master *Pemberton*s safetie: our infortunate loosing and spoiling our ground tackle of my present determination intercepted by his letter; my opinion of their faire seeming, yet deluding promises: and lastly of our safe Road and watering place on the Abazin Coast, right opposite to Moha, being some 13. leagues distant, where we haue refreshing reasonable cheape.

The seuenth of February, the Trade returned to me in the Roade of Assab, Master Thorneton bringing me my Generalls letter, dated the five and twentieth of February, therein desiring me as yet to forbear reuenge on them which haue wronged him: also informing me of the present hopefull estate of his businesse, also that five dayes after the date hereof, he with all his Company are to take their iourney downe to Moha, willing mee, till his arriual at Moha, to expect no more letters from him; also giueth me knowledge of the death of John Baker, one of my Quarter Masters, and Richard Elmesmere, one of the Trades Company. To this my Generalls letter, for want of conueyance, I wrote no answer.

The first of March, I sent the Pinnasse to the Towne, and in her the Purser, and the said Alle, who in their going, found a place of better water descending from the mountaines, by reason of the raines within the land (whereof we afterwards filled some water; but the raines once ended it was dried vp.) They hauing bought some few Goats and sheepe returned; and in the evening we descried a Boat comming ouer from Moha to vs-ward.

The second, the said Boat came aboard the Trade, bringing me a letter from my Generall, wherein he gaue me to vnderstand of the cause of his delay of his iourney, partly by reason of a great solenne feast of the Turkes approaching, but principally to haue the Sabander of Moha his company, for the more safe trauell; also witheth the Carpenters forbear to proceed any further in building the Pinnasse, for that the Basha intendeth her for his owne vse, and not for vs; also willing me to forbear reuenge.

The fith, I sent the Darling ouer to Moha, to expect newes from my Generall, where shee found in the Road a great ship of Dabull, called the Mahomet. This day the Generall with all his Company arriued at Moha.

The eleuenth, I doubted lest any euill had befallen the Darling, by reason of her so long absence, set saile with the Trade and Pepper-Corne, standing ouer towards Moha: but before I was so farre off as Crab Iland, I saw the Darling comming ouer, and for that the wind shortned vpon vs, and we not able to fetch the Road, I sent Master Thorneton in the Pinnasse, to vnderstand what newes, but I in the Pepper-Corne with the Trades-Increase, returned into the Road againe: in the euening Master Pemberton with Master Thorneton, and two and twentie of the Trades Company, and fourteene of the Pepper-cornes Company betrayed at Moha and Aden, came ouer the point of the Iland, bringing me a letter from my general, wherein he gaue me to vnderstand of his assured hopes of enlargement, so soone as the Indian ships of this yeere were all come in, and the Westerly winds come. Also that the Turkes had seduced the aforesaid Richard Philips, whom in his iourney vpwards he left sicke at Ties, him by threatening they had forced to turne Turke, and therefore came not downe to Moha with him, he reioycth to heare of Master Pemberton's safety, also informeth me that none of the letters I had sent him were deliuered to him; also desired my opinion, whether best for him to make an escape aboard, if he can, or to remaine at the Turkes deuotion; also wisheth that the Pepper-Corne be the next that comes to Moha.

The eighteenth, I with the Pepper-Corne set saile, standing ouer to Moha, but being neare ouer, it fell calme, and a lee-ward tide, whereby I was forced to anchor in twentie fathom water, on a banke which we there found three leagues from Moha: and in the euening there came off a Canoe vnto me, to know what we were, deeming me to be an Indian ship, for that by reason of the hazie weather, they could not well discern vs.

The nineteenth in the morning, I set saile, the wind at South standing into the Road, whereas yet was only the said great Dabul man: but before I came to an anchor, my General sent his man aboard me with a letter, that frustrated my present hopes, wherein he gaue me to vnderstand that he must be forced to dispeed me away very suddenly, for that my presence caused feare in the Dabullians, and discontent to the Aga. Notwithstanding this my Generalls letter, I sent George Iesse in the Pinnasse on shoare, by whom I sent two letters, the one briefly to giue to vnderstand of our wants, also my opinion of the Turkes performance, who through custome of falsehood, their true performance is not to be expected, but only to feed Sir Henry Middleton with faire promises, to serue their owne turnes; and then we hauing no matter to worke vpon, saue the emptie ships, which the Turkes hauing their goods on land, would nothing regard, and then my General to remaine at the Turkes deuotion, whether to be sent aboard according to the Basha his inforced agreement, or to be ransomed at their pleasures, or sent back againe to Zenan, and so to Stambula. The other, if he should think good to shew the Aga, therein making shew, that so long as he was detained prisoner, his power extended not to command vs that were free & at liberty, and therefore could not keep vs from the Road of Moha, nor in any other thing further then we see good our selues. To these my letters the General writ an answer, the copy wherof followeth.

Sir Henry Middleton's letter to Captaine Downton.

Captaine Downton, your ouermuch care may worke your owne harmes, and doe me and my company no good, and therefore take nothing to heart more then is cause, for I haue had, and still haue my full share thereof: and whereas you alledge you are loath to deparr this Road without me, I am more loath to tarry behind, if there were any remedie: I made a forced agreement with the Basha at Zenan, that the ships should absent themselves out of this Roade, till all the Indian ships were come in, and then at the first comming of the Westerly winds, both I and all my Company shall be set free: if they faile to performe with mee, then I would haue you shew your endeauours: in the meane time you must haue patience, as well as my selfe; I would be loath the agreement should be first broken on our side, without any cause giuen by them. For the prouision that should haue been sent in the Ielba, it was my fault it was not sent, in that I did not urge it to the Aga. After your departure to morrow, as I desire you to see performed, I will goe in hand with the lading of the goods in the Ielba, which shall not bee about three dayes absent from you: I haue promised the ships shall not come in the Roade till the Westerly winds be come, which will be a moneth hence at the furthest, in the meane time you shall heare from me by Ielbas or Boats, which I will send of purpose: I doubt not but there will be good performance made with me by the Turkes, in that my agreement was made with the Basha, and not with Regib Aga. If I doubted any new stratageme, I would haue attempted to haue escaped any before this time: I haue had, and still haue meanes for my escape, were it not to leaue my people in danger of their liues; doubt not, if they performe not with me, when the Westerly winds come, but I shall haue good oportunitie. I had laid a plot to haue escaped, if I could haue persuaded Master Femell, but he will by no meanes be drawne to any thing, till he see whether the Turkes will performe or no, he makes no doubt but to be sent aboard with the first of the Westerly winds, when you shall come to demaund vs; you may ride in your quiet road: stead on the other side, with all your ships, till God send us that long wished for Westerly wind, vlesse you get a slatch of wind to carry one of your ships to the Bab, to see if all be well there, and so retorne backe to you. I know that all sorts of prouisions wastes apace in all the ships, which God sending me aboard, I hope quickly to renew.

The seuen and twentieth, according to my Generalls requests, I sent the Darling ouer to Moha, for effecting the foresaid businesse.

The twentieth ninth and thirtieth, the Budwees brought downe both Goats and sheepe to sell.

The first, second and third of Aprill, the Budwees brought downe either Bullockes, Goates or sheepe, to sell vnto vs.

The fourth, the Darling returning from Moha, but the wind taking her short, shee was forced to anchor to the Northwards or lee-wards of the Road, till the wind should come more large.

The

Aprill 1.

The sixt, the Darling came into the Roade of Affab, and anchored neare the watering place, neare the Trade, to deliuer the victuals and other prouisions, which had been so long detained by the Turkes, and also brought me a very kind letter from my Generall.

The seuenth, the Darling plied vp to an Iland neare the Pepper, there to be Carreind (this I-land we called Crane-Iland, for that on it we killed most Cranes) from this day to the twelfth day, the Darling did land her goods and victuals, and vnrigged their shippe, and certaine of the Trades Company were gathering of Brening.

The one and twentieth, the King of Rabeta sent me a Present (by a kinsman of his) being a fat Cow and a Slaue, he continued aboard the Trades-Increase all night.

10 The thirtieth, the Trades-Increase was heilded and trimmed on both sides, so farre as conueniently might be: this day we filled all our emptie Caske with water, being nine and twentie Tunnes, the water being faire.

The fourth and fift day of May, wee trimmed all our Boats, being reasonable faire weather, the wind at South South-east. The seuenth and ninth day, the Budwees brought downe good flore of sheepe and Goates, but through want of cloath, we bought very few, onely three Bullocks, which we gaue money for.

The eleuenth, my Generall made his most happie escape aboard the Darling, with fifteene more of his Company.

20 The twelfth, my Generall sent the Pinnasse ouer from Moha, and by her a letter, giuing me knowledge of his escape, as aforesaid; also desiring me, vpon the sight of this letter, to repayre ouer to Moha, with the Trades-Increase and Pepper-Corne; which direction I presently put in execution, making the ships in readinesse to set saile: but before my comming, hee so behaued himselfe in the Darling, to the terrour of his enemies the Turkes, that neither Boat from the shoare durst go aboard any of the Indian ships, neither from the ships to the shore, without asking his leaue, and making knowne their businesses; so that now Ragib Aga of Moha, began to sing a new song, and insinuate with Sir Henry Middleton by diuers messengers, as by Nobuda Mahomet and others of the Generalls best friends there, with Presents, now fearing what harmes might happen vnto them, in recompence of his treachery towards him, and therefore desired to haue peace with the Generall: for Master Femell, before his returne aboard, in more especiall fauour, was by the Aga inuited to his house, whereto he was vrged, and there too soone yeilded to eate and drinke with him; whereupon some former speeches giuen out by Master Femell, that he would make complaint of his wrongs in Stambola, which now he remembring at his departure, with a smiling countenance told him they might meete together at Stambola. This night being come aboard he seemed ouer-ioyed; but three dayes after, about two of the clocke in the morning he ended his life, as we all thought, by poyson; the Chirurgions opened him, and this was their conceit: whereupon the Generall embarged all his ships.

The nine and twentieth, at two of the clocke in the morning, as aforesaid, Master Femell, Cape Merchant, died.

40 The first day of Iune in the euening, we had a very strong gust of wind, being so hotte, that it was able to take away our breathes; it also draue the sand of the shore in such sort, we could scarce looke to wind-ward.

The second, came aboard the Admirall, Alle the sonne of Portugall parents, being a Captaine, turned Turke, who, for that he had been the Generalls Trudgman, or Interpreter at Zenan, and so had some acquaintance with him, and therefore was sent downe to capitulate with him of a Peace: he informed the Generall that Master Pembertons said Boy was alreadie brought downe to Moha, and promised the next day he should be brought aboard. This Alle and Taccacee a Bannian, came to know the Generalls demand, which was an hundred thousand Rialls of eight.

50 The eight in the morning, the Generall sent the Darling to Beloule, a place on the Abexin Coast, being ten leagues to the Northward of Affab, to fetch water, and buy some Goats for reliefe of our men, who began to fall sicke of a faint disease; the best remedie for which as we found, was letting blood, and purging of the body; this disease went away in byles and scabbes, and this disease no man escaped cleare of.

60 The nineteenth, Shermall Sabander of Moha, accompanied with many of the chiefeft Merchants of the Towne, and the Alle Haskie and Taccacee a Bannian, came in state with diuers sorts of musicke, from the Aga to the Generall (aboard the Trades-Increase) to capitulate of the fore-said summe by him demanded, for satisfaction for our said goods, which then, in regard the Generall, and all we saw at the present no more to be gotten, and that which should be agreed vpon, to come out of the said Sabander of the Bannians our friend his purse, who daily relieved our men in their misery with bread and other sustenance, not so much as our dogge but also had daily allowance from him; so that alwayes his presence administred comfort to our distressed people: therefore it was concluded, wee to receiue our iron and lead againe, and for the rest of our goods not to be had (wherein was concluded all Vests and other presents the Generall had giuen) the summe at present agreed vpon, was eightene thousand Rialls of eight, and for that at present they had not money to defray so great a summe, they desired the Generall to take out of the said ship of Diu, so much goods as he should esteeme a fit pawne for so great a summe (which they would daily redeeme as they could raise moneyes) and then the ship to goe in presently to land and make sale of the rest of her goods: the utmost time limited for the last payment, was fourteene dayes. The Sabander brought aboard with him, according to promise, Master Pemberton's Boy, being clad in apparell of the English fashion.

Their departure from Moha to Assab, and after that, higher into the Red-sea, thence to the Socatora, and after to Surat.

July 3.

He third of July, hauing reasonably prouided the ships with Rice and other graine (for that our English prouision consumed apace) the Generall with all three ships and Pinnasse let saile, and standing ouer to the Bay of Assab, there by getting daily refreshing, to recouer our weake faint sicke men; where we arriued the fourth day, at eleuen of the clocke afore noone. The fift, sixt, seventh, eight and ninth dayes, the Budwees euery day brought downe either Bullockes, sheepe, or Goats.

The thirteenth, we made an end of watering. The King of Rabeta sent the Generall three fat Bullockes for a Present, by one Abdella, his sisters sonne, the Generall very kindly entertained him, and accepted of the Kings Present, presenting him againe with a Vest of Broad-cloth; the Generall also gaue the King heartie thanks, for all the kindnesse and good dealing receiued from his subiects, at this his Port. The said Abdella then desired the Generall to come with his ships nearer the Bab, being by their report a good harbour, and is neare the Kings Towne, and more plentifull of refreshing, where he might better shew his loue vnto the Generall. This day the General feasted him aboard the Trades-Increase, and in the euening caused a banquet of sweet meats and wine to be prepared on shore against their landing, whereof he hauing both eaten and drunke, very thankfully tooke leaue of the Generall, and departed to the King againe.

Their endentor
to take a rich Turkie Shippe, which came from Sues.

The foure and twentieth, we set saile from Assab, directing our course towards Cameran, an Iland on the Abaxia Coast, some fortie leagues to the Northward of Moha, in fifteene degrees North latitude, in which is a Towne and fortresse, to which place they thought they were come or neare comming to stay for directions, by reason of our being neare, to the the Northwards it is feldome seene that any will attempt going, while the Westerly Monton lasteth, which in the Red-sea bloweth most all Northerly, till the last of July. We turned vp all day, and anchored at night, in which we were pestered with a dangerous shoale, to which wee vnawares came so neare, that we had oftentimes enough to doe to quit our selues of them, when we had little more water then we needed: this continuing two dayes, hauing no Pilot, nor other meanes (and the Currents vncertaine) readily to find it: And the weather doubtfull, being in vncertaine places to ride in open water, if the weather in the night should proue aduers, the Generall with griefe being often moued to giue ouer the businesse of seeking the Turkie ship of Sues; himselfe concluded that it was fit for him to prouide for the safetie of his owne ships, which are to him certaine, then with too much hazard to pursue things vncertaine, and perchance might misse finding her when he came there; so wee bore vp with the Iland of Iuball Succor, which is bigge and high, and another great Iland to the Southwards of it, being also high, called Iuball Arrec; these two neighbour Ilands are inuironed with diuers other smaller Ilands to the Southwards, and in diuers places ledges of sunken rockes, being discerned only by the breaches on them: those Ilands as they lye South and North, by supposition may be in length some ten leagues, they lye North North-west from Moha, where in cleare weather they may plainly be seene, which happeneth very feldome: from the Wester part of Iuball to Beloula, the course is South-west by South distant some twelue leagues; little wide of which course lyeth two sunken rockes knowne by the breach, they are neare adioyning to the said Ilands South by West: from the Wester part of Iuball Arrec are two Ilands and a Rocke; and from these towards the Coast of Africa South-west lye foure other small flat rockes, lying distant from the former some foure myles and an halfe: there is no danger in going neare them, for we found deepe water close aboard the South Westermost of them, being the nearest to the Africke Coast.

Two Ilands called Iubal
Succor and Iu
bal Arrec.

August 6.

The sixt of August, at foure of the clocke in the morning, we set saile from our good harbour of Assab, and before sixe at night we anchored in the Roade of Moha, seeing neare the Towne wall moored and vnladen the said Gallion which came from Sues, which we had gone to seeke and mist vs, as we were intangled amongst the shoales, and was come into Moha five dayes before, also there was come in one Gally, and three more euery day expected.

The seventh, the Generall went in with the Pepper-Corne and Darling (for dispatch of his businesse) so neare as the ships could well ride, and also, if need required, to command all the ships in the Roade: and about ten of the clocke, our old friend Taccace and Sabrage, the Sabanders man, man, came aboard with a Present from Sbermal the Sabander : to these the Generall gave notice of his business, and dispeeded them away.

The tenth about eleven of the clocke before noone, wee past thorow the Easter Channell of Bab-mandell, finding in the midst nine or ten fathom, and toward either side, seven, six or five fathom, according as we edged in or off; the Darling and Release put out through the greater or South-western Channell, which may be some foure leagues over, all seeming very cleare of danger, the Release going farre by the shore, on the South-west side of the Iland of Bab-mandell in twelve fathom; the Easter Channell is not above a mile and a halfe over. Bab-mandell sailed on both sides.

The eleventh at noone, the high land of Aden bore North North-west, distant some eleven leagues, and by estimation East by South halfe a degree some sixe and thirtie leagues. Note also that from this day vnto the end, I reckon the dayes from noone to noone, for that by every daies obseruation of latitude, I rectifie my trauesse, as now from noone the eleventh day, to noone the twelfth day, I reckon vpon the twelfth day onely in my discourses, I reckon according to the true day, as from midnight to midnight, &c.

The one and twentieth, from noone to six at night East, some foure leagues before Sun-rising, we descried Mount Felix, bearing East by North eleven leagues distant (by which we certainly perceived how the Current had abused vs) from Tuesday the twentieth day after-noone, to Monday the six and twentieth day, notwithstanding some while of the land, and other while sea turnes, betweene calmes oftentimes a prettie gale continuing sometime foure, sixe or seven houres together, yet by reason of the Current we could neuer get a head; but by the said six and twentieth day in the morning, we were fallen to the Westward some foure leagues, the six and twentieth day at nine of the clock in the morning (hauing continued vnder a steepe high whitish cliffe all the foresaid time) it pleased God to send vs a small gale of wind off the shore, with which wee came off North North-east into the Sea, in hope there to finde the wind more prosperous.

The seven and twentieth, by iudgement we might runne East North-east fourteene leagues. This day at foure after-noone, Mount Felix bore South by East some nine leagues distant; this Mount, by my estimation, may bee sixteene leagues Westward of Cape Guardafui: this night when it was calme, as also when the wind blew, we met with a potching sea, which well informed me, that we grew neare the length of the Head-land, and began to bring the Southerne sea open of the Cape, or the point of the land: the nine and twentieth we descried Socatora. Cape de Guardafui.

Note that in this trauesse from Aden to Socatora is no certaintie, by reason we were so much deluded by the Current, wherein by the water oftentimes wee seemed to get, yet by the Current we lost, or were driuen backe.

Now hauing effected all our businesses, as watering and getting some ballast, and bought all the Alloes here to bee had, and left letters of aduice with the King of Socatora, for such of our nation, as in like manner might come to Trade in the Red-sea, both to preuent their losse of time and further trouble.

The fourth of September, at two in the after-noone, we set saile from the Roade of Dellisba, September 4. the wind presently grew calme, so that we did little good all the night.

The three and twentieth, at sixe in the morning, being neare the end of an ebbe, we set saile and stood away North and North North-east two howres, some two leagues, the wind at South, our depths from ten to sixteene fathom, and presently as against a wall, seven, sixe and five fathoms. About eight of the clocke, we had sight of the trees of India, which standeth both in South and North Smally, which bore East by North from vs (by a meridian Compasse distant six leagues) we runne in East North-east and North-east by East with the flood, still raising the land to the Northward, till neere two of the clocke; our depths vncertaine, sometimes more, and sometimes lesse, shunning diuers suspicious riplings, keeping betweene eight and fifteene fathom, we anchored in soft Oze, and by my obseruation it floweth East North-east one quarter North, and West by South one quarter South by the Moone, and by this time the flood runneth five houres, and the ebbe seven houres, by reason of the Winter freshes by the abundant raines are not yet fully expelled, and therefore doth overcome or shorten the flood-streames; but at other times, though the Spring-streames goe alwayes strong, yet the flood and ebbe are equally sixe houres a peece. In the Winter-streames, which is Iune, Iuly and August, my coniecture is that Cables and Anchors, nor Ships bowes can be made of force to resist the streames. The Coast lyeth heere neare North and South; this day being come to an anchor, my Generall sent off his Pinnasse to fetch a Boat which sailed neare vs, who came from Surat, and was bound to Goga, loaden with Rice, who informed him we were over-shot Surat a great way toward Cambaia, and that we must returne seven or eight leagues, if wee would goe to the Barre of Surat: this Boat the Generall kept with him, because they would vse the Master of her for a Pilot. A boat of Surat.

The foure and twentieth, there came another Boat voluntarily aboard the Admirall, and also continued with good content with vs for Pilots: the former informed the Generall, that there were staying for vs at the Barre of Surat, fifteene armed Portugall Frigats, to intercept what we should there intend; so at full sea, which was at two after-noone, we set saile with a little wind at South, standing off West into the deeper Channell, turning downe the ebbe while day light would permit, and then anchored in foure and twentie fathome in a vehement streame, where riding till morning day-light, when the ebbe being spent and we not able to weigh our anchors till the tide broake, so that we made a small tides worke; yet this five and twentieth day night at seuen of the clocke, wee anchored some league short of the Roade, Southward of the Barre, where we saw riding at anchor three Indian ships.

Eightene
sayles of Portu-gall Frigats.

W. Finch intended to returne into England by the way of Persia.

The six and twentieth in the morning, with the tide of flood wee set saile, standing into the Roade, where we anchored by the said three ships of Surat, which were intended to be laden for to goe to Sumatra, but partly by reason of our approach, and partly for that the Portugals would come to no reasonable composition with them for their Custome and Caritas (or Passe) their Voyage was giuen ouer, according to our Pilots former information. We here found eightene sayle of Portugall Frigats, whereof sometime more, and sometime lesse, according as they see occasion appeared in our view, al being vnder the charge or conduct of Don Francisco de Soto Maior, Capitaine Maior of the forces of Damon and Chaul, accompanied also with the Capitaine Maior and forces of Dim: who for a long time together without intermission, so pestred the streames about vs, that none could neither out of the Riuer, nor any other way come neere vs, but they would narrowly search and see that they had neither Letters nor other prouisions, that might comfort or reliefe our necessities, whereby they often tooke occasion to rob diuers of sundry things, with threatnings that they were bringing them vnto vs their Enemies; and therefore confiscated: by this meanes our men grew to great weaknesse, and euery day more and more of our men fell downe with the scurue, wanting to refresh or comfort them; at last by our Neighbours the ships Boat of Surat, we receiued a lame aduice from one Nicholas Bangham, left by the Hector to attend on the Merchants there. Yet after many dayes, was gotten from him (which for the purpose was lying by him) both a Letter from Capitaine Hawkins remayning in Agra (which is the place of the great Mogull his residence) and another from William Finch at Labor which was going home-wards ouer land by the way of Persia, by which the Generall vnderstood the little hope they conceiued of any good for our Nation in this Countrey people without faith. After some time there was knowledge giuen by the said Nicholas Bangham, that Capitaine Sharpeigh, John Iourdain, and others were euery day expected in Surat, being comming from Agra by the way of Cambaya, which gaue some content to Sir Henry Middleton.

The thirtieth, by the Generals direction, I with the Pepper-Corne, Darling, and Release, set saile, endeavouring to finde the passage ouer the Barre into the Riuer of Surat: but partly by the Portugals diligent attendance to cut off from vs our Boats which sounded before the ships, if they exceeded the command of our Ordnance, and partly the vncertaine and dangerous sudden shoalings we in each ship found, did chiefly frustrate our present endeours.

§. IIII.

Many proud affronts of the Portugals. Disgusts from the Indians.

Octob. 1.

Insolence of Portugals.

THe first of October, we all set sayle backe againe towards the Road, where our Admirall rid, but the wind shortening vpon vs, and the tyde of ebbe growing also strong, we could not fetch the Road, but were put off some foure miles Westwards of the Roade, wherefore it was Wednesday before the wind and tyde so much fauoured vs as to get into the Road. Sir Henry Middleton wrote vnto the Portugall Capitaine Maior, requiring him that if he could not permit him to Trade here, yet, that he might take in the Merchants and others his Countrymen which were heere on shoare in this Countrey, and then hee would be gone from this place; but the Portugall Captaines answere (to this) was No, for hee would carrie them to Goa, and from thence, they should be sent home; also it seemed that John Iourdain, had beene flat tering with the fathers both at Agra and Cambaya, and had obtayned some commendations to the Vice-Roy, or request or hope of conduction into Portugall, knowing at present no better meanes to get into his Countrey: by which Sir Henry Middleton could neuer imagine nor expect any safetie to such as continue firme to our State and Countrey. And neere the time of this Letter from Sir Henry Middleton, Capitaine Sharpeigh by some principall Portugall then on land in Surat, made motion either by Letter or otherwise, to the Capitaine Maior to giue him his Segure (or safe conduct) for his safe passage aboard the English ships; whereupon the Capitaine Maior, in scoffe wrote vnto the English Capitaine and his Companions, his Segure for their safe comming aboard his Galliot, without addition for his departure thence, the thing which he required. And further to shew the base account he made of our Nation, added, that if they would take their passage along with him to Goa, he would vse him and his Company with as much fauour, as he would doe to Turkes, Moores, or other Nations that vse these Seas; and all other Nations (a few Persians excepted) are Jewes, Bannians, and Gentiles, which though it were were in him an vnpleasing and vile speech, yet I like well his plainenesse, in shewing them what to trust to before (not thinking they could haue escaped his hands) otherwise it is likely, that some of them would haue beene perswaded, that their vsage should haue beene better then is heere promised.

Sir Henry Middleton being very zealous in procuring the libertie of our Countrymen, though both by Captaine Hawkins and William Finch his Letters, and by all else we could vnderstand of the Countrey, all hope of good here to be done for the Company, cyther for present or to come was wholly quenched; he writ to haue them come by land and meete him at Dabul, but that journey was thought toot tedious, and by reason of the Warres in Decanie, dangerous. The time thus lost seemed very tedious; wherein our water and other prouisions fast wasted, our people daily for want of comfortable refreshing, fell generally into sicknesse, which made our estate doubtfull, not knowing where or by what meanes to get refreshing, we being so garded by these our Enemies, that none could come to vs, neither could we goe from our ships: And Captaine Sharpeigh made prouision for vs at the Towne, though without hope that it could escape the Portugall, who lay in continuall waite for it. It being prouided, it was in vaine to sell it againe, but order being giuen to send it howsoeuer, it was immediately sent towards vs.

The eleuenth, Sir Henry Middleton, much disturbed in minde at our present doubtfull estate, and our great losse of time, and that to so little purpose, and therefore leauing the Trades Increase in the mayne Road, he with the Pepper-Corne, and Darling, and Release, put in practice to discouer alongst the Coast to the North-ward, to find out some place where our shippes might safely ride so neere the shoare, as to command the place of landing, and frustrate the Portugalls attempts for taking our Boates and people: but the day neere spent, wee anchored neere the North point, thwart of the barre at the enterance of the Riuer of Surat. This day Allonso Gransido dyed.

The twelfth, early in the morning, the Portugalls tooke the Boate which was comming towards vs with our prouisions: in loffe the Captaine *Maio*r presently sent thanks to Captaine Sharpeigh, for his care of him in sending him victuals for his supply. This said morning at the first of the flood we set sayle standing with the point to the Northwards, and by reason of the quicknesse of the streame, and our suspition in this vnknowne place, wee euer put that shippe smallest of draft head-most, and before the smallest we sent our rowing Boates, making no more haste with our Sayles, then that our Boates might keepe head with their Oares. And yet further to preuent what perill by these strong Tydes might happen, wee had our Anchors alwayes in readinesse to let drop whensoever by their signes ahead, wee should vnderstand of any sudden shoalding. The Armie of the Portugals likewise weighed and followed keeping a brest betweene the Pepper-Corne and the shore, they all rowing in order of Battell with their Colours displayed, oftentimes making great shoutes as in some great attempt; the Captaine *Maio*r in a small Frigate, going from Frigate to Frigate throughout his Fleet encouraging them at length the Darlings Boat a good distance of betweene the ship & the land, by occasion of a suspicious ripling & where shee was sounding, presently by the Captaine *Maio*r's direction one of their smaller swiftest Frigats (being ouer-bold through our long sufferance) rew forth with great swiftnesse to cut off from vs the Darlings Boat, being seconded by another of the same kind. The Master of the Darling seeing his Boat and men in such danger, could no longer forbear, but for her rescue he began to shoot at them, the former Frigate gat cleere ahead. But the second seeing our shoote flye so fast at her with feare put on shoare, the men abandoning her ranne away in the mulde; the Armie now comming vp for her rescue perceiuing our shot came amongst them so fast shoued a sterne leauing that Frigate to our deuotion wee perceiuing them so to leaue her, and for that she was fit to serue our turnes, bestowed the fetching of her. In this Frigate wee found some small quantity of Indico, Cinamon, Comin-seed, Cotton Yarne, Mirabolans (dry for Phisick) & one small ballet of Candekins mill, & very coarse, all of smal value, these things had the Portugals lately taken from a poore Bannian. By this occasion we anchored here in seuen fathome water, thwart of the North point in the mouth of the Riuer of Surat, within Musket shot of the shoare at low water, here wee rid till the next day.

The thirteenth, in the morning we weighed and stood somewhat neerer into the shorewards, and anchored in fixe fathome, presently we descryed diuers men on land, wherefore the Generall sent Master Iesse, and Matthew Bragge ashore with a Flagge of Truce: but they being Portugals, and perceiuing them landed, retyred flourishing their Swords as though they had atchieued some worthy exploit: this day about nine a clocke in the fore-noone, the Generall sent a way the Darling into the maine Road, where the Trades Increase rid, she made no stay there, but presently againe returned bringing with her one of the Indian ship Boates, and seenteene of their men whom the Generall at times sent away with Letters to the Towne to Captaine Sharpeigh whom before their going the Generall royally rewarded, also promising them better satisfaction at their returne: five of them were this euening sent away with Letters, who promised to returne againe to vs with Letters, but according to their accustomed practice of lying and deceit, they onely spake to giue present content and meant the contrary, so that there is no hold in their words. This day there came somewhat neer vs a great Indian Boat laden with Paddy, the General made

made stay of her, and for our present supply, bought of her one Candie, & fixe Maunds of Paddy, which the next day we tooke into the Pepper-corne, and they hauing satisfaction to their content, being dismissed, departed.

The sixteenth, we seeing two Frigats riding a good distance to the North-ward of vs, which the Generall had a desire to see what they were, and to know the cause of their riding there: which being Portugals, and seeing vs rowing alongst the coast towards them, they set saile, standing awhile alongst the coast, and then to the Offing; but finding our selues further and further a sterne gaue them ouer, and stood in with the Riuer, and point of South Swally; we landed, determining with our net to fish, but the depth of the water not seruing, the General was going vnto the Riuer in his Galliot to fish, at which instant there came a good gale of wind off the sea, wherewith againe came in the two former Frigats, accompanied with two other Frigats, newly come from the bar-foot of Surat. In which was the late Captaine of our little Frigats; who lately hazarded his life by running away in the deep mud, supposed now by worthy valour to recouer her againe, (as soon after we were informed) to whose attempt the wind was as fauourable, as aduerse to vs, who had farre to row to wind-ward ouer a broad shoale, whereon we alwaies had between three and foure foot water; but we somewhat gotten off to set saile, and the Release not farre off to second vs: and contrary to their expectations, in stead of flying see all our endeauours bent to hasten the meeting with them, and seeing our Musket shot fell but little short of them, which immediately was like to reach them: but as seemed, their former resolution found some contradict, for they all at once exchanged their sterne for their prowes, giuing vs some waile bafe shot in their running away; we pursued long, since we lost not much, we were euer in hope to get ground of them, but the wind increasing, and what betweene our people tired at the oare, and our too small saile to our little Frigat, put them cleane from vs, and so we returned to the Pepper-corne, leauing the Darling.

The twentieth in the morning, Thomas Glemham in the Pinnasse went on shoare to attend the comming downe of any of the Countrey people, either with messages or prouisions to sell, all giuing direction, if any came to giue him knowledge by shooting off three Muskets together, that the Generall in the Frigat would then goe on shoare the Pinnasse comming on shoare, one man onely for a Centinell went on shoare, who no sooner came to the top of a small hill neere the water-side, but presently seeing a troupe of Portugals rush out of their ambush towards them, retyred to the Pinnasse, who rowed a little from the shoare and anchored; the Portugals comming to the water side, discharged their smal shot at our Pinnasse, who so well repayed them with their Muskets, that presently they ran away, soone after they saw one of the Inhabitants on Horse-back, whose comming downe (as they suppose) the present sight of the Portugals hindered, and therefore shot off three Muskets together, which the Generals hearing, presently went on the shoare with the Frigat, but contrary to our expectation the said Indian came not downe to them, neither any Message nor Letter, neither from the General nor Captaine Sharpeigh. In the euening some of the poore Inhabitants brought downe some few fruits to sel, which the General caused to be bought, and as our men repayed to the Frigat to come aboard, there came downe vnto them three men out of the Portugall Armie, who for some disgust there giuen them, fled to vs for succour, the one of them a Dutchman borne in Lisbone, called Lorenzo de Campo, the other two were Portugals, the principall of them called Frances Consalues.

The one and twentieth in the morning, the Generall in the Frigat went on shoare, where hee no sooner landed, but presently an Indian brought him a Letter from Captaine Sharpeigh, certifying Sir Henry Middleton that the next day he would come downe with all his goods guarded by an hundred Horsemen; this day a Mallabar Boy called Antonio, who had bene five or fixe yeares Captiue to a Portugall Soullier in this Armie, now finding good oportunitie to his desire, fled vnto vs for succour.

The two and twentieth, early in the morning, the Generall went on shoare in the Frigat, attended by the Release, to expect the comming downe of Captaine Sharpeigh, according to his information in his Letter: now approaching neere the shoare, the Frigat anchored, and presently landed thirty men with small shot, the Generall appointing one of them for Centinell, to stay on the top of a small hill neere the water side; the rest also to be neere the water side, for the better auoiding any sudden attempt, but all to looke about, to see if they could discouer any bodie comming downe from Surat-wards: the Centinell in short time saw two Bannians comming from the North-wards, whereof he instantly gaue knowledge: these Bannians brought downe some Tobacco, and other trifling things to sell; they beeing come aboard the Frigat, certified the Generall that the last night five Englishmen came from Surat, to a village some foure miles from this place; and that this morning they came from them, and that this afternoone they would come downe to vs, presently there sallied out of a valley betweene two hills on a sudden, seven troopes of Portugals, with their colours displayed, whom our men seeing made a stand, the Portugals also made a stand, as hauing no list to come within the reach of our shot, although there were neere three hundred of them. The Generall commanded our men to retire, and to imbarque themselues: which being done accordingly, the Portugals then made pursuit after them, and with five or fixe Baffles (by them brought for that purpose) and other small shot, they began to shoot at our Boates and men, but did them no harme, who failed not to answer them againe with the like, whereby (as afterwards wee were informed) they went away with the worst. Now after longer stay, and our people not comming according to our expectation, the Generall returned aboard the Pepper-corne, determining this afternoon with the ebbe to be gone from this place to the Tradef-increase; but as we were setting saile, a company of men were descried comming from the North-ward, wherefore we againe anchored, and the General went on shore in the Frigate, where presently came downe to them three of our Country-men, of the Ascensions company, to wit, Thomas Musgrave, Bartholmew Davis, and William Morgan, who with them brought Captaine Sharpeigh, and John Iordaine cloaths and provisions. On Thursday came downe to them Captaine Sharpeigh, with an hundred horsemen for his guard, all armed with Bowes and arrowes and Sworles: with him came aboard Jaddow, the Broaker, and a Braman (or Bannian Priest) and an other Indian, Captaine Sharpeigh his seruant.

Certaine Englishmen come aboard.

The five and twentieth, Sir Henry Middleton in the Frigate, went on shore (accompanied by Captaine Sharpeigh, and John Iordaine) where Coia Nassan at the water side promised to meete him, who was there in readinesse according to his promise. The Frigate comming to the water side, the Generall was fetcht on shore on a Pallankin, borne on foure mens shoulders, and there kindly entertained by Coia Nassan, and according to the Countrey fashion, a Carpet was spread whereon they sat to conferre of our present businesse. It was by them in a manner concluded, our ships to goe to Goga, a place on the West side of the Gulfe neerer to Cambaya, and to haue Pilots from the shore for our more safe conduct; but a sudden (and at this time of the yeere vnusual) showre of raine happening, they brake vp their conference, promising the next day there to meet againe, fully to determine of our said businesse.

Captaine Sharpeigh commeth aboard. Our Generall goeth on land.

The sixe and twentieth, according to mutuall promise, the Generall in manner aforesaid went on shore in the Frigate, who anchoring neere the shore side, Coia Nassan in one of our boats sent off Jaddow with a Present of tenne fine Bastas, and fiftie Bushels of Wheate to the Generall, and two Pilots for our safe conduct to Goga: the Generall very kindly accepted thereof, and with the Pinnasse went to the shore side, where on a Pallankin in manner aforesaid, hee was receiued and entertained on shore, where they proceeded on their former conference; but the Pilots hauing discovered the manner of the place, whose vnfitnesse gaue no content, and therefore their determination therein soone altered, and it was concluded and agreed vpon, that our ships should for the space of sixe dayes be gone off to Sea, which the Portugals perceiuing, they suppose would also be gone, and then we againe to returne, and suddenly to dispatch our businesse. This Evening we set saile, standing to the South-wards to the Tradef-increase, but the wind shortned vpon vs, so that we anchored some mile West-ward of the roade. This day in the morning, Thomas Lane died.

The seuen and twentieth in the morning, the Generall departed aboard the Tradef-increase, and soone after sent his Pinnasse for Captaine Sharpeigh and my selfe, to confere about our present businesse, (also he sent men to fetch away the Frigate and Portugals from the Pepper-corne;) after a Counsell held, the Generall sent a letter to Don Francisco de Soto, Captaine Maior of the Portugall army, therein repeating the manifold discourtesies by him shewed towards vs: First, not onely hindering our landing, but also the passage of our letters, kept vs from all reliefe for our sicke men; and what at great charge was provided, he had taken from vs, and kept vs from our people on shore, which if we could haue gotten, we had been gone long since: and also his endeauours the twelfth of this Moneth, to cut from vs our boats founning a head our ships, what time we tooke one of their Frigats, which we now hauing done our businesse, if hee would send for her, we would freely bestow her on him againe. Also the Generall released the Indian shippes, whom for conueiance of letters betweene Captaine Sharpeigh and him, he restrained from going into the Riuer, who now being dismiss, they presently departed towards Surat: also wee made ready our ships to be gone off to Sea.

October.

The nine and twentieth, we set saile to sea-wards, the Portugall Frigats still following vs in their accustomed manner. This day we met with a boat bound to Cambaya, laden with Coco nuts, of whom the Generall bought seuentene thousand, which he distributed amongst our people, and the Indian boat was presently dismiss: this day was M. Mullenex the second time put into the Pepper-corne. The one and thirtieth, S. Henry Middleton seeing that the Portugals still followed vs, determined to stand off no further, but againe to returne to doe our businesse so farre as conveniently we could, in despite of them.

The first of Nouember, according to the Generals predetermination, we returned to the North-wards as the winds and tides permitted. Saturday in the morning, we anchored thwart of South Smally, where the General in the Frigate went on shore, but heard no news from Surat.

Nouember. 1.

This night the Portugals in the riuer shot off diuers peeces, which they told the Indians was for ioy they had receiued tidings of the coming of two great Gallies, and twentie Frigats more for their assistance, whereby they abused themselves, in thinking with their lyes to terrifie vs, who were now armed to withstand all their villainous practises, vsurping authority in an other Kings Dominion, where they haue no more to doe then in Denmarke.

The

An excellent
roade found.

The fifth, Sir Henry Middleton sent William Pemberton Master of the Darling (in whose endeavours he had firme confidence) with his ship the Release and Frigate againe, to discover to the North-wards as afore-said; who there found a hard place, wherein not onely our smaller ships might at high water goe, but also the Trade-increase, being a little lightned, might also goe safely over the Barre, and there ride within Calieuer shot of the shoare.

The sixth in the morning, with the first of the flood, we all set saile, standing to the North-wards, and anchored thwart of the place discovered: at high water wee with the Pepper-corne, Darling and Release, went in over the Barre, whereon the least depth wee found was three fathome and a foote, but at low water three foot. Beeing in, we all anchored within Calieuer shot of the shoare, as afore-said in eight fathome, and right a head or to the North-ward of vs, anchored twelve Portugall Frigats, somewhat without the reach of our Ordnance. This afternoone the Generall and my selfe, with a guard of fortie small shot, went on shoare to seeke out some place where we might relieue our wants of fresh water: in the salt marshes we found a place of brackish water, whereof till better could be gotten, we were forced to make vse. Here the Inhabitants brought downe to sell five or sixe goats and sheepe, and some fruits, which for reliefe of our out-tired weake people were all bought.

Newes of more Portugals.

The seventh, we filled some water, bought some small provisions as the people brought down: we haled the Release a ground, in hope to stop her leaks, beeing as it were in a manner deuoured with wormes, for the safetie of her and her people: we erected a Tent, in which I continued, keeping a Court of Guard and Centinels aboard, to prevent the practise of the Portugals our enemies to preiudice vs. The eighth, all our Carpenters vsed their best endeavours to trie the stopping of the Pinnasse her leaks: this day Nicholas Bangham came downe, bringing provisions such as by the Generals directions he had provided, as Limes for our diseased people, bread, lamp-oyle, and candles, and his owne provisions. This euening, some of our inhabiting neighbours of the neerest Villages, informed the Generall, that in the Riuer was arriued two Gallies, and eightie Frigats: vpon which newes the Generall altered his determination, and for the better securitie thought good to bring all our forces together, the better to frustrate any practises that might be intended against vs; wherefore at his first departure aboard his ship, which rid in the Offing, gaue me directions to guard the said Barke vpon the shoare, and as soon as the tide serued, to heaue her a float by my ship, or the Darling, which about midnight was performed; when presently we set saile over the Barre, and rid by the Admirall.

A Market at the roade of Swally.

The ninth in the morning, Coia Nassan came downe, the Generall beeing then on shoare; hee certified the Generall, that so soone as all our ships were come into the roade, hee would bring downe goods and trade with vs; in the meane time a Market should be kept vpon the sea strand, of all necessary provisions; also informed the Generall, that the Frigats last come into the Riuer, was a Caphala or fleete of Portugall Merchant Frigats, bound to Cambaya: at his departure Nicholas Bangham went vp to Surat with him.

A second assault of the Portugals.

The twelfth, beeing in the roade, we had a Market there kept vpon the strand of diuers sorts of provisions, to wit, Meale, Bread, Bullocks, Goats, Sheepe, Hennes, Butter and Cheese, Sugar and Sugar-Candie, Limes, Plantans, Water-Mellons, Goards, Onions, Radishes, Pallinger-mies, Cucumbers, Milke, a kind of Peascod which they call Paupery, and Gindus, a small fruit as big as a little Crab, beeing in taste betweene sweet and sowre, and in the midst thereof hath a small round stone, Sugar-canes, and Tobacco, also Salt-fish dried, and Praunes, and Palmita wine, which they call Taddy. All these afore-named things were at reasonable cheape rates.

The one and twentieth, my Centinell vpon the Mount, saw over the top of an other hill neere adioyning, the heads of some of the Portugals, who there lay in ambush to the number of five hundred men: he had no sooner giuen the Alarum, but presently they seeing themselves discovered, they all with their colours aduanced, with great celeritie ranne downe, to cut off our people from the Boat; but hauing a little tasted of our shot, both out of great and small Peeces, and seeing some of their fellowes tumbling in the mud, they made as great hast backe out of the reach of them: diuers of them that fell downe, afterwards came to themselves, and made means to crawl away, onely Antonio de Sousa, a Gentleman of Chaul, hauing a deadly wound in the head, lay still. We seeing the neglect of compassion by his friends, in commiseration fetcht him aboard; whose wound beeing incurable, he died within two houres after, and we buried him on the shoare. Sir Henry Middleton in his ship in the Offing, hearing our peeces, and doubting of some disgust, hastned with his Frigate full of people vnto vs, yet notwithstanding we gaue the enemy leaue to take his pleasure on the shoare, without landing to trie any further fortunes with them: going on shoare we found diuers of their reliques, as shoes and socks, which for their more expedition away, they left behind: afterwards we were informed by the Muccadam or Constable of Swally, that the Portugals had kild and hurt in this attempt, eight of their people.

The arrivall of Mucris Chan
the Gouvernour of Cambaya.

The foure and twentieth afternoone, came downe Mucris Chan, with one hundred horse-men, and many more footmen, five Elephants, with diuers Camels, Carts and Oxen, for transportation of his provisions, wherein he shewed his greatnesse. Furthermore, he had diuers Carts to carrie his Leopards, wherewith at his pleasure he vsed to hunt. Hee was there met by Sir

Henry

Henry Middleton, at whose landing was discharged a Volley of an hundred and threescore small shot, and at the instant of their salutation each ship in order shot, to wit, the Darling three, the Pepper-corne five, and the Trades-increase nine peeces of Ordnance, then was deliuered vnto him the King of Englands Letter and Present vnto himselfe, whereof with all shewes of kindnesse he accepted: and Macrib Chan with sixteene Moguls and Moors, such as he made choice of (leaving the rest of his followers a shoare with Hoia Nassan, and Coia Arsan Allo, and other Merchants, where was erected as it were a little Towne of tents) boldly accompanied S. Henrie Middleton aboard the Trades-Increase, where in the best manner the ship afforded, he was entertained, and continued all night, and part of the next day. Sir Henry Middleton often vrged him concerning our maine businesse, which he still put off with delaies till an other time. But all his looking was, both himselfe and by diuers instruments to find out, and buy all such fantasticall toyes, that might fit his turne to please the toyish humour of the great King his Master; and for ought that we could gather, further then serued his owne turne, he little respected our selling or buying of our principall Merchandize brought for that place; hauing satisfied himselfe in that ship by his wittiest inquisition, desired in like manner to see the other ships, where he ranne the like course aboard the Pepper-corne: he bought all our Chests of Sword-blades, whereof he seemed to be so greedy, as he would not trust vs to send them after him, but would see them all sent a shoare before his departure, which in few dayes after, hauing selected out all the crooked ones, and such as liked him, sent backe the rest carelesly, and ill conditioned, as their accustomed manner is to doe all things whatsoeuer they haue bought, when by all the view they can haue they dislike the same. Which businesse being ended, they hastened a shoare accompanied by S. Henry Middleton, my selfe, Captaine Sharpeigh, and John Iordaine. He beeing landed, carried vs to his Tent, where being all set vpon Carpets, with many of his friends, Sir Henry Middleton againe moued speech concerning our businesse, as aforesaid: which he againe put off till to morrow. When wee saw nothing to be done, and the night approaching, we tooke leaue, departing aboard to spend the night in consultation of our next dayes businesse or affaires.

Macrib Chan came aboard
the Trades-In- crease.

The sixe and twentieth in the morning, Sir Henry Middleton hastened ashore, thinking to doe much businesse: being come he was informed that Macrib Chan was gone, and yet the better to pacifie him, they told him he was gone to the Portugals to make friendship betweene vs, which the Generall well knew was not so, but rather suspected that his going to the Portugals was, hauing receiued already from vs in presents all hee could get, that hee would now also see what he could get from the Portugals to doe ill Offices against vs. Wherefore, laden with discontent, he againe departed aboard his ship in the euing, Hoia Nassan yet staying, pretending of purpose to buy our Commodities, whereof the Generall set downe the particular prizes, but this day being farre spent, it was referred till the day following.

The seuen and twentieth in the morning Macrib Chan sent one of his chiefe Gentlemen and his Broker with a Letter to the Generall: which I supposing to be of import and behoofe of our Common-wealthes businesse, presently in my Boat sent the Messenger aboard the Admirall, the effect whereof was soone found to be no other then to beg his perfumed Ierkin and his Spaniell Dogge, which was denyed him the day before when he begged his Beuer Hat: also hee desired our workmen and Smith to make him the modell of a chaine pumpe, also this morning Captaine Sharpeigh and Master Iourdaine went ashore to Hoia Nassan, to conferre with him of the prizes of our Commodities.

Base Vanitie.

The eight and twentieth, Hoia Nassan departed to Surat, carrying with him the Generals Ierkin and Dogge, which Macrib Chan had formerly begged, and that we should the lesse doubt, he left behind him in his Tent Hoia tellardin his sonne-in-law, pretending he should stay till his returne. Hoia Nassan being once gone, he set flight, being carelesse of our businesse, and the next night he dissolued his Tent and departed, to no small disturbance to vs, seeing none left to rectifie any businesse. This day Bartholmew Duns one of our Carpenters was sent to Surat, to make prouision of planks and boards for re-edifying of the Release, wee thereinto encouraged by their fauourable promise, in which is very small hold, for he once there, found nothing but delusions or delays, for wheresoeuer he found Timber, either he could not find any to sell it, or not to saw it; so all his businesse was not onely frustrate, but he also in despaire of libertie to returne. This day Master Iourdaine, Master Fraim, and others went vp to a Village neere adioyning to view some packes of Indian Cloth, which Hoia Nassan had brought downe thither to barter with vs for some of our Commodities: they returning brought downe the Mustraes of euerie sort, and the prizes demanded for them per Corge: the Generall vpon such as he liked set downe what prizes he would giue for them, requiring them to doe the like by his Commodities, and to haue answere the next day: but they held them at high rates, and offered weakly for our Commodities, which they esteemed of necessitie, we must be forced to sell them howsoeuer.

The first of December, they perceiuing that Sir Henry Middleton would not giue them their demand for their Commodities, nor sell them his at their owne rates, to shew their carelesnesse, or to try his temper, did not onely speedily send for their Mustraes of clothes, but also carryed backe to Surat, all such packes as they had formerly brought downe to Damka, a Village three mile mile from vs. Also the poore Inhabitants were restrayned from bringing downe provisions to sell vs, as formerly by permission they did.

The sixth, the Generall was informed the Mockrib Chan, and Hoia Nassan were comming downe, and in the euening we see as it were a Village of Tents pitcht somewhat more then a mile within the land, to the East-ward of the Road, but whether they came in peace or no, we knew not.

Barbarous in humanitie.

The seuenth, Iaddow & Narran Brokers came downe, certifying the General that Mockrib Chan and Hoia Nassan were comming downe, and were now at the Tents, and to morrow would bee heere with him. They translated our Kings Letter, and then departed, but yet their extraordinary sadnesse, as men sent by constraint, gaue vs no hope of good towards vs, the rather for that they had formerly restrayned as prisoner our man sent to the Towne about businesse, as also their iueritie in proclayming the losse of their noses, to any that should bring downe any provision to vs, whereby they shewed their desire to force vs away by Famine. This day the Darling was againe haled off to her moring.

Chiefe Commodities for India.

The eighth, Mockrib Chan and Hoia Nassan, came downe with a great traine to the water-side, and at the same time, to put ieaousie of their ill dealing from vs, brought downe some fortie or fiftie packes of Indian Clothes, and so increasing to the number of a hundred and eight packes, yet the sight thereof could not moue all of vs to beleue, they meant faithfully to deale with vs: but they having extraordinary desire to our Quick-siluer, and Vermilion, and Mockrib Chan to our Veluet, though they made smallest shew thereof. Yet for that it could not be had by it selfe, without our Lead and other Commodities, by which meanes they condescended to deale at present for our Lead also, deferring all the rest till some other time, but would not deale with vs otherwise, but so as they would gaine fiftie in the hundred at their owne doores without further aduenture, and ours which we haue brought so farre, wee could not draw them but to such poore rates, as will beare but a small part of our freight hither.

The ninth in the morning, Sir Henry Middleton went on shoare, not hauing any sure confidence in their performance, where in words they continued firme. Wherefore the Trades Increase began to land her Lead; somewhat before noone was brought vnto Mockrib Chan, a Letter from the great Mogull, whereat he was so dampe, that scarce any words was to be gotten from him, but presently after dinner he departed, but Hoia Nassan, and others continued, as they pretended, to effect the businesse: this night before the Generall went aboard, being still in suspicion of inconstant dealing, and seeing the great paines and toile in landing our Lead, and what intollerable disgust or discontent would arise among our people, if by shrinking from their words we be forsaken againe to imbarque the same, sent some of our Factors with the Brokers to Hoia Nassan to signifie the same, and before further trouble to know his full resolution: who returned him answere, he should not need to doubt, for they would haue it all: whereby without further doubt, the greatest expedition was vsed for landing thereof. This day in the euening, William Johnson Sailer of the Darling, and Iohn Couerdale Trumpetter of the Admirall, ran away to the Portugall Armie, and Iohn Pattison to Surat.

The tenth, there came aboard to see our ships the Gouvernour of Surat, and Coia Arsan Alle, being departed from the Pepper-Corne with the Generall aboard the Admirall, in the effing this sudden disturbance happened, which crost the content on all sides, for Iohn Iourdain came speedily from the shoare to informe the Generall, how that Hoia Nassan hauing already the Veluet and some other things which he most desired, was now in a great fit of wrangling, so that hee thought no good for vs would be done: for he had both made them giue ouer weighing the lead; and also sent for his Oxen to draw away the Carts with the packes of Indian Clothes: whereat the Generall grew so impatient, that he presently made slay (to inforce performance) both of the Gouvernour and Coia Arsan Ally, to their great trouble of minde, but after some little pause, the Generall caused them to be imbarqued with him selfe in the Frigat, and came in calling vpon me in the Pepper-Corne, to impart what he had done, wishing my opinion, who seeing him in the right way, saw no cause to counsell him to reuoke the same, but rather for securitie of our businesse to perseuere: from me he departed to the shoare with a reasonable Guard, and gaue Hoia Nassan knowledge, what his crosse dealing had forced him vnto, and that since the Gouvernour of Surat came in curtesie, and the businesse concernes him not; wisht himselfe to come aboard and take his place, and he would dismisst the Gouvernour; who seeing no other remedie, with a grimme looke and fowre countenance came into the Frigat, and the Gouvernour to his great content was dismisst, and they were brought to remayne with me in the Pepper-Corne.

The eleuenth, we continued landing of our Lead, and had so lightned the Admirall, that at high-water the night following to our great content, we brought her in ouer the barre, also hauing now all our strength together where our businesse lay.

The twelfth in the morning, Sir Henry Middleton sent for the Gentlemen Prisoners to bee brought aboard his greater ship; which Hoia Nassan for long time obstinately refused, till I had order to send him perforce: hee being there, in regard of the hastening of our businesse it was thought fit to enlarge them both, leauing other pledges in their places, as for Coia Nassan was

Coia

Coia Illardin his sonne in law, and one of his sonnes : and for Hoia Arsan Alle, two Persian Merchants. And for pledges on our side to remayne with them in their Tents, were John Williams and Henry Boothby : this night were opened, counted, sorted and agreed for fortie packes of Indian Clothes.

The fifteenth, there came to vs two Portugall youthes from the Armie, one of them beeing the Captaine Maio his Page. Portugall Fugitives.

The sixteenth, in the morning wee saw to the Southward five Portugall Colours displayed : whereof the Generall vnderstanding presently by his command, were landed some two hundred armed men with Shot and Pikes to meet them : which they perceiuing retyred, in which pursuit being neere vnto our Swally, wee met with Hoia Nassan and all his troupes, who was coming downe with some twentie packes more of Indian Clothes : he informed the Generall that the Portugals were already gotten ouer the muddie Creekes, and were neere vnto their Frigats, wherefore the Generall gaue ouer his pursuite, and returned aboard. Portugall's bravery and flight.

The nineteenth, Peter Rosemary (a Portugall whom wee brought out of England) a Sailer of the Trade, being appointed as Guardian to attend on (or looke to) Francisco Consalues, they both ran away to the Armie.

The seuen and twentieth, there came from Surat Hoia Nassan, to see if hee could buy any of our Clothes and other Commodities : but not agreeing vpon the prices, hee againe departed. This day by a lew from Masulipatan, the Generall receiued a Letter from one Peter Floris (a Dutchman employed by the Company of Merchants of London trading to East-India, who had there settled a Factorie) certifying the Generall of three ships, which were coming out of England, whereof one was to goe into Red-Sea : which was very vnpleasing to the Generall and vs all, in regard of the danger we suspected they should fall into.

The thirtieth, Master Iourdain and Master Fraine were sent to Surat, to agree for some more Indian Clothes, as also to vrge the putting off of some of our Commodities. The same day the Generall receiued a Letter from Captaine Hawkins at Cambaya, signifying that his determination was with all his household to take his passage to Goa, and from thence to England ; But Sir Henry Middleton conceiting, if hee once get to Goa, his goods would stop his passage to England, if not shorten his life, by the same Messenger did most earnestly and friendly aduise him to the contrarie, and inuited him to take his passage with vs into England : also our people at Surat informed the Generall that Mockrib Chan made shew to bee willing that wee should leaue a Factorie for venting of the remayne of our Commodities : which kept vs sometime in hope, but afterwards vanished by inconstancie.

The eight of Ianuarie, Nicholas Uphlet came downe from Cambaya, with Letters from Captaine Hawkins to the Generall, certifying him that by reason of his former Letter, hee determined to come downe to our shippes, and take his passage with vs. January 8.

The sixe and twentieth, Captaine Sharpeigh, Master Fraine, Captaine Hawkins with all his goods and Family, and the rest (Nicholas Uphlet excepted) came downe, whom the Generall with a Troupe of some two hundred men, went some three mile vp into the Land to meete and guard them from the Portugalls, whose Armie was not farre off. Capt. Hawkins.

The seuen and twentieth, the Generall sent John Williams to Surat, to know their resolutions for leauing a Factory there.

The nine and twentieth, John Williams returned with an absolute denyall of hauing any further dealing with our Nation, but were all commanded to bee gone out of Surat, not permitting them to stay to receiue Debts there owing them : wherefore they sent to know the Generals pleasure, whether they should presently come downe, or vñe meanes to delay the time, to see whether their determination therein would alter.

The thirtieth, Sir Henry Middleton writ to our people at Surat, speedily to repaire downe to our ships.

The one and thirtieth, according to the Generals direction, all our people came downe from Surat with all their goods.

The sixth of February, there passed by towards Cambaya, a great Caphala, or Fleet of neere five hundred saile of Portugall Frigats. February, 6.

The ninth in the morning, vpon the top of a high water, the Admirall warped out ouer the Barre, and anchored in the Offing. This day about noone came downe from Cambaya, Nicholas Uphlet, Captaine Hawkins seruant, whom they had left behind in pawne, as afore-said, for whom we stayed since the last of Ianuarie, what time our Merchants were expelled Surat. This day in the euening we set saile, and went out ouer the Barre, and anchored in eight fathome, some mile in the Offing thereof, neere vnto the Admirall.

¶ V.

Their departure to Dabull, Socatora, the Red-sea, and Acts there.

WE departed the ninth, hauing continued heere the space of an hundred and thirtie eight dayes, in which we sustayned many and sundry abuses by delayes, breach of promises, which holding the Countrey people from trading with vs, and hauing exchanged a few Commodities at very hard and vnprofitable Rates, which holding further trade, disappointing vs of setting a Factorie, which holding some debts formerly, and commanding our Merchants out of their Towne, and our ships to be gone. The cause mouing them to hasten vs away (as we afterwards vnderstood) grew thus at the instant of their conference, whether fit for them to permit vs to leaue a Factorie, to vent the rest of our goods brought for that place there or no; was deliuered into the hands of Mockrib Chan a Letter from Dangie, a Bannian in Cambaya, by the instigation of the Iesuites there; aduising them, that if they gaue place to the English in Surat, the Portugals would come with force, and burne all their Sea Townes, and make spoile of all the ships they should send abroad, the contents whereof was applauded of most; all agreeing it to be their best course, and thereupon dismiss our people, as aforesaid.

The threatenings of the Portugalls.Observations of the Tides, &c. at Smally.

This Road of Smally within the Bar lyeth in twentie degrees, fiftie five minutes North latitude, the variation in sixteene degrees and fortie minutes Westerly, wee found the water highed more on the full Moone spring then on the change, by foure foot: the one beeing foure and twentie foot, the other twentie, the night tydes higher then the day tyde by three foot, according as the wind blew, the Coast or Strand within the Barre lyeth neere South and North by the Compasse, which the variation allowed is North by East, and halfe East, and South by West halfe West, also at West South-west halfe South, and East North-east halfe North, the Moone makes a full Sea.

The tenth, the Generall stayd to dispatch his businesse with Iaddow and Narran the Brokers: also we tooke out of a Frigat bound to the Rehemy at Goga, certaine Candies of Rice and Pitch, giuing them Bills to be paid at Surat by two men, who were indebted to Captaine Hawkins account.

They depart from Surat.

The eleuenth, in the morning at fixe a clocke at high water wee set saile, and at two in the afternoone we anchored in the South Road at the Barre foot of Surat, by a new ship called the Hassany, bound with the Rehemy vnto the Red-Sea: also we tooke out of another Frigat certaine Charcole, assigning them to be paid at Surat in manner aforesaid.

The fourteenth, at one of the clocke in the morning we met with a Banke, whereon wee had from sixteene to thirteene fathomes, and suddenly againe to twentie and twenty two fathomes, after which we haled vp by a wind West by South some three leagues: from fixe a clocke in the morning to noone South South-east some nine leagues, the wind at North, our depths twentie, nineteene, seuentene, and sixteene fathomes, what time wee were some tenne leagues off the Land West-wards in North latitude, nineteene degrees, thirtie seuen minutes. At one a clocke we past by three Mallaber ships bound for Surat, laden with Cayro (or stuffe to make Ropes) & Coco Nuts, who there rid in fourteene fathome, nine leagues off from the land to spend the ebbe, and South-east from seuen other ships neere in towards the mountaines, from noone to mid-night, we went South South-east some five leagues, the most part of this night being calme.

The fifteenth to noone South South-east fixe leagues, the wind Northerly a very easie gale: this night we heard diuers great Ordnance shoot off ashoare: this night our passage hath beene in fifteene, thirteene, and twelue fathome, this land is mountainous mixt with diuers Vallies like harbours or entries. Our latitude at noone was nineteene degrees, foure minutes. At Sunne-set, wee were three leagues off the shore, our passage in betweene twelue and fixe fathome. From noone to mid-night our course was South by East eleuen leagues, the winde Northerly.

The sixteenth to noone South by East twelue houres, eleuen leagues, the wind Northerly, the land high and full of harbor like Bayes all alongst in fine shoalading in five fathome, and foure miles of the land, and nine fathome three leagues of our latitude eightene degrees, one minute. This day at Sun-setting we anchored in seuen fathome thwart of the Barre of Dabull, to which Towne the General went in hope to sel some of his English Commodities, or (as it were) to shoot another Arrow after diuers formerly lost.

Variation 15.34

The seuenteenth, in the morning, the Generall in the Frigat went in neere the Barre to discover the depths and so aboard againe, which was five fathome very neere the South point of the entrance, but very little further North-wards towards the middle of the entrance but two fathome: the latitude of this South point is seuentene degrees, thirtie foure minutes, the variation is fifteene degrees thirtie foure minutes.

This

This day about noone came off two Boates from the Gouvernour, the one with a present, which was three Bullockes, certaine Sheepe, Plantans, Bread, and water Millions: in the other Boate came the Messengers, which were sent to know what we were, and our businesse, though they before did imagine who we were, partly by our acquaintance with them at Moha; as also their hearing of our being at Surat. The Message, according to the Indian manner, was delivered with many complements and promise of all friendship, and further that they would buy our goods for money, and give vs Indico, Cloth and Pepper for the same, (which was more then we could expect, or they had order to grant) for what Indico they had with Cloth and Pepper was presently to be employed in their owne ships now bound for the Red Sea; vpon these kind promises the Generall sent Merchants ashore both with a present to the Gouvernour, and with Mufres of English Clothes, and other of our Commodities: but of all, except some little Broad-cloth and Kerfies of our best colours, as Stanimels, Poppiniay greene, and other light colours, and lead in barres, we could sell none: for our Red Lead, the Gouvernour bought and sent it aboard againe: and somewhat after the manner we found at Surat, the Gouvernour dealt double with vs; granting free leaue to sell, yet vnder-hand had men in waite to restrayne or teare away such as came to buy; so that no man buying made his owne price, for what hee desired to buy: for Corne and other prouision and water to be brought aboard for money, wee had with all fauour, and at last we had a Cable of eightene inches, and ninetie sixe fathome of the Countrey stuffe, worth eight pound sterling, for one of the Darlings Anchors. Now, whether such kindnesse as we receiued were out of their good disposition to strangers, or not, it is hard to iudge, they hauing presently blowne abroad and intimated at Moha, that we endeauour to right what wrongs any should impose vpon vs, and therefore might seeme to make the best shewes vnto vs.

Dabul, double dealing.

The sixe and twentjeth, in the after-noon, besides diuers Mallaber Merchants ships which anchored by vs, we saw also in the Offing a great Ship and Frigat, to whom, two houres before night the Generall sent off the Darling to bring in the said ship: but doubting the missing of her by night, as also the smalnesse of his force to command her, when night came sent off mee also in the Pepper-Corne, with his Frigat well manned to attend vpon mee in regard of the Frigat in her companie. About mid-night, though very darke, I gat sight of her riding at Anchor, sending our Frigat to the other running away, and the great ship getting sight of vs, was come to saile, but being commanded to strike saile, did it, also their Captaine and Principals to come aboard me, he sent a Souldier and two more in a Canon, who excused the Captaine to be aged and vnweldie, and that their great Boat was so pestered with lading, that they could not row her; wherefore, though vnwillingly, I was forced to send my owne Pinnasse for some of the principall Merchants and Souldiers, but with such streight direction to my Cock-swaine, that vpon paine of great punishment he should permit none to goe into her, to the end to preuent spoyle. I intended Sir Henry Middleton should be the first Englishman should enter her: meane-while our Frigat with the other which they had taken, returned to vs; and to my grieve gaue knowledge that they killed one of the Portugals in flying. Now hauing diuers of their men aboard me, I gaue direction to stand in for Dabul: but by reason of their ill sterage, which we imputed to be done of purpose, and for that with all our sayles wee could not fetch them vp being gotten a little a-head vs, and fearing they might mend their sayling, and get from vs, I caused them to be called vnto to take in their sayles, and anchored till day, which directions giuen and our Anchors readie to let fall, I departed into my Cabin to examine some of the Portugals, what their ship was laden withall: meane-while my Master pretended to doubt whether the shippe were anchored or no, without any order or knowledge sent my Pinnasse aboard, wherein went one of his mates, more greedie of pray then carefull of credit, who did not onely goe into the ship, but there fell to rifling, who though often called made no haste away, till his owne pleasure was fulfilled. Against whose comming aboard, I caused Thomas Glenham, John Staughten, George Cockam and Robert Mico the Purser, to bee readie at the Ladder with a Lanthorne and Candle to search them one by one (in the Portugals light aboard our ship) and turned them out of the Boate: which being done, and the things throwne into the Boats sterne by Thomas Glenham, John Staughten, and Robert Mico, I sent againe aboard the Portugall ships, willing the Purser to tel them aboard if there were any thing else wanting, they that had bene aboard without my direction should make it good: but by reason that Thomas Loue, George Ieff and Matthew Bragge, three Masters Mates of the Admirall lately dead, the Frigat was now commanded by one Terrie a seruant to Giles Thornton, who before our Boat gat aboard againe, notwithstanding they were commanded to the contrarie, went aboard with our Frigat, whereas, like disgouerned pilfering people, they ranne all into the ship, not forbearing to breake open Chests, tumble into the Frigat, and make spoyle of all things that liked them, forbearing no ill language to such as I had sent to restraine them. But the euill being done, it was too late to vndoe it: and though it bred in me much trouble and present discontent; yet I vsed the best meanes I had left to cure the same, which was, I desired William Pemberton who with the Darling came newly to vs, to make the more haste into the Road, and to informe the Generall of our peoples misbehaviour, to the end

before they should haue meates to conuey away or remoue the same care, might bee taken for bringing off, all things to light, which the Generall no longer vnderstood; but at one a clocke when we all anchored by him, commanded both the Frigats wherein our people were, to anchor of and now of them: to come aboard him; and Sir Henry Middleton and my selfe with the Captaine, and Merchants of the Portugall ship, went first to our owne Frigat, and then to the Frigat newly taken wherein our people were; and had euery one narrowly searcht; and all things taken from them, and they turned one by one out, as they were searcht, of all what was found belonging to the Frigat was there left, and then our small Frigat was by our Pinnasse towed aboard the Portugall ship, where all the rest was deliuered for the vse of such to whom it belonged. This ship belonged to Cochin, called the Saint Nicholas, of burthen some three hundred tunnes, the Captaine named John, being bound to Chaul, their lading consist, was principally 10 dried Coco Nuts, some Tinne, blacke Sugar, and Racke Nuts, ten Fats of China Dishes, certaine Bags of Allome, and some small quantitie of China Dishes, and some Cayro, or ball Ropes. We made all inquisition possible for their bills of lading; but none they would bee knowne of, which put vs to great trouble to find out, the little we had from them, which were certaine balls of China raw silke, some small quantitie of Cloues, and some few Cannastres, and three Chests of Cinamon, and some Waxe to make vs Candles: all which was as it were but a mite in comparison of the dammages done vs by the Portugalls.

The Frigat belonged to Chaul and bound to Oman, of burthen sixtie tunnes, her lading, Rice and Tamarin, out of whom we tooke some bagges of Rice for our provision: this businesse continued vs in doing euery day somewhat till the first of March. By this Frigat the Generall dispatched away all such Portugalls as came to him from the Armie at Surat, to wit Lorenzo de Cam- 20
po, and his consort; the fellow taken in the Frigat and the two Boyes, that came away from their Masters, giuing them money in their Purses, according to their seuerall qualitie; besides, the apparell formerly made for either of them vnto the Merchants, that ought the most part of the Silke, the Generall gaue a fine Broad-cloth, and to the Captaine of the Frigat, from whom wee tooke the Rice, a fine Kerse. Also this day the Gouverneur sent to giue the Generall knowledge, that the next day or night following the great Caphala, which pass by vs the sixth of February afore-said, towards Cambaya, would either the next day or night following againe passe by towards Goa: which howsoeuer they pass either by night or day we saw them not.

Consultation.

The fourth, the fore-said businesse being effected, the Generall called vs all to consultation 30
what was best to be done, shewing his desire to goe to the Barre of Goa; there to demand of the Vice-Roy restitution of our wrongs done to vs and our Nation by the Portugalls, to the end if that he refused to doe it, we might the better haue warrant, to right our selues vpon any Portugalls, which by our endenours wee might meete withall; which demand of the most was thought reasonable, but not fit in regard of the shortnesse of time and varietie of delayes, and treacherous plots we were to expect, to our further abusing; wherefore it was concluded and agreed vpon, for that the time not yet seruing to go to the South-wards about the Cape Commerin; Againe, to returne to the Red-Sea in this vacant time to see, if we can get away these goods lying vpon our hands in a manner holten for lost, to recover some of our former losses from the subjects of the great Mogoll; as also to croise the Turkes at Moha and Aden, for the mischief 40 they haue formerly done vs; and principally for to rescue, defend or recover that ship sent out by the Companie, the yere after our coming out, which wee heard of from Masulipatan, which we haue great doubt of; lest she befallen into like mishap as we did in the Red-Sea, but for that this day the wind serued not to set saile, we deferred it to the fift day in the morning.

They depart
from Dabull urne to ed sea
againe.

The fifth, at fixe a clocke in the morning, we all set saile from Dabull standing away North North-west alongst the Coast, the Generall wishing to see the shippe of Cochin, neere vnto her Harbor of Chaul, cleere of danger by the Mallabars their enemies, and at Sun-set we anchored in seuen fathome, some league distant from the land; distant from Dabull some fixe leagues, and short of Chaul some nine leagues; the wind at South, and so veering to the West-wards.

From the Coast of India to Socatera, wee this time daily found our ship further to the South- 50 wards, then by our course we could expect, and especially when we were thwart of the Gulfe, or entrance of Sinus Persicus, which I imagined to be some current setting thence to the South-wards.

The twentieth of March, the Generall despatched away William Pemberton (in the Darling) before to Socatera, to inquire of our ship bound for the Red-Sea and India, which wee heard of from Masulipatan.

The Easter end of Socatera.

The foure and twentieth, at tenne a clocke in the morning wee descryed land bearing West South-west, some eight leagues distant, being the Easter end of Socatera, being high land, ha- 60
uing foure white clifles or salid hils; the Norther part whereof by reason of the hazinesse wee could not discerne.

The five and twentieth of March, at Sunne-setting, the point of Delisha bore South-east foure leagues distant.

The sixe and twentieth at fixe a clocke in the morning it fell calme, and the current setting North.

Northward vpon the rocke, whereby we were forced to anchor in foure and twentie fathome water, on the South South-east side of the rocke (which is Saboyna) some halfe a mile distant; at this rocke is great store of fish. Betweene nine and ten a clocke, we againe set saile, standing away Westwards of Cape Guardafui, the wind being at South. The rocke Saboyna.

The seuen and twentieth, about foure a clocke in the morning, the rockes Northwards of Abba del Curia, thence distant some three leagues and a halfe, bore North of vs some halfe a mile off, which is by estimation twentie leagues West by South, from the Wester point of Socatora: our depthes we there found was sixteene, seuentene and eightene fathome; day being come, wee saw the Island of Abba del Curia.

10 The eight and twentieth in the morning, at sixe a clocke, the Cape Guardafui bore South-east seuen leagues distant, and Mount Felix West halfe a point Southerly nine leagues: wee came within foure mile of the land, and the depthes fortie, nine and thirtie; thirtie, seuen and twentie, three and twentie, one and twentie, eightene and fiftene fathome, and about three afternoone, in a fret of wind at East North-east, wee anchored in rough ground in seuen fathome a mile and halfe Westwards from Mount Felix; all which Coast the Generall coasted along in his Frigate, and tooke in, and brought along three of the Countrie people, which he gaue letters vnto, to be deliuered vnto the Darling, if shee came heere after our departure, and so put them a shoate: they informed the Generall, that foure dayes since there passed by towards the Red-sea foure Indian ships.

20 The nine and twentieth in the morning, the Generall sent letters to other people on land, to be deliuered to the Darling: the countrie people brought downe to our men to sell, some store of sheepe, small Goats; with some small frailes of Olibanum and gumme Arabick, all which they had at reasonable rates; the people still taking vs to be Mahumetans, and not Christians, or (as they call them) Franges, whom they fauour not, so the Boat returning aboard about noone, the Generall thought good no longer to stay for the Darling; wherefore we set saile, standing away towards Aden in Arabia Felix. At foure a clocke in the after-noon Mount Felix bore East by South halfe a degree South, some eight leagues distant. Franges. The Western Christians in the Eastern world are since that Expedition of Godfrey of Bullen, called Franks, because the principall of that armie were French in Nation or original.

From noone the thirtieth day, to one a clocke in the morning, the one and thirtieth day, thirtene houres, North-west eighteen leagues, the wind at North North-east; this day after-noon we descried the land of Arabia Felix.

30 The one and thirtieth in the morning, at one a clocke, being neare the land, we cast about to the Southwards, to spend time till day; at fise a clocke in the morning, wee cast about againe North-west to landwards: from sixe a clocke in the morning to sixe after-noon twelue houres, we stood alongst the Coast West by South, and West South-west thirteene leagues, alwayes keeping within fise mile of the land, in depthes betweene eightene and thirtie fathom, from sixe a clocke to midnight, sixe houres West South-west sixe leagues.

The first of Aprill, from midnight till sixe a clocke, West by South, halfe South fise leagues, at which time, by estimation, we were eightene leagues short of Aden: This day the Generall sent for me, Master Lawse and Master Fowler, to conferre of our separation: at length it was concluded, that I in the Pepper-Corne should continue neare, or before the Towne of Aden, to keepe that no Indian ship should arriue or stay there, but to put them by towards the Red-sea, and to that end I receiued a direction or commission from my Generall, who was with all expedition with the Trades-Increase to repaire to the Bab, or doore of the Red-sea, both for safetie of the Companies ship, whereof we had intelligence from Masulpatan, to be following our tract, both to the Red-sea and India, euen into the mouthes of the Wolues, which by Gods mercy we haue escaped, as also there at once to take reuenge, both of the Turkes, and subiects of the great Mogoll, for the wrongs done to our King and Countrie. Aprill 1.

The second, from midnight to sixe a clocke, West South-west three leagues, little wind at East; about eight a clocke in the morning, what time we should haue been separated, some eight leagues Eastward of Aden, we found at an anchor the Darling, who had got before vs, by reason of our lingering for her foure dayes, who had done their businesse at Socatora, and were againe departed thence, before we past it, and gate aday before vs, by the Saboyna, Abba del Curia, and Mount Felix, where we lingered for them: they brought from thence the copie of a letter left with the King, by Captaine John Saris, Commander of the ships of our Indian Company, to wit, the Cloue, the Hector, and the Thomas, signifying, that notwithstanding by Sir *Henry Middleton*s letter, he vnderstood of the villanies there done to vs, he with his said ships was gone into the Red-sea. Immediately the Generall with the Trades-Increase and Darling, departed towards the Bab, leauing me in the Pepper-Corne at an anchor, some eight leagues Eastwards of Aden, according to former determination. Generall Saris.

60 The third at one a clocke in the morning, we set saile, and stood to the Southwards, the better to discouer, and so all the day vnder saile, we kept vp to windwards of Aden: in the morning we saw three saile bound for Aden, but stood away from vs, that wee could not come neare them all night, for that it blew hard, we did not anchor, but lay a hull to trie our drift, which I found in ten houres to be three leagues, so running further in; and the fourth day morning, about seuen a clocke, I anchored in twelue fathome, some league or foure mile from the Towne of Aden.

A ship of Callicut.

The twelfth in the morning, a little after midnight, we set saile to crosse her, and at day-light, we descried her riding at an anchor some three mile Southward of vs, with whom presently we trimmed our sailes to stand withall, and shee presently was vnder saile, and stood in with Aden. Betweene nine and ten a clocke, by shooting off a Peece at them, they came roome, and stricke their top-sailes, and sent in their Boat to vs: they told vs they were of Callicut, and bound to Aden, and their ship belonged to the Samorin, or King of Callicut, from whence they had bene fortie dayes in comming, they came neare Socatora, and toucht at Mount Felix, where they saw the Generals letter left there for the Darling, where also they saw a ship of Dabul, which came from Achin. The Nobuda of this ship is called Abraham Abba Zeinda, their ships Cargazon, according to their information was as followeth: Tamerick three tunnes, Rice three and twentie hundred kintals, Iagara or bowne Sugar forty bahars, Cardaminus seuen bahars, Ginger drie foure kintals and an halfe, Pepper a tun and a halfe, Cotton one and thirtie packs, each pack containing five or six maunds; shee had in her threefore and fiftene persons, for the vses following: twentie to bale water, and other businesse below, eight for the Helme, foure for top and yard, and other businesse aloft; twentie Boyes for dressing seuerall mens victuals; the rest Merchants and Pilgrims: this ship was of burthen an hundred and fortie tunnes: thus hauing to the vtmost examined them, and they being of a place, whose Inhabitants neuer wronged our Nation; therefore without diminishing any part of their goods, but only, with their good wills, two tunnes of water for our need, and so I dismist them; though to the great disturbance of their mindes, when by no meanes I would permit them to goe into Aden to make sale of their commodities; which if they did once attempt, I threatned them I would sinke their ship, and leaue only their Boat to saue their liues; yet their vnwillingnesse to depart made mee adde many more threatnings, that if they hastened not away before I see any other saile to giue chase vnto, I must then be forced to sinke their ship, to be sure to keepe them from the Turkes our enemies; whereby they put themselves to saile, and stood somewhat off the land, but to lee-wards; so to our disturbance, wee all day and night kept off and on vnder saile, for feare lest in the night they should slippe into Aden.

Aprill.

Note that any ship wee heere saw, before wee could come to speake with them, there hath been aduise sent from the Gouvernor of the Towne to informe them of vs; and when we had the Mallabar vnder command, the Gouvernor sent a Boat aboard with diuers Arabs, and two Turkes souldiers of the Towne, which had formerly been instruments to Abdrabman Aga, to bind and torture our men then in their hands, which now seeing the men they vsed ill, brought them in no small doubt what their vsage now should be, as their guiltie conscience pricked them, whom I suppose came as spies to see what wee did, brought some fruit to sell: at the first sight of our men, whom they knew, they would faine haue put off their Boat and been gone, but I would not permit them; causing them to be put in mind of their behauiour formerly towards our people in their hand, and when without any euill speech giuen them, I thought them sufficiently by their own minds terrified, I caused to be told them, that they should see how far our Nation differeth from the rigour of iniurious Turkes, which most cruelly handled our men without offence, whom by all faire promises they betrayed; and that I yet knowing them to haue exercised their forces in abusing my men, yet notwithstanding I would without discourtesie or harme, dismisle or send them away; who presently departed, with many promises the next day to bring vs more refreshing: the next morning they sent vs a boat with good fish, and promising to come anon with better prouisions, which they were prouiding: but by reason of my setting saile, and standing off, to put the Malabar to lee-ward towards the Red-sea, I was too farre for them to row vnto me, which ship, if shee had stayed, might haue been occasion that the Aga might haue permitted them to performe their promises to vs.

A ship of Pormean.

Our men vnlade this ship.

The fourteenth in the morning, the wind at East, wee descried another ship of like burthen, bound also for Aden, which about ten a clocke we forced to anchor: I sent aboard to search her, and to bring away some of her men, while I caused my Boat to bee hoysed out; vnderstanding they were of Pormean, a Towne not farre from Cutts-nagone, being tributaries to the great Mogoll, who despised our King, and abused our Nation; the Nobuda being a Bannian, I with this ship being at an anchor some two miles from Aden, our enemies, and finding by the Mallabars working the day before, that if any other saile, of neuer so much importance, should approach this place, before I could finish my businesse with this, I must either leaue the one or the other to their owne will; for which respect I was more carefull to send to search what shee had in her, by my owne people, then to examine them belonging to her, what was in her. So with great labour in romaging before the darknesse of the night ouer-tooke vs, we had out of her fourtene packes of course Duttie, of sixe corges a packe; and sixe and thirtie Ballets, containing some six and thirtie corges of Dutties course; one small Ballet of Candekins mill (or small blew pieces of Callico) with some thirtie or more Bastas white, a little Butter and Lamp-oyle, which was all fit for vs, yet discovered the rest of her loading, being packes of Cotton-wooll, as we tearme it, which the next next day we thought further to examine. This day Maharim Aga of Aden, sent me a present of Henne-egges, Limes and Plantans, which I would not looke at, as to receiue as a Present, but by the messenger I sent the Aga word, that the varitie of iniuries done vnto my friends and Nation heere the last yeere, hath constrained my present approach, to do my Nation and my selfe what right I may, to the disturbance of the Turkes. And as my comming hither was not to deserue any fauour from them; so my meaning was to forbear to receiue any of their dissembling turtlesies: for since they cut our throats when we came to them in friendship, what may we expect from them now, when we come in hate and dispight of the Turkes of all these parts: but in regard it was sent, my people should giue them for their owne vse, so much as the things were worth; also there came aboard a fisher-boat, bringing good store of fresh-fish, which I caused to be bought for our suppers, alwayes making the bringer to take part of what hee brought.

Fear of poisoning.

The sixe and twentieth in the morning, we discried a saile to the Southwards of Aden, plying to the Eastwards, to whom in the after-noon I sent my Pinnasse, which brought her in harte vnto vs, shee being a Ielba of Shaher bound home, laden with Graine and other commodities, as Opium and others, also diuers Pilgrims from Mecca were passengers in her bound home.

The seuen and twentieth in the morning, we saw a Ielba plying to the Eastwards betweene vs and the shoare, wherefore I sent my Pinnasse to fetch her off, whom I found to bee the same Ielba of Shaher, that had passed by vs the seenteenth and two and twentieth of this present, as aforesaid: of them for a triall we bought nine pound and a halfe of Opium, and so againe dismissed them.

The eight and twentieth in the morning, we set saile, plying off and on to windwards of Aden, with the wind at East. The nine and twentieth, still vnder saile, as aforesaid in the after-noon, we discried two sailes standing towards Aden, vnto whom in the euening I sent off my Pinnasse well mand, to bring them in neare vnto the ship, which by foure a clocke the thirtieth day was effected; they both belonged to a place on the Abaxin Coast, called Bander Zeada, the one of them laden only with Mats; the other with some Mats, and threescore and eight sheepe with great rumpes, which we bought of them, and so dismissed them, who presently set saile and went in vnto Aden, the wind at East South-east, East and North-east.

Bander Zeada place on the Abaxin Coast.

The eighth, with an easie gale of wind at North-east by East, we continued, plying towards the Bab: At tenne a clocke, we discried the land on the Abaxin Coast side, which at first shewed like an Island, but approaching a little neerer, we plainly perceiued it to be the maine land: from thence we steered away North-west towards the Bab, which by estimation was some tenne leagues distant, which at neere foure in the afternoone we discried, where wee lay lingering off and on to spend the night. Day light appearing, we stood in towards the Bab, where in the entrance of the Bab, we discried a small saile a sterne of vs, comming into the straight; wherefore I stricke my top-sailes to stay for her, and sent off my Pinnasse to her, who comming vp with vs againe, brought the Nobuds and Mulim aboard, whom I examined, and found them to bee subiects to the great Mogol; they belonged to a place called Larree, situate at the mouth of the Riuer of Zinde: with them I lust vp into a bay on the East side, and anchored in seuen fathome; I

May.

40 sending my Merchants to search what she was laden with, who found diuers packs and fardels of cloath, packs and fardels of feedes of diuers sorts, leather, iarres of Butter, and oyle (whereof some they eate, and some they burne in lamps) a great quantitie: and since for want of water, she hauing many Passengers. I could not fitly keepe her with me, being vncertaine of wind I resolved to take out of her the likeliest packs of Indian Cloath to serue for our turnes, with some Butter and Oyle for our needfull vses, as by the Purfers and Factors notes appeare, and so dispatched them to Mohs. Into which busineis before we could well make an entrie, about three a clocke in the afternoone, I discried opening the East land of the straights, a ship of two hundred Tunnes; and immediately following her an huge saile, whose maine yard was fortie three yards long. At sight of which ship (they being very neere before the land permitted me to see them)

A ship of 200 Tunnes.

50 by what time I had gotten my people aboard, fue onely excepted, which I left armed to keepe the ship of Larree, had gotten vp my anchor, and was come to saile; but the great shippe though short of me, yet heeing in a good streame, and a fresh gale, and I in a Bay had a eddy and faint gale, she got an end, & had somewhat ouer-reacht me before I could come to crosse them, so that I was brought to a sterne chase, and being come neere her, by her masts and tops wee knew her to be the Mahomedy of Dabul our friend, which we could expect no good by; yet knowing the pride of the Captaine, I would very gladly haue commanded ouer him, for that he would neuer, neither formerly in the Road of Moha, nor yet at Dabul come to visit Sir Henry Middleton, but I found he reacht from me, wherefore I gaue them one shot and stood with the other ship, who seeing vs stand with the great shippe stricke a Hull thinking to lose vs by the darknesse of the night now approaching: I tooke her to be a ship of Diu, but when we came to them, they told vs they were of Cuts-nagone, a place not farre from the riuer of Zinde, her lading Cotton-wool, some few packs of Indian cloth, some Butter and Oyle: hauing gotten some of her principal men aboard me, I caused them to edge vp with me into shoale water on the Arab Coast, where by lights I endeauoured to find out my fue men in the Larree ship; and at midnight we anchored in twelve fathome, foure leagues within the Bab; where the next two dayes we tooke out of the Larree ship, sixtie sixe fardels of Indian Cloath (which for that we were otherwise furnished for all our English Commodities, and needed it not, was redeliuered to them againe, with part of the Butter and Oyle; onely eight Corges of Bastas, for which they had content.) These things beeing taken out, I put into them the Passengers and Pilgrims of the Cottonship, they vsing their best diligence as the wind would permit them to halten to Moha, I sending by them a letter to Sir Henry Middleton, if they should finde him in the Roade: but before they departed, we seeing a Jelba comming from the Bab, and for that the wind was not good, they sent away their Canoa, rowing before, and hastning to vs, who informed me, his Jelba belonged to Bender Zeda, a Towne on the Abaxin Coast, halfe a dayes iourney West-ward from Bender Cassum, who was bound to Moha with his Boat full of Mats, who going a land as he passed the Bab, was told by one that had a letter for me, that my Countrey-men whom I looked for were gone to Assab, with eight or nine Indian ships, but he that had the letter would not send it by him, expecting a reward, if by the wind I should be put backe to the Bab. I now knowing where my Generall was, this afternoone set saile; but the wind not fauouring me we anchored againe.

¶ V I.

Their barter with the Indian ships, and departure to Sumatra.

The Rebemy a ship of 1500.
Tunnes.

He next day in the morning, Sir Henry Middleton sent Giles Thorntons his Master, to certifie me how glad he was of my comming; and to let me know that he had at command all the desired ships of India, as the Rebemy of burthen fifteene hundred tunnes, the Hassany of sixe hundred, the Mahumady of one hundred and fiftie tunnes of Swat, the Sallamite of foure hundred and fiftie tunnes, the Cadree of two hundred tunnes, the Azum Cany, the Sabandar of Moha his ship of two hundred tunnes all of Diu, besides three Mallabar ships; the Cadree of Dabul of foure hundred tunnes, and a great ship of Cananor. He further informed me, that before I could get into the Road, the Generall with all the pride of his people, and Captaine Saris with his people, would be gone on shoare to receiue the King of Rabita, who was come with his Nobilitie and Guard, to see and visit the Generall, and new come Generall. The day beeing neere spent, Sir Henry Middleton and Captaine Saris left the King in his Tent, and went aboard the Tradef-increase to supper, where I vnderstood of a contract made betweene them first at the Bab, wherein it was agreed, here to put off all our English goods, for such Indian wares, as by mutuall consent of certaine of the Merchants of both sides should be thought fit.

Captaine Saris

Neere about that time, as I was also informed, there came from the Gouvernour of Moha to Sir Henry Middleton, to capitulate of peace, Mammy Captaine of the Gallies, and others, who demanded what was the summe that in satisfaction he required: Sir Henry Middleton neere the proportion of the last yeares demand, required one hundred thousand Rialls of eight; which knowne, they desired respite to send to Zenan, to know the pleasure and resolution of Ieffor Basha therein; and then he should heare from them againe, and so tooke their leaue. By Sir Henry Middletons direction, the Darling was in preparing with a small Cargazon of Indian cloaths to be gone for Tecoa.

The nineteenth, the Darling departed towards Tecoa. Also Captaine Saris prepared the Thomas to follow the Darling to Tecoa; who also departed the three and twentieth day. This day also Sir Henry Middleton dismissed a ship of Diu (called the Azumcany) belonging to Shermall Sabander of Moha.

The thirtieth, a generall meeting was aboard the Tradef-increase at dinner, where Captaine Saris and Captaine Towersson were inuited, for the further conference of our present businell. At noone there came ouer from Moha the Sabander of Moha, Mammy Captaine of the Gallies, and an Aga, they all appointed by the Basha, to conferre with Sir Henrie Middleton about an agreement, for satisfaction of our former abuses, the summe whereof they demaunded of Sir Henrie Middleton, who as formerly required one hundred thousand Ryals of eight, and seeing nothing to be abated thereof, they desired leaue to haue conference with the Nobudas, or Captaines of the Indian ships, and other principall Merchants (which was graunted:) which as it seemed was to trie what customes they could augment vpon the Indian goods, towards payment of the said summe: so they departed on shoare, where they had prepared for them a faire Tent: but diuers of the Nobudas, in regard of former iniuries, either forbore conference, or withstood their augmentation, which seeing by no meanes to be accomplished, they tooke leaue of Sir Henry Middleton, promising so soone as they had answer from the Basha, they would giue him knowledge thereof, and what therein they may doe: and so againe the ninth of Iune they departed toward Moha. All this time our people were employed in romaging, opening, packing, and repacking of Indian cloaths fit for our turnes, giuing them of our English commodities in lieu thereof.

Iune.

Iuly.
They depart from Assab
road.

The eleuenth, Sir Henry Middleton with the Tradef-increase, and Captaine Saris with the Cloue and Hector, departed the road of Assab, carrying with them in company towards Moha all the Indian Indian ships. But I with the Pepper-corne remained in the road, with a small shippe called the Yengo, into whom I re-delivered all the goods that I had formerly taken out of her, the ninth and tenth of May.

A small ship called the Yengo.

The twelfth, at three of the clocke in the morning, we both set saile, following our Admirall and the rest towards Mocha; but the wind being aduerse, together with a lee-tide, we were forced to anchor neere three leagues to the Lee-ward of the Road. The thirteenth, at nine of the clocke in the morning, the wind and tide somewhat fauourable, we all weighed and stood vp with the Roade, where about foure of the clocke in the afternoone we anchored.

The nineteenth, Sir Henry Middleton perceiving that the Turkes intended nothing but delays, further to abuse vs, who now in our owne view laboured in unlading of a ship of Cuts-nagone, laden with Cotton, which Sir Henry Middleton determined to hinder, till such time as the Turkes should haue made agreement with him for his wrongs sustained, and therefore came aboard the Pepper-corne, by whose direction I warped in neerer vnto them, discharging at them diuers peeces of Ordnance, till they ceased their labour. Also all this weeke following they kept vs in hand with delays, but made no agreement at all.

The sixe and twentieth, Sir Henry Middleton, and Captaine Saris appointed a meeting aboard the Mahmudy of Dabul, where all the Nohudas of the Indian ships being sent for, S. Henry Middleton (as often times before) related vnto them the wrongs and damages sustained from the Turkes, with whom (till he receiued satisfaction from them for the same) hee could in no wise permit them to trade. But notwithstanding he had already quited himselfe for the injuries sustained in India; yet must also now be forced to carrie out of this Sea with him, all the Indian ships, that this yeere by them the Turkes may receiue no benefit. But the Indians seeing that by reason of the Turkes abuses and delays, it was likely to prooue vnto them an vnprofitable Monson, though their departure would be much preiudicial to the Turkes without trading with them, by reason of the losse of their Customes; yet rather then to carry backe againe their Indian Commodities, they desired to make a composition with Sir Henry Middleton and Captaine Saris, euery ship seuerally to pay a certaine summe of money, and we to forbear to hinder their quiet trade. Vpon this proffer made by the Indians, Sir Henry Middleton after good consideration, hauing no meanes to force satisfaction from the Turkes, without further preiudicing of the Indians, and therefore at present determined to accept of their offer, till leauing the satisfaction due from the Turkes, till future time. And to begin withall, composition was this day made with Meere Mahomet Tackey, Nohuda of the Rehemy, for fifteene thousand Rials of eight, she being in value neere equall to the other foure ships.

The sixth of August, composition being made with all the Indian ships, and their seuerall summes in part receiued, Captaine Saris dispeeded away his Vice-Admirall, Captaine Towerfon in the Hector, who this day departed the Red Sea. The thirteenth, Captaine Saris hauing receiued all moneyes due to him by composition from the Indians, departed the Red Sea.

August.
Captaine Towerfon departed from the Red Sea.
Generall Saris departed from the Red Sea.
They leaue the Red Sea, and coasting the East India, passe by Cape Comorin, Zelan, and so to Sumatra.

The sixteenth, at eight of the clocke in the morning, we set saile with the Trade-increase, and Pepper-corne, and about nine a clocke at night, we anchored eight leagues short of the Bab, in seuen fathome water. The seuenteenth, at five of the clocke in the morning, wee set saile with little wind; and at two of the clocke afternoone, we againe passed the streight of Bab-mandel; and from thence at sixe of the clocke, we were East South-east seuen leagues: from sixe a clocke to tenne a clocke the eighteenth day, we lay becalmed, so that her way was not to be regarded: from tenne a clocke to Sun-set, East-wards some three leagues, and before seuen a clocke, we anchored in one and twentie fathome, two miles from the Coast of Arabia, thwart of the East end of the great Mountaine, and seuentene leagues from the Bab.

The nineteenth, at sun-setting, the said Mountaine bore North-West by West, some eight leagues distant. All this night, and the twentieth after noone, the winds so variable, that wee were alwaies trimming of our sailes from tacke to tacke: so that betweene the disadvantage of the winds, and the Current together, we were set so farre backe west-wards, as brought the said Mountaine North North-west of vs againe. At eleuen a clocke, the wind came at West a fresh gale, and at Sun-set the high land of Aden bore North-east by East eight leagues off. All this night following, we had very little wind and variable, so that the one and twentieth at Sun-rising, we perceiued our selues lost, at least two leagues west-ward. From Sun-rising till noone, we had a small gale of wind, increasing stronger and stronger at South-west, and South-west by South: so that I esteemed to haue gone East South-east some nine leagues. At Sun-set, Aden bore North North-east seuen leagues off, by a meridian Compasse. All this night was in a manner calme, from foure a clocke in the morning to Sun-set, being foure and twentie houres, I estimate to haue gone some fifteene leagues, at which time Aden bore North-west halfe North distant fue leagues, being cleare weather.

The three and twentieth, we descried the Abaxin Coast being fifteene leagues distant, and cleare weather. The sixe and twentieth, we found such a Current, that though we lay vp North-east by East, North-east or North North-east, we made our way all Easterly, being caried to the South-ward by force of the Current. The nine and twentieth, we againe descried land, which for the highnesse we at first esteemed to be the land of Cape Guardafui, but the clouds clearing vp from the tops of the hills, we plainly perceived it to be the same land scene yesterday, whereby we the better vnderstood how the Current had abused vs, which by my estimate setteth neere South-west.

From the thirtieth in the morning, to the one and thirtieth at noone, wee found that the Current had set vs to the North-ward of our course from the last day at noone, what time our latitude was twelue degrees and thirtie five minutes, to the first of September at noone, the wind at South East-wards, and not to haue runne about twelue leagues, and by our latitude being thirteene degrees thirty minutes, we find our selues almost a degree differing to the North-wards, and also to haue lost to the West-wards, as by the variation appeareth, being lesse by fiftie five 10 minutes, by reason whereof I estimate the Current there to set neere North-East.

September.

Snakes swimming on the top of the water, a signe of being neere the Coast of India.

The second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth dayes, wee had all for the most part close weather. The tenth and eleventh cloudy weather, with often showers of raine. The twelfth, we saw diuers snakes swimming on the toppe of the water, which in boysterous weather sildome appeare, yet an apparent signe of being neere the coast of India. The thirteenth we also saw more snakes. This day we had sounding from fiftie five to fortie fathome.

The foureteenth in the morning, at Sun-rising we discryed high land, bearing East by North some sixteene leagues, we stood in East by South till foure a clocke afternoone, till the neereft sea-coast land betweene vs and the high land, bore East eight leagues off, what time we directed our course South alongst the Coast of India, wee found the water for the most part muddy and 20 thicke, and some sudden spots of cleere: our depth while we stood in East and by South were from thirtie to twentie fathome; and in our South course edging into sixteene fathome, and so to five and twentie fathome.

The fifteenth, we still kept at the like depths, hauing a gentle gale at North North-west, and cleere water, but no snakes appeared. The sixteenth, running alongst the Coast of India or Malabar, betweene twentie and sixteene fathome; about one a clocke we were West from an high hill of especiall note, which stretcheth out like a point into the Sea, hauing all low land to Sea-wards; on the North-side, the land fell away to the East-wards, and on the South-side maketh a Bay; the highest of this Sea-coast Mountaine, standeth neereft in twelue degrees ten minutes, which should be the land of Magician.

The seuateenth, the wind came opposite to vs at South-west, at two a clocke in the morning, with thicke weather, and much raine, continuing till day-light, wee on a Lee-shoare, and an vnknowne Coast, what time the wind veered vp to the North-wards, and we edged off into deeper water. In this gustie time, we lost company of our Admirall, but at day-light the weather clearing vp, we came together, directing our course againe to the South-ward, being edged off from the land. 30

The eighteenth, the land being all foggie, was hardly to be discerned, the most part of our way this day, being by the helpe of the Current, our depths all this day were betweene five and twentie, and nine and twentie fathom, all Ozie ground. The nineteenth, we were some foureteene leagues distant from the Coast, the wind at South-west, faire weather, with some little 40 drilling raine, till nine a clocke at night, no ground at fortie fathome. From nine to eleuen a clocke at night, we had a very vehement showre of raine, and the wind very little Northerly, and after the raine East North-east, our depth at midnight was fortie foure fathome, being by estimation some tenne leagues off the land of Mallabar. The twentieth, we had faire weather, the wind very variable, our depths fortie foure and fortie five fathome all day, being Ozie ground. The one and twentieth, we had very little wind, variable till three a clocke afternoone, when fell abundance of raine, with the wind at North North-west, thicke weather, and fortie five fathome water. The two and twentieth in the morning at nine a clocke, we discried the Cape Commerin: and by my neereft estimation the Coast here lieth away South-east alongst vnto the Cape. 50

Cape Commerin.

Zeilan.

The three and twentieth, we had faire weather, and the wind at South-west by West, discrying the high land to the East-wards of the Cape Commerin, at neere five a clocke afternoone, bearing North North-west, distant eightene leagues. The foure and twentieth, we had a very stiffe gale of wind between the South South-west and West, and much raine, clouds and fogge, and our course East South-east, by a reformed Compasse, at five a clocke after noon, we had sight of Zeilan through the fogge, rising all full of Humocks, and bearing from the North-east by East, to the South-east by South, some sixe leagues distant. The five and twentieth, from breake of day till noone, we were pestered with varietie of gults and showers of raine, the wind being large, but the weather clearing vp about noone, we discried the Souther-most point of Zeilan, called the Cape de Gallo, bearing North North-east distant five leagues, finding the latitude thereof to bee 60 five degrees fortie minutes.

The sixe and twentieth, seven and twentieth, and eight and twentieth, wee had faire weather, with some fewe droppings of raine, and the wind between the South-west and West South-west. The nine and twentieth and thirtieth, we continued our course East South-east, the the wind constant betweene the South-west and West South-west, with very much raine, and vehement sudden gults of short continuance, and followed with an easie steering gale. The thirtieth, in our bread roome we found much harme done to our wheat by wet; also al our course Duties or browne Callicoes of Pormean (for sailes) put there for most securitie, wee found twentie pieces rotten.

The nineteenth, at three a clocke after noone, we anchored in the road of Tecoa, where wee found the Darling, who had continued there from Iuly (vnto our comming in) in a great part of the raines, which are not yet ended, they hauing before our comming buried three Merchants, and three Sailors, to wit, John Fowler, Francis Glasfield, and William Speed. Also they had most of their men sicke, and had gotten but little Pepper, which remaineth on the Iland, and little more is here to be had, vntill the next season, which will be Aprill and May; but the ciull warres is a hinderance to our trade. Here also we found the Thomas, a ship of the eighth Voyage, beeing newly come from Priaman, where they had as slender successe as our Darling here. Here wee heard of the safe returne and prosperous successe of Captaine Dauid Middleton his Voyage; also of the foure ships of the ninth Voyage, whereof two were already arriued at Bantam; also of Captaine Castleton his man of warre, who hauing been here lately informed of fiftene saile of Hollanders already come, or neere hand; all laden with munition, and of two ships of New-hauen in France come also to trade, all which quell the life of the present hopes of our out-tired, croft, and decayed Voyage.

to our Trade.

Captaine Castleton.

The two and twentieth, Sir Henry Middleton finding so cold comfort at this place, departed the night following in the Pepper-corne towards Bantam, leauing me in the Trade-increase to remaine till the sixteenth of the next Moneth.

Sir Henry Middleton in the Pepper-corne
hasteth to Bantam.

The second of Nouember, all the men of all sorts in Tecoa, went with Raia Boonesoo to the warres, till whose returne we can expect no businesse to be done on the maine. This day in taking vp the wine, by the rottenesse of the Caske, there prooued great leakage.

Great deceit of the Naturals

The twentieth, we fetcht the remaine of the Pepper weighed the day before, in which by the people we found much deceit; in some bags were small bags of Paddy, in some Rice, and in some great stones; also rotten & wet Pepper put into new drie sacks, to our farther abusing, yet knowing it, we haue no remedie. Hauing gotten all things in, and our men aboard, we fitted our things to hasten away, and neere midnight in the Moone-shine, the wind at North-east of the shoare, we set saile; we wrought not onely to avoid the two knowne Rockes, three leagues from the Iland of Tecoa, the one South by West, the other South by East, hauing sixe and twentie fathome between them, Ozie ground: But for the better securitie, we directed our course so neere as wee could, the same way we came in; yet as we stood off, the wind something shruke on vs; yet we lay first West, then West by South, and West South-west, and last of all South-west and by West, and the Current set vs somewhat South-ward, our depths proportional from foureteene to seuer and twentie fathome, all Ozie ground; the next cast foure fathome, and the ship fast on a rocke, a sterne foure fathome, and on the Star-boord mid-ship a quarter lesse then three fathomes, and vnder the head three fathomes, a ships length fise fathome, a ships length on the Lar-boord bow sixe foot, in the Lar-boord mid-ship sixteene foote, vnder the Lar-boord gallery twenty foote, and round about within a Cables length deepe water: she remained on the rocke from a little after three vntill fise a clocke: the mercifull God so provided, that the wind grew calme, and the sea smooth, and in our feeling, the set or motion of the ship, the place considered, was very easie; yet the water did so increase, that both our chaine Pumps with painefull labour, could not in long time free the same. But our generall endeaour, with most expedition possible, was to get out a sterne anchor, which was let fall in sixe and twentie fathome right afterne, and two thirds of a Cable out, to heaue her off right afterne: wherein the gracious Lord so blessed our endeaours, that before we could with the Capstaine heaue the Cable taught, the ship was of her own accord set into deepe water, which no sooner done, but we had a Westerly gust, which put vs off some mile from the rocke, where we anchored for our Boat, which brought our Cadger after vs, and it being cleare day, we could not discerne where the rocke stood: also a principall reason we anchored was, our exceeding desires and haste for Bantam, that without necessitie enforced, I wished not to put backe againe, and wast more time, hoping our leak would easily be ouer-come at an anchor. I past the day till two a clocke, consulting and aduising with such as with their best counsell are appointed to assist me, what was best to be done, our present estate considered, which we find diuers wayes to rest dangerous: First, in regard of the leakenesse of our ship, which continually employes many people at once to keepe downe the water. Secondly, in a manner no prouision of Iron-work for the chaines, but that the Pumps presently employed, which often break, or for weakenes slip to our great discomfort: for if they should be any long while in mending, and the water so increas, that we cannot reach vnder the Pumpe to ceue the chaines, our worke will soone draw neere an end. Thirdly, the desperate carelesnesse of many of our people, in the greatest neede considered, their taint weakenesse and inabilitie to hold out labour (by course diet as they pretend.) Fourthly, to remember what is certaine in the ship, which requires care to preferue it. Fiftly, Captaine Sharpeighs mis-fortunes, and the lewd demeanours of his people, in like case of greatest need, too late to bee forgotten. The dangers in proceeding diuersly cast vp (notwithstanding, at the first, diuers of our men did vrge the same) by counsell reasonable for the safegard of all, I made choice to returne within the Iland of Tecoa, there by Gods helpe to endeauour the stopping of such a part of our leake, as we found to be in the fashioning pieces in the sterne. At Sun-set we anchored in the place, which for our turnes we desired. This day long time we kept both our chaine pumps going to free the water, which euer increased when the chaines happened to breake, which happened often; the two pumpes employes at once twelue men, which labour indeed is so extreame, that it can but little while, without shifting of spells be continued; but the water once brought low, and the chaine holding one pompe at once, hath euer discharged it, and yet it tires all our people by often shifting: in which businesse, I found it required more then ordinary meanes to appease their discontented clamours and murmurings, if the place might haue afforded.

December.

The two and twentieth, three and twentieth, and foure and twentieth, we laboured to land Indico, Cinamom and other things, still making way to lighten the sterne of the ship, where we know the leake is, but we cannot come to it.

The high land of the Maine of Sumatra.

Vntill the eight of December, we were thus employed in the amending of our leakes: which done, we set saile from Tecoa, and with our Boats a head, we gate ouer the Barre, hauing foure fathome at a low water, and being without the Iland, by the helpe of a fine breach at North North-east, North North-west and North-west, as the Sunne grew high, both duller and shrunk vpon vs; so that wee lay but South South-west, and South by West, and by estimation came neare the rocke we had formerly sate vpon, we vsed great diligence with Boats a head, but could 20
discerne no shew of it, the sea being smooth; we stood away to the Southwards, South by West and South, from Sun-set, to Sun-rising the ninth day, with a small gale, at North-west by West, we stood away South-west by South ten leagues, and the wind at West North-west and West, at which instant we discied some part of a great Iland bearing South Westerly, at which time we steered away South; this night we had much raine in gusts, with thunder and lightning, the wind very fickle, shrinking to the South-west, and South South-west, which stayed not long; then to the South-east, East South-east and East, and againe to the South-east; in which time to Sun-rising we had sailed about some eight leagues. Also that part of the Iland, the last night seene, now beareth South-east distant eight leagues, also Eastward wee see the high land of the maine of Sumatra, neare twentie leagues, at noone in two degrees and eleuen minutes South la- 30 titude; and the Northermost part of these Ilands are from the sound we came through, between the Wester Iles South-east distant nine leagues: it was the twentieth day before they arriued at Pulupanian.

The Road of Saldania.
Hector and Thomas
Captaine
Newport.

The Pepper-corne being fitted there, Sir Henry Middleton called a Councell to aduise, touching the late harmes which the Trades-Increase, had receiued vpon the rocke: by which Councell it was resolued, that shee must of necessitie bee new strengthened and careend, before shee could well returne home; which requiring long time, whereby shee could not goe home this yeere, it was concluded that the Pepper-Corne should immediatly be dispatched for England, to giue some satisfaction vnto the Aduenturers, vntill the Trades-Increase might follow. The Pepper-Corne being laden on the fourth of February, set saile from thence for England, leauing Sir 40
Henry Middleton with the Trades-Increase behind. We arriued on the tenth of May in the Road of Saldania, where I hoped to haue found all the shippes formerly departed homewards: but comming into the Road, I only found the Hector and Thomas, two ships of the eight Voyage, and Captaine Newport in the Expedition of the twelfth Voyage. Heere we continued but foure dayes; where, with the helpe of Captaine Newport his men and Coopers, wee had taken in all our water, and the fourteenth day at night ended our labour therein.

June.

The fifteenth, hauing watered (but no whit refreshed our weak people yet, to keep company with the Hector and Thomas homewards) at nine a clocke in the morning we set saile with the wind all Southerly: but being out, we were much pestered with opposite wind, wherby we were driuen to the Southwards. This night we kept company with the Hector and Thomas (the Ex- 50 pedition being gotten about the Cape Bona Speranza, determining their course towards the confines of Persia, to some place where they might in safetie land Sir Robert Sherly and his Persian Lady, and Sir Thomas Powell with his English Ladie, who were bound into Persia.) Also the next day we were all in company together; but toward euening the Thomas became farre a sterne, but the Hector with loftie saile bore away. This night, by what meanes I know not, they lost our company, which by all meanes we againe endeauoured to get: and for that by standing to the Southwards, we knew they could not run vs out of sight; yet we thought against all reason to stand in vpon a lee-shoare, stood into the land-wards to seek to discouer them, but not seeing them, we lingred in for them vntill the nineteenth day Sun-rising, in which time we were em- 60 ployed in repairing our weake and decayed sailes. This day at Sun-rising, Saldania bore South-east halfe a degree East distant seuentene leagues, the weather being cloudie and darke. The twentieth, one and twentieth and two and twentieth daies, cloudie, dark, and ouercast weather.

The sixt of June, as we came about the North-east point, opening the Road, and being luffed in, in hauing our anchors readie to let fall, we diſcried two Carricks in the Roade, whole neighbourhood was not to my content, neither durſt I truſt to anchor by them, in regard of their accustomed treachery: I ſtood off againe by a wind, a while to deliberate what to doe, and thinking to ſtand in againe, to trie whether they would be gone, which if they were readie, I ſuppoſed they would thinke we had more company neare-hand: but we found the Current ſet vs ſo faſt to the lee-ward, that we could hardly recouer the Road at two a clocke in the after-noone: ſeeing no other remedie, wee bore vp the helme, and ſtood on our courſe for England, our hopes being fruſtrated both of reſreſhing our weake ſicke people, and alſo of further ſtaying to regaine the company of the Hector and Thomas. The fifteenth and ſixteenth, we had diuers ſhowers of raine. The eighteenth, we croſt the Equinoctiall line.

Two Carricks.

They Croſſe the Equinoctiall.

The tenth of September, we had a very ſtrong gale of wind and an hollow ſea, and not able to get any part of the South-coaſt of England, wee ſtood on our courſe North-eaſt, in hope to fetch Milford-Hauen in Wales, the ſooner to ſend letters to the Company.

Septemb.

The eleuenth, at five a clocke in the after-noone, we diſcried the Coaſt of Wales to windward, and the Coaſt of Ireland lee-wards, being an high hill betweene Waxford and Waterford. This night we ſpent with our head to the Southwards; and in the morning we ſtood in towards the Iriſh Coaſt: reſolving now, the winds being conſtantly aduerſe, and impoſſible to fetch Milford-Hauen, and our meanes allowing no longer deliberation, I determined to goe into Waterford rather then into any other harbour.

20 The thirteenth in the morning, we diſcried the Tower of Whooke, the only marke for the riuer of Waterford, being ſome three leagues diſtaht from it: at eight a clocke we diſcried a ſmall Boat comming forth of the riuer of Waterford, vnto whom we made a waſt, which they perceiuing, preſently came vnto vs, being a Frenchman bound to Waxford, whom I hired to goe againe into the riuer, before to giue knowledge of our comming vnto the Lientenant of the Fort of Don Canon, to preuent our ſtopping there, for that by reaſon of the narrowneſſe of Channell, it might endanger the ſhip in winding vp at an anchor there; and at noone wee gate vp into the riuer ſo high as the paſſage. Heere we found Maſter Stephen Bonner of Lime, with his Barque, come hither a fiſhing, who putting apart his owne buſineſſe, with great diligence endeauoured the beſt for the eaſe and reliefe of our weake and ſicke people.

They arriue at Waterford in Ireland.

30 The eighteenth, I diſpeded away Maſter Bonner towards London with letters to the Company, to giue knowledge of our arriuall, and of our wants, wherein I deſired to be ſupplied.

The one and twentieth, Doct<sup>r</sup> Laſtaſter, Biſhop of Waterford, very kindly viſited me, bringing downe with him his good cheere, and made a Sermon aboard the ſhippe, and offered mee the Communion; but thereto being vnprepared I reſuſed; yet heartily thanking him for his good will.

The tenth, Captaine John Burrell came vnto me to viſite me, promiſing me money to ſupply my wants, if I would ſend ſome man with him to Corcke for it. The eleuenth day, I diſpeded away Maſter Mullineux with Captaine Burrell to Corcke for the money, which he promiſed to ſupply me withall.

40 The twelfth, Anthony Stratford Lientenant of the Fort of Don Canon, hauing hired a villanous fellow (whom for his mildemeanour I had cauſed to be kept in the priſon of Waterford) to ſay what might beſit his preſent praſtiſe, to bring vs within the compaſſe of Piracie, hauing obtained a warrant from the Earle of Ormond, came to the paſſage, where hee ſent to deſire mee to ſend my Boat well manned, to fetch himſelfe and diuers other Gentlemen aboard to ſee my ſhip: but my Boat, according to his deſire, being come to land, hee apprehended my men, and preſently came aboard, where he arreſted me and my ſhip for Piracie, and ſo committed mee to the Fort of Don Canon to priſon, giuing extraordinary ſtraite charge ouer me, that none ſhould come at me, but whom he liſt without warrant from him; and ſuch as by his permiſſion came to me, he would haue put to their oathes to declare what conference they had with me; my man ſworne to bring no letters from me to any one, neither from any to me: alſo diuers of my people they this night examined vpon their oathes, omitting no meanes to draw them to accuſe me, ſo I continued in priſon till the ſixteenth day morning what time the ſaid Stratford brought me a letter from Sir Lawrence Eſmond his Captaine, inuiting me to meet him at the paſſage, with whom when I came vp to the paſſage, I there met with Sir Lawrence Eſmond, accompanied with the Biſhop of Waterford, come from the Earle of Ormond, to replace mee in my charge againe, which by their great intreatie and perſwaſion I againe vndertooke.

The three and twentieth, Maſter Mulleneux hauing ſent my letters to the Company, to giue knowledge of the afore mentioned troubleſome buſineſſe, returned from Corcke with money to ſupply my wants.

60 The five and twentieth, Maſter Beniamin Ioseph, in a ſmall ſhip of Briſtoll, came vnto me, bringing with him both men, money, and prouiſions for my ſupply, which with all ſpeed wee tooke in, haſtning to be gone.

The ſixt of October, wee departed the Riuer of Waterford towards our long deſired home.

October.

The twelfth in the morning, we were thwart of Beachy, and at eight a clocke at night, wee anchored in Douer Road.

The thirteenth in the morning, we set saile out of Douer Road, and at ten a clocke wee anchored in the Downes, neare vnto the Assurance (the Kings ship) saluting her with fise peeces of Ordnance; immediatly came aboard of me, Master Cocket, the Master of her, who againe made stay of my ship, till further order from the Lord Admirall: vpon this I presently sent away Master Mullineux to London, with letters to certifie the Company hereof.

The seuenteenth, came downe from the Company, Master Aderfly, bringing me a letter from the Company, a release for the ship; and Master Punniat a Pilot, to bring her about. The eighteenth in the morning, wee set saile, and at fixe a clocke at night, wee anchored in the Road of Gorend. The nineteenth in the morning, at fixe a clocke we set saile, and at night we anchored at Tilbury. The twentieth in the morning, we set saile, and at ten a clocke wee anchored at Black-wall: where in the afternoone came downe Master Deputy, and diuers of the Committies, vnto whom I deliuered vp my charge. And so concluded this our tedious and out-tyring iourney.

CHAP. XIII.

The seuenth Voyage; made in the Globe into East-India, set out under the Command of Captaine ANTHONY HIPPO, obserued and written by NATHANIEL MARTEN, Masters Mate in the said Shippe.

WEE weighed from the Black-wall, in the good shippe called the Globe, being bound for the East-Indies, the third of Ianuary 1610. and about fise of the clocke we anchored at Graues-end.

They arriued at Soldania, the one and twentieth of May 1611. and thence set saile the sixt of Iune following. They sailed not farre from Mosambique, and Comoro, and Pemba: and on the last of Iuly passed before Punta de Galle, vpon Ceylon (all which as being a meere maine relation, and the like course oft runne by others, is omitted.)

August 4.

The fourth of August in the morning, I obserued the variation, and made it to bee thirteene degrees, seuen minutes, and at noone we were in the latitude of nine degrees fiteene minutes, and the land was about fixe leagues off, and as much as wee could see it on the poope, the wind veered North by West, and the North North-west, and we stood in three houres, and then sounded, being about three leagues off the shoare, and had nine fathome, and the land then bore West North-west to the Northwards, and South the other way, and we iudged the land to lye North-west, or North-west by North. At three of the clocke wee cast about, and stood to the Northward, and the wind veered to the West, and West South-west, and we lay as neare as we could till fise of the clocke. The sixt, we kept our selues in eight and twentie and thirtie fathome, and then the wind scanted and veered to the West North-west, so the water deepned presently.

Negapatan.

The sixt in the morning, we perceined our selues to be in a great Current by the rippling, and we sent off our Pinnasse to come to an anchor, and we found the Current to set North by West, and we made our way from foure of the clocke in the after-noone, the fift till noone, the sixt North North-west, and ran seenteene leagues, and then we were in the latitude of ten degrees, and one and thirtie minutes, and from noone till two of the clocke wee steered away North-west; and then we saw diuers Fisher-men hard by, so we looked out at top-mast head, and saw land West North-west and North-west, and so we ran in, and then we were in twenty fathom about eight leagues off; and as we ranne in, the water shoalded easily, and at three of the clocke wee saw a Tower or Pagod, and a ship that bore North-west of vs, and then the great Pagod of Negapatan and the ship, were one in another, and then wee ran in, till we came into eight fathom North-west, and then we were about two leagues off the ship, and three leagues off the shoare.

Paleacate.

From fixe of the clocke at night the sixt, till seuen at noone, we steered away North by East, and so kept alwayes betweene twelue and fourteene fathom, and ran sixteene leagues, and were in the latitude of eleuen degrees, seuen and fiftie minutes.

From the seuenth till the eight at noone, wee steered away North by East, and ranne about twentie leagues by iudgement, and then we were thwart of the high land, vp in the Countrey, that rose in hammocks. This day we tooke the Boat of S. Thome. The ninth at noone, the Towne of Maliapor bore North North-west two leagues off, and the marke to know the Towne, is the high hill vp in the countrey. There is a shoale about two leagues to the Southward of Paleacate, which lyeth about a mile or more from the shoare, and the North-east end of it lyeth off about a league: we ran ouer the very end in three fathom, but if you keepe in ten or twelue fathome, you you shall not need to feare any part of it. The ninth at foure a clocke, we anchored against the Towne, and it bore West by North off vs; there is a crosse to the Northward of the Town, which if you be betweene two or three miles of the shoare you see it, but you cannot see the Towne.

The tenth in the morning, we weighed and stood further to the Northward, and anchored in eight fathom (we not liking our former Road) and then the Crosse bore West by South of vs; when the Westermost point bore West by North, and the Northermost point bore North-west. The tenth at noone, Master Browne and Master Floris went ashore (there comming a Boat from the Gouverneur for them) but they went in our Skiffe, and as they were going ouer the Barre, the Skiffe was sunke, but neuer a man drowned, God be blessed: Paleacate standeth in thirteene degrees and thirtie minutes.

Paleacate standeth in thirteene degrees, thirty minutes.

The thirteenth, I obserued the variation, and made it to bee one degree and fiftene minutes; vpon the semicircle. The fiftenth, Master Anthony Hippon, our Captaine, went ashore to speake with the Gouverneffe. The sixteenth, the Captaine and all the Merchants came aboard, because they could get no trade.

The sixteenth at ten of the clocke, we set saile for Petepoly, and from ten till the seuateenth at noone, we ran about thirteene leagues, and were in the latitude of fourteene degrees and fiftene minutes, and made our way North by East. From the seuateenth to the eighteenth, we ran, by my iudgement, about three and twentie leagues, and made the way North, but it was sad weather, and we could not obserue. About seuen of the clocke in the morning the eighteenth, we spied a Galliot, riding in seuen fathom, some foure miles off the shoare, and shee road till wee were almost within Sacker shot of her, and then shee weighed and ran into shoale water into the shoare, but we stood not after her, because the water shoalded, and at that time we saw a breach, some two leagues off the shoare to my iudgement, and whereas we steered away, North North-east, wee steered away East North-east, and East by North, but had no deepe water till wee brought the breach, North North-west of vs, & when we saw it first, it bore North by East of vs.

Petepoly.

From the eighteenth at noone, till five of the clocke in the after-noone, wee steered away North-east by East, partly because wee would runne into deeper water, and partly because the land grew out more Easterly, and at five of the clocke we made a tuft of trees that is neare Petepoly, and it bore North-east by East of vs fixe leagues off, and then is the high land to the North-westward of the Towne, which did then beare North by West off vs, and at seuen of the clocke we anchored in nine fathom, the trees bearing North-east and by East of vs fixe leagues off, and the wind Westerly.

The nineteenth in the morning, by five of the clocke, we weighed and stood with the trees, and about nine of the clocke we anchored about two leagues short of them in five fathom, and the trees bore East North-east of vs, and then presently there came aboard two Gingathas or Boats: our Merchants sent them ashore with a letter; and about two of the clocke there came another, and a messenger from the Sabandar, who the twentieth day did send aboard two Boats for our Merchants, and brought a Present, and then went ashore Master Floris, Master Lucas, Master Essington, and Adam Downton, and the Purser's Mate, and Lemon.

They land at Petepoly.

The one and twentieth about eight of the clocke, there came a Gingatha from the shoare, and brought a letter from our Merchants, who did let vs vnderstand that they were kindly entertained, and presently we weighed with the wind at North North-west, and ran off and anchored almost thwart of the Riuer's mouth, and about three of the clocke in the after-noone, wee weighed and anchored in the Road, where the tuske of trees bore North-east by East Easterly; and we did anchor in nine fathom and a halfe: the marke to goe in ouer the barre, is a Pal nito tree, on the bancke, vpon the Northermost end of the high cliffe, it is but a little tree. I obserued the variation, and made it to be twelue degrees, seuen and twentie minutes.

The eight and twentieth, Master Floris came aboard, and Simon Evans, about twelue of the clocke: and about foure of the clocke, we weighed for Masulipatan, with the wind at South-west, and wee steered off into eight and nine fathom South South-east, and then wee bore vp South-east, and South-east by East, and kept our selues in nine and ten fathom till seuen of the clocke at night, and then the wind veered to the East, and East South-east; so wee anchored in nine fathom, till five of the clocke in the morning.

The nine and twentieth in the morning, about five of the clocke, we weighed with the wind at South South-west, and steered away East South-east, and East North-east, and North-east; and at noone the vttermost part of the land bore North of vs: so by my iudgement, the land Eastward from Petepoly lyeth East and by South, and West by North: and at noone wee came into white water of the point, and it shoalded a litle before wee came into it halfe a fathom, but when we were in it, we had the same depth fixe fathom three leagues off: about two of the clocke in the after-noone, the wind veered Northerly, so wee came to an anchor in seuen fathom: about five of the clocke, we weighed, and stood in North North-west, and North-west by North, till seuen of the clocke, and being calme, wee anchored in five fathom, the Westermost land bore West North-west Westerly, and we saw two ships which bore North Westerly and North-west, and the Norcher-most land bore North.

The thirtieth, about one of the clocke wee weighed, and stood in for the Road Masulipatan, which bore North of vs, and we neuer had aboue fve, and foure and a halfe all the way: so about fve of the clocke, we anchored in three fathom and a foote; and the great tree which is the marke for the Road, bore West by North Westerly of vs, and the Southermost land bore South and by West Southerly of vs, and the Northermost bore North-east Easterly of vs.

The one and thirtieth, Master Floris, Master Hessington, Simon Euans, Cuthbert Whitfield, and Arthur Smith, went a shoare to stay there in our Skiffe.

Decemb. 28.

The eight and twentieth of December, I obserued the variation, and made it to be twelue degrees, two and twentie minutes.

The point of Masulipatan is in 15. degrees, 57. minutes
North.

The thirtieth, we weighed from Masulipatan about seuen of the clocke in the morning, with the wind at North-east by East, and we halde it off South-east and South-east by South, till we came into eightene fathom. At noone the point that bore South by West Southerly off vs, was West and by North, by the Compasse, and then I obserued, and made it to be in fiftene degrees seuen and fiftie minutes, and at eight of the clocke at night wee anchored in fixe fathome and an halfe.

January 4.

The fourth of January, I obserued at noone, and made the Roade to be in fiftene degrees, fixe and thirtie minutes:

The fve and twentieth and the fixe and twentieth, wee obserued the Sunne and certaine Starres, by the Sunne we made the Towne of Petepoli to be in fiftene degrees, nine and fortie minutes: the Starre called the Ships-sterne, we had in one and twenty degrees, nine and twenty minutes; the foot of the Croscars twelue degrees, foure and fiftie minutes, and the flanke of the Centaur, in fiftene degrees, two and thirty minutes, the foot in fourteene degrees, one and fortie minutes, the wind at South-east, and South South-east.

February 7.

The seuenth of February, the Merchants came aboard and carryed all the luggage quite away, the wind at South South-east night and day.

They depart
out of the road
of Petepoli.

The eleuenth of February, we weighed out of Petepoly Roade, hauing the wind at North North-west about fixe of the clocke in the morning, and stood off South South-east, but verie little wind, and the current set to the North-east, and we anchored in fve fathom and an halfe, it being calme, we hauing runne off about a mile and an halfe, and the wind came off the Sea all Southerly.

They strike
ouer from Petepoli to Bantam
in Iaua.

The twelfth, about nine of the clocke in the morning, we weighed with the wind at South-east, and South-east and by East, and we haled off South South-west, and South by West, and South-west as the wind would giue vs leaue, till three of the clocke in the after-noone, and then we anchord in nine fathome water, with the wind at South and South and by East, and made our way South-west and by South, fixe leagues out of the Road by my iudgement, and the high land bore West halfe a point Southerly: in the Road it bore West halfe a point Northerly.

The fourteenth, about foure of the clock in the morning, we weighed with the wind at South South-west, and stood away South-east, and South-east and by South, as the wind would giue vs leaue: At noone the Palmito Trees bore North halfe a point Easterly, about fixe leagues off, or seuen, and we ranne in ten fathome.

March 12.

From the twentieth of March, at noone till the one and twentieth, we had very little wind Easterly and calme: we made our way South South-west by my iudgement, and ranne seuen leagues, and at noone were in the latitude of two degrees, fixe and twentie minutes, at night we obserued the variation, and had it in thirteene degrees, fiftie seuen minutes on the Semicircle, and the amplitude was foure degrees, twentie seuen minutes, which being subtracted to thirteene degrees, fiftie seuen minutes, makes the variation to be nine degrees, twentie fve minutes.

From the one and twentieth at noone, till the two and twentieth at noone we had the wind all Northerly, we steered away South and ran fiftene leagues by the logge, and then wee were in the latitude of one degree, thirtie foure minutes: at night, I obserued the variation and made it to be ten degrees ten minutes, which did proue a great current to the West-ward.

rent to the West-ward.

From the two and twentieth, to the three and twentieth at noone, wee had the wind variable betweene the North and the West, we had little wind and gustie weather, we steered South by East, and ran eight leagues: and at noone we obserued the latitude of fiftie seuen minutes, at night I obserued the variation, and made it to be ten degrees. The Magneticall Azimuth is fiftene degrees fiftene minutes; the Amplitude is fve degrees, thirteene minutes. From the three and twentieth at noone till the foure and twentieth at noone, we had the wind betweene the West and South-west, we steered away South by East, and ranne three and twentie leagues by the logge, and then we were vnder the Line by our obseruation.

The Equino-
ctiall.

From the foure and twentieth at noone, till the fve and twentieth at noone we had the wind betweene the North North-west, and the South South-west, and we steered away South South-east, we ran by the logge one and twentie leagues, and then we were in the latitude of fiftie seuen minutes to the Southward of the Line. At night I obserued the variation, and made the Magneticall Azimuth to be fiftene degrees, fortie minutes. The Amplitude fixe degrees, no minutes, which made the variation to be nine degrees fortie minutes.

From

From the five and twentieth at noone, till the sixe and twentieth at noone wee had the wind variable betweene the North North-west, and the West South-west; wee steered South South-east, we ranne fifteene leagues by the logge, and then wee were in the latitude of one degree, thirtie minutes at night. I obserued the variation, and the Magneticall Azimuth, was fifteene degrees five minutes. The Amplitude was sixe degrees, one and twentie minutes, which made the variation eight degrees, fiftie foure minutes.

1612.

From the one and thirtieth at noone, till the first of Aprill at noone we had the wind Southerly and very little, and made our way East South-east twelue leagues, and at noone we were in the latitude of foure degrees, one minute. From the first at noone to the second at noone, wee had the wind betweene the West North-west, and South South-west, variable and gustie, wee steered away South-east by East, halfe a point Easterly: wee ranne by the logge one and twentie leagues and two thirds, and then we were in the latitude of foure degrees, twentie foure minutes, we made our way twelue leagues East South-east, and ten leagues South and by East by iudgement: which did agree with my Obseruation. In the morning they obserued the variation, and had the Almicanter and Magneticall Azimuth, one degree thirtie minutes, the Amplitude eight degrees, fortie seuen minutes, which made the variation to be seuen degrees, twentie seuen minutes. About two of the clocke in the morning, Adam Duglas departed this life. From the second at noone till the third, we had the wind betweene the North-west, and the West South-west, we steered away betweene the East South-east, and the South-east by East, but because of our latches to the South-ward, I iudge that she made her way East South-east, we ranne thirtie two leagues by the logge, and then was I iust with the Wester most part of the Ile of Eugano, by my reckoning.

Aprill 1612.

The sixe and twentieth of Aprill, about foure of the clocke in the after-noone, through the Almightyes good assistance, we came to an Anchor in Bantam Road, in three and a halie, where Puloponian bore North the bodie, and Pulotundo bore North-west by North, and Puloduo East South-east, and the Wester-most point thwart of Pulorange, bore North-west by North Northerly: the vttermost point bore East by North Northerly, and the Eastermost Iland Pulo Lima, was euen ioyning to the Westermost point of Jana, and presently after we were at an Anchor, came aboard Master Spalding with two others, and two of them lay aboard.

The Ile of Eugano.
They arrive in the Road of
Bantam.

The one and thirtieth of May, in the after-noone about foure of the clocke, our Merchants came aboard, and about nine of the clocke we set saile: wee steered away North North-east, with the wind at South.

August Spalding.
They depart
from Bantam
for Palane and Siam.
Iune.

The first of Iune in the morning, the wind veered to the East-ward and so to the North-ward, very foule and gustie weather. Wee bore vp and anchored vnder Pulotundo in nineteene fathomes, halfe a league from the shoare.

About five and sixe of the clocke in the morning, we weighed with the wind at South-east, and within a heauie or two we had but five fathome, and so shoalded till wee had but foure fathome, steering away North North-west, the neereft land beeing South-west sixe leagues off, which was a long woodie Iland, some foure miles long, of which we looked for a ledge of rockes or sand. From sixe till noone, we made our way North by West seuen leagues. About eight of the clocke in the morning, I espyed Lucapara at top-mast head, about eight leagues off.

A long wood-die Iland.

Lucapara.

The seuenth in the morning, about sixe of the clocke, we weighed the wind South-west, and betweene sixe and noone we made our way North-west seuen leagues, and about tenne of the clocke, we raised Mompyne North-east eight leagues off at least; and after we raised this hill, we had neuer lesse then ten fathome, keeping the shoalding of Sumatra.

Mompyne.

The ninth in the morning, about five of the clocke, we weighed with the wind at South-east by South, and steered away North-west by North, & so Northerly as the Coast did lye: but we neuer came neerer the point of Mompyne, then three leagues and an halfe, or foure leagues, because of a ledge of rockes that lyeth two leagues of the Eastermost point of Sumatra, beeing the seuenth point of the Straights: and these ledge of rockes beare East and West one of another. We had no sooner weighed, but the water deepened to eight, nine, tenne, and so to foureteene fathomes. When you haue Mompyne South-east of you, then are you cleere of the rockes. At noone I obserued with my quadrant, and made her to be in one degree, thirtie nine minutes, and then Mompyne bore South-east Easterly of vs.

The tenth, about three of the clocke in the morning, we espyed an Iland that bore North North-west three leagues.

From noone till sixe of the clocke at night, we made our way North halfe a point Easterly sixe leagues: and from sixe till noone the eleuenth, wee made our way North eightene leagues, and wee were in the latitude of one degree to the Northward, hauing two Ilands, the Southermost bore South-west by West of vs seuen leagues off, and the Northermost bore West-ward South-west seuen leagues off, and then wee had five and twentie fathomes: all the night long, we had from twentie to five and twentie fathomes. I espyed land at top-mast head, West by North twelue leagues off, which was the high land of Bintan.

This Ile of Bintan.

From noone till sixe of the clocke at night, we made our way West by North seuen leagues, we had five and twentie fathome water, and then the high-land of Bintam bore West South-west fixe leagues off, and there are three little Ilands at the South-east end of Bintam.

The twelfth, we made our way North by East Easterly five leagues, and then we were in the latitude of one degree thirtie five minutes, hauing twentie fixe fathome, and the Northermost part of Bintam, West North-west tenne leagues: when foure glasses were running after noone, I espied at top-mast head an Iland that bore North-west Northerly nine leagues off.

From fixe of the clocke at night the thirteenth, till the foureteenth at noone, we to my iudgement, made our way North-west by North, in regard of the Current nine leagues: tenne glasses in the night we had it calme, and droue North North-west, and we should haue it deeper, and shoald a fathome at a cast, till we had but eleuen fathome, and then deeper till it came to fifteene<sup>10</sup> or sixteene fathome. From fixe at night, till the fifteenth at noone, we made our way by iudgement North North-east, Northerly tenne leagues; but at noone we made her to bee in foure degrees fortie eight minutes, and then we had thirtie fathome: at eight of the clocke we had an Iland bore North by West of vs, five leagues off the maine, being foure miles off, and then wee had twentie fixe fathome.

Latitude 4. degrees 35. min.

This great Iland, and the Rocks, beare North by West, and South by East one of another, and are foure miles in length, we perceiued in the night, being calme, to haue a great Current setting to the North-wards, and I iudged this Iland to stand in foure degrees thirtie five minutes. From noone til the sixth at night, we made our way North North-west halfe Northerly eight leagues, our sounding was thirtie and twentie five fathome, and then we had an other Iland bore West<sup>20</sup> by North of vs, not vnlike the former: we had five and twentie fathome at fixe of the clocke, five or fixe leagues off the maine: the Iland lieth about one league from the maine.

A sunken rock.

From the sixteenth at noone, till the seuenteenth at noone, we made our way North North-west twelue leagues; but as we were almost in the narrowest, we spied a sunken rocke in the faire way; so we fearing the worst, hauing eleuen fathome & one league of the maine, we haled it off North-East, and North-east by East, to get cleere of two little Ilands that are to the Eastward, and so we went to the East-ward of all. At noone we obserued, and made the ship to bee in five degrees fiftie foure minutes.

A little rocke.

From the seuenteenth at noone, till the eighteenth at noone, we made our way North-west, Westerly eight leagues. From the nineteenth at noone till the twentieth, wee made our way<sup>30</sup> North-west Northerly eight leagues: in the morning about seuen of the clocke, I saw a little Rocke, about three leagues off at the top-mast head, and as we came vp with it about noone, I went with the Skiffe to sound about it, and we had twelue fathome a stones throw off it: and when our Skiffs head was a shoare we had fixe fathomes and an halfe, vp and downe by the rock: it lieth betweene three or foure leagues of the Westermost point of the land, and beareth South-East Southerly a little; and about two leagues and a halfe from the Southermost land, or three, we had little wind Westerly, and variable, but for the most part Northerly.

From noone the twentieth, till the one and twentieth at noone, wee made our way North-west Northerly fixe leagues, with the wind Westerly and Northerly; we were faint to anchor twice in the night, because it was calme, and the Current setting to the South-ward, wee had<sup>40</sup> very faire shoaldings off, into foureteeen and into seuen or eight. From the one and twentieth at noone, till the two and twentieth at noone, we turned it alongst the shoare, with the wind Westerly, and then we had the low sandie point South of vs two leagues off.

August. 4.
They depart
from Patane for Syam.

The fourth of August at night, we weighed out of Patane road, about nine of the clocke, with the wind at South South-west, and we steered away North-west, and North-west by West, North-west by North: but by my iudgement, from nine till noone wee made our way North-west, halfe a point Northerly tenne leagues, and then the high land bore South-west of vs in the Roade. Our depths from three, to seuen, eight and, tenne fathome. From noone till fixe a clocke at night, we had tenne leagues, little wind at North-west and North and North-east, but we made our way North North-east one league: and from fixe till fixe in the morning, we made<sup>50</sup> our way North North-west halfe a point Northerly eight leagues, with the wind variable and Westerly; and then we espied land, that bore West North-west of vs tenne leagues off.

Latitude 8 degrees 7. min.

From fixe of the clocke in the morning, till noone the sixt day, wee made our way North North-west five leagues to our iudgement, and we obserued, and made the ship to be in eight degrees seuen minutes, and then the high land bore West and North tenne leagues off, and then we had seuenteeen fathome. From the sixt at noone till the seuenth at noone, wee had little wind and calme, we made our way North North-west, to my iudgement wee could not runne about fixe leagues, but we made it to be in eight degrees three minutes. From the seuenth at noone, till the eight, we had little wind, and variable round about, wee made our way North North-west eight leagues or tenne, our depths eighteeen and nineteene fathome. From the eighth, to<sup>60</sup> the ninth at noone, wee had little wind, and variable round about, and then we made the shippe to be in nine degrees fortie minutes; and then the Northermost great Iland bore West South-west, and the Southermost bore South-west. In the morning we saw two Ilands.

Latitude 9. degrees 40. min.

From the ninth to the tenth at noone, we had it calme, and went little or nothing the wind North.

Northerly, our depth one and twentie and two and twentie fathome. From the tenth to the eleuenth at noone, we had little or no wind, and went two leagues North North-west, we had it Northerly and Westerly, and our depths twenty and twentie one fathomes. From the eleuenth at noone to the twelfth, we had the wind variable and gusty round about, and we ran about eight leagues North by West, and the depth twenty sixe and twenty five fathome. From the twelfth at noone till the thirteenth, we made our way North by East twentie foure leagues, with the wind at South, and South South-west, and South-west, our depth twentie sixe and twentie eight fathom, seven or eight leagues off the shoare.

From the thirteenth to the foureteenth, we made our way North by West sixteene leagues, the wind South-west, our depths two and twentie, and five and twentie fathomes, five or sixe leagues from the shoare. From the foureteenth to the fifteenth, we made our way sixteene leagues North by West, with the wind Westerly, our depth nineteene, & twentie fathomes, sixe leagues off. From the fifteenth to the sixteenth at noone, we made our way North and by West tenne leagues, we had eight, nine, and tenne fathome, alongst the low land foure leagues off, then we bore vp to the East, and East South-east till midnight, and for an houre wee steered away East North-east, till we came into foure fathome, and then tooke in our sailes as fast as wee could, but presently we had but three fathome and a foote, before we could get in our sailes, so we anchored in three and a foot till the next day, and the water fell thirteene foot, and more, so that we had but sixe fathome and an halfe at low water, and then we laid out a warpe, and when she flected we warped into deepe water. The eighteenth we set saile, and haled it off into five fathome, where we anchored, hauing the Souther-most Iland South by East of vs, and the Eastermost East and by South, and the Riuer's mouth North of vs Westerly.

They arriue at Syam.

Nouemb. 1612.
They depart
from Syam.

The third of Nouember, about one of the clocke in the afternoone we weighed out of the bay, where we left our men, and graued our ship, and haled it off from the West to the South South-East, to goe cleare of the Iland, and so steered away.

The fourth at noone I made the ship to be in twelue degrees thirtie three minutes, hauing run in these three and twentie houres, but five and twenty leagues, and to my iudgement had made her way, one thing with an other counted, South by West, the wind Northerly.

On the eleuenth, we arriued at Patane. He was after this at Syam againe, and againe at Patane: and made a second Voyage from Masulipatan to Bantam, 1614. and thence to England, 1615. But his Iournall is so large, that I dare not expresse it. Note that he saith, that the Ile of S. Helena is an hundred leagues more to the West-ward, then is laid downe in Plats.

The twentieth of August 1615. they came before the Lizard. They spent in this whole Voyage foure yeares and about eight Moneths. Their actions and exploits in this Voyage are deliuered more fully by M. Floris, out of whose Iournall I haue taken the most remarkeable. For I thinke, these meere marine relations, are (though to some profitable) to the most tedious. For which cause I haue abridged this, to make way to the next, written by a Merchaut of long Indian experience, and full of pleasant varietie.

§. I.

The Voyage to Paleacatte, Petapoli, Masulipatan, Bantam, Patania, and Siam.

Auing couenanted and agreed with the Right Worshipfull the Gouvernour and Deputy of the East-Indian Societie, we embarked our selues in the Globe, the fift of Ianuary 1610. Stylo Anglia, and set saile for Grauesend: the fift of February we set saile from the Downes. The one and twentieth of May 1611. wee came into Saldania Bay, where wee found three ships, and two boates came aboard vs, one from Isaac le Maire, and the other from Henrike Brouwer. Much refreshing was not here to be had at this time of the yeare, by reason of great store of raine, being now their winter, the mountaines also couered with snow. Wee vsed great diligence in seeking of the roote Ningim, for which purpose the said two Holland ships had come thither, one being of Japan that first discovered the secret. But at this time the newe lease began only to peepe forth, that had we not receiued instructions, wee could not haue knowne it; the right and ripe time there.

thereof beeing December, January and February. It is called of these Inhabitants Cama.

Barter at the bay for hides.

We having filled our water, and refreshed our selves with eight Sheepe and twentie Near. Set saile out of the Bay, leauing behind vs the boat of Isaac le Maire with his sonne Jacob, who lay there to barter for hides and skinnies, and to make traine oyle; which was to continue there till December. To him we gaue letters for England. Neere Tena de Natar. Iune the tenth, wee were in great danger: a storme of thunder, lightning, wind and raine, almost violently thrust vs on shoare; but God mercifully and powerfully gaue vs vnexpected deliuerance.

August 1.
Zelon.
Negapatan.
No falsehood of Maps.

The first of August, we saw the land of Ceylon falling with Punta de Galle, and running along the coast. On the sixt we fell before Negapatan, beeing twentie eight miles (leagues) from our guesing, the Map in that place beeing very false. The like hath also happened to the Hollanders, which in the night might be very dangerous. Neither found we the Iland so broad as it is there laid. M. Mullineux layeth Punta de Galle in foure degrees, which lyeth in fixe. Towards euening we passed before the Road, and might see the Towne and houses very plainly.

Lanagapatan.
S. Thome.
Paleacatie.

The seuenth, wee passed Lanagapatan, where the Hollanders hauing a Factorie, are wearie because of little doings. On the eight, we came before Saint Thome, and on the ninth before Paleacatie, passing ouer the shallow being in length aboue a Musket shot, hauing but three fathome water. Here came two Boates aboard vs, one from the Sabander, another from the Hollanders. The tenth, the Sabanders men brought vs a Caul or conduct to come safely ashore. Whereupon I and Master Browne went ashore, but by the roughnesse of the Sea were turned ouer, yet (God be thanked) no man was drowned. The Sabander met vs, compassionating our mischance and appointed vs a house, promising vs to procure a Letter from the King to the Gouvernesse of Conda Maa.

Hollanders
triumphing in our way.

On the eleuenth, Iohn Van Wersicke the Dutch President on the Coast of Choromandell, shewed vs a Caul from the King of Narsinga, Wencapati, Raia, wherein was granted, that it should not be lawfull for any that came out of Europe to trade there, but such as brought Prince Maurice his Patent, and therefore desired our departure. We answered we had Commission from his Maiestie of England, and would therefore doe what we could. Hence arose high words, which the Sabander calmed, telling of the Gouvernesse her comming thither within three dayes.

On the seuenteenth, came Conda Maa, and Captaine Hippon, comming on shoare, wee were readie to goe to her, when we receiued word to the contrarie, and that the next day shee would send for vs. We suspected the Hollanders close dealing, and the next day sent to the Sabander (no man comming for vs) who answered the King, had made grant to the Hollanders, and wee must goe to him (the dispatching of which businesse would haue cost vs two monethes space, and hazarded the Monson for Patane) if we would procure libertie. The Hollanders also had made readie two Elephants to send to the King. Wherefore we resolved to prosecute our Voyage for Petapoli and Masulipatan.

Petapoli.

Masulipatan.

New King.

The twentieth, we arriued before Petapoli, and the Gouverneur sent vs a Caul. Wee agreed with him for three thirds per Centum, Custome and sent goods on shoare, resolving that Master Lucas and Master Browne should stay there: and that I should goe to Masulipatan, where was a better Road for the ship. Thither we came on the last of August, and Zaladar Chan brought vs a Caul. We agreed to send a present to Mir Sumela (a great Officer vnder the King, which farmeth out his Reuenues) to Condapoli, in regard of the shifts of the vnder Officers. On the twentieth of January, deceased Cotubara King of Badaya, or Lolongana, and of Masulipatan, and great tumults were feared. But the wisdom of Mir Masunim preuented the same, presently electing Mahumad Unim Cotubara, sonne to the Brother of the deceased (who had left no children behind him) a yong-man of great hope. His Vncle had put all in the hands of the Persians, but this sheweth him selfe contrarie, and an Enemy to Mir Sumela the fountaine of Tyrannie.

Gouernours
perfidie.

Golconda.

Bantam.

The Gouverneur dealt treacherously with mee, in a bargaine of Cloth and Lead for Launces; saying, he had agreed with me for foure thousand Pagodes, (intending by that coozenage to raise the Custome agreed at foure per Centum to twelue) alleaging for reason, that hee was a Mir, and that he was borne of Mahomets Posteritie, whose words must bee beleeued before a Christians. I not knowing how to deale with this Knaue, the time not suffering to send to the new King at Golconda, seeing no meanes to end with friendship, resolved to practise enmitie: but at last by intercession of other Morres, we ended in a kind of agreement. Hauing also cleared at Petapoli, we hauing a good Monson departed for Bantam, and arriued there the fixe and twentieth of Aprill 1612. We found the Dutch readie to depart thence for Iacatra, by reason of the Gouvernours new exactions. But we hauing no house there, after some contesting, agreed with him for three per Centum Custome.

Factory at Succadania in Borneo.

Patane.

By order of David Middleton, a Factorie was settled at Succadania, and continued by Master Spalding, but it seemeth (as things are carryed) rather to priuate then publike benefit. The first of Iune, we set saile from Bantam, and on the two and twentieth came into the Road of Patane, where we found the Bantam a ship of Enkhusen, of whom wee learned the manners of the Countrey. On the fixe and twentieth, we went on shoare in great state, taking with vs a pre-present of about sixe hundred Rials of eight, to accompanie the Kings Letter. Wee were well receiued according to the manner of the Countrey, the Letter being laid in a Bason of Gold, and carried vpon an Elephant with Minstrels, many Lances and little Flagges.

Letter.
Queene of Patane.

The Queenes Court was sumptuously prepared, the Letter read, and free Trade granted vs, paying such duties as the Hollanders did. Wee departed from the Court without sight of the Queene, and were brought to Dato Laxmann the Sabander and Officer appointed for Strangers, where a Banquet of Fruits was set before vs: and thence to the Oran-caya Sirnona, and there also did eate something. The next day the Queene sent vs meate and fruits aboard.

10 The third of Iuly, departed hence a Dutch Pinnasse called the Grey-hound for Iapon, the Masters Mate thereof was the same man which had brought the Letter from William Adams to the English at Bantam: by whom we sent the Companies Letters to Master Adams, which he promised to deliuer with his owne hands. This otherwise wee could not haue done; for those of Iapon are at enmitie with this place, and haue burned Patane twice within these five or sixe yeares.

20 Much adoe we had to get leaue to build a Ware-house here, fire-free, which we did hard by the Dutch house in a place assigned vs thirtie fathome in length, twentie in breadth: the House eight fathome long, and foure broad. But their demands seemed very vnreasonable, amounting, besides former charges, to foure thousand Rials of eight, whereunto yet in hope of future benefit we yeelded. Sicknesse also much afflicted vs, as if the plague had beene in our ship: and Captaine Hippon dyed the ninth of Iuly. Whose Successor was nominated in the Boxe N. 1. Master Browne; but he being dead before, the Boxe N. 2. was opened, wherein Thomas Essington was named, and did succeed. Hereunto was added losse by Theeues, which like resolute Dissolutes came into the house, a Lampe burning, and stole money out of my Chest, two hundred eightie three Rials of eight, and other goods; fiftene persons sleeping in the house, and a great blacke Dogge, and Watch kept in the yard, which made suspition of some of our owne, but we could neuer learne any certaintie.

Death of Captaine Hippon.
Capt Essington.

30 I and John Persons, and sixe more were left here in Factorie; and the ship departed the first of August for Syam. I would haue written to Syam, of my ill Market of Lawnes, but could not send by water, and by land no lesse then foure together would trauell for feare of Tygres, and many Riuers they must passe, which made their demands to passe so farre, that I was forced to waite better oportunitie. In September the King of Ior ouer-ranne the Suburbes of Pahan, burning all before him, and likewise Campon Sina, which caused great dearth in Pahan. The cause of our want of vent here (where foure yeares before I had seene such quicknesse, as if the World would not haue prouided sufficient) is the Portugalls bringing to Malacca the wonted quantitie, and the Hollanders filling Bantam and the Moluccas, as also the Trade of *Moore*s at Tanasserin and Syam, besides Tarangh a Hauen new found out by Keda; the Guzerates, and another from Negapatan and we, helping to cloy the Market; so that the rumour is sufficient to keepe downe the price for ten yeares. I cannot at this present make five per Cento, which haue made foure of one. Thus is mans wilddome disappointed. I resolved to send a Cargason for Macassar, sending John Persons as Chiefe, in a Iuncke of Empan, October the eight.

40 On the ninth, arriued two Iunckes from Siam, in one of which was sent mee a Letter from Master Essington and Master Lucas of their trouble and small likelihood of sale, besides the former causes, the Countrey being filled with warres; those of Cambois, Laniam, and Iagoman, preparing against Syam.

Cambois, Laniam, & Iagoman.

50 The five and twentieth, departed hence the Iunckes for Borneo, Iambi, Iaua, Macassar, Iortan and other places, among whom was the Iuncke of Orancaya Raya Indramouda for Bantam, and thence to Iortan, Amboyna, and Banda, and backe to Macassar. I cannot imagine what the Hollanders meane to suffer these Maleysians, Chinesians, and *Moore*s of those Countries, and to assist them in their free Trade thorow all the Indies, and forbid it their owne Seruants, Countrymen and Brethren, vpon paine of death and losse of goods. Surely a token of great ignorance or enuie, suffering Turkes and Heathens to grow rich, rather then their owne Countrymen should get their liuing. Surely a great ingratitude, and a token that Gods punishment is comming vpon them.

60 The eleuenth of Nouember, the Globe arriued from Syam, hauing beene eight dayes in the way. They had arriued in the Road of Syam the fiftenth of August, and cast Anchor at three fathome high water: but the next day the water ebbing thirteene houres together they had but seuen foot muddie ground, and therefore not very hurtfull. They remoued further off, where they had three fathome at a low water, being foure miles (leagues) from the Barre. The Townelyeth some thirtie leagues vp along the Riuer, whether they sent newes of their arriuall. The Sabander and the Gouernour of Mancock (a place scituated by the Riuer) came backe with the Messengers to receiue his Maiesties Letters, but chiefly for the presents expected. Captaine Essington and Master Lucas went with them to the Towne, where the seuententh of September they came before the King, who promised free Trade, and gaue euery one a little golden Cup, and a little piece of clothing. The Mandorins (Officious Officers) would haue interuerted the Kings command for their owne couetousnesse, taking at their owne prices what they please, and paying when they are pleased with Bribes, with worse demeanure then in any other parts of the Indies (though the rest bad enough) till complaint being made to the King, they were charged not to molest them; and the goods were carried to the house which the King had assigned, being of bricke, the best in Siam, neare to that of the Hollanders. Now was the time of raines, and the countrey couered with water.

Tempest.

Road of Siam a safe harbour, but in a South South-west wind.

Bantam Patane and Siam, three principall places of Trade

The fixe and twentieth of October, arose such stormes, that old folkes had not there seene the like, renting vp trees by the roots, and blowing downe the Kings monument, which hee had erected to his Father. The ship hardly escaped by the diligence of Master Skinner and Samuel Huys, casting out a third anchor, being driuen, notwithstanding her two anchors, from sixe fathome to foure, and not passing an English mile from the land. Master Skinner was beaten from the anchor-stocke, but very strangely recovered. Fiue men were drowned; one after the rest, whom they supposed deuoured of a Whale, which they saw soone after they had seene him. This storme lasted foure or five houres, and then followed a smooth sea, as if there had beene no tempest. A tempest yet continued aboard the ship, by reason, as was reported, of the reasonlesse malterly Master, who was therefore apprehended, and Skinner placed in his roome, whereby that weather also calmed. As for their Trade, they were too much becalmed, this being the third place of Trade in all the Indies, and so farre distant from Bantam and Patane. The cause whereof is this.

¶ II.

Relations of strange Occurrents in Pegu, Siam, Ioor, Patane, and the Kingdomes adiacent.

See his Pegu story in my Pilgrimage.

Kings of Tangu and Arracan sharers of Pegu.

Siriangh.

Iockommaway a Traytor.

Iayaders insolence.

SIAM hath been a mightie Kingdome and ancient, since subdued and tributary to Pegu, which yet continued not long. For the King of Siam dying, left two sonnes, which were brought vp in the Kings Court of Pegu. But flying from thence to Siam, the eldest called in the Maleyan language, Ra'api, or the Fiery King, and by the Portugals the Blacke King, let vp himselfe as King: against whom the King of Pegu sent his son the Prince, who was slaine in these warres, and hath beene occasion of the destruction of the whole Kingdome, and many millions of Peguan liues. For the King sore griued for the death of his sonne, caused his chiefe Peguan Lords and Souldiers (himselfe being of the kindred of the Brama's) to bee slaine. This caused great perturbation, diuers tributary Kings (whereof hee had twentie) falling daily from him: which at the last encouraged this Blacke King to make warre against him, going to the Citie of Vnxa or Pegu, before which he lay some two moneths, without doing any thing; he brake vp his siege and returned to Siam. But the King of Pegu not long after, because of the great dearth and death, gaue ouer himselfe, and all his treasure, into the hands of the King of Tangu; to preuent also falling into the hands of the King of Arracan, comming against him with a mightie power. This King of Arracan easily made himselfe Master of the Towne and Countrey, almost emptie and famished. Thinking to goe into Tangu: That King sent Embassadors, offering to deliuer vnto him certaine portions of the treasures of Pegu, the White Elephant, and the Kings daughter (both which I haue seene in Arracan, Anno 1608.) as also the King of Pegu, or else to kill him (as afterwards it happened that the King of Tangu slew him with a Pilon, wherewith they stampe their Rice, as being free against any flauing.) In this manner came this mightie Empire to ruine, so that at this day there is no remembrance of it. The King of Arracan gaue the Towne or Fort of Siriangh, lying vpon the same Riuier of Pegu, in keeping to the Portugals, especially to Philip de Britto de Nicote, to whom hee gaue the name of Xenga, that is, Honor, which honor Xenga did after requite, taking his sonne prisoner some three or foure yeeres after, and ransomed him at eleuen hundred thousand Tangans, and ten Galeas of Rice; who yet also domineereth and careth for no bodie.

Thus by Pegu's destruction was Siam receiued, and hath since brought in subiection the Kingdomes of Cambaya, Laniah, Iagomai, Lugor, Patane, Teneserim and diuers others. Anno 1605. the Blacke King deceased without issue, and left his Kingdome to his brother, called the White King, a couetous man, but enioying his kingdomes in peace: he dyed Anno 1610. leaving diuers children behind him. Hence much alteration: For lying in his death-bed, hee caused his eldest sonne to be slaine, being a yong man of great hope, at the instigation of one Iockommaway, one of the principall Lords of Siam, who hauing many slaues, thought to make himselfe King.

This present King was the second sonne of the White King, who not long after dispatched that Traytor, which had amongst other slaues, two hundred and eightie Iapanders. These thinking to reuenge their Masters death, and to atchieue some memorable exploit, ran together to the Court of this new King, possessed themselues of King and Court (being without suspition) and compelled

10 pelled him to deliuer foure of the principall Nobles to be slaine, as causes of their Masters death. And hauing sometime vsed him at their pleasure, they compelled him to subscribe with his owne blood, and to giue some of the chiefe Palapos or Priests for hostages, to such agreement as they propounded, and so departed with great treasure after much violence, the Siamites not being able to right themselves. Vpon this occasion, the kingdomes of Cambaya and Laniangh rebelled, as 10 also one Banga de Laa a Peguan. And the King of Laniangh came the last yeere into Siam, within three dayes iourney of the Towne of Odiya, hoping to find the Countrey still entangled with these illuish Iaponian broyles. But they being departed, the King of Siam came forth to meete him, which the other durst not abide. The two other Kings are said to haue ioyned league to 10 come together in Aprill, to dispossesse this yong King, being about two and twentie yeeres of age, which yet without treason of his owne, they are not likely to effect. Once, it was our hard happe to hit vpon these bad times so vnfitting for Trade.

Rebellion.

Oudiya.

We resolu'd that the ship should winter here in Patanie, forced thereto by diuers causes. The one and thirtieth of December, the Queene accompanied with aboue fixe hundred Prawes, went to sport her selfe: shee lay first at Sabrangh, where we went to salute her, hauing both sight and speech with her, in company of the Hollanders: Shee was a comely old woman, threescore yeeres of age, tall and full of Maieftie; in all the Indies we had seene few like her. Shee had in company her Sister (which was next heire) and her yonger sisters little daughter, which hath been married to Raia Siack, brother to the King of Ioor. This her sister, commonly called the yong Queene, was yet an vnmarried Virgin, about fixe and fortie yeeres of age. After we had had some conference with her, shee let fall the curten, intimating thereby, that wee should depart, signifying that next day we should come againe; which wee did, and were well entertained. There were 20 twelue women and children to dance, which I haue not seene better performed in the Indies. Then were all the Gentilitie commanded to dance, or at least make shew thereof: which caused no small laughter. We and the Hollanders must doe likewise, and the Queene thereat reioyc'd. She had not been out of her house in seuen yeeres before, till this going to hunt wilde Buffes and Bulles, whereof there is great abundance. As shee passed along with her traine betwixt our house and the ship, we saluted her with some Peeces from the ship, and Musket shot on shoare.

Queene of Patanie goeth a hunting.

They had speech with her.

In this winter of Nouember and December, the water, by continuall raine, was higher then 30 had been in the memery of man, so that many beasts died, many houses were driuen away, and much harme done. The five and twentieth of Ianuary, we had newes by a Dutch ship from Siam, that Master Lucas had sold more then halfe his goods, and that the King had bought a great parcell thereof: neither would he suffer the Officers to carry away the goods, with a pretext of the Kings name, without a testimoniall from the King. We had also newes from Keda, that the Portugals had come with fiftene hundred men from Saint Thome, and taken the Hollanders house in Paleacate, slaine their men, and carried away the goods. In March I sent the ship for Siam with more goods.

The King of Pahan married the yonger sister of the Queene of Patane, whom shee hauing not seene in twentie eight yeeres, hauing requested the same by often solemne Embassies, and not obtaining; hath made stay of all the Iunkes that came from Siam, Cambaya, Bordelongh, Lugor, or any other places laden with Rice for Pahan, and sent forth all her power by water, consisting of about seuentie sailes, with some foure thousand men, vnder the command of Maha Raia, Datoe Bessar, and Orancayo Sirmora, with order to bring her sister hither, either in friendship or by force, so that Pahan shall haue much to doe by reason of the great dearth, the burning of his house, Rice and barnes; as also the warres of Ioor, who as is said, maketh great preparation to goe in his owne person for Pahan; and the King of Borneo prepareth on the other side to their succour.

In Aprill 1613. here arriued diuers Iunkes from Cambaya and China. In May I receiued letters from Siam, and good newes of sale, and of the Globes arriuall. He was busie to send a Cargason of goods for Japan. Seeing good to be done with China Commodities, I tooke vp three thousand 50 Rials of eight of the Queene at interest, for three or foure Moneths, allowing fixe per Centum to the Queene, and one per Centum to the Treasurer. We receiued ill newes from Bantam, that Campochina had twice been burnt, the great English house also full of cloath, and that of the Hollanders with great loile: of a great English ship at Pulo Panian much distressed, and great mortalitie. There came newes also, that the Acheners had besieged Ioor.

The Trades-Increase.

Iuly the twelfth, here arriued the King of Pahan, with his Wife the Queenes sister, and two 60 Sonnes, much against his will, leauing his countrey in great pouertie, famine, fire, and warre, hauing ioyned conspiracie. He brought newes that the Acheners had taken Ioor, and carried all the Ordnance, Slaues, and other things away with them; Raia Bounson with his children were taken prisoners, and the King of Ioor fled to Bintam. It was besieged nine and twentie dayes. Some Hollanders also, whose ship was then at Ioor, were there taken and slaine. None of the Grandes went to entertaine this King of Pahan, onely all the dogs were killed for his sake, because he can endure none. He tooke our shooting as he passed by vs in his honour very kindly, desiring vs to visit him, and to trade in his Countrey.

also of the death of Sir Henry Middleton on the foure and twentieth of May, as was thought by griefe for the most part, the Trade-increase lying there on ground without Mast, with three and thirtie men the greatest part sicke: the ship being sheathed on the one side, and not on the other. In her had decaled an hundred English, and more Chineses which wrought for wages, and eight Dutch, by some strange sickenesse. Captaine Schor had taken the Castle and Iland of Solor, with great quantitie of Sandalwood. In the Moluccos also they had done much on the Spanyard, and a hot warre was likely to ensue. Iuly the one and thirtieth, came the King of Paban to our house with great state, making great promises of kind entertainment in his Countrey.

August the first, the Queene sent for vs to the Court, where was made a great feast in honour of the King of Paban. There was also plaid a Comedie by women after the Iauan manner, appa-<sup>10</sup> relled antike like, very pleasant to behold. On the ninth, the King of Paban departed, hauing been here a mocking stocke to the Patanees: but the Queenes Sister would not leaue him, but returned backe with him; in lieu of getting great presents, hauing spent almost all shee had. On the sixteenth, I receiued a letter from Thomas Bret at Macassar of a bad Market, and that John Persons was fallen frantike: and that they had bought a Iunke with purpose to haue come away, but that in the meane time the Darling came thither, beeing full of cloathing to settle a Facto-<sup>10</sup> rie there.

September the eighteenth, arriued here Raia Indra Monda, which had gone from hence, O-<sup>20</sup> ctober the twentieth: he had been at Macassar, and thence to Banda, where hee made a good Market. He brought about two hundred stockes Mace, and a great parcell of Nutmegs. Hee brought me a letter from Richard Welden. By him I learned the State of Banda; the Generall Pe-<sup>20</sup> ter de Bor, had ministred seuerer iustice, hanging some for sleeping in the watch, on a Gallows hard by the Castle: which caused diuers to runne to the Bandesians, and ten were turned Moorees; neither could they of the Castle by any meanes recouer them. Nor haue they of the Castle any command at all ouer the Bandesians: onely they make the Iunkes to ride vnder the Castle, as also the ships, so commanding the Sea, but not daring to giue a bad word on land to the Bandesians. The three and twentieth, the Globe arriued from Siam, and I receiued a letter from M. Lucas, that he had no newes from the Cargason sent to Iagomai, because the passages were stopped by reason of the warres betweene the people of Awa and of Laniangh. The King of Awa is said to haue taken Siriangh, and to haue caused the Xenga to be slaue. The King of Siam expects<sup>30</sup> him with great forces, keeping good watches on his borders. I payd the Queene her debt in gold.

October the fourth, beeing the Moorees first day of Lent, about eight of the clocke in the mor-<sup>40</sup> ning, arose a mightie fire in the Towne, or rather the Fort and Court of Patania, the cause was this: Datoe Besar and Datoe Laxmannah dwelling neere to each other, and beeing (except Raia Shey) the richest in Slaues of Iauonians: it chanced, this Datoe Besar had been threatned by his Iauonian slaues, that they would kill him, Laxmannah, Raia Suterbangh, and others, which at last came to their eares. Whereupon Datoe Besar calling in his slaues, examined the busines, which by them was denied. Notwithstanding he caused two which were most suspected to be bound, which the Pongonla of the slaues would not suffer, who was thereupon by the said Besar thrust<sup>40</sup> through with his Cryse or Dagger. The Iauonian slaues enraged hereat, had laid hold on their Lord, but that his other slaues freed him. Their furie neuerthelesse slew all which came in their way, and set fire on their houses. The Iauan slaues of Laxmannah, seeing their Countrey men in trouble, in sight of their Master, and in spight of his threats, came to them, set all on fire: and be-<sup>50</sup> ing in all about an hundred persons, ranne to the great gate called Punta Gorbangh, setting all on fire on both sides as they went, so that the whole Towne, except some fewe, as the Queenes Court, Orancaio Sirmora, Datoe Bandara, and the Meskita, was burned. And the Iauans going a-<sup>60</sup> longst the streete, tooke the best bond-women that they found, along with them, and stayed till one of the clocke after dinner, domineering, none daring to come at them. Wee meane while were not without feare in our quarter, they threatning to fall on our house: wherefore (with the Hollanders together) we kept strong watch, sending aboard for as many armed as might be, which came in very fit time. For they beeing landed, and things set in order, we resolved to go to visit them, and to stoppe their way; which happened euen iust as they were comming down-<sup>60</sup> wards. But vnderstanding by their spies of our strength and comming towards them, they retired thwart to the fields, and fled to Quale bouca, and so forwards to Bordolough, Sangora, and into the Countrey. Thus we, without harme receiued, got the name of Defenders of strangers. The Iauans were followed afterwards to little purpose, three or foure sicke men beeing taken prisoners: what became of the rest was not knowne at our departure. This is the third time that Patania hath been burned, twice by the Iapanders, and once by the Iauans, a thing strange and almost incredible.

On the one and twentieth, we tooke our leaue of the Queene, which gaue to mee, and to Ma-<sup>60</sup> ster Effington a golden Cryse. We left William Ebert in the house with Robert Litlemord and Ralph Cooper, with letters also for M. Lucas at Siam. The same day arriued the viuhoped for Hope from Iohor, where arriuing and going on shoare, before they could returne aboard, the Armada<sup>of</sup> of Achen was before the Towne to besiege it. Wherefore they sent a letter aboard for thirtie armed men to be sent by land, and to come as high as they could in the Riuer with the shippe to fight against the Acheners, which by reason of the shoalds they could not do high enough to hinder them, but that after twentie nine dayes the Towne was rendred by composition. Thus remained twenty three Hollanders prisoners, and twelue came aboard, where none of command were left, but the Masters mate, and one Assistant. These resolved for Patania, but encountered with a storme, were driuen on the Corall ground of Borneo, and were by a larger wind put thence vpon Pulo Condor. It being now impossible to recouer Patania, they sought refreshing in the Warellas, where they had a good Bay, but an ill Kitchen, the people being their enemies. They came to Patania with eightene men, the most lying in pitifull plight in their Cabbins. Shee brought seuentie thousand Rials of eight, and twentie nine packs with Indie cloth.

20 THe next morning we set saile. The five and twentieth we were with the Southerliest Islands of Ridangh (which are about eightene or twentie, lying in fixe degrees) and in the Euening by the Isles of Capas, which are three little Isles, lying some thirteene leagues from the former, and two from the Continent. The fixe and twentieth, we saw Pulo Tyaman, South and South by East from Capas twentie eight league. The nine and twentieth, being calme, we came to Pulo Tingi. If you keepe at eightene fathome, you neede feare nothing but what you may see.

The first of Nouember, we saw the point of Iantana or Iohor, and the Mount vpon the Island of Bintam, and the next Morning came in sight of Pedra Branca: and about ten of the clocke came to the dangerousriffe which falls off from the point of Iohor foure leagues into the Sea. John Huggens describes this shoald very well, which we passed not without danger, hauing the point with the three little Islands West South-west from vs. It is good to keepe towards the Sea, till you bring the little Isles shut in with the point of Iohor, and Pedra Branca open with the Ile of Bintam. Pedra Branca is a rocke full of fowle, and be-dunged, which causeth the toppe thereof to be white, and giues it that name. Till the seuenth, we were euery day busie, turning vp with the flood till we were past the Riuer of Iohor, and came about two leagues from Sinca pura. On the eighth, diuers Prawes came aboard vs hard by the straight, being of the Salettes vnder the King of Iohor, which for the most part keep in their Prawes, with their Wiues and Children, and liue on fishing. By these we vnderstood, that the King of Achen had sent Raia Bonny Soe, younger brother of the King of Iohor, backe againe with great honour, attended with thirtie Prawes and two thousand Acheners, to rebuild the Fort and Citie of Iohor, with good store of Ordnance, and other necessities, hauing married him to his Sister, and that he should bee set vp in the old Kings place. Here we tooke a Pilot to carry vs through the Straights.

The nineteenth of December, we arriued at Masulipatan, where we found an English shippe, and two Hollanders. We vnderstood that Mirsidardi was out of place, and that Atmachan and Busebuleran did gouerne. The English ship was the James, and was sent expressely to second vs in our Voyage. M. Marlow, M. Davis, M. Gurney, and M. Cob came aboard vs, and deliuered vs Letters. The one and twentieth I went on shoare, where we were met by Wentacadra, sonne to Busebuleran, with the Sabandar and other Moores, and were well receiued. They gaue vs diuers tesseriffes, and to the Director Warner and me, to each a faire horse, which I refused, suspecting their treachery, but was compelled to accept it. I took a Caul at foure per Centum, & landed goods.

30 The twentie fift of Ianuary, the James departed for Petapoli: and on the seuenth of February, from thence for Bantam. On the eighteenth of February, I went to Narsapur Peca, and the nineteenth, the ship was brought into the Riuer drawing nine foot three quarters, and hauing ten and an halfe, contrary to the reports of some, which wished no good to vs. The three and twentieth, I arriued againe at Masulipatan, and dispatched the Peon for Surat, writing to M. Aldworth. That day arriued a Nauette from Pegu, wherein came Cornelius Franke, by whom we vnderstood, that it was certaine that the King of Awa had taken the Fort of Siriangh, and slaine all the Portugals, and that Xenga or Philip de Britto, was either spitted or scalded. This was done in March last. The King had giuen order for rebuilding the old Towne, calling all the Peguers together, and making many faire promises. Himselfe went forward toward Tenesserin, where Banga de la came to him with fiftie thousand Peguers, who before had been vnder the King of Siam. The Moores in Masulipatan reioice greatly at this conquest, hoping to get the trade of Pegu into their hands againe, and prepare two ships to send thither in September. In March came newes of eleven ships arriued at Goa, eight from China, and three from Malacca, which brought downe the price of the Market, in a good houre for me, which had almost dispatched before.

Newes from Pegu.

In Aprill 1614. Atmachan departed for Golanda to giue vp his accounts, the yeare come to an end. It was well for him, the King hauing depoled the great Treasurer, and giuen his office to Malick Tusar, Atmachans friend: and well for vs, theie Gouvernours Debts beeing whiles they continue their place; otherwise doubtfull.

Tho. Effingtons
sudden death.

The eighteenth of May, at five in the euening dyed Captaine Effington of a sudden heat, he had eaten his Dinner at the Table. He had some Biles about him, which at that time of the are very common: one great one on his shoulder, which would not breake, supposed the of that heate. I went and set the ship in the best order I could, they all refusing other but me, which thought it an abasement to tread in the steps of my vnder Merchant. I come it for that time to Master Skinner, holding all in hope that they might doe their best endea and returned to Masulipatan, where I found three persons which said that they were sent Letters from Obyama Queene of Paleacatte, Iaga Raia Gouvernour thereabout, and of Sau mee, Apa Condaia Secretarie of the Great King Wencatadraia, wherein they sent me word if I would come thither, they would grant me a place right ouer against the Fort of Paleacatte with all such Priuiledges as we should desire, and other great promises besides. But I considered how I and the Iames had beene entertayned there, could beleue but little: yet at last we thought that one of them should stay with me, and the rest should depart with one of my folkes should carrie the Letters to the aforesaid persons; as also to the King; wherein I repeated entertainment which we had at Paleacatte. And if now it pleased him that we should come to his Countrey, then to send vs his Caul or safe Conduet, to which we might trust.

His offers.

The nine and twentieth of Iuly, arriued foure persons as Embassadors, with my man from the Great King of Narsinga or Velur, bringing me a Caul with his Abestiam, (with a white Cloth where his owne hand is printed in Sandall or Saffron) as also one from the Queene of Paleacatte, and diuers Letters from Iaga Raia, Tima Raia, Apacondaia and others. The Letter was written vpon a leafe of Gold, wherein hee excused the former fault done at Paleacatte, desiring that now we would come into his Countrey, and chuse a place to our liking, and that there we should build a house or Castle according to our owne liking, with priuiledges. He gaue me a Towne of about foure hundred pound of yearly reuenue, with promise to doe more at my coming thither. The Hollanders had wrought much against their words were not now in such force; the Inhabitants grieuing to see euery yeare ships passe by without any profit to them, and therefore filling the King with complaint procuring these friendly offers. I kept them with mee, allowing their daily charges till they should be come into the Road, then to consider further. My man Wengali had beene in person to the King and spoken with him, the King laying his hand on his head, and presenting him to the Tellerisse.

Ouer-flowings

In August, was in Narsapur Peta and thereabouts, a greater ouer-flowing then ha beene in nine and twentie yeares; that whole Salt hills, Townes, and Rice draue away, many thousands of men and cattell were drowned, the water being three yards above the high-way. In Golconda (which hath a branch running into this great Riuer, dry in the Summer) were about foure thousand houses washed away. Two stone Bridges, one of nineteene; the other of fifteene arches (as artificially made as the like may scarcely bee seene in Europe, in my opinion, at least three fathome high above water) were three foot vnder water, and sixe arches of that of nineteene washed away, beeing a Bridge which might well bee compared with Rocheſter.

King of Nar-
*singa*s death: & his wiues burning with him.

The fourth of October, the ship being sheathed came ouer the Barre without hurt, before by the foule weather. And now I called freshly for my Debts, and writ thereof to the Court, telling them that I would be payd the interest also; whereupon they sent Mir Mahumad Raza and the Sabander, to looke that I be contented. The three and twentieth of the ship came into the Roade of Masulipatan, and I tooke order for shipping the goods. The five and twentieth came newes of the death of Wencatadrappa King of Velur, after many yeares raigne, and that his three Wiues (of whom Obyama Queene of Paleacatte was one) burned themselves quicke with the Corps. Great troubles are feared; the Hollanders are afraid of their Cattle new built in Paleacatte. Soone after came sixtie sixe Souldiers to strengthen the Lion.

Iames for Pa-
tania.

The first of Nouember, arriued the Lion from Bantam, which brought newes of the death of the Bantam in the Tessell, and of the White Lion at Saint Helena; of the Iames at Bantam and going thence for Patania. I seeing the Gouvernours trifling delayes for his returne and being in danger thereby not to returne this yeare, resolved to carrie him or his sonne in the Custom house aboard the ship, how dangerous soeuer the attempt seemed, the whole Company promising therein to liue and dye with me. Whereupon I gaue order for the Boat to go and to bring sixe Muskets wrapped vp in the Sailes, and so to lye in the Custom House should see our oportunitie. Moreouer, seeing we may not bring any weapons on shore, I gaue order that all our folkes should stay within the House, and come to mee in the Custom House as I should send for them five, to take hold of the Souldiers Pikes, that were of the G or his sonnes Guard, and so presently to enter the Custome House, which standeth hard by the Riuer side, and then to shut the doore. So might we be able to carry them into the Boat, before the alarme be knowne in the Towne: wee hauing them in the Boate, wee needed not to feare. We kept it secretly, yet had the Hollanders intelligence, who esteemed it a bragge, and so reuealed it not.

The one and twentieth of Nouember, the Gentiles had a Feast, which Solemnitie happens thrice a yeare, when the New Moone commeth on a Monday: in which both Men and Women come to wash themselues in the Sea, esteeming thereby to haue great indulgence. The Bramenes also and Cometis doe the same. Gentile Feast.

10 On the foure and twentieth, I demanded my money of the Gouvernour very angrily, hauing stayed seuen monethes longer then bargaine, asking also Mir Mabumad Rasa, why he did not helpe me according to the Letters of the Court: who laughingly answered, they would talke with me at the Custome House when my anger was ouer. I replied, I would no longer bee made a Foole, I would shew my selfe a Captaine of the King of England, who are not accustomed to such Knauish dealing. Thus went I to the Custome House, where I found the Gouvernours Sonne with a small Guard, his Souldiers hauing set their Launces ouer against the Custome House, it now being also high-water, as if God had offered Occasions fore-looke. Wherefore I sent home (as was before agreed) for Master Skinner and the rest, (leauing only three to looke to the house) who presently came & laid hold on the Pikes, and entring the Custome house, shut the 20 doore. In the mean time I held Wencatadra arrested by the armes, til two or three came to me, who taking him in their armes carried him into the Boat, into which I presently leaped, and beeing followed of the rest, put off from shoare, rowing away: so that before his Father and Mir Mabumad Rasa could come to the Custome House, wee were in full rowing. But in regard that it blew hard, and that we were forced to row vnder land, within the length of two Cables to keep the depth of the Channell; they came with might and mayne to pursue vs: some comming hard by the Boate, but were out-rowed. Some met vs in front which had indangered vs, but discharging three Muskets we frightened them, and carryed away our prey in sight of three thousand people, being much past the Barre before they could come to it, and came safe aboard. I had giuen order to George Chancey, to stay alshoare with three men more to giue a reason of this Hostilitie, & to get in the Debts: but he, contrary hereto, going forth of the house to see this Enterprize, was by some vnruely fellowes set vpon and thorowly beaten: which comming to the Gouvernours eare, hee tooke him into his protection, fearing his sonne might pay for it.

Valorous and strange attempt of the English.
The Gouvernours sonne carried Prisoner aboard.

In the after-noon came from shoare Werner Van Berchem the Hollander, with the Kings Interpreter, to demand the cause of this action, whom I answered that they knew it well enough, and I had also left my vn-er Merchant on shere to tell them: of whose hard vsage vnderstanding, I made as though I would be reuenged on Wencatadra, but by Van Berchems intercession remitted it, conditionally to execute the same, hanging him at the yard (which he writ to his Father) if any of my men should be wronged. I prohibited also any Boat to come aboard without a Letter from George Chancey, else would I set them all before the Matt. The Hollanders Van Berchem 40 with the Secretarie came aboard againe on the seuen and twentieth, offering the Gouvernours owne Debt: I demanded no more but his and Callopas whose Suretie hee was, and for the rest, that he as Governor should send such as refused to pay aboard; & I would hold my selfe satisfied. Berchem also protested against me of all dammages, which they had bound, or might beare, because of my hostilitie; to which protest I answered by writing, shewing the nullitie thereof, and their ship the same night departed for Patane. In the meane-while, Wencatadra remayned aboard without eating or drinking. For he being a Bramene, may neither eate nor drinke in any mans house but what he hath dressed himselfe; which made mee so to pittie him, that I offered if any two Moores of qualitie would come aboard in his place, I would let him goe on shoare. But none would vndertake it, and he must continue his fast. The Gouvernour therefore payd his and 50 Callopas Debt, and made all the rest to pay except Miriapenk and Datapa which were in Golconda, and I sent backe my Prisoner, the thirtieth of Nouember.

Superstition of Bramenes.

After this agreement diuers Moores and others came aboard to visit mee, promising to write to the King the truth of these proceedings, desiring me not to hurt any Moores ships. I answered I was for this time satisfied: but let them hereafter take heed of giuing like cause, and haue better eares for Englishmens complaints. I also sent Letters to the King at Golconda to the same purpose for quicker iustice. I dispatched likewise the Embassadors of Velur, in respect of the troubles there, and my short stay denying fit oportunitie: yet I left Letters with them for the first English ships, with my best aduice.

The seuenth of December, Master Chancey came aboard with the rest, and next night I put to 60 Sea, hauing offered to come and take a friendly fare-well on shoare: but the Gouvernour fearing I would write of his dealing by those Moores, refused, pretending hee was ashamed to see my face, whom of a good friend he had made his Enemy. The third of Ianuarie, we arriued at Barratam, where we found the James come from Patane, the Hoflander, and Concord. I went on

From Master Cockin at Macassar, that he had receiued the Cargaton sent by William Ebert, with other circumstances: from Adam Denton and Master Gourney, complayning of the dead Market because of the Warres: from Master Lucas also, of his feares in the same regard, but the Darling being gone thither, I hope, will comfort him.

Letters from Iapan.

Here we agreed that the Hosianders goods should be discharged into the Globe, and Edward Christian (made Captaine thereof in that Countrey by Generall Beest) should bee Captaine of the Globe, and Nathaniel Salmon Master; and Matter Skinner should goe Master in the Hosiander: 10 and that in the Globe should goe fiftie men, in the Iames fwe and fiftie, twentie in the Hosiander which was to stay here; and three or foure to keepe the Concord. On the thirtieth, the Iames departed to goe on a moneth before and to stay at the Cape, or at Saint Helena, that we might go together. Seeing the Hosiander could not so quickly bee made readie, it was thought fit to send the Concord for Amboyna, George Bale going in her; and George Chancey was to stay in Macassar. The ship Zelandia arriued from Iapan, and brought Letters from Master Cockes, that Master Pen-cocke with the Hollanders was slaine in Cochin China, and that Master Adams and foure other English were gone thence for Syam.

The fourteenth of Februarie, arriued Captaine David Middleton with the Samaritan, Thomas, and Thomasin, the men being well and in good disposition. Captaine Middleton vnderstanding 20 of his Brothers death, and the losse of his ship the Trades Increase, was perplexed and resolved to goe home, wherefore he called a Court to see the disposing of the ships, and the manning againe of the Hosiander. It was then thought fit to send home the Samaritan with the very first, the Thomas to Sumatra, and the Thomasin for Amboyna, to succour the Concord and the Hosiander for Petania and Iapan, to visit those Factories, which was put in execution. They set sayle out of Bantam Road, the two and twentieth of February. Aprill the thirtieth, they entred the Road of Soldania, where they found the Iames which arriued the day before, the Aduise & Attendat outward bound. The seauenteenth of May, they weighed, and the first of Iune came to Saint Helena.

Lancrota.

A Iournall of a Voyage made by the Pearle * to the East-India, wherein went as Captaine Master SAMVEL CASTLETON of London, and Captaine GEORGE BATHURST as Lieutenant: written by JOHN TATTON, Master.

He two and twentieth of August 1612. we departed from Black-wall for Graues- 40 end, and being much hindered by contrary windes, it was the fift of Nouember, before we could attayne to the Lands end of England.

The seuen and twentieth of Nouember, we fell with Lancrota, one of the Ca-narie Iles.

Decemb. 1611.
Teneriffa.

A small ship of London taken by an Holland man of Warre.

The third of December, we towed into Lauratani Road. The fifth wee were put out of the Roade by foule weather, and spent the whole moneth about this Ile, and Teneriffa, and tooke in sixteene Pipes of Wine.

The last of this moneth, we met with a small ship of London, a little in the Offing, which had formerly beene in the Road with vs, which an Holland ship of Warre had taken, whose men being all drunke in the night, she stole away hauing but three men in her: into whom we put two 50 men, and a Merchant, whom we should haue set on shoare at the Grand Canarie, but the weather not permitting vs, he agreed to goe for the Ile of Palma, we thinking there to better our proui-sion. The small ship this day did beare vs companie.

The fifteenth day, we anchored in the Roade of Cape Verde where we watered, and got some Oxen.

Rosisco Road.

The one and twentieth, we weighed and went ouer to Rosisco for Beeues, and at fwe of the clocke anchored in Rosisco Roade in fwe fathomes. Note that there is but eleuen fathomes ouer the Bay in an East and by North course: for so lyeth Rosisco from the Ile which maketh the Roade at Cape Verde. The two and twentieth, we got seuen Beeues.

The first Ter-
nado.
February 20.
They crosse
the Line.

The three and twentieth, in the morning wee departed from Rosisco. The eight and twen- 60 tieth, being in latitude fixe degrees, thirtie two minutes, we met with the first Tornado, lasting some two houres.

The twentieth of Februarie, wee crossed the Equinoctiall Line, and made our way South South-east.

The

The fifteenth of April 1602. the latitude thirtie two degrees, thirtie nine minutes, the wind South-west, we steered in East South-east, and met with many great weeds, called Trombas by the Portugals, and the water was much changed: we steered away East South-east till five of the clocke; then wee saw the land betweene the East South-east, and East North-east: wee steered away East till seven in the morning: then we were thwart Punta de Santa Lucia, some foure leagues off; we founded, and had forty three fathomes, Rockes: then it fell aland.

The sixteenth at noone, latitude thirtie three degrees, no minutes. At five of the clocke at night, we were shot so farre into the Bay, that we brought a ledge of rockes South South-west off vs: then we steered off.

10 The seventeenth in the morning, we were some seven leagues off the shoare, having got some three leagues to the Southward. This day our latitude was thirtie three degrees, no minutes, we stood in for the shoare, and at three of the clocke came in faire by the point in fifteene, fourteene, and thirteene fathoms, and had sometimes hard ground, sometimes soft Ozie: and when wee were shot within the point two miles off the shoare, we had nine fathoms for the most part soft Ozie: Then we anchored in the South-east side of the Bay in seven fathoms soft ground, the one point North North-east some seven leagues off; the other which we came in by, North-west.

20 The eighteenth in the morning, we sent our Boat and Skiffe on shoare; the Skiffe presently returning, brought newes of people, whereof some twentie came to them. Wee sent the Skiffe on shoare againe with an iron hoope cut in pieces, and some hatchets: and for a small piece of this iron hoope we had a Calte, and for an hatchet an excellent good sheepe. Then we sent our Boat to seeke for water, but ranging the Bay could find none: a little puddle we saw, of which the people dranke, making signes that there was none other. This Countrey seemed to bee a very barren place. Our Boat went into a Riuer in the bottome of the Bay, hauing fixe foote water vpon the Barre at an high water, and went a mile vp a very fine Riuer, but all salt water, and a barren Countrey.

30 The nineteenth in the morning, at two of the clocke, the wind came vp at North North-west, and blowing right in, we weighed, and made a boord ouer the bottome of the Bay in ten, nine, eight and seven fathoms. Then the wind came to the West South-west, and West by South, and so we plyed it out, all night becalmed some three leagues without the point of the road. The 30 two and twentieth at noone, latitude thirtie three degrees, fiftie three minutes, we were some eight leagues off the shoare. The three and twentieth in the morning, the Table bare South-east some five leagues off. All night was calme. The foure and twentieth, we came into the Road of Saldanha: The people desire nothing so much as Copper: Brasse they regarded not.

The foure and twentieth of August, we departed from Priaman for Tecoa: Priaman standeth in thirtie eight minutes of South latitude, and the variation there is foure degrees, fiftie minutes North-west. Tecoa standeth in five and twentie minutes of South latitude, hauing three or foure shoalds betweene them: but keepe some foure leagues off the shoare, and there is no feare.

40 The one and thirtieth, we ran into a Bay, and there (being a wilderness) wee brought on a false keele on our Pinnasse. This Bay is called by the name of a Towne, a little to the Southward of it, called Airebangye. The latitude of this Bay is some eight minutes North latitude. Round about the shoald going in, is nine fathome and a quarter lesse: but betweene the maine and it, is the best channell with a Northerly wind, because the point of the Isle lyeth shoald a good cables length off to the Northward: some two miles off the shore thwart the wester point, which is to the Northward of Airebangye, lyeth a shoald, whereon is but eight or nine fathomes water, being rockes: but all ouer betweene that land and the long Isle in the offing, which lyeth some seven leagues off, is but eight and twentie and thirtie fathoms. The tenth of September, we got vp with the wind off the shoare, within two miles of Pattaban.

50 The eleuenth in the morning, we anchored at the South-west end of the Isle of Pattaban in fourteene fathoms Ozie: and at two in the after-noone we anchored thwart the Riuer of Pattaban, in five fathoms Ozie. All this Coast is Ozie neare the shoare, without it be the shoalds. This Riuer is very good water, and you may goe into it six or seven foot vpon the Barre, it standeth in no degree, twentie eight minutes of North latitude.

The fourteenth, we went from Pattaban with two Gouernours for our Pilots, for Barons and Achen, with three Boyes.

60 The sixteenth, we were a little short of a bigge Island, which lyeth some two miles off the maine, with two other small Isles on the South-side of it: and betweene the maine and it lyeth an high round homocke being an Isle: This is some twentie five or twentie fixe leagues to the Northward of Pattaban. This bigge Isle standeth in one degree, fortie minutes. And on the North-west side is a fresh running downe a steepe cliffe, like a little Riuer, all in a breach, and sheweth white a great way off, seven or eight leagues you may very well see it. On the North-side of this Isle is a fine Bay: going faire by it, we had thirty fathoms Ozie. South-west or West South-west some foure leagues from this Island lyeth a shoald: within this Isle your depth is two and twentie fathoms, and so close into the maine twentie fathoms, all Ozie, your anchor ouer both flockes.

shot. Here some people came to vs with feare, making shewes of great friendship. They haue for the most part of them very great holes in their eares: and some of them haue their haire vpon their heads, like the Chinises, long, and made vp with a knot vpon their Crownes. They are all naked, they weare onely a piece of cloth about their middles, hanging downe to their knees. Here two came aboard vs at seuerall times, which spake good Portuguese. They promised all things, but performed nothing. But finding the first to play the villaine with vs, yet as farre as we perceiued, not by his owne meanes, we tooke occasion to detaine the one aboard, sending the other with threatnings and promises on shoare to procure vs victualls: who staying somewhat long, put his fellow which we had detained in great feare; who fained himselfe sicke, and would faine haue gone on shore. But the next day his confort came with two Calues.

The fourth of December in the morning, we stood to the East-ward till the brise came, which was about two of the clock, & fetcht not the place by sixe leagues: we anchored in ten fathomes two miles from the shoare, fine blacke sand: latitude sixe degrees fortie minutes. Variation twelue degrees fortie sixe minutes North-westing. Here we rode till the eighth: then we stood to the West-ward, and anchored all night thwart a great Hamocke. The ninth, we anchored all night a little to the West-ward of the Westermost Shoald. The eleuenth in the morning, we stood faire in by the riuer Wallaway; but the sea going high, we went along to the West-ward, and at night were thwart the point some five leagues to the East-ward of Diundra. Here wee rode till the sixteenth, at which time the Current setting strongly to the East-ward, which was very seldome, we weighed and plyed to the Eastward.

The seuenteenth, we stood it in, and fetcht in a little to the West-ward of Diundra, thwart the two red Clifses, and anchored in twentie five fathomes, the point East a little Northerly. The eighteenth, we broke vp our Pinnasse, being so worne-eaten, that she wearied our men with freeing her of water. Here we rode the wind Easterly all this Moneth out.

Ianuarie the seuenth, Easterly winds began to blow, then we bare vp for the riuer of Wallaway, where we staid, and laid vp new throwds vpon our maine Mast, hauing very much wind Easterly. We rode here tenne dayes together in tenne fathoms, three quarters of a mile from the shoare, the point lying East Southerly off vs. The nineteenth at midnight we espied a sayle. The twentieth in the morning in lesse then three leagues chafe we tooke her. And the same day we stood it away to the North-west out of sight of land; then we stood in againe. The foure and twentieth, we anchored some seuen leagues to the North-ward of Punta de Galle. The five and twentieth, we began to discharge her, riding in thirtie fathomes some three miles from the shoare.

The second of February, we had done with the ship, leauing in her neere an hundred tunnes of Pepper and Sanders. The third day, we set saile home-wards. At sixe of the clocke at night we were in foureteene fathomes, some five or sixe miles from the shoare, thwart an Iland, which is some sixe leagues to the South-ward of the Portugals fort vpon Ceylon called Colombo.

The twentieth of March, Latitude thirteene degrees seuen minutes: Variation twentie foure degrees twentie sixe minutes, being the greatest that we found. We steered away South-west, and felt no current. Note, that we met with Currents, and many rippings from South latitude foure degrees thirtie minutes, till we came into thirteene degrees no minutes. Sometimes the Rippings making a noyse like ouer-fals, especially being in the parallels of Pedras Brancas to the West-ward of it.

The foure and twentieth, latitude sixteene degrees fiftie minutes, variation twenty three degrees tenne minutes: we steered South-west. The twentie seuenth, latitude twentie one degrees, then we saw an Iland West South-west, and South-west and by West some five leagues from vs, being very high land. At sixe of the clocke at night, we anchored on the Easter side of it in tenne fathomes fine blacke sand a mile from the shoare. From fortie fathomes to foure fathomes close into the shoare, you haue fine black sand. Here we sent our Boat on shoare, and found infinite numbers of great land Tortoises, as big as a man might well carrie, which were very good meate.

The North-east point of this Ile is very high and steepe; and a little to the South-east of the point is low land, where is a fine running water like a riuer: and though a Boat cannot goe in, yet it is a very good place to water in, somewhat distant from the shoare. The Ile is like a Forrest, and therefore I called it Englands Forrest; but others call it Pearle Iland, by the name of our ship. There is store of land fowle both small and great, plentie of Doves, great Parrats, and such like: And a great fowle of the bignesse of a Turkie, very fat, and so short winged, that they cannot flie, beeing white, and in a manner tame: and so are all other fowles, as hauing not been troubled nor feared with shot. Our men did beate them downe with sticks and stones. Ten men may take fowle enough to serue fortie men a day. Our men traueilling into the land, found another riuer and a Pond with great store of Mallards in it, and wild geese. Moreouer, they found infinite store of great Eeles, as good, I thinke, as any in the world. Strike them with a Pike, and they will flie from you not past two or three yards, and there will lie still againe: you may wade after them at your pleasure. I weighed one of them, because they were bigger then euer I saw, and it weighed five and twentie pounds, and they are the sweetest fish that can be eaten. I thinke it is so good a place as the world can afford for refreshing, beeing also without people.

The first of Aprill 1613. we went away, and bearing about the North-east point, all the North side of the Ile was fine low land, and full of trees, more pleasant in sight then the South-side. The second, latitude twentie degrees fiftie eight minutes. The Ile bare South-east by East some five leagues off: Note that we saw no dangers about the Ile, but the shore it selfe. At sixe of the clocke at night, the South-west point was off vs South-east by East, variation twenty two degrees fortie eight minutes.

The first of May, latitude thirtie eight degrees fortie seven minutes, which was the greatest latitude that wee euer raised to the South-ward, wee steered away West North-west. The eleuenth at noone, latitude thirty three degrees fiftie eight minutes, by which obseruation I found a Northerly Current, and found my selfe to the West-ward of Cape de Buona Esperanza.

The first of Iune, all these ships, the Salomon and foure great Hollanders departed from the Road of Saint Helena. But within foure houres after they were gone, there came about the point two great Carackes, the other ships being still in sight; we hauing most part of our Companie ashore sicke, I sent the Boat on shoare, hauing not aboue ten men aboard: so there came as many as were able, some of our soundest men being vp in the Mountaines. When the Boat was come aboard, we cut our Cables in the hause and droue away, setting sayle as fast as we were able, being in all but sixe and twentie men; hauing left behind vs sicke and sound five and twentie men of our owne Companie, and one Indian, with all our water Caske, and diuers other things for the vse of our sicke men were left on shoare. So hastening toward the Hollanders, and making signes for their stay, and within night comming vp with the Admirall of the Hollanders, and telling him of this newes, hee was very glad, and desired to make saile for the Road againe, and made signes to his Fleet to follow, and so stood for the Road as wind would serue. But in the morning his biggest ship both of force and burthen was missing, with the Salomon of London. Yet his three ships and we pleyed it vp for the Roade, and gat in the third day at noone. The Admirall of the Hollanders went first in, and anchored on the Broad-side of the Admirall Caracke. He veered so much Cable before hee brought vp his ship, that his sterne hung by the galleries of the Caracke: but with his two sterne peeces lying very low, and his quarter Peeces hee so galled the Caracke, that he put her from two peeces of Ordnance, and might haue sunke her, if they had not been too couetous, hauing desire to carrie both. The next came the Bantam, and anchored in such sort, that she had her Broad-side vpon the Bow of the same Caracke, and so racked her afore and baft, that it much cooled the Portugals courage. Then came the white Lion, whereof one Simons was Captaine, and laid her thwart the haule, and so tare her that a man might see all the Sea wash into her betweene wind and water, and withall cut her Cables, and so she droue off from the white Lion, and had driuen on shoare, but that the Vice-Admirall Caracke had a Cable fast on shoare: and so the Caracke lying in the byte of this Cable, in time got another Cable and Anchor readie, and so brought her vp againe, though long first. Then the white Lion making way to veere aboard againe, with a generall consent that all three ships should lay her aboard: the white Lion falling with her Broad-side along the Vice-Admirall Carack, let flye her whole Broad-side, and likewise the Carack at her. But still vering to get aboard the Admirall Caracke, his men still plying his lower Ordnance vpon the Vice-Admirall, one of his Peeces brake ouer his Powder Roome, as some thought, and the shippe blew vp all to pieces, the after part of her; and so sunke presently. In the time of this fight eleuen of our men came out of the Mountaines: whom wee espying fetched from the shoare, out of the Bay to the East-ward of the chappell, leauing on shore fiftene of our Companie, one being an Indian. In the white Lion were Henric Bacon, and Henric Teddman blowne vp, & nine and fortie of the Hollanders. Then the Admirall, whereof Iohn Derickson Lambe was Captaine, seeing his forces so much weakened, himselfe hauing two of his Peeces dismounted, with many of his men killed and hurt, and we being of small force, thought it best to leaue them, for want of helpe, promising to turnish vs with water.

The third of Iune, loosing one after another, and changing a few shot with the Carackes, we stood away for England.

The eighteenth of Iuly in the morning, we met with many weeds, and a small long leafe with white Berries of the bignesse of a corne of Pepper. The Master of the Carauell aboard the Hollanders reported, that farther Westerly the Sea is so thicke with these kind of weeds, that they hinder a ships way. They call it The Sea of Grasse. Hee affirmed that in former Voyages he had beene in it. The nineteenth, we crossed the Tropicke of Cancer.

beene reported) but to the contrarie, did find

South Easterly and Easterly winds with extreame Stormes, Raine, Thunder yet at that present very faire and so hot that calmes were to bee doubted.

The third, latitude twentie three degrees, fiftie minutes, way South by W leagues wind at South.

The Bay of S.
Augustine in the Ile of Saint Laurence.

About five at night we made land being the Iland of Madagascar, otherwise rence, the Bay of Saint Augustine bearing East by North about fixe leagues off away North North-east, variation at Sun-setting fifteene degrees, eleuen minu founded, but had no ground at one hundred fathome. The land not very high, then we passed the Tropicke of Capricorne, to the North-ward.

A strong current.

The tenth of September, latitude seuentene degrees, three minutes, v twelue leagues, wind at North-east: we steered North North-west, variation a teene degrees, fiftie foure minutes Westerly. Heere wee found a strong Cur South-west; for these last foure and twentie houres, shee could not haue run and twentie leagues, hauing a stiffe gale: but for the reason aforesaid, in the the Iland Primeiras bearing West by North about foure leagues off.

Note.

The eleventh, latitude seuentene degrees, thirty three minutes way Sou point Easterly fourteene leagues, the wind at North-east, and North-east by E vs thirtie minutes to the Southwards of the latitude we were in, by the last ob stood in for the land North North-west, hoping of a better wind neare the sho rent, an suddenly the water changed, but we could find no ground at an hun the euening we made the land bearing North, and North by West about fixe l it to be the Islands Primeiras, but being to the Northward of it, it shewed somewhat longer then before, for it did beare from the North-west to the North of vs; wee sounded and had twentie fathom small glistering sand; and sounding againe, had twentie fathom blacke Ozie, with black shels. Then we stood off to the Eastward, the storme continuing with more wind in the night, then in the day; and hauing stood off one glasse, we sounded and had two and twenty fathome, gray sand and shels.

The twelfth, latitude eightene degrees seuentene minutes, way South-east by East eight and twentie leagues, wind at North-east, a storme: so that these last twenty foure houres we were carried by the force of the Current forty foure minutes to the Southward of the former obseruation, variation fourteene degrees, one and forty minutes Westerly. About night the wind veered to East North-east, so that we lay North with the sterne.

The thirteenth, latitude nineteene degrees, sixtene minutes, way South-east by South, two and twentie leagues, wind North-east by East little wind, the Current very strong against vs.

The fifteenth, latitude sixtene degrees, six and forty minutes, way North North-east, halfe a point Easterly thirty leagues, wind South-west, wee steered North-east by North. Note heere we found not the Current so forcible, for we haue deprest the Pole one degree, seuen and twenty minutes these foure and twentie houres. The reason wee supposed to be that the Island Iuan de Noua, was betweene vs and the Current, for we made account it did beare East by North eightene leagues off, variation at Sun-setting twelue degrees, eight minutes Westerly.

The sixteenth, latitude sixtene degrees not nine minutes, way North North-east eightene leagues, we steered North-east by North, wind South-west by South, little wind, but a strong Current, variation at Sun-rising thirteene degrees, not three minutes Westerly.

The seuenteenth, the ships way North by West eight leagues, variation twelue degrees one minute Westerly: in the morning we made the land to the Southward of Mosambique, making it to be the Islands de Angoxa, bearing West South-west seuen leagues. The Westermost part of the said Islands seeming whitish. The maine to the Northward bearing North by East, smooth champion ground: we steered North-east by East, and towards euening we saw the land treading to the Northward, seeming to the Seaward to be full of trees; here we found the Current to set North North-west, for we could perceiue by the land that we ran very fast to the Northward, and hauing little wind, wee sounded often, but could not find ground at an hundred fathome.

The nineteenth, latitude fifteene degrees, twentie nine minutes, way South by East foure leagues, wind at East South-east, we steered North-east, but by extremitie of the Current, wee were carried to the Southward. So that wee were heere ten dayes, and could not get to the Northward; notwithstanding we had a faire and reasonable stiffe gale.

The one and twentieth, latitude sixtene degrees, twentie minutes, way South by West foure leagues, wind North-east, and North-east by East, little wind: in the morning wee were neare the Northermost of the Islands de Angoxas, bearing West by North about three leagues off. And to windward of vs, we espied a very dangerous shoale, lying East off the North part of the main, at the least three points into the sea, hauing a drie splot of white sand betweene it and the maine: We sounded and had ground at thirtie fathom, red stones like Corall, with gray sand and shels, we stood off, it being a lee-choare and Westerly Current. And finding by our skiffe, which was sent off, that the Current did set exceeding strongly to the South-west by West, and such vncertaine shoaling, we stood off for Saint Laurence. Note that these Islands de Angoxas (which are many) doe stand in the plat in fifteene degrees, fortie minutes, and we find them in sixtene degrees, twentie minutes to the Southward of the Equinoctiall, variation thirteene degrees, no minutes Westerly.

The two and twentieth, latitude seuentene degrees five minutes, way South South-east eightene leagues, wind North-east, and in foure and twentie houres that we parted from the land, we lost no degrees, fortie five minutes. But towards euening the wind came to the South-east, and South-east by South; we steered North-east, and North-east by east, and East North-east for the Island Saint Laurence, looking out for Iuan de noua, which Hugen van Linschoten, willeth to beware of, and not to come neare it in a small Moone; notwithstanding wee were inforced to put our selues in hazard to get out of this Current and dangerous place, variation at Sun-setting twelue degrees, fortie foure minutes Westerly.

The three and twentieth, latitude sixtene degrees, foure and twentie minutes, way North-east, two and twentie leagues, wind at South South-west, we steered East North-east, to rid vs of the Current, hauing deprest the Pole these last foure and twentie houres, no degrees, one and fortie minutes, variation at Sun-setting thirteene degrees, sixtene minutes Westerly.

The foure and twentieth, latitude sixtene degrees, sixtene minutes, way East North-east ten leagues, wind at South-west, and South South-east, till eight in the morning, it came then to the North, and North by East, little wind. In the morning at breake of day (to our great admiration) wee saw land to the Westward, bearing North by West five leagues off, not once looking

He eighteenth of Aprill 1611. wee set saile out of the Downes.

The sixth of Iune following, we passed the Equinoctiall Line.

The first of August 1611. we arriued in the Bay of Soldania, where hauing well refreshed our selues the space of eight dayes, the ninth of August in the morning we weighed Anchor, and about foure in the after-noone were five leagues off the Cape Buona Esperanza.

The second of September, of latitude twentie foure degrees, twentie one minutes, way East by North Northerly sixe leagues. Nota, That since our comming from Cape Buona Esperanza, We found no Monsons of West-winds, (as hath beene reported) but to the contrarie, did find North Easterly, South Easterly and Easterly winds with extreame Stormes, Raine, Thunder and Lightening: yet at that present very faire and so hot that calmes were to bee doubted.

The third, latitude twentie three degrees, fiftie minutes, way South by West twentie three leagues wind at South.

The Bay of S. Augustine in the Ile of Saint Laurence.

About five at night we made land being the Iland of Madagascar, otherwise called Saint Laurence, the Bay of Saint Augustine bearing East by North about fixe leagues off. And then steered away North North-east, variation at Sun-setting fiftene degrees, eleuen minutes Westerly. We founded, but had no ground at one hundred fathome. The land not very high, but Sandie. And then we passed the Tropicke of Capricorne, to the North-ward.

A strong current.

The tenth of September, latitude seuentene degrees, three minutes, way North-west twelue leagues, wind at North-east: we steered North North-west, variation at Sun-rising thirteene degrees, fiftie foure minutes Westerly. Heere wee found a strong Current setting South South-west: for these last foure and twentie houres, shee could not haue runne lesse then foure and twentie leagues, hauing a stiffe gale: but for the reason aforesaid, in the euening we made the Iland Primeiras bearing West by North about foure leagues off.

Note.

The eleventh, latitude seuentene degrees, thirty three minutes way South by East halfe a point Easterly fourteene leagues, the wind at North-east, and North-east by East, a storme.

Note that hauing stood but one watch and an halfe to the East-wards, the Current did carry vs thirtie minutes to the Southwards of the latitude we were in, by the last obseruation: then we stood in for the land North North-west, hoping of a better wind neare the shoare with lesse current, and suddenly the water changed, but we could find no ground at an hundred fathom. In the euening we made the land bearing North, and North by West about fixe leagues off, finding it to be the Islands Primeiras, but being to the Northward of it, it shewed somewhat longer then before, for it did beare from the North-west to the North of vs; wee sounded and had twentie fathom small glistering sand; and sounding againe, had twentie fathom blacke Ozie, with black shels. Then we stood off to the Eastward, the storme continuing with more wind in the night, then in the day; and hauing stood off one glasse, we sounded and had two and twenty fathome, gray sand and shels.

The twelfth, latitude eightene degrees seuteene minutes, way South-east by East eight and twentie leagues, wind at North-east, a storme: so that these last twenty foure houres we were carried by the force of the Current forty foure minutes to the Southward of the former obseruation, variation fourteene degrees, one and forty minutes Westerly. About night the wind veered to East North-east, so that we lay North with the sterne.

The thirteenth, latitude nineteene degrees, sixteene minutes, way South-east by South, two and twentie leagues, wind North-east by East little wind, the Current very strong against vs.

The fifteenth, latitude sixteene degrees, six and forty minutes, way North North-east, halfe a point Easterly thirty leagues, wind South-west, wee steered North-east by North. Note heere we found not the Current so forcible, for we haue deprest the Pole one degree, seuen and twenty minutes these foure and twentie houres. The reason wee supposed to bee that the Island Iuan de Noua, was betweene vs and the Current, for we made account it did beare East by North eighteene leagues off, variation at Sun-setting twelue degrees, eight minutes Westerly.

The sixteenth, latitude sixteene degrees not nine minutes, way North North-east eighteene leagues, we steered North-east by North, wind South-west by South, little wind, but a strong Current, variation at Sun-rising thirteene degrees, not three minutes Westerly.

The seuteenth, the ships way North by West eight leagues, variation twelue degrees one minute Westerly: in the morning we made the land to the Southward of Mosambique, making it to be the Islands de Angoxa, bearing West South-west seuen leagues. The Westermost part of the said Islands seeming whitish. The maine to the Northward bearing North by East, imooth champion ground: we steered North-east by East, and towards euening we saw the land tending to the Northward, seeming to the Seaward to be full of trees; here we found the Current to set North North-west, for we could perceiue by the land that we ran very fast to the Northward, and hauing little wind, wee sounded often, but could not find ground at an hundred fathome.

The Islands de Angoxa.

The nineteenth, latitude fifteene degrees, twentie nine minutes, way South by East foure leagues, wind at East South-east, we steered North-east, but by extremitie of the Current, wee were carried to the Southward. So that wee were heere ten dayes, and could not get to the Northward; notwithstanding we had a faire and reasonable stiffe gale.

An extreame Current to the Southward.

The one and twentieth, latitude sixteene degrees, twentie minutes, way South by West foure leagues, wind North-east, and North-east by East, little wind: in the morning wee were neare the Northermost of the Islands de Angoxas, bearing West by North about three leagues off. And to windward of vs, we espied a very dangerous shoale, lying East off the North part of the main, at the least three points into the sea, hauing a drie splat of white sand betweene it and the maine: We sounded and had ground at thirtie fathom, red stones like Corall, with gray sand and shels, we stood off, it being a lee-shoale and Westerly Current. And finding by our skiffe, which was sent off, that the Current did set exceeding strongly to the South-west by West, and such vncertaine shoaling, we stood off for Saint Laurence. Note that these Islands de Angoxas (which are many) doe stand in the plat in fifteene degrees, fortie minutes, and we find them in sixteene degrees, twentie minutes to the Southward of the Equinoctiall, variation thirteene degrees, no minutes Westerly.

A very dangerous shoald.

The Isles de Angoxa in sixteene degrees, twentie minutes.

The two and twentieth, latitude seuteene degrees five minutes, way South South-east eighteene leagues, wind North-east, and in foure and twentie houres that we parted from the land, we lost no degrees, fortie five minutes. But towards euening the wind came to the South-east, and South-east by South; we steered North-east, and North-east by east, and East North-east for the Island Saint Laurence, looking out for Iuan de noua, which Hugen van Linschoten, willetth to beware of, and not to come neare it in a small Moone; notwithstanding wee were inforced to put our selues in hazard to get out of this Current and dangerous place, variation at Sun-setting twelue degrees, fortie foure minutes Westerly.

The three and twentieth, latitude sixteene degrees, foure and twentie minutes, way North-east, two and twentie leagues, wind at South South-west, we steered East North-east, to rid vs of the Current, hauing deprest the Pole these last foure and twentie houres, no degrees, one and fortie minutes, variation at Sun-setting thirteene degrees, sixteene minutes Westerly.

The foure and twentieth, latitude sixteene degrees, sixteene minutes, way East North-east ten leagues, wind at South-west, and South South-east, till eight in the morning, it came, then to the North, and North by East, little wind. In the morning at breake of day (to our great admiration) wee saw land to the Westward, bearing North by West five leagues off, not once looking king for any that way, but to the Eastward for Iuan de noua, which we made account could not be about six leagues South from vs, and being be-calmed, did doubt least the Current would set vs vpon it in the night: but the day clearing, we found it to be the Northermost Iland of the Angoxas, whence we departed the one and twentieth, ditto in the afternoone, which so amazed our Marriners, as that they were discouraged of getting our Voyage this way. The reason of this difference was (as we supposed) by a Counter current, which certainly in the small of the Moone doth set East North-east, and West South-West, from the Plasbella or point of the shoare, which lieth North-east by East off the Northermost part of Iuan de noua, which meeting with our auncient enemy the North North-east Current, hath thus violently put vs ouer to the West-wards, notwithstanding we haue had a fresh gale and faire wind, vntill this morning that it fell 10 calme. Note, that if there be any such Iland as Iuan de noua, it lies not so farre to the West-ward, as Daniels plots make mention, but stands neerer the maine Iland, otherwise we must of necessity haue seene it. They of the fourth Voyage in the Ascension, made accompt that they passed to the East-wards of it, and S. Laurence, which thing the Portugals hold impossible, saying, that it stands so neere the maine Iland, as that there is no passage but a little channell, which once one of their ships was inforced to put through, and since nor afore they haue not heard of any to haue done the like. Wherefore it was held amongst vs to be but a cunning of the Portugals, to place such an Iland so farre to the West-ward, to the end that such as shall saile this way, being not so well experienced as themselves, might (giuing it a birth) fall into this extreame Current which we certainly found to set more Westerly then North-East, and South-west. Wherefore 20 it is necessary for all such as shall be bound this way, to be vpon the Coast of S. Laurence by the first of Iune, and from the Cape S. Augustine, vntill they come into twelue degrees no minutes, to keepe vp to the East-ward, and not to make their way to the West of the North, or North by West, for feare of the South-west Current, which with calmes, and foureteene degrees two minutes variation Westerly, will perforce set them ouer vpon the Coast of Soffala. And most certaine it is, that in August and September, you shall find very violent North-west winds, so that if yee would stand it ouer for S. Laurence, you shall not fetch it without great danger of the shoalds of India, (the Current taking you on the broad side:) I meane, if you bee to the North of the said shoalds, neither can you stop vpon the maine to keepe your Latitude, for it is broken ground, and very deepe water.

The third of October we came to an anchor (after much trouble by Currents) betweene Soffala and Mosambique, in thirteene and foureteene fathome: Latitude sixteene degrees thirty two minutes: Longitude seuentie sixe degrees tenne minutes: Variation eleuen degrees fiftie minutes Westerly. We anchored vnder an Iland neere vnto the maine, vpon which wee neither found people nor fresh water, though we digged very deepe in the land. The tenth, wee weighed, the wind at South South-west, and stood ouer East by North for S. Laurence, hoping thereby to get out of these Currents. Thus were we tossed to and fro with variable winds, and still troubled with the Current comming out of the North-east, vntill the twentieth sixth, wee came to an anchor vnder Moyella, which is one of the Ilands of Comora, Latitude twelue degrees thirteene minutes, to the Southward of the Aequinoctiall, where we refreshed our selues eight dayes, procuring Bullocks, Goates, Hennes, Limons, Cocos, Pines, Papanes, Plantans, Pomgranates, Sugar canes, Tammarin hennes, Rice, Milke, Rootes, Egges and Fish, in exchange of small Haberdashery wares, and some money, and had here kind vsage and great store of fresh water, the rather for that we stood still vpon our guard. I inuited the King of Moyella beeing a Mahometan aboard the Cloue, and entertained him with a noyse of Trumpets, and a consort of Musique, with a Banket, which he refused to eate of, because it was then his Lent, which amongst them is called Rammadam, but hee tooke away with him the best of the Banket to carrie to the Queene his Mother, saying, they would eate it when the Sinne was downe. The Queenes name was Sultana Mammangalla. The Kings name was Sariffoo Boobocarree. He requested the Generall to leaue him a letter in his commendations to those that should happen hereafter to come thither, where- 50 by they might vnderstand of his honest dealing with vs. The like letter he had procured from Stephen Verbaghen, Admirall of twelue Holland ships, who arrived there in the yeare 1604. which he deliuered vnto our Generall, who gaue him the like, with this caution in the end thereof, that they should not giue too great credit to them, but stand vpon their guard, for that oftentimes weapons continue peace.

The Inhabitants here are Negroes, with short curled haire, and Pintados about their middles, some wearing white caps, others turbants, by which we knew they were Mahometans. The King himselfe was apparrelled in a white Cotten coate, a Turbant vpon his head, and a Guzerate Pintado about his middle: he was little whiter then the ordinary people, who are blacke: hee was leane, he had a round thinne blacke beard, great eyes, of a low stature, and of very few words; he could speake a little Arabique, which he had learned in his Pilgrimage to Mecca, from whence he had the name of Sheriffe. Here they desire money (whereby we vnderstand Spanish Rialls of eight) rather then commoditie. But for Crimson broad Cloath, Red sculd Caps, Cambaya cloaths, and 60 and Sword blades, you may haue any thing the Iland affoord, which serueth onely for refreshing, and no way for merchandizing. He gaue the Generall a note vnder his hand of friendship, which beeing not long, I haue here inserted.

The fourth of Nouember, we set saile from this Iland Moyella. The seuenteenth in the morning, we made the land being the maine of Melinde, the Bay or Gulfe called Formosa, bearing North-west about foure leagues off. The land trending North-east South-west, wee had thirtie fathome, small gray sand and shels, wind at East North-east, we stood off South-East a stiffe gale, and a very great sea, which sheweth to be shoale water, and a Current which we found to set alongst the shoare, North-east. Latitude two degrees tenne minutes, variation at Sunne-setting twelue degrees thirtie one minuts Westerly. Note, this land lieth more Easterly then in our plats, otherwise we should not haue fallen therewith so soone: for by our reckonings we were at least fortie eight leagues off.

The nine and twentieth, latitude foure degrees fortie foure minutes, variation seuentene degrees thirtie foure minutes Westerly, beeing as we supposed twelue leagues off the shoales, called Baxos de Malhina East by South, we had a great Rippling, and ouer-fall of water, as if it had beene shoal-water; but sounding found no ground at an hundred fathome, the wind came about here to South Southeast, our course North-east.

The first of December, Latitude three degrees fortie minutes, our way North North-east eight leagues, wind at North North-east, East, East South-east, and North East by North, little wind for the most part calme, and had a very fearefull rippling of the water, much like vnto the fall at London Bridge, beeing out of sight of land, and finding no ground at an hundred fathome: when we stood into the land it left vs, but bearing off, (beeing fiftie leagues from land) we found very terrible. Variation sixteene degrees fiftene minutes Westerly. The second, Latitude two degrees fiftie five minutes, way North-east by North eightene leagues, wind variable, the Rippling continuing, variation fiftene degrees fiftie seven minutes Westerly, which mooued vs to thinke that wee had a Current setting to the West, the variation decreasing so suddenly. The third, Latitude foure degrees foure minutes, way South twentie three leagues, wind variable, most part calme, with great Rippling of the water, and a very strong Current Southerly, so that these last twentie foure houres, we are carried backe to the South-wards of our former latitude, one degree nine minutes. The fourth, latitude foure degrees thirtie three minutes, way South tenne leagues, little wind and variable betwixt the North-east, and East by South, very strange Rippling of the water, and strong Current Southerly, variation eightene degrees fortie foure minutes Westerly. The fifth, latitude foure degrees fiftie foure minutes, way South by East seauen leagues, wind variable, betwixt North-east by North, & East by South, the Rippling continuing and Current Southerly, variation eightene degrees eleuen minutes Westerly at Sun-setting. The sixth, latitude five degrees five minntes, way South-east by East eightene leagues, wind variable betwixt North-east by North, & North-east by East a gale, and at sometimes more fearefull Ripplings of the water then before, yet could haue no ground at an hundred fathome. These Rippings shew like shelses, and are not at all times alike, but sometimes more, sometimes lesse; but met with many times in a day, and make a noise by the ships side, as if she did runne five leagues a Watch, when she doth scarce goe a head. We were much terrified there-with, the rather because wee could not imagine from whence it should proceed, seeing no land; but supposed our selues to bee amongst the Easter-most Islands, which lie off the Northermost point of S. Laurence. Here wee had raine, thunder, lightning, and sudden gusts which continued not long. The seuenth, way East by South eightene leagues, wind betwixt the North and North-east, the Rippling still continued. The eighth, way North-east twenty two leagues, wind at South-west, and Southwest by West, with Rippling, but no ground at an hundred fathome: variation twenty degrees seven minutes Westerly. The ninth, latitude foure degrees eighteen minutes, way North-east eighteen leagues, wind variable, little Current and no Rippling: variation twentie degrees fortie seauen minutes,

minutes Westerly; heere we found it extreame hot. The tenth, latitude foure degrees, way East North-east seven leagues, wind from North-west by North-east by East, many times calme, with no rippling, nor Current Southerly. Note we continuall calmes, euer since we came off the Maine, and the further off, the lesse wind on twentie degrees, fittie seven minutes Westerly.

They had passed the Line a moneth and five dayes before.

The five and twentieth: Note, it is a moneth and five dayes since we were in latitude three degrees, one minute to the Northward, close by the shoare: since which time we came backe into five degrees, five and twentieth minutes to the Southward: wherefore the variation at this time of the yeere, must hold to the Eastward of Pemba two hundred leagues East by North, the variation there encreasing Westerly, which will bring you the maine: and so keeping the Island Socatora open of you, betweene the North by East, and North-east, you shall be in the greatest possibility to make the best vse of these winds neare to the maine we found to keepe betweene the East by North, and East by South all gale: but off at Sea, about the Islands Mascharenas at North-east North, and North-west West, and West by South, with calmes, riplings of the water very fowle and lightning. And albeit the North-east and Northerly winds are but bare to the Northwards: yet this benefit you shall haue, that by how much easterly you come, much the more you shall recouer to the Northward of the Line, before you reach the Maine, which if you can auoid, see not in this time of the Easterly Monson, vntill the latitude of ten degrees, to the Northwards of the Equinoctiall. But in the time of the Easterly Monson, keepe the shoare aboard, for it is very bold, but lyeth much more in our Plats.

The first of January, latitude three degrees, fittie eight minutes to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, heere we made land, being the Maine of Magadoxa, Cape Das Baxas North-east eight leagues off; the land low, sandie and barren, all alongst; the wind North-east and East by North, a stiffe gale, we stood off to the Eastward, way North by East eight leagues.

The second day, latitude two degrees, one and thirtie minutes, way South-east and thirtie leagues, much wind and Current Southerly, hauing deprest the Pole in and twentie houres, one degree, seven and twentieth minutes, whereof sixe and twentieth minutes shee had runne by dead reckoning, and nine leagues shee was carried by the Current expectation. The eighteenth, latitude sixe degrees, seven and twenty minutes to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, way North-west by North foure and twentieth leagues, East, and North-east by East. About two of the clocke we made the land, being the Doara, the South-part bearing West, and the North-part, North-west by North eight leagues off, seeming not very high, but sandie and barren, we stood off with much Current setting North-west, as we supposed; otherwise wee should haue gotten to the Northward.

Note, that although the variation holdeth little proportion, yet did we find that in running to the Eastward wee haue variation Westerly increasing: and when we ran North-west, our variation was Westerly decreasing: so that by reckoning our plats, we found our selues much further off the land, then by iust prooffe by variation truly is a most certaine thing to bee credited; obseruation being taken by one with an exact instrument, our so often falling with this maine, hath gained vs a variation at Sun-rising seuentene degrees, thirty sixe minutes Westerly, and at Sun-setting twenteene degrees, twentieth minutes Westerly.

The first of February, we made the land bearing North-east by North, about foure leagues, we sounded, and had ground at twenty seven and twenty eight fathom, soft sand called Cape Dorsey, being very high and barren by the Sea-side; many gusts.

The ninth, latitude ten degrees, thirtie seven minutes, way West by North five leagues, wind North-east by East: we had now sight againe of Cape Dorsey, from where we first day, contrary to our expectation, bearing North-west, about nine leagues off, found a strong Current in the offing, setting West North-west; which vntill we saw the land againe, we dreamed not of, but rather thought we had been fortie five or sixty leagues off: not once looking for the land, we sounded and had fifty fathom fine small sand, all the way: this land is high and full of mountaines.

The tenth, latitude eleuen degrees, twentieth minutes, way North-east by East seven leagues, wind from East by North, to North-east, we sounded and had ground of fortie fathom, small blacke sand, about eight leagues off the high land of Cape Dorsey, made triall of the Current with our Pinnasse, and found it to set North by East. The eleventh, latitude eleuen degrees, twentieth minutes, way North-east by East, we had sight of the Island Abba del Curia, bearing East North-east about ten leagues off, a very high land, rising in two parts like two Islands.

The fourteenth, latitude eleuen degrees, two and thirty minutes, wind North-east by East, North-east calme: heere we had sight of the Eastermost Irmana, seeming to the land, about sixe leagues off.

The fiftenth, latitude eleuen degrees, seuen and twenty minutes, way East South-east sixe leagues, wind East, East North-east, East South-east, and North-east calme for the most part, making account to be eight leagues off the Eastermost Irmana: But wee were mistaken; for it was Abba del Curia, and the Duas Irmanas did beare North-east of vs twelue leagues off, variation at Sun-setting seuentene degrees, three and twenty minutes Westerly, and in the night the wind came faire to the South South-east, we lay East with the stemme, with helpe of a Current Easterly; contrary to the report of former Nauigants, and by breake of day, wee were fixe leagues off the Westmost Irmana, bearing East South-east, and had sight of Socatora ten leagues off.

The sixteenth, latitude twelue degrees, nineteene minutes, variation at Sun-rising seuentene degrees, two and twentie minutes Westerly, wee bare vp and went about the Wester point of Socatora: towards euening we had sight of the white Rock, which lyeth about foure leagues off the Westmost point of Socatora, the point and the Rocke, bearing one off the other North-west by North, and South-east by South, the said Rock looming like a saile, standing to the Eastward, larboord tacke aboard; and was so made for, by them of former Voyages. The Current still helping vs to the East-ward.

The seuenteenth, latitude twelue degrees, seuen and fortie minutes, variation at Sun-setting seuentene degrees, two and twentie minutes Westerly, wind variable, at South-east, and South-east by South calme, but a strong Current setting alongt the land, after we were about the Wester point. This night wee came to an anchor, one league and an halfe to the Westward of the Kings Towne, called Tammarin, in twentie fathom water, distant from the shoare two miles; our shoal ding in, after we had ground, vvas two and twentie, twenty, nineteene, twenty, twentie, twentie, small vvhite sand, the vwind East South-east, and South-east calme.

The eighteenth, we came to an anchor in the Road of Tammarin, right before the Kings house, in nine fathom water, a league from the shoare, fine sandie ground.

Occurrents at Socatora and in the Red-sea.

The Generall sent Master Richard Cokes, Cape Merchant, with the Skiffe vvell appointed vnto the King, to acquaint him vvhath vvee were, and the cause of our coming, and to prouide cattell and fresh victuall. Master Cokes returned, hauing bene friendly entertained and feasted by the King, and the rest that went with him. They brought a Present of fresh victuall from the King to the Generall, together with a Letter left there by Sir Henry Middleton, dated the first of September 1611. aboard the Trades-Increase in Delisba Road, in the Island of Socatora: the originall our Generall kept, and returned the copie verbatim, for the future ships. The nineteenth, They went in solemnest manner on shoare, where the King bid vs welcome, and feasted all the Company in his Royal maner, himself being richly vested in crimson Veluet, laid rich with gold-lace. His house was built of free-stone, Castle-like: he had about an hundred attendants, wherof about fifty were wel appparelled, according to the Moors fashion, the rest were naturalls of the Island. After many complements and curtesies, at night we took our leaue of him. His name was Sultan Amur Bensaid, sonne to the King of Cushin vpon the Arab side. We paid heere for kine twelue Ryalls of eight the piece, sheepe three shillings the piece, and for Goats one Ryall of eight a piece, which though it be deare, yet are the most of them not mans meate, being so vildely, and more then beastly bugged and abused by the people, as that it was most lothsome to see, when they were opened. We paid for Rice three pence a pound, Dates three pence a pound, Hens twelue pence a piece, Tobacco seuen hundred leaues a Ryall of eight, Egges pence a piece. The King vwill take no English money, but all Ryalls of eight.

The twenty seuenth, our General caused a meeting of his merchandizing Councel, vnto whom he read the Companies Remembrance, and the Letter receiued by the hands of the King of Socatora, from Sir Henry Middleton: and shewed them, That whereas he had been put in good hope by the Companies Remembrance, to haue obtained good store of Aloes heere at Socatora, which now he found frustrate, the King being wholly vnprouided, and not able to furnish vs therewith vntill August: And whereas we were appointed to goe from hence to Aden and Moha in the Red-sea, (the Monson not seruing for Swat) we were now vnterly dissuaded from the view of those parts, by the treachery and wrong done to Sir Henry and his Fleet. And lastly, whereas if we did not goe for the Red-sea, if we should remaine heere in Delisba Road sixe monethes attending the Monson, wee should find it very chargeable, and be able to effect nothing, (for vntill the end of September, there is no coming vpon the Coast of Cambaya) his opinion was, that notwithstanding these bad tydings receiued from Sir Henry, yet that we should go for Moha, we hauing with vs the Grand Segnors Passe, which the former ships neuer had. He should be able to certifie the Company what stead the Passe might stand them in to stand vpon our guard, and not to aduenture any one man without good plect might ride securely, and obtaine trade aboard, though none on shoare, our force fend and offend vpon occasion, the greatest power that Port could raise. And since Commerce, then he intended to make vse of his Maiesties Commission, in respect offered vnto Sir Henry and his Company, and so enforce the putting off of our duties, or to make spoile of their Skales and Cuttome, by not permitting the Indies were expected in the fift of March to enter there, which would be a matter of rance vnto them: but vntill then hee would be very vnwilling to deale with And this course he did the rather approue of, because heere needed no parting of the Fleet might keepe together, and as soone as the Monien should permit, goe for Surat, according to the Companies order, their force vnited the better to resist the enimie should attempt. The Counsell generall assented to what he propounded to keepe company together, and goe for the Red-sea.

March 1.
Note.

The first of March, we weighed anchor, & set saile for the Red-sea, the wind at sometimes little wind. The winds since we came to an anchor heere, were in the to till night for the most part at North-east by East, and East North-east, and land between the South and South-east, faire and temperat weather: vntil you come thom, where we might haue rid a musket shot off the shore, & further in, is three and an halfe, it is hold all the Bay alongst, keeping two Cables length off the land some stons amongst: a demie-culuering will reach the Castle, which is of no in Tammarin Bay twelue degrees, five and thirtie minutes to the North, variation grees, two and fortie minutes Westerly. The King of Socatora gaue counsaile, to the Red-sea, we should ply to the Southward of Abba del Curia, for that keeping side wee should bee put over to the Arabian shoare, and should not without great Cape Guardafui, so that by prooffe we found it best to keepe the Abasb shoare about

Tammarin Bay.

The fourth in the morning, wee saw Cape Guardafui bearing West eight or nine we steered in West North-west latitude twelue degrees one minute, the Cape foure leagues off, no ground at an hundred fathom, the land high and smooth, v rising, seuentene degrees, foure and thirtie minutes Westerly. In the euening v standing in alongst the land, to find the Bay of Feluke, our depth was twentie and eightene fathome. Heere we resolved to go for Moha, and not for Aden, be Towne of Garrison, and of little Trade, with other inconueniences, as exaction as appeared by the fixt Voyage. Here we took good store of Mulletts with our Sa excellent fish with lines and hookes. Heere are Gummes of seuerall sorts very sw alld fine Mats well requested at Aden and Moha, and the Indies: For ordinarily touch heere, both inward and outward, to buy thereof, and of the Gummes: all and Butter; which is farre better cheape then at Moha, for daily Boats goe ouer Et all, to sell at Aden and Moha; but they will not barter for any thing but linn of sweet gums.

The benefit of the Towne of Feluke.

Note that at Feluke Towne, there is wood and water to be had plentie, but no of the Bay, the passage vp to the Towne is so large, as that three ships may passe danger. The going in is betweene the high Homock and the low sandie point. They willd to steere from hence West by North, alongst the South-shoare to Dem shape their course ouer to Aden.

The ninth, latitude eleuen degrees, fiftie eight minutes, way West five and wind at East and East by South, a stiffe Breeze all day, but at night little wind, the shoare about eight leagues off, we steered West by North, variation at Sun-r grees, ten minutes Westerly.

Two small Islands.

The tenth in the morning, steering West by North, the wind Easterly, wee h small Islands, lying off the high land of Demety about a league off the maine, d the other foure leagues, the Eastermost bearing South by West seuen leagues off, most South-west, the same distance; we stood ouer for the high land of Aden North, and North-west, the wind at East, and East by North, a stiffe breeze; Ea variation fiftene degrees, no minutes, Westerly, latitude eleuen degrees, fiftie eig

The eleuenth we had sight of the high land of Arabia making it to be the high na, bearing North by East, by the compasse eight leagues of latitude at noone the eleuen minutes, of variation at Sunne-rising, fiftene degrees two minutes West a strong Easterly current comming ouer, for wee steered betweene the North North-west, and were so carryed to the East-ward that shee made but a North contrarie to expectation, for had wee had no current, wee should by course North-west way Westerly. But after we were shot in about some twelue leagues we found no current, the point or head-land of Aden breaking it off, as we supposed. I sent certaine instructions in writing to Captaine Towersson and Master Davis bale fellow, from Christian to turne Moore, but willed him to acquaint the Gouvernour therewith, and that we were appointed in honour of the said Passe to shoote off fiftie one Peeces of Ordnance at our arriual heere in this Road, which he intended presently to doe. The Italian intreated that he might first giue his Master to vnderstand thereof, which was granted, and the Purser willed to giue him five Rials of eight, and his Boate one, his name was Mustafa Trudgeman. The Ordnance shot out of each shippe was, The Cloue nineteene, Hector seuentee, Thomas fiftene Peeces. The Towne answered with five Peeces of excellent Ordnance, and two Gallies three a-piece. These Gallies were stout Gallies, of five and twentie Oares on a side, and well fitted, yards vp. The Captaines name whereof was Mamy, and the Captaines name of the Towne Mahumet-bey.

The seuenteenth, the Generall receiued a present from the Gouvernour Ider Aga, that is to say, three Bullockes, twentie Hens, two baskets of Plantens, and two of Limons, with many complements, desiring him to come ashore. He returned him a faire fowling Peece, and willed the Messenger to tell him that hee desired to haue a sufficient pledge from him for his safe returne, (when he should come) for reasons not vnkowne to the Gouvernour.

The Gouvernour sent his Secretarie vnto the Generall with a Letter to know what answer he had formerly returned him by Mustafa Trudgeman: for he hauing giuen him at much intreatie a Bottle of Wine was so drunke therewith before he got to the Gouvernour, as that he could not speake: which being certified by the Secretarie, on the eighteenth Master Cokes, and Bolton our Linguist were sent ashore, to acquaint the Gouvernour that the Generalls comming was to intreate Trade, and that whensoever it pleased him to lend a man of equall worth to remayne with the ships, as a pledge for his safe returne, hee would in person come and visit him: and also to let him vnderstand that our Generall was not ignorant of the wrongs done by Regib Aga vnto Sir Henry Middleton his Countrey-man and his Companie. But if we might now haue quiet Trade, all matters passed should be forgotten, and we would treat with him of such our business as the G. and Signior had giuen vs leaue, which we hoped should bee for all our goods. The Secretarie remayned aboard, pledge for Master Cokes and Bolton; he did eate of our victuals, but had it dressed by his owne people. At night they returned hauing bene well vsed, feasted, vested in cloth of S. luer, and carryed vp and downe the Towne with Musicke before them, to giue the people to vnderstand how welcome they were, as Master Cokes vnderstood it. But at their comming away, they were brought into a house, and dis-robed of their Vests. The Generall asked the Secretarie whether it were ordinary and vsuall with them to doe so, he answered; Yes: he replied that in no other part of Turkie the like was done, that euer he heard of. In the end the Secretarie was dismissed, and halfe a Violet Kerse giuen him: hee was very importunate to know whether the Generall were not of kinne vnto Sir Henrie Middleton. The like was demanded of Master Cokes by them ashore, fearing that hee was come to take reuenge of them.

The Letter written from his mouth is this.

Right worthy and my esteemed good Friend, I haue had conference with them you sent ashore, and haue vsed them in the best sort our Countrey fashion doth affoord, inuesting them with Robes, and conducting them backe with Musicke, that the Countrey people might take notice how you come and are receiued in Amitie. And if it be your pleasure to come ashore to me to morrow, I will giue you the best entertaynement the place will affoord, with a true and vpright heart, without guile or deceit, & will send you my Secretarie or any other pledge you shall esteeme fitting, if it please you to send me word thereof by my Interpreter, which is now aboard your ship, the time you will haue me send my pledge, and haue you meane to come ashore. I haue written yesternight to letter Balha, and it will bee some fourteene or fiftene dayes before I haue answer from him. Yet in the meane-time if you please to send any of your people ashore to buy either fresh victuals, or any thing else the Countrey will affoord, they shall be welcome. As also to sell any thing they please without any molestation at all. And so expecting your answer, I cease from Moha, the five and twentieth of Moharem, De 1021. de Mahomet.

I haue also diuers Letters of Mamy Captaine of Mucha (Moha) or of the Gallies there, vnto the Generall, which to auoide prolixitie, and because the substance is as the former, I omit. I haue yet caused some of the Seales to be cut, and heere added for the raritie, being not in wax, but stamper of Inke, in forme as heere is expresse.

Likewise I haue added a piece of a Letter in the Banian hand and Language (common in great part of the Indies) written from the Sabander in Moha, to Captaine Saris.

Handwritten text in the Banian hand, consisting of several lines of script.

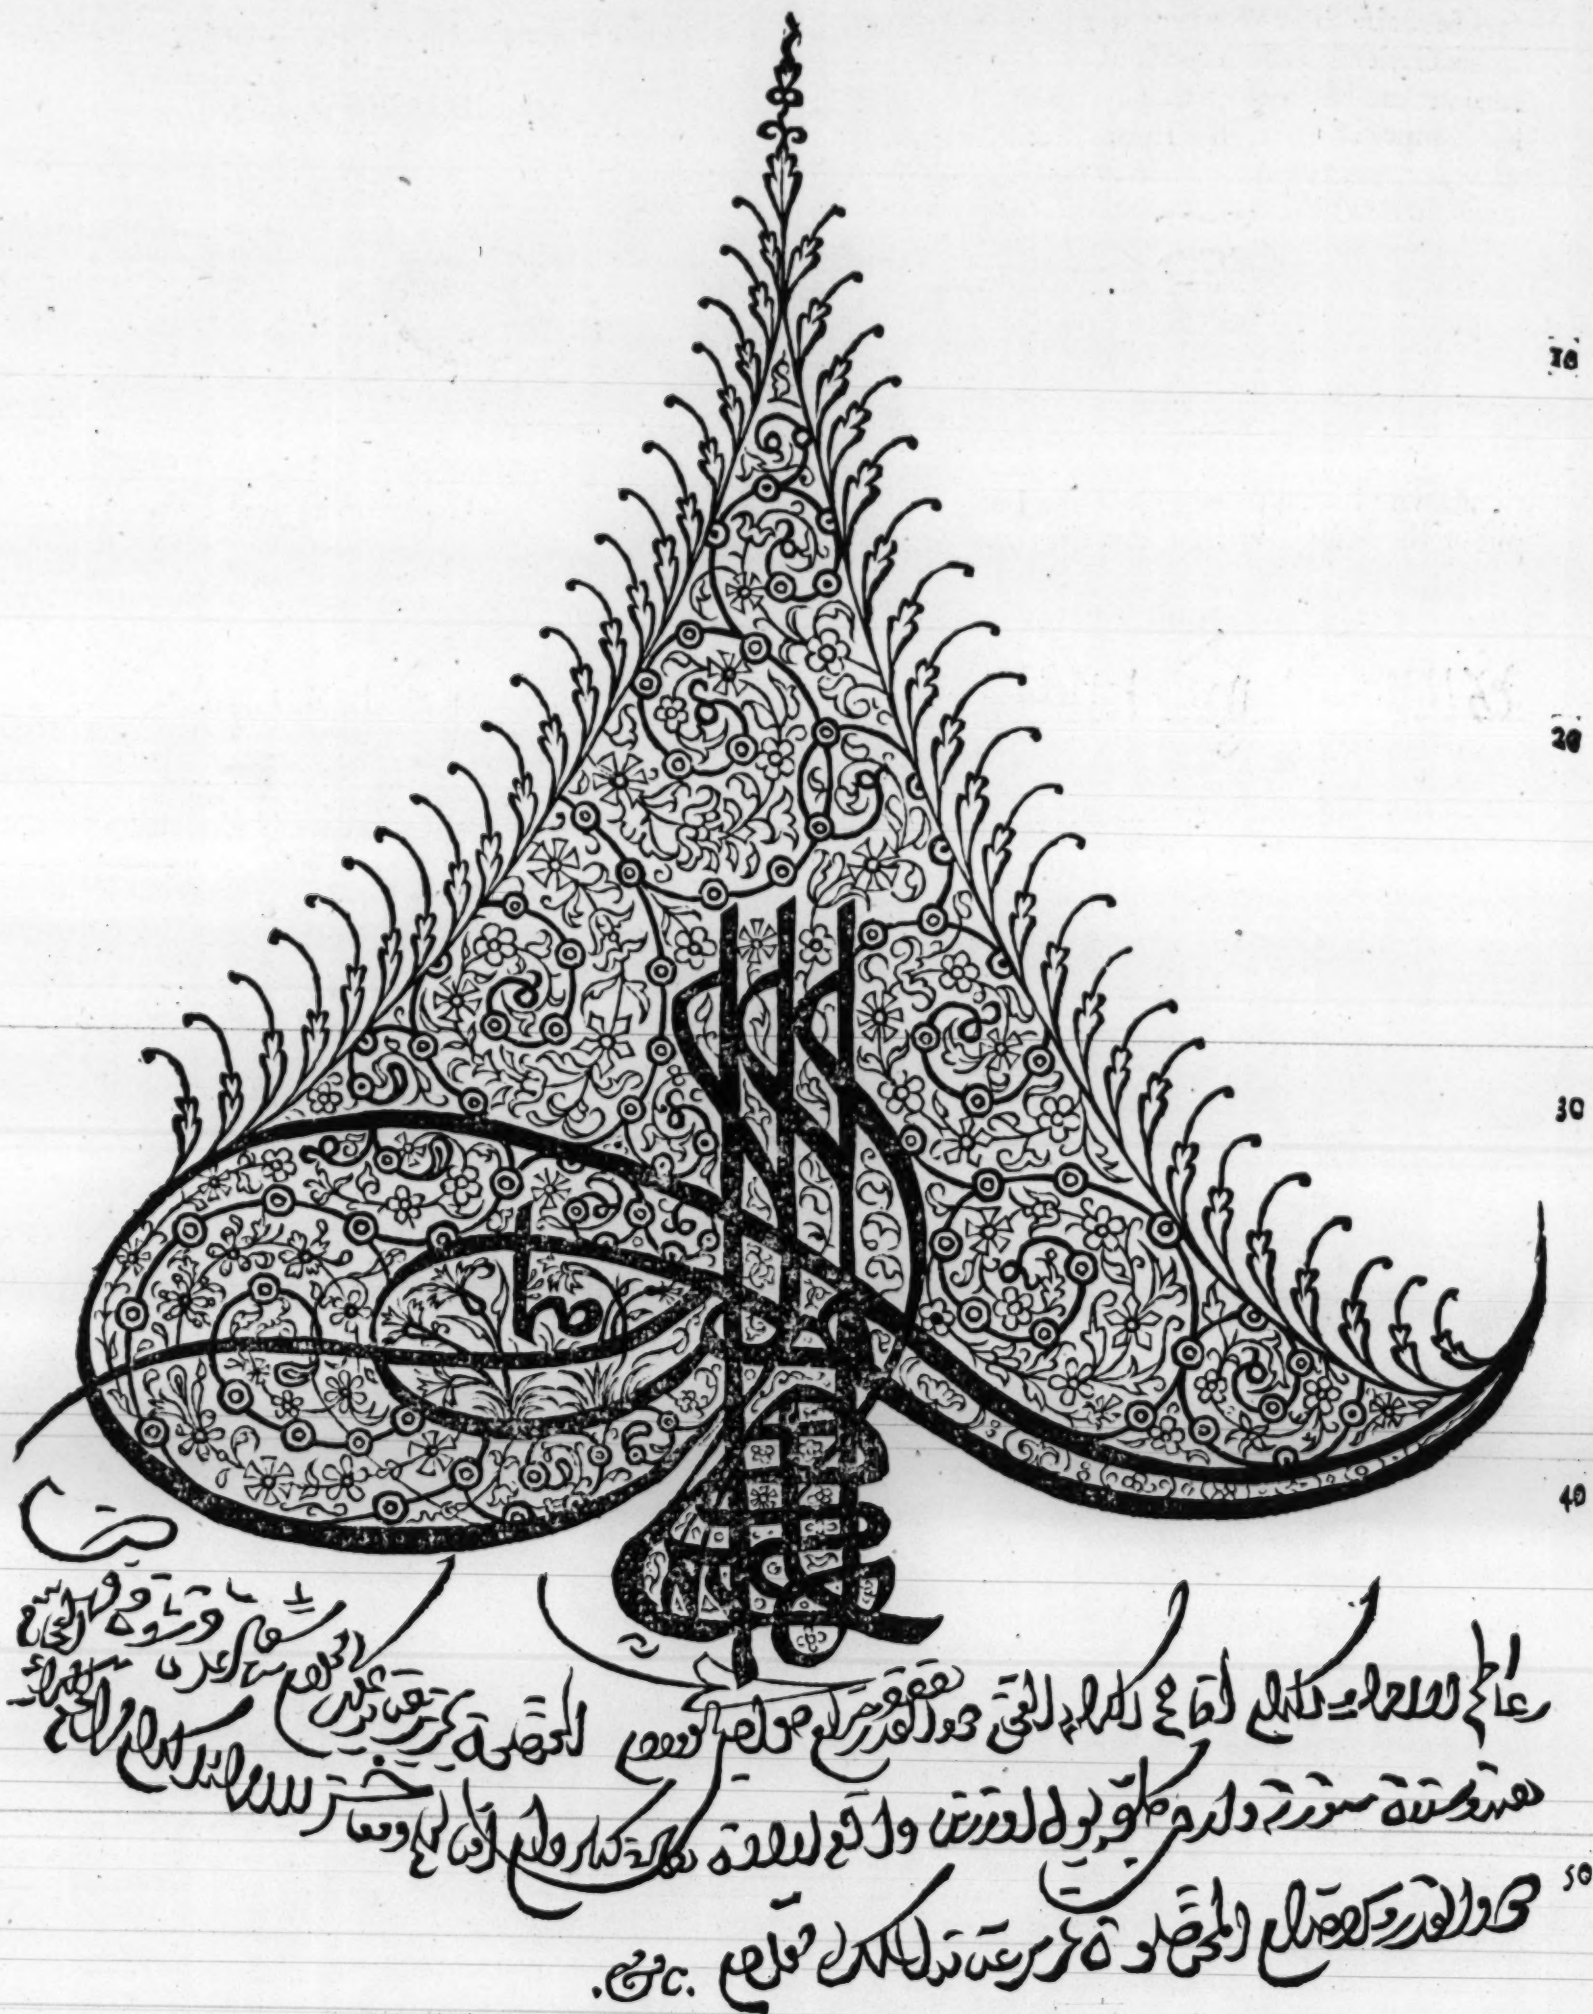

The twentieth, the Gouverneur sent aboard, according to agreement the day before, Mabu- met Aga Admirall of the shoare, and Commander of the Roade for the Turkes Custome and Anchorage, And Nasuffe a graue old man, with two attendants proper men to remayne pledges for the Generall. So he went ashore with all the Merchants, the three Skiffes well fitted, and had one and fiftie Peeces of Ordnance shot out of the ships at parting. Hee was receiued at the landing place by the Captaine of the Gallies, and diuers other principall men, with Waites, Drums, and other Muscull Instruments playing before, and diuers Peeces shot out of the Castle, the people following in such abundance, that we could hardly passe. Hauing passed two Guards of verie proper men well clad, we were brought into the Gouvernours House, which is built all of Freestone, with very faire and large staires, and so were led into a roome spred with rich Carpets, at the vpper end of the roome was a window made after the fashion of our Bay-windowes:
where a Silke Quilt was spread vpon the floore, and two Cushions of Cloth of Siluer, laid thereon, he was requested to sit downe. But presently the Gouverneur came forth of another Chamber accompanied with fise or sixe persons richly apparelled, himselfe in a Gowne of Cloth of Siluer, faced with rich Furre. He tooke the Generall by the hand, kist his owne hand, and put it to his head. Then he led him by the hand to the said window, where they sate downe, and after some few complements, he deliuered vnto the Gouverneur our Kings Letter, which Master Cockes did reade, and Bolton our Linguist interpreted to the Captaine of the Gallies, and hee to the Aga, which course hee held for state. After, he deliuered him the Grand Signiors Passe, which he gaue to his Secretarie to reade, which done, he tooke it, kist it, and layd it vpon his head without further ceremonie.

The Originall I haue in my hands, and haue caused a little of the beginning to be here expref-fed, and therewith the forme of the Grand Signiors Seale, (a little contracted to come with-strokes or lines are Gold, the rest Azure, with Red here and there beautifully intermixed.

Unto yee My laudable Captaines, of the Castles, Cities, and Townes: And unto yee worthy and laudable Customers, dwelling upon the Sea-coast, upon Rivers, Bridges, and all other parts of our Dominions, and thereunto adjacent. Herby yee shall understand, that the Embassadour of the King of Great Brittainie that resideth in Our happie and most high Port, hath giuen vs to understand by his Supplication; That forasmuch as some of his Masters the King of Great Brittainie his subiects, haue with great charge and labour, discovered a Trade in the East-Indies; and withall understand of Wealth, & likelihood of Trade in some Parts of Our Dominions by the way to be had in their Passage to the said Indies, beeing therefore desirous to visit those places for the better enlarging of their said Trade. To the ende that such men may in so good and laudable enterprises haue all fauour, aide, and helpe (so farre as lawfully and conueniently may be graunted) Hath requested vs in the Name of his said Master the King of Great Brittainie, to vouchsafe them our safe-conduct and recommendations. In conformitie of whose request, as also in regard We and our Predecessors, are and haue beene for the space of many yeeres in strict league and Amitie, with the afore-mentioned King of Great Brittainie, and the Subiects of that Kingdome, who long haue had, and at this present haue free Traffique and Trade in merchandizing in our Dominions and Prouinces through the Mediterranean Seas. Wee therefore doe command, and expressely charge yee all, and euery of yee, our above mentioned Subiects and Officers, that yee will not only kindly and louingly intertaine and receiue the said Merchants and Subiects of Great Brittainie, comming or passing through or by any of Our Dominions, especially intending to trade, to the Dominions of Yemen, Aden, and Mohit, and the parts adioyning thereunto. Yea, yee shall yeeld vnto them such Offices of Beneuolence and Humanity, as shall bee meet and conuenient to be yeelded vnto honest men and strangers, undertaking so long and laborious a Voyage. And if so be that We shall understand, that contrary to the Capitulations, the Amitie, and League, which is betweene vs and the King of Great Brittainie, yee doe offer them the least wrong, and any way molest and trouble the said Merchants in their Traffique, and ought else: Know ye for certaine, that yee shall not onely incurr Our high displeasure, but yee shall be punished for example vnto others: and therefore carry your selues conformable to this My Imperiall Commandement, and giue credit to this My Imperiall Ensigne. Written at Our Mansion Guard at Constantinople, on the fifteenth day of the Moone called Zuliegie. Anno. 1019.

The Gouvernour afterward tooke a Copie thereof, and returned it againe.

He told our Generall that he was welcome, desiring that what had formerly been past, touching Sir Henry Middleton, might not be remembred, for that the quarrell grew by two drunken men, and was by the then Gouvernour rashly followed, for which he was displaced fve Moneths since. And as concerning Trade, he could not permit any great matter, till he had direction from his Master Isafar Basha of Sinan, whom he had written vnto, and would within tenne or twelue dayes returne an answer, earnestly intreating that he would permit his people to come on shoare to buy what they wanted, and to sell small matters, to the end that the Naturalls might see that we were in peace and amitie together, and that what was past was forgotten. These his speeches made good what the Generall had formerly conceiued, touching the doubt that the East-Indian ships would make of their comming in here, vnlesse they vnderstood that wee were all friends: and their not comming in here, would bee a great hinderance to euery Officer of this Port. Besides, we riding so neere the shoare (as we did of purpose) as that no laden ship could come in, but that she must perforce ride within call of vs, which did put them in the greater feare: whereby he reckoned himselfe sure of Trade, either a shoare or aboard the ships, and that keeping the Towne in this awe, he might the more boldly aduenture his skiffe and people to the shoare, to fetch what our ships wanted.

The Gouvernour feasted them very royally at a dinner, with all sorts of wild fowle, Hennes, Goates, Mutton, Creame, Custards, diuers made dishes, and Confections, all serued in Vessels of Tinne (different from our Pewter) and made Goblet-fashion with feet, the dishes so placed the one vpon the other, that they did reach a yard high as we saie, and yet each dish fit to bee dealt vpon without remouue. The meate was all serued vp at once, and that before we sat down.

Our

Our drinke was water simply, or else water boyled with an herbe called Canhan therein, which is in tast somewhat bitter. We did sit crosse-legged vpon Carpets laid vpon the shoare: for there they vsed neither Tables nor Stooles. Dinner ended, he led the Generall into an inner Chamber, where he had fowre little boyes that attended him; beeing his bugging boyes: there they two being set vpon a crimson Veluet Carpet, the rest of the Chamber shoare beeing spread with very rich Carpets, one of the boyes bearing a linnen napkin in his hand, did vsheer in two of the other, whereof the first had a siluer Chaffing-dish with coales, the other brought a dish wherein were diuers rich perfumes, viz. Amber-greece, Lignum Aloes, and others. The Gouvernour requested the Generall to let the Boy couer his head close with the napkin; which done, the other Boy held the Chaffing-dish, with the perfumes put therein, vnder his head, that he might receiue the fume which was very pleasant. After he had finished, the Gouvernour and two other chiefe men about him did the like, being as it seemeth a ceremony much vsed among them. Hauing conferred a while together, there came in three of the Boyes again. The one brought a Vest or Gowns of cloth of Gold, wrapped vp in a case of Taffatie, died in Saffron to preserue the colour of the Gold. The other Boy had a Shash or Turbant striped all with Gold, and in length twenty two yards: the third a Damaskeen, or Turkish Sword, richly garnished with Siluer and Gilt, both Hilt and Scabberd. The Gouvernour himselfe did put the Vest vpon the General, & did girt the Damaskeen vnto his side, telling him, That they were not presents from himselfe, but commanded by the Grand Signior, who (as he said) did bestow them, and intreated him to ride with the Cady, (who is chiefe Iustice there) and the Captaine of the Gallies, about the Towne, that the people might take notice of the amitie and friendship that was betwixt vs. They brought a horse richly trapped, the mettall worke of the bridle all of Siluer: but he rather chose to goe on foot, that he might the better view the Towne, whereto they gaue consent, and so wee walked together about the Town, and hauing viewed a house wherein to haue settled our Factory, I was brought to the house of the Captaine of the Gallies, where he had a costly banquet. And thus returning by the Gouvernours house, he met him vpon the staires, where againe earnestly intreating that the discourtesies offered Sir Henry might be forgotten, and that it might appeare by his often coming or sending his people a shoare, they tooke their leaues one of another. And so accompanied with a great traine of the best of the Towne, he returned aboard, where the shippes discharged fifteen peeces of Ordnance. The Turkes that remained pledges hauing diuers Presents giuen them, were sent friendly on shoare, and had fifteen Peeces shot off at their parting.

The one and twentieth, the Generall sent M. Cocks and others a shoare with a Present to the Gouvernour, a case of Bottles fild with Rosa Solis, which he did earnestly desire the Generall to giue him, and to send it so wrapped vp, as that it might not be knowne what it was: likewise was sent two Vests of Violet broad cloth to his Eunuches. They had further directions giuen them to enquire a shoare what Customes were due in and out, the weights, measures, valuations of Coynes, prizes of Indicos, Callicoes, Cotton-yearne, and other Commodities fit for vs to lade. Also to procure the Iewe to come aboard, who was in the Ascension at her casting away, neere the Barre of Surat, and could giue vs certaine intelligence of Sir Henries successe.

Note of Moha
Roade.

Extemitie of heate beginneth in the fine of May.

Note, that this Road of Moha is very open and dangerous, with very shoald water a mile off the Towne low land euen with the Sea. At this present the wind South South-west a great storme, which caused such a Sea, as that we did send not lesse then seuen feete, riding in fise fathome; and the wind at West you haue no succour. But the country people say, that in the time of those winds, which beginne in the fine of May, the extemitie of heate is such, as that it deads the wind, which maketh that season very contagious.

The thirtie one, the General vnderstood from the Captaine of the Towne that yester-night late arryued the Messenger from the Grand Basha, with Letters to the Gouvernour to this effect, That he should yeeld vs peaceable Trade, both on shoare, and with the Indian ships, as he would answer the contrary at his perill, and to let vs furnish our selues with what we wanted. He was doubtfull of the certaintie of this pleasing newes, for that not halfe an houre before, M. Cocks had speech with the Gouvernour, who spake of no such matter. The Captaine said, that the reason of the Gouvernours not speaking thereof, was, because here was a Jelba bound for Mecca, and readie to depart, which he would not haue to know, that the Basha had graunted vs trade, fearing least they should acquaint the Sheriffe at Mecca therewith, who by his Letters to the Grand Signior, might cause the graunt to be reuoked. But we rather thinke the Basha hath returned some harsh answer, with direction to doe that vnto vs, which as yet he cannot effect, we being so watchfull and wary ouer him, and therefore will not be knowne to haue receiued answer from Sinan, till better bethinking. Note that Hosoroofe (one that closely had sent a letter of M. Femells, testifying their treacherous vsage here) did now send word by our Linguist, That the Generall should beware of comming a shoare himselfe, vnlesse he had good pledges as formerly, and then he might boldly come, but otherwise not to trust them, though the Gouvernour should sweare vpon his Alcaron: for they were souldiers, and did not much respect oathes: and as hee heard, the newes that was come from the Basha did not tend to our Benefit: for that the Copy of the Grand Signiors passe was not as then come to the Bashaes hands: But then should be fully seene what would be done, which would be within sixe dayes.

The second of Aprill, 1612. the Caravan from Grand Cayro in Egypt, arrived here in Moha. The third, came into the Road two Indian ships, one of Chaul, the other of Cananor, their lading Indicos, and Callicos, Pintados, Amber-greece, and Cotten-yarne, with at least foure hundred passengers, who carried much wealth about them. We saluted them with nine Peeces of Ordnance out of our Fleet. They answered with three Chambers a Peece beeing all they had. The Generall sent the Skiffe, to enquire what newes vpon the Coast of Surat. The Captaine sent word that there were three English ships trading there, but further could not tell. The Captaine of the Towne with five chiefe Janisaries came aboard, beeing sent by the Gouvernour, to let our Generall vnderstand, that the Bascha had written vnto him to intreate and vse vs kindly, and to permit vs peaceable Trade, desiring the Generall that hee would in person come a shoare the next morning, and he should further vnderstand. He craued pardon, not forgetting Hosroofoes admonition. But Captaine *Tower*son being desirous to goe a shoare, the Captaine was requested to tell the Gouvernour, that the Generall vpon good pledge would the next morning send his Brother vnto him, which was well liked of: so hauing feasted the Captaine and his retinew, and giuen them diuers Presents, they were sent a shoare, with twentie one Peeces of Ordnance at parting, which he sent word that he tooke so well, as that we should not want the best assistance he could doe vs.

Aprill.
Caravan of Cayro.
Indian ships.

The fourth in the morning, though the pledges were not yet come, yet desirous to see what the Bascha had ordered, Captaine *Tower*son was sent a shoare: for we held the two Indian shippes which rid hard by vs, for sufficient pledge, if on shore any iniury should be offered. The Gouvernour vsed him friendly, and vested him to content, but nothing was effected of that hee went about, the Turkes not performing their promise. The Gouvernour sent word, that it would be fitting to send two of our men of good fashion vp to the Bascha to Sinan, with the Kings Letter and Present, and then speedy dispatch would be had to our liking. Whereof the General approoued, intending the next day to lay out a Present for him.

The fifth, the Captaine of the Gallies sent aboard three letters, which the last night came to the Gouvernours hands, from S. Henry Middleton, and Captaine Sharpeigh, who rid then at an anchor at Bab mandel. The effect whereof was, That he was come from Surat, and had little or no Trade there. That Captaine Hawkins vpon distast was come from Agra, and with his wife was aboard his ship. That he had brought all away from thence, except one man of Captaine Hawkins, which went ouer Land for England. And that he was come backe to bee reuenged of the Turks, wishing our Generall to get his goods and people aboard with all speed. Hereupon he altered what yesternight was agreed vpon, and forthwith sent one of the Marchants away to Sir Henry with a letter of the proceedings of his Voyage, and of the manner of our entertainment here hitherto: that if he had not thus come in, he had on Monday sent two men of fashion vp to Sinan.

Three letters from Sir Henry Middleton and
Capt. Sharpeigh

Note, the two Indian ships aforesaid, did discharge here these goods following: Lignum Aloes sixtie Kintals, Indico sixe hundred Churles out of both ships, Shashes of all sorts great store, Cinnamon of Celon one hundred and fiftie Bahars, each Bahar three Churles and an halfe, Osfar which is a red die, great quantitie, Cloues great store, Bastas or white Callicos from twentie to fortie Royals the Corge, (a Corge being twentie pieces) a great quantitie. The Price of Indico was from thirty to thirty five, fortie, and fiftie Rials the Churle.

Indian Merchandise.

The seuenth, the Generall writ to the Captaine of the Towne, that he should procure the Indian Merchants to barter with him at reasonable rates for such of their commodities as he should desire, and as might serue to lade one of our ships, which doing would satisfie S. Henry of their now friendly meaning towards vs, and cause him to forbear all hostile attempts.

At this present, there was a great rumour spread in the Towne, of a Jelba or two, which Sir Henry had taken (comming ouer from the Abesh side with victuall) in respect whereof, we durst scarcely aduenture our Skiffe and Ging a shoare.

The Generall receiued another letter from Captaine Mamee. That the answer which the Gouvernour had receiued from the Bascha, was in these words; Ider Aga, You haue writ me that three English ships are come to Moha, to trade in merchandise, with the Grand Signiors Passe: Give them faithfull promise from me to come on shoare, to take a house untill the Monson be past, to buy and sell. You haue likewise writ me, that they will send vp two men vnto me: give them all things fit for their iourney, &c. Captaine Mamee did further write, that what our Generall would propound, the Aga and hee would vnderwrite. That for bartering, they would doe something for loue, but nothing by force, and were as willing to lade all the three ships as one.

Note, as we were informed, the weight here vsed is called an Inen, which is two Rottalas, a Rottala is a pound of their weight: tenne Inens is twentie pound of theirs, which makes twenty three pound English haberdeweize, sometimes foure and twentie pounds as the Weigher will befriend you. A Churle of Indico by their weight is an hundred and fiftie pound, and of ours betwixt an hundred and sixtie sixe, and an hundred and seuentie pound. Cotten wooll is sold by the Bahar, which is three hundred Rottalas, making betwixt three hundred thirty two pound, and three hundred forty foure pound English, at eighteen Royals the Bahar, very good & cleane. Their measure measure of length is called a Peeke, contayning seuen and twentie inches, or three quarters of our English yard.

Weights of

The ninth, the Gouernour sent off a Canoa to intreate me, that the Generall in the morning he would send a hoare, and he should haue both the Bashas answer, and a warrant to stay all such Iunckes as shall passe Sir Henrie, and force them to come in hither, and trade with them for such of their goods as he desired, &c. and that he would suffer his people to come ashore, because the Merchants were now growne fearefull, by reason of Sir Henries staying some of the ships.

The tenth, Master Cockes was sent ashore, had conference with the Gouernour, and Captaine Mamy: who told him that they were now fully resolved, that what they had formerly promised, they might not performe, the Cadie disliking thereof, saying, that they might hazard their owne liues thereby: That neither Merchant nor Broker would come aboard (as our General had requested) the Knight had so discontented them: That they of Grand Cairo had their Factors there, which lay purposely to ingrosse Indicoes, and other Indian Commodities, whereof they would not buy vntill they should see what quantitie would come: That the Bannians (or Indian Liegers ashore) which haue Indicoes in their hands, would not sell, hoping of a scarcitie: he also brought word, that they denie ashore to buy any of our goods, vnlesse wee will land them first.

Note, the Grand Signiors Custome of this Port Moha, is worth yearly vnto him fifteen hundred thousand Chicquenes, (which rated at five shillings sterling a piece, is yeerely thirtie seuen thousand five hundred pounds sterling) according to the report of the Gouernour to Master Cockes.

¶. III.

Their Aduentures with Sir HENRY MIDDLETON, with other Observations of those parts, and arriual at Bantam.

THe eleuenth, the Generall caused the Merchandizing Councell to meete and consult what was best to be done, seeing that Sir Henrie thus kept the Iunckes from coming in thither, and that there was then no further hope of Trade heere. It was agreed vpon, that vntill the Monson would permit vs to proceed further, wee should continue friendship with the Towne, as hitherto we had done, &c.

The twelfth, the Generall being informed of Sir Henries earnest desire to speake with mee, and protestations of great kindnesse and loue, resolved to goe vnto him; and so willed the Master with the first wind to set sayle for Babmandell. Whereof hee did let the Gouernour of the Towne to vnderstand, and tooke a Letter of his to carrie to Sir Henrie, the better to continue friendship still with him.

The fourteenth, in the morning we arriued at the Bab, where wee found the Trades Increase riding, and foure Indian Iunckes or ships. The Generall went aboard the Trade, where hee remained vntill night, but nothing could at that time be concluded vpon betwixt the Generals.

The fifteenth Sir Henry came aboard the Cloue.

The sixteenth, our General seeing Sir Henries resolution, called his Councell together, & acquainted them with what he obserued thereupon, and that in regard, that by these brabbles and iarres happened betwixt Sir Henrie, the Turkes and the Cambayans, our hopes of any Trade to be had at Surat, was as small, as that which we had already found at Moha: Our best course would be, that the Hector and Thomas should waigh anchor & ply between Aden and the Bab, The Cloue to keep the Abesh Channell there, that none might passe by in the night, and so to meet with as many of the Indian ships as we could, to whom we might put off our Broad-cloth, Leade, Tinne, Iron, and Elephants Teeth (Commodities which were provided for those parts) in barter for such as he knew would vent well in those Countries, whither wee were afterwards to goe: if wee lighted vpon Indicoes, they would be good for England also. That he had certaine intelligence of two very great ships daily expected, called the Rehmi and the Hasani the least of them (by report) able to lade the Hector, with requestable Commodities: Hereunto they generally assented, to be put in practice with the first wind.

The Generall went aboard the Trade, where at length this agreement was made: that both Fleets should ioyne to trade with as many of the Indian ships as they could meet with, and to exchange our English Commodities with them for theirs: Sir Henrie to dispose of two third parts of all the goods which should be bartered for from this day forwards, and Generall Saris the other third. The Grand Signior to haue his Custome paid. Hereof Writings were made, being sealed and deliuered betwixt them. The Hector and Thomas were appointed to ply betweene the North end of Babmandell and the Abesh shoare, to meete with all such as should come that way: with charge that no man should take the value of a penie out of them, or offer the least violence to any of their persons, &c.

The eighteenth, in the evening, a ship of Cananor arrived laden with Spice, Drugs and other Commodities.

The Generall set saile for Moba, the wind at South and South by East a stiffe gale, where we arrived within five houres after. The Gouvernour presently sent off to vs intreating to know how all things passed at the Bab; requesting that our Linguist might bee sent ashore to acquaint him therewith, which was accordingly done.

The twentieth, the Skiffe was sent ashore to fetch our Linguist, who returned and brought a present of fresh victuals from the Gouvernour to our Generall. The Gouvernour intreated to have a muster of our Commodities, which Master Cokes carried presently to him: hee liked of diuers colours of our Broad-cloth, promising to take for a thousand Rials besides some quantitie of Tinne and Lead. Many others desired to have Lead and Iron, wherefore he intreated that in the morning some quantitie thereof might bee brought ashore, for hee having once begun, the Merchants would certainly follow and trade with vs.

He sent three samples of Indico, but none of Labor, which is round and the best. The price a hundred Rials the Churle; which is an hundred seven and twentie pound or Rottalas of Moba, and about a hundred and fittie pound English. But they would not sell by any other weight, then that they bought by, which they might very well doe, the price so vnreasonable: for wee esteemed the three sorts to bee worth but thirtie, fortie and five and fortie the best the Churle.

Our Generall writ to Sir Henry and Captain Tower, and sent his Letters ouer land by Mahumed, Secretarie to the Gallies.

The one and twentieth we sent ashore eight Clothes, one Tunne of Iron, one Tunne of Lead, two Chests of Tinne of sixe hundred weight. They offered for foure of the best clothes three halfe Rials the Peeke, which should be seven and twentie inches, but measured by another Peeke, proued to be one and thirtie inches. The Bahar of Tinne, an hundred and twentie Rials. The Bahar of Iron, twelue Rials. Lead fifteene Rials, which were no prices to our liking. At night the Merchants returned with their Commodities aboard againe.

The five and twentieth, the Generall (vpon conference with Master Cokes) resolved to set saile and goe to Assab, where we came to an anchor.

The seven and twentieth, about eight at night hee found the Trade and Hector riding there, with eleuen saile of Iunkes or Indian shippes of severall places. Note, that comming into this Road or Harbor, keepe the Northerne side aboard, leauing a little Rocke or Hummocke on your star-boord side, then we had twelue, eleuen, ten, nine, eight and seven fathome sandie ground, and in seven fathome wee let fall our anchor about halfe a mile off the shoare.

The thirtieth, the Generall sent his Skiffe to the Iunkes, to giue warning to the Nobodais, and Merchants, that they should not offer to set saile without his leaue. The Nobodas and principall of them requested, that such of their goods as wee desired might bee sorted out of hand, that they might not loose their Monson of going to Iudda, offering to bring aboard our shippes what packes wee would to be opened there, and to carrie backe what we refused.

The ninth of May, 1612. I caused the Indian ships to be measured, which were found to bee of the scantlings following, viz. The Rehemy, was long from sterne to sterne-post, an hundred three and fittie foot. For rake from the Post aste, seuateene foot. From the top of her sides in bredth, two and fortie. Her depth, one and thirtie.

The Mahomedee in length, an hundred sixe and thirtie foot. Her rake aste, twentie. In bredth, one and fortie. In depth, nine and twentie and an halfe. Her maine Mast in length, was sixe and thirtie yards, an hundred and eight. Her maine yard, foure and fortie yards, an hundred two and thirtie.

The other were not much lesse.

The tenth, Captaine Mamy came from Moba to treat with Sir Henry concerning his demand. But first he came aboard the Cloue, where hee was friendly entertayned, and after the Generall went with him aboard the Trade, where he deliuered to Sir Henrie two Letters, viz. one from the Basha of Sinan, and the other from the Aga of Moba: the effect, to know what he demanded of them, for they were ignorant of any after iniurie offered to him, & for the former they said that they had giuen him satisfaction before his departure. Wherefore they intreated the Iunkes might bee discharged and sent for Moba. His answere was, that hee demanded satisfaction for the losse of his mens liues, & for the making of him lose his Monson, to the ouerthrow of his Voyage. Mamy said, if he would write his minde, he should haue answere from the Basha in foureteene dayes.

The twelfth, Captaine Mamy returned with Letters from Sir Henrie.

The fifteenth, the King of Rehita being a pettie Prince vpon the African or Abeffe side, came riding downe vpon a Cow to visit Sir Henrie and our Generall: he had a Turbant on his head, a piece of a Periwinkle shell hanging on his fore-head, in stead of a Iewell, apparelled like a Moore, all naked (sauiug a Pintado about his loines) attended with an hundred and fittie men in battaile after their manner, weaponed with Darts, Bowes and Arrowes, and Sword and Targets: both the Generals went ashore with an hundred shot and Pike to preuent all Treacheries, that the Turkes might plot against them by colour of this courtesie, being loath to let him returne without an enteruiew, lest they should want the refreshing which they might haue by his friendship heere at Affab, which is vnder his command. They presented him with diuers gifts, and (according to his desire) did giue him his lading of Aquauita, that hee was scarce able to stand; they are Mahometanes, being a blacke hard-fauoured people, with curled pates. The King bestowed vpon our Generall five Bullockes, and proffered all the assistance he might doe them.

This day the Pepper-Corne arriued from Aden, bringing with her a Iuncke, which came from Sinde, or the Riuer Indus, laden with Butter, Oyle, and Cambaya cloath. They brought vs newes that Mallacamber, Captaine of the great shippe of Diu had escaped them with his shippe, and was arriued at Moha, passing in sight of them; the Pepper-Corne shot at her, but could not reach her, shee went so well. This was the ship for which the Pepper-Corne had purposely weighed, and which the Thomas and Darling had so long expected to haue come to Babo. 10

This day our Generall had a note deliuered him of the prises of commodities, how they were lately bought and sold at Surat, whereof the copie followeth, viz. Broad-cloath of three and twentie pound a Cloath seuerall colours, twentie Mamoodyes, the Conido of five and thirtie Inches and five Mamoodyes make one Riall of eight. Kersies eightie foure Mamoodyes the piece, which was lesse then ours did cost in England. Lead the great Maund, thirtie three pound, at seuen and one third part of Mamoodyes. Tinne the small Maund, five and twentie pound, at five and a halfe Rialls of eight. At Dabull, Iron the Bahar, containing three hundred and threescore pound, at one and twentie Rialls the Bahar. Peees damasked, from twelue to eighteene Rialls the piece. Ellephants teeth, threescore and five Mamoodyes, the great Maund of three and thirtie pound. Indico Cirkesa, three sorts, whereof the best at fourteene Rupias, which make halfe a Riall of eight: the second sort, twelue Rupias; the third sort eight, the great Maund of three and thirtie pound. Indico Lahor, which is best of all; three sorts, whereof the best at fixe and thirtie, the second at thirtie, the third at foure and twentie Rupias, the Maund of five and fiftie pound. Charges of bringing it to the waterside, ten in the hundred for the Cirkesa, and twentie in the hundred custome for Lahor. 20

The seuenteenth, we began to weigh Lead, and deliuer our English commodities to the Captains & Masters of the Iuncks, in part of paiement of the goods, which we had receiued of them. 30

The Thomas is dispatched for Socatra, Priaman and Tecoo.

The three and twentieth, the Thomas manned with nine and fortie men, all in health, set saile for Socatra, for Aloes: and from thence for Priaman and Tecoo, vpon Sumatra, for Pepper.

The one and thirtieth, the messenger from the Basha of Siman, the Sabander of the Bannians at Moha, and Captaine Mamy arriued at Affab, to compound the differences with Sir Henry Middleton.

June 24.

The foure and twentieth of Iune, the Trade set saile out of Affab Road for Moha, and the five and twentieth day, the Cloane did follow. The same night they in Moha made great Bonfires, and Fire-workes, which for that they had not done the like before when wee were there, wee supposed them therewith to braue vs.

The fixe and twentieth, our Generall sent his Skiffe to the shoare with letters to the Aga, the Sabandar, and Captaine Mamy, and gaue the Cockson charge not to put ashore, for feare of surprising. The effect of these letters was, to see what readie money might bee procured to cleare the accounts betwixt the Indians and vs. The nine and twentieth, the Gouernour returned an answer to our Generall, more ceremonious then of substance; so that the thirtieth day we returned againe to Affab Road. 40

July 1.

The first of Iuly the Trade came thither likewise, and fell to our old trade of bartering for Indian commodities.

The fift, Mere Mahumood Tookee, Captaine of the Rehemi of Surat (which was the Queene Mothers ship) brought diuers dishes of meate aboard the Cloane, being dressed after their fashion; he was accompanied with diuers of his principall merchants, who were all kindly entertained: his shippe was at the least of twelue hundred Tunnes. 50

The eleuenth, we all visited the Cloane and Hector: the Trade and Pepper-Corne weighed anchor and set saile for Moha, together with seuen of the Indian ships, which for the most part of them were better then any of vs any way: in the euening we anchored short of Moha.

The twelfth, we weighed and stood for Moha, and about three in the after-noon, we all anchored before the Towne of Moha.

The eighteenth, one of the Iuncks, which was indebted to vs, got in so neare the shoare, that we doubted shee would steale all her goods ashore. Whereupon, the next day, the Cloane and the Pepper-Corne did warpe nearer, and discovered many Ielbaes aboard the Iuncke to vnlade her, but at their going ashore, the Cloane, Hector and Pepper-corne, made many shot at them, so as the men forsooke both the Iuncks and the Ielbaes and twomme ashore; the Castle nor Towne not once shooting at vs, albeit we were much within command of their Ordnance. 60

The twentieth, the Gallies fearing our comming so neare, warpt behinde an Island to the Northward.

The

The seventh of August, wee had aduice of the arrivall of the great shippe of Sues, and foure August 7. great Gallies at Bago, a Towne on the Abesse side, about halfe a dayes saile from Moha. Our Generall receiued a Letter from the Gouvernour of Moha, shewing that this day was Festiuall amongst them, and that thereon they were accustomed to shoote off certaine Peeces of Ordnance, desiring that it might not be taken in euill part, doubting lest we should hold it done in a brauado, and so in requitall shoote into the Towne againe. About noone they discharged seuenteen Peeces out of the fort, three from the landing-place, and diuers from within the land, with abundance of small shot, which went off in good order; some of their great shot went a head vs, and some a sterne, to shew what they could doe, but all past in kindnesse: hereby wee found 10 the report of this place false, viz. That heere were only two Peeces, and that they were not able in two houres to discharge them.

The eight, the Hector let saile for Priaman and Tecoo (the Monson now serving) having eightie eight English in perfect health. The Nobodais, or Captaines of the luncques, desired to have Passports from our General, for their better getting into their Countrey, in case they should meet with any more of our Nation : which was granted.

The tenth, all reckonings were cleared with the three Iunckes, the Hafani, Caderi, and Mabomodi. The eleventh, we cleared the Rebemoy and Salameti. Note our whole cargason of commodities and Rials bartered for in this place, did amount but to fortie six thousand one hundred seuentie foure Rials of eight.

I haue thought good to adde heere, two Acquittances for better vnderstanding the premises.

In Moha Road in the Red-sea the tenth of August 1612.

English commodities not vendible in any quantie at Maha.
We departed for Bantam in Iana.

September 3.
1612.

At the Port of Mocha we found not our English commodities vendible for any quantitie: the Naturalls poore, and the Turkes vnwilling to deale with vs.

The thirteenth, we set sail from Moba for Bantam, our Company seventy five men all in perfect health.

The fourteenth in the morning, in sight of Babo, but the wind large at North-west, we steered East by South through the great Channell on the Abesse side, hauing eightene fathom, about one league of the Island Babo, where is very good and safe harbour for shipping, and of good receipt, but the place is barren.

The third of September, we arrived at Socatora in the Road of Delisha, having been much hindered in our passage hither, by a West and North-west Current. We understood that the Thomas had been here three moneths past, but stayed not, for that they could not agree vpon the price of Aloes.

The fourth, the Merchant and Linguist were sent ashore, friendly entertained and furnished with horses to returne to the Skiffe, but could not agree vpon the price, hee holding it at fortie Rialls of eight, the kintall of one hundred and foure pounds; saying, he had only five and twentie hundred weight, for which he was earnestly solicited by the Portugals.

Being loath to lose time here, it was concluded that hee should haue thirtie Rials for one parcell, and thirtie eight for another; so he deliuered foure thousand sixtie seuen pound, which cost 50 one thousand foure hundred eighteene and an halfe of Rialls of eight: we found the King very false both in his weight and word, but we vsed him kindly for the good of future Voyage. The eight, we set saile for Bantam.

The two and twentieth, latitude by the Starre eight degrees, twelue minutes, the wind at West South-west, we steered East by South. About midnight we fell into the strangest and fearefullest shining water that euer any of vs had seene: the water giuing such a glare about our ship, as that we could discerne a letter in the book thereby, it being not halfe an houre before so darke, as that it was not possible to see halfe our shippes length any way. We doubted it had beene the breach of suncken ground, and thought to haue cast about: but finding that wee had sailed in it for halfe an houre, and saw no alteration, we held on our course, quartering very much wind; but at length it proued to be Cuttle-fish, which made this fearefull shew.

The seven and twentieth, in the morning we had sight of the Island Selon, bearing Northeast by East, about seven leagues off, being very high land vp into the countrey, but low to Sea-ward.

Cuttle fish

wonderfull
glare in the Sea.
Selon or Zeilan.

The

The nine and twentieth about noone, we fell with Cape Comorin, bearing East by South about fourteene leagues off, being high land, and towards the North, shewing double land neare the water-side, we sounded and had no ground at an hundred fathom. Note, that this land lyes in the latitude of seven degrees, two and fortie minutes to the Northward of the Line: but in our Plats it is made to stand in sixe degrees, and ten minutes, which differs one degree, two and thirtie minutes, stretching South South-east. By experience we find that it lyeth more Northerly; and in our course we had no sight of any of the Islands described in our Plats, neither did we discover any of the Maldive Islands, whereof the number is said to bee so great; making our account to have past betweene the Maine and the Northerne Coast of the Maldivas, in eight degrees no minutes, discrying no land, vntill we saw this Maine.

Cape Comorin in seven degrees, two and fortie minutes. False plats.

10 The fifteenth of October, latitude foure degrees, nine and fortie minutes to the Southward of the Line: This day we had sight of Sumatra, whereof the Eastmost part did beare East North-east fourteene leagues off, high land: heere we found a very strong Current setting to the Southward, which put vs off from the land. Note, that those bound for the Straights of Sunda, must keepe Sumatra aboard, after they are come into one degree, thirtie minutes to the Southward of the Line, for there begins the current: keepe thirtie league off; with good looking out, for there are many Cayos fiftene or twenty leagues off, which, by reason of the current, we did not see.

October 15. South latitude foure degrees, nine and fortie minutes, Sumatra.

20 The eighteenth, latitude five degrees and twentie minutes, way East, Northerly, very tempestuous, with thunder and lightning very fearefull, with much raine, so that we could not see the land: But, praised be God, notwithstanding the euill weather, our people were all then in as good health (if not better) as when we parted out of England.

The foure and twentieth, we came to an anchor in the Road of Bantam, where (though contrary to expectation) we found the Hector, which arriued there the day before, with the James in her company, and certaine Flemmings. The arriuall of all these ships, and expectation daily of the Trades-Increase, the Pepper-Corne, Darling and Thomas to follow, occasioned a great (though sudden) alteration in the prices of commodities; Those of any request being raised very neare to thrice the value of what they were bought for, the day before the Hectors arriuall. Cloaves which the Marriners of the Hector and James had bought the day before for sixteene Rials of eight the Peecull were now risen to fortie Rials and vpwards: Pepper the day before 30 was at ten Rials of eight the ten sakes, but vpon our comming, were raised to twelue Rials and an halfe, &c.

We arriued in the Road of Bantam. The James.

30 The sixe and twentieth, we went ashore, and so to the Court, accompanied with the Merchants, and gaue diuers presents to the Gouvernour Pangran Chamarra, (who is as Protector to the King, ruling all, the King being as no body, though of yeares sufficient) which Presents hee well accepted: we desired his Order for speedie landing of our goods, which he granted; provided, that the Kings officers might be acquainted with what wee landed, that the King might not be wronged in his Custome.

40 The eight and twentieth, a Letter from Master William Adams out of Iapan, was read to all the Merchants, that they might take notice of the hopes of that Countrey. It was now concluded vpon, that in regard the Flemmings were so strong, and almost sole Commanders of the Moluccas and Banda, and that the place heere is so vnhealthfull, besides our people dangerously disordering themselves with drinke and Whores ashore: The Hector should with all speed bee dispatched for England, and that fourteene thousand sakes of Pepper should be provided for the lading of her, and the Thomas: doubting that if once there should come newes of the other ships expected, Pepper would be much raised ouer that it now was.

A letter of Master William Adams from Iapan.

50 We bargained with Lackmoy for two thousand sakes of Pepper, at an hundred twentie seven Rials of eight and an halfe the hundred sakes: and with Keewee, for a thousand sakes, at an hundred twentie five Rials the hundred sakes: and for three thousand sakes more, at an hundred and fittie Rials the hundred. Wee made triall on shoare, what a Peecull of Cloaves might weigh by our English weights, and found it to be an hundred and thirtie two pound sub- till, good weight.

60 The ninth of Nouember, Sir Henry Middleton arriued at Bantam in the Pepper-Corne. The fifteenth, (the Gouvernour hauing earnestly requested it) there mustered before the Court fortie men out of the Cloave and Hector, thirtie out of the Pepper-corne, and ten out of the Salomon, in all eightie men, which gaue him good content. The Flemmings denyed him: it was for the breaking vp of the Mahometanes Lent.

Nouembet 9.

The seuenteenth, agreed with Keewee for foure thousand sakes of Pepper, at sixteene Rials ten sakes, with allowance of three in the hundred balle.

70 The eighteenth, heere arriued eleuen saile of Flemmings, great ships, and the Thomas in their company; shee had gotten at Priaman only three hundred and twelue Bahars of Pepper, and twentie Taile of Gold.

Twentie Taile of Gold.

The two and twentieth, an hundred Flemmings, with their furniture and their pike-men in bright armour marched to the Court, where they brought themselves into a ring, and gaue three volleys of shot: The Gouvernour sent word to them, that the King thanked them, that they had done enough, and might depart with their iron hats; for so the Iauans call head-peeses.

The eight and twentieth, three Holland ships, laden for the most with Pepper and Mace, set saile, homeward bound: five more of their ships set saile for Banda, and the Moluccas.

December 4.
The Globe in Patane, bound for Siam.

The fourth of December, a Dutch ship arrived heere from Choromandell: by whom wee understood that they left the Globe in Patane, bound for Siam.

The eleventh, the Hector set saile from Bantam for Morough the watering place, where there is a sweet ayre, and where good refreshing of Orrenge, and other wholesome fruits are to be had; there to attend till the Thomas were full laden.

The two and twentieth, the Trades-Increase and the Darling arrived heere from Priaman.

The five and twentieth, in honor of the Birth-day of our Saviour Christ, certaine Chambers were discharged at the English house in Bantam, and were answered with Ordnance out of the shippes.

The eight and twentieth, Kewee, the chiefe China Merchant, invited Sir Henrie and my selfe, with all the Merchants, to dinner, and caused a Play to be acted before vs by Scenicks of China, which was performed on a Stage with good pronounciation and gesture.

The twelfth of January, the Thomas set saile for England, hauing in her sixe and thirtie Eng-lish, and three Indians.

Q. IIII.

The Voyage of Captaine SARIS in the Cloaue, to the Ile of Iapan, what befell in the way: Obseruations of the Dutch and Spaniards in the Molucca's.

HHe fourteenth of January 1612. in the morning, wee weighed out of the Road of Bantam, for Iapan, hauing taken in heere for that place seven hundred sackes of Pepper for a triall there. Shee had in her seuentie foure English, one Spaniard, one Iapan, and 30 five Swarts or Indians.

Pulo Lack.

We came on ground.

The fifteenth in the Morning, little wind at West, and haling into fourteen fathom, we steered East by South, and East South-east, leaving Pulo Lack on our Starboord, and eluen or twelue on our Larboord side, our depth from fourteene to ten fathoms, going within two Islands, which lye to the Eastwards of Pulo Lack. And in the faire way there lyeth a shoald, which hath not aboue sixe foot on the toppe of it, and is not aboue halfe a Cables length euery way, and hard aboard it there is ten fathomes, and the next cast on ground, as by experience: for heere we lay three houres beating, with a reasonable stiffe gale; but through Gods mercy, and the extraordinary labour and endeaour of the Company, got her off; but sprung a leake, that for all night, and till ten the next day we continued pumping euery man (my selfe only excepted) taking his turne, and all little enough to keepe it from increasing, which made vs all to doubt that wee should be enforced to put backe againe to Bantam, to the ouerthrow of all our men and Voyage for Iapan. The Carpenter by his diligence hauing found out the leake, made it Thite, thanks bee to God. To goe cleare off this shoald, keepe close to the Islands, for the Maine is shoald.

Two Islands.

The sixteenth, we anchored at the watering place called Tingo Iana, beeing foureteen leagues from Bantam, and some three leagues and an halfe to the West-wards of Iaccatra, riding between two Islands which lie off the point, distant five miles. Depth ten and nine fathomes close to the Island, but the maine is shoald. I sent Presents to the King, to his Sabandar, and Admirall requesting leaue to buy such necessaries as we wanted.

A Current.

The eighteenth, the King of Iaccatra sent his chiefe man vnto me, with thanks for the Presents, and proffer of what his Countrey afforded. The twenty one, we set saile, steered neere vnto the East-most Island of the two, that are against the watering place: depth ten and nine fathome, and so to Sea-boord of all the Islands East North-east from the watering place. For the outward-most of them beareth East by North Northerly, and off the Norther point of the said Island lieth a shoald, which yee shall see breake, distant from the Island halfe a league, and hauing that South of you, the East point of Iana will beare East Southerly, depth seenteene and eighteene fathome, and all the way out from twentie to foureteene fathome, but here you shall find a Current setting East South-east, which you must allow for, as you haue the wind. In the evening we anchored, little wind at North by West, the Current setting vs to the South-east vpon the shoare: depth thirteene and thirteene fathomes and an halfe, being shot three leagues to the East-wards of the East point of Iaccatra, wind at North-west.

The twenty two, the wind at South-west, we weighed and steered East North-east to get deepe water, and finding foureteene fathome, the high hill ouer Bantam did beare West South-west, halfe a point Westerly. The three and twentieth in the morning, we deckt vp our sailes, the the wind at South-east, and had sight of an Iland which lieth off Cherribon, with three of those high piked hills of Iana, the Eastermost bearing South-east, and Cherrybon South by East. Latitude at noone sixe degrees tenne minutes, the wind at North North-west, the Iland bearing East by North three leagues and an halfe off.

Note, that yee may boldly keepe betweene twentie three and twenty foure fathome water in the Offing, and in twentie fathome vpon Iana, the darkeſt night that is, and in the day vpon Iana in what depth yee please.

The twentie fourth in the morning, we had sight of three high piked hills, and three other to the East-ward, like Ilands: depth twentie fathome, the point of Iana bearing South-east by South, and the Iland lying off it South-east and North-west about nine leagues off. We steered East by South, and East South-east. Latitude sixe degrees tenne minutes, way East twenty eight leagues.

The twentie sixth, at breake of day we had sight of the Iland called Pulo Labuck, bearing North-east by East eight leagues off, wind West by North. We steered East by South, depth thirtie foure and thirtie fve fathomes, and about nine of the clocke had sight of land, bearing South-east and South-east by South, the Iland aforeſaid bearing now North-east by North, little wind, latitude sixe degrees twelue minutes, way East and East by North twenty two leagues, wind at West, the Iland at foure in the after-noon, bearing West by North nine leagues off, depth thirtie foure fathomes. The twentie ſeuenth, latitude sixe degrees foure minutes, way East Northerly twenty eight leagues, depth thirtie eight fathome, and at three in the afternoone had sight of an Iland bearing North North-east ſeu en leagues off, and at fve of the clocke ſounded, and had thirtie foure fathomes.

The twenty eighth, at foure in the morning, we had twentie fve fathomes, steering East till noone, latitude fve degrees fiftie fve minutes, way East Northerly twenty leagues, depth thirty fathome. From noone we steered East by South, and at foure a clocke had thirty fve fathome. The twenty ninth, in the morning about foure, wind at West by North, we steered East by South, but had no ground at fortie fathome, but at noone fiftie two fathomes, with many ouerfalls. Latitude sixe degrees nine minutes, way East by South twenty eight leagues, wind at West and West by North, with a Current ſetting to the West-ward, afternoone we ſounded, but had no ground at an hundred fathome, and steered East.

The thirtieth in the morning, latitude fve degrees fiftie ſeu en minutes, way East Northerly twenty eight leagues, and in longitude from Bantam, two hundred twenty foure leagues, the ouer-falls continuing, but ſounding had no ground at an hundred fathome. At three in the afternoone, we had sight of a low flat Iland at top-maſt head, bearing North-east by North fve or ſix leagues off, full of trees, and had eightene fathome, and at next caſt eightie fve fathome: then we steered East by South, and at foure a clocke it did beare North by East halfe a point Northerly, three or foure leagues off. Then we had sight of two other low flat Ilands, the one opening to the East-ward, the other to the West-ward, ſo that this was the middle-moſt. At ſixe at night, it bearing North halfe a point Eaſterly, we ſounded againe, but had no ground at eightie fathom, we steered East by South, keeping our lead in reſpect of the ouer-falls or Ripplings, which were fearefull, yet had no ground at ſixtie fathome.

The one and thirtieth, at breake of day we had sight of the Celebes, the Weſter end riſing like an Iland, and the outward-moſt high land bearing East by North: Latitude fve degrees fiftie two minutes, the Eaſt part bearing East by North ſixe leagues off, way East Northerly ſixteene leagues and a Current ſetting to the North-weſt ward. At Sunne-ſetting we tooke in our ſailes to keepe ſhort of the ſtraights of Deſalon, by the Naturals called Solore, and keeping our Lead all night, we found fiſt twenty fathome, the high land North, and ſo droue into thirtie three, and fortie ſeu en fathome, fearing a ſhoald which lyeth two third parts of a league from the Celebes, and at low water the breach vpon it may be ſeene. On the Celebes ſide it is very dangerous, and full of ſunken ground. Wherefore we haled ouer for Deſalon ſide, keeping a good birth of it, hauing a piked hill, which is next to the Sea ſide, riſing like an Iland, being to the Weſt-wards, then it is North North-east, and when it is North, then yee are thwart of the Weſt end of the ſhoald, and then will the Iland which yee leaue on your Star-boord ſide, beare East North-east, ſo that yee may be bold to ſteere out in the middeſt betweene the two Ilands. And when the Pike hill beares North by Weſt, then are you thwart of the Eaſt end. Note that the Eaſt end of Deſalon ſhoweth like an Iland, and will deceiue you till you come to it, but hauing brought the North end of the point East North-east, halfe a point Eaſterly, then bee bold; for you are cleare of the ſhoald afore-ſaid. It is about foure leagues betweene them: we came within halfe a mile of the Iland of our Star-boord ſide, going through, and the wind taking vs ſuddenly ſhort, we ſounded, but had no ground at fiftie fve fathome, right vp and downe.

The fiſt of February afternoone, we were thwart of the point of the Iland bearing South off vs, and the two Ilands which make the ſtraights, lying one from the other North and South, diſtant fve ſmall leagues.

The ſecond in the morning, we had sight of the South part of Deſalon, South-weſt by South, and

and the North part West by North eight leagues off. We steered East by North, the wind at North by East, latitude five degrees fiftie two minutes, distant from Desalon tenne leagues. The third in the morning, the Southerne end of Cambina did beare North-east by East, and the Iland or Hammocke North-east eight or nine leagues, latitude five degrees fiftie seven minutes: the Iland North-east halfe a point Northerly eight leagues, way East Southerly five or sixe leagues, and towards night the wind at South, and South South-east, we steered all night East by North. The fourth in the morning, the wind at North-east, latitude five degrees no minutes. At three we saw land East by North, making it to be Botun.

The fift, three or foure leagues off Cambina, we found the Current to carry vs to the Northward, the wind at East by North; and the Iland of the East end of Cambina, North-east halfe a point Easterly foure leagues off. The sixth at breake of day, the Iland North-east by North Northerly foure leagues off, the wind at North; so that these twenty foure houres we haue gotten to the East-wards one point.

The seuenth at breake of day, the Northern point was North by East, & a smal high land, that lieth to the South-ward sixe or seven leagues off Botun, South-east, and the Easter land of Botun East North-east: we steered East by North, and East, but left the high land to the South-wards on our Star-boord side, and it did beare South-east halfe a point Easterly, then was the point of Botun shut in, in a long great Iland. The Norther end will be North North-west.

The Ile Tingabasse.

The eighth in the morning, we saw another Iland, called Tingabasse, rising round and flat. Here we had a Current setting North-east, the wind at North-east by North and North North-east. 20

M. Welden an Englisman employed in the King of Botun service.

The ninth, wind at North West by North, the point of Botun North-west, halfe a point Northerly, we had sight of two Curra Curras between vs and Botun: The Skiffe was sent off to them, and brought one M. Welden, one of the Expeditions Companie, and a Flemming bound for Banda. The said Welden beeing employed in the King of Botun affaires for Banda, and had now the command of these Curra Curras. Latitude five degrees twentie minutes, wind at East North-east, we steered North, and at night the wind Southerly, we steered North North-east: and from the East point of Botun, the land falls away suddenly, with two or three great Bayes to the North-west-wards; and three great Ilands which lie to the Northward of Botun, which make the straights.

Aduertisements concerning the straight of Botun.

Note, to goe through the straights of Botun, it is not aboue a league broad, and the entrance is on the North-side of the Iland; and if you come from the Westward, being thwart of the North-west point, your course is East North-east, and East by North, vp to the Roade, and no danger but what you shall see; but you must leaue the three great Ilands to the North-wards of you, yet goe not betweene any of them, and falling with the West end of Botun, goe not betweene the Iland that lyeth off it. There are two long Ilands, but leaue them on your star-boord side, for it is full of broken ground betweene them and Botun. But if the wind serue you, then hale to the North-ward of all the Ilands either betweene Botun and Cambina, or else to the North-ward of that too, and so you may keepe the Coast of Celebes, for it is bold: we steered with little wind all night, North North-east.

The tenth in the morning, the straights of Botun did beare North-west by West, and the maine Iland of Tingabasse South South-east halfe a point Southerly. 40

The eleuenth, at five in the morning, the wind at North-west, the Iland West ten leagues off, we steered North North-east, latitude at noone foure degrees eight minutes; way North North-east Easterly a litle, foure and twentie leagues, and off the East point of Botun, five and thirtie leagues, the wind all night betweene North and North by West.

The twelfth, little wind at North by West, latitude foure degrees sixe minutes, way East by North twentie leagues.

The Ile of Buro.

The thirteenth in the morning, we had sight of the Iland Buro, beeing high-land, the one point bearing North-east by North, and the other North-east ten leagues off, the wind at North by West, hauing made to noone seven leagues of latitude, three degrees one and fortie minutes.

The fourteenth in the morning, we bore vp with the East part of the Iland to seeke for some place to ride in. 50

The fifteenth and sixteenth of latitude, three degrees, fortie minutes, breake off day the Northernmost part of Buro, East by North nine leagues off, little wind at East North-east, and North by East.

The seuenteenth, little wind, the East-part of Buro, bearing East Northerly, wind at North, at noone North-west by North, the North part of Botun East by South, and three Ilands, which we then had in sight at Top-mast head, North-east by North.

The Ile of Sula.

The eighteenth, in the morning we were by the Eastermost Iland three leagues off, wind at North North-west, it bearing North North-east. At noone we were within a mile off the shore. The Skiffe was sent to speake with the Countrey people. This Iland is called Sula: wee had fiftene fathome, the ships length off the shoare, and a mile off no ground at a hundred fathomes: the West part of Buro lying South halfe a point Westerly, and North halfe a point Easterly fourtene leagues the one from the other, wind at West, the Land stretching North North-east. 60

The twentieth, wind at East by North, steered North by East, of latitude one degree thirtie minutes, way North-east seven leagues. The

The one and twentieth in the morning, we were foure or five leagues off an Iland, called Haleboling by our Saylers, being a high copped round Iland, different in shape from all the rest of the Ilands in sight. The wind at North-east, and at East hauing made to this noone a North-east way foure leagues of latitude one degree, sixteene minutes the point of Haleboling, or Bachian, North-east by North foure leagues off: and the outwardmost land, North a quarter Westerly, finding a current setting North-east, wind all night at North North-east and North.

The Ile of Haleboling, so called by the English Saylers, by others Boa de Bachian.

The two and twentieth in the morning, wee had sight of land North by East, it being the Iland Machian very high land: heere we had a current setting North North-east of latitude at noone no degrees, one and fiftie minutes, way North seven leagues, variation at Sun-setting, foure degrees twelue minutes, wind at North by East, and North North-east.

Machian.

The three and twentieth in the morning we were three leagues off the Land, wind at North North-east seeking a place to anchor in: and within a quarter of a mile of the shoare had fortie fathome, wherefore we bore vp to the South part of the Iland, where we had twentie and nineteene fathomes for a cast or two, but then no ground. Wee steered from this South point East South-east, for so the Land lyeth open off the point of the high round Iland, being foure leagues betweene the two points, but the Wester point is an Iland with three or foure other to the Eastwards, which you cannot perceiue till you bee verie neere them. Then the Land falleth away North-east, and sheweth a large and round sound or Bay with Land of both sides very deepe. This round Hill is Bachian, and yeeldeth great store of Cloues; but by reason of the Warres they are wasted. The people not suffered to make their benefit thereof, for to gather them, and let them fall and rot vpon the ground. Beeing by the Flemmings and Spaniards oppressed, and wrought to spoyle one another in Ciuill Warre, whilst they both secure in strong Forts, sit and looke on, prepare to take the bone from him that can wrest it from his fellow. Hauing no ground to anchor in, and not able to get to the Northward, we resolved to stand off all night, hoping to haue a shift of wind to carrie vs to the Iland Machian, whither we intended.

Misery of wars in the Moluccas

The foure and twentieth, in the morning the high land South by East ten or twelue leagues off the Iland seemed ragged, we stood in, and a league off the point, sent off the Skiffe to sound and to looke for water, but returned aboard finding no water nor place to anchor in, wherefore we stood into the Bay, and presently had sight of a Fort and Towne called Bachan. The Pinasse a head finding fresh water in diuers places, but steepe too into the cod of the Bay, where the Flemmings haue a Fort artificially and warlike built; the Towne hard by it. Heere we came to an anchor (saker shot off the Fort) hauing had very vncertaine shoaling, as seuentie, sixtie, eight and ten fathome; but Ozie.

A small Fort of the Hollanders. Boa de Bachan, being the Norther end of the Ilands, in our plats called Haleboling.

The Dutch saluted vs with five Peeces; whom I requited with the like number, but the Kings man being then aboard our ship, we told him, it was done to the honour of his King, who sent mee word that hee would haue come to visit mee, but that the Dutch intreated him to forbear. In this Fort are thirteene Peeces: viz. one Demy-culering of Braile, the rest Saker and Minion. The Flemmings here resident are more feared of the Naturals then loued, which notwithstanding is cause of their better benefit. For the Naturals, as soon as we were arrived, told vs that they durst not bring vs a Cattie of Cloues, but vpon their liues. As wee rid heere, the outwardmost point was South South-west, and the other South-west, distant from vs foure leagues. The King sent his Admirall and diuers of his Nobles aboard to bid me welcome, saying, that they knew of what Nation we were by our Flagge, vsing much Ceremonious courtesie, wishing that we were seated there in stead of the Flemmings, that they might bee cleared of them, their Countrey now almost ruined by these Warres. I entertayned them friendly, and told them that our comming was to procure Trade and to leaue a Factorie amongst them, if their King so pleased. They answered that it was a thing by them much desired, but at present not to bee granted, yet they would acquaint their King therewith.

The Captaine of the Dutch Fort came aboard to visit mee, by whom I vnderstood their force to be but of thirteene Peeces and thirtie Souldiers. The most of them married, some to the Countrey-women, and some to Dutch women, whereof the Fort was fitted with eleuen able to withstand the furie of the Spaniard or other Nation whatsoeuer, being of a very lustie large breed, and furnished with few good qualities. But it seemed they followed their Leader: for no sooner was the Captaine aboard, but the Amazon-band followed, complayning of great miserie, sitting downe with our Saylers to victuals at their first comming, with small intreatie. They had what the ship afforded, and they returned ashore with their Captaine.

The small forces of the Holland. vs in Bachian.

The third of March, we sounded with the Skiffe alongst the East-side of this Bay, and at the opening or going out neere to a little Iland, we found a place to anchor, in twelue, sixteene, twentie fathome, Corall ground, without command of the Fort. Note, there is a shoald to the South-wards the length of three Cables, latitude no degrees, fiftie minutes.

The fourth, the King of Ternata sent me a present by his Priest.

The fifth, variation at Sun-rising, foure degrees fortie eight minutes Easterly, A Moore came aboard with a muster of Cloues, offering to sell some quantitie, if wee would goe to Machian. This Moore was sent by a man of great account of that place, who at the present was heere.

Grochy a great Island.

Machian five leagues North off the Line. Caia an Island.

Wherefore it was thought good to stay a day longer to haue some conference with him, his name was Key Malladaia; and was Brother to the old King of Ternata.

The sixth, we stayed to speake with this Cavalier, who came and promised to goe with vs to Machian, and to bring vs to a place there called Tahannee, and did put aboard vs two of his chiefe men to be as our Pilots thither, appointing vs to goe before and stay for him at an Island by the way, and within two dayes he would be with vs, giuing vs great incouragement of good store of Cloues. He told me that the Dutch gaue fiftie Rials of eight the Bahar, but they would cost vs sixtie Rials, which I willingly promised to giue him.

The seuenth in the morning, we weighed anchor and parted out of this Road called Amasan, & by direction of our new Pilots, steered in West & West by North for the Island Machian, lea- 10 uing two Islands (which lye foure or five miles from the place where we last anchored) on our larboard side, depth two and twentie, thirtie and fortie fathomes, two Cables length off the Island.

The tenth, we had sight of Machian being a high and copped Island bearing North-easterly, and the Island Tidore opening like a Sugar-lofe on the Wester side, but not so high Land as Machian: it is shut into the point of the Wester side of the outwardmost Islands, of the three that lye in the going out, two of them being without the narrow or straight, and the third maketh the straights it selfe, yet there are more Islands on the Easter side. But the current setting to the South-wards, we anchored in three and twentie fathomes, a mile off the little Islande in the straights mouth: so that the distance from the straights of Namorat, to this passage, is five 20 leagues, and from the Roade of Amasane, where the Flemish Fortresse standeth, fourteene leagues.

The eleuenth in the morning, we weighed the wind at South South-east, and current setting to the North-ward, we passing the straights. The wind vered to the North-west by North, we flood to the East-ward till noone, then we tackt to West-ward the wind at North North-west, and had sight of Geilolo, being a long Land, depth going out nine and twentie, and foure and thirtie fathome, and many Islands to the East-ward, and East South-east. The point of old Bachian lying to the North-ward of the straights some three or foure leagues, leauing foure Islands on the star-board side. That which maketh the straights on that side is called Taually Bachar, and when you are a little without the small Island which lyeth in the straights, you shall haue 30 eightene fathome, a cast or two, and then it will deepen, and standing to the North-wards you shall open another Island to the West-ward called Tamata, with a Rocke like a Sayle a good distance off the point of it. And anchored at an Island bearing North Westerly, three leagues from the straights in three and fortie fathomes, where on the Southerne point is a shoale hauing three fathome on the skirts, and is dry at low water, which shoale reacheth ouer to the South part of Bachian, we riding halfe a mile off the shoare. This Island is called Taually, the wind at North North-west.

Heere we stayed all the twelfth day, for Keymalladaia, being the place where hee appointed to come vnto vs. This Island is distant from Machian ten leagues: here we had good store of wood, but no water.

The thirteenth, our Cowpers prouided themselves of Rottans for Water-caske, which make 40 excellent hoopes, and are heere of all assises in great abundance. The shoale afore-said now dry, beareth West by South, halfe a mile off vs, and another point a mile off, North North-east. The wind at North.

The fourteenth, for that Keymalladaia came not, his seruant doubted that the Flemings seeing vs to aduenture through this passage amongst the Islands, did suspect him and perforce kept him. Wherefore we did set saile, the wind at North by West, and plyed vp for Machian. The Norther point of Taually, and the Norther point of Lattetatte (from whence wee set saile) bearing one of the other West by North, and East by South, distant sixe leagues, and the Norther end of Taually, and the bodie of Grochy, the great Island, lye the one from the other North-west foure 50 leagues, and North North-west from Grochy, are foure or five small Islands which couer the Mayne of the great Island, and are distant from it five leagues North-wards, and there are many Islands North-east by North, called Motere. The sound lyeth cleere of all the Islands betweene Bachian and Geilolo, (alias Batta China) South-east and North-west, and is very broad, but hath Islands on the star-board side as you goe to the North-wards. The Channell betweene Bachian, Machian, Tidore, and Ternata lyeth North by West, and South by East, and is sixe leagues ouer in the narrowest part.

The fifteenth in the morning, we passed betweene Battachina and Caia. Latitude at noone no degrees seienteen minutes to the North-ward: So that Machian is not truly placed in the Plats: for that there the Equinoctiall cuts it in the middle, and wee find it to stand five leagues more 60 Northerly, wind at North by East, and North by West, with a Current setting to the South-wards, variation foure degrees fiftie eight minutes Easterly. The sixteenth in the morning, we were saire by the Island of Caia, the wind at North by East. Here we had sight of a saile to the North-wards, which by a Fisherman we vnderstood to bee a Flemish bound from Machian to Tidore.

Tidore with Sago, which is a Roote whereof the Naturalls make their bread.

The seventeenth in the morning, we were nere a Fort of the Flemmings called Tabelola, wind at North-east; we stood to the Southwards, the Current setting vs to the North-wards. Then the wind at North, we steered with the East-most point, and came to an anchor at foure in the afternoone in the Road of Pelebere, hard by Tabanne in fiftie fathome, within call of the shoare, halving one point of the land South South-west two miles off, and another North-east by North one mile and an halfe off, and the land Caia five leagues off. This night some small quantity of Cloues were brought aboard, the price set at sixtie Rials of eight the Bahar, of two hundred Catties, each Cattie three pound five shillings English. I received a letter from Key Mal-ladaia from Bachian, expating his stay, with promise that he shortly would bee with me, in the mean time that he had written to the people to helpe me with all the Cloues they could.

The eighteenth, a Sannaca came aboard and proffered much curtesie: two Hollanders came with him, being very inquisitive to know who directed vs to this roade, saying, that it must needs bee one of the Naturalls, and if they knew him they would cut him in peeces before our faces; that we did wrong them in coming hither, this beeing their Countrey, as having conquered it by the Sword. They were appointed to returne to their Forts, and tell their Captaines that if they needed ought that we might spare, they should haue it for reasonable content before all others, because we acknowledged them our neighbours and brethren in Christ: but for any propertie of this Countrey to be more in them then vs, we tooke no notice, and therefore would ride there, and trade with whosoever it pleased to come aboard. So they parted, threatening the Naturalls which were then aboard, that if any did bring Cloues aboard vs, they would put them to death. The countrey people made light of their threats, and said they held vs their friends, and would come aboard to vs. Bought this day three hundred Catties Cloues for Cambaya cloth, and some sold for ready money.

The nineteenth, the two Flemmings came aboard againe, and beganne to note downe in their Table-bookes the names of the Countrey people which came aboard. Whereupon I caused the Boat-swaine to turne them out of the ship, and command them to come no more aboard. Diuers of our Companie were sent to walke ashore, to see what intertainment the Countrey people would giue them. They went vp to the Townes of Tabanne and Pelebere, and were very friendly vsed. They told our men, that the Flemmings had wrought so with Key Chillisadang, the King of Ternataes sonne, who was newly come, that he had forbidden them to sell vs any Cloues vpon paine of death, otherwise we should haue had them before the Flemmings, whom they find great oppressors of them. Towards night, the Prince passing by our ship in his Curra Curra, I sent my Pinnasse well fitted with a faire Turkie Carpet, and Crimson Silke and Gold Curtaines, intreating him to come aboard; which he tooke kindly, but excused it, saying, that in the morning he would visit me.

The one and twentieth, an Oran Caya came aboard, and told me, that a Curra Curra of the Flemmings had searched three or foure Prawes or Canoas comming aboard vs with Cloues, and had taken them from them, threatening death to them for the next offence. And that since our comming hither, they disurnished their Forts, and placed their people round about the Island, that the Naturalls should not be able to bring vs any more Spice, and that they had sent ouer a Curra Curra to Tidore, to cause two great ships of theirs to come hither and ridle by vs, the one a head, the other a sterne, to beate vs out of the Road, without trade or refreshing.

The twentieth, we had sight of one of the Flemmish ships comming about the point, by reason whereof we had little trade now, the people being afraid, I received a Present from Key Mal-ladaia, who as yet was not come. The Naturalls expected what would now become of vs, the Flemmings hauing reported ashore, that they should see vs runne out of the Road at sight of one of their ships. It was the Redde Lion, had thirtie Peeces of Ordnance, anchored a sterne of vs.

The twentieth fourth, the Prince of Ternate, Key Chillisadang sent to tell me, that hee would come and visit me. So all things were fitted in the best manner for his entertainment. Hee came attended with diuers great Curra Curras, and rowed thrice round about the ship before he entred. At his boarding of vs, our ship discharged five Peeces of Ordnance: I brought him to my Cabbin, where I had prepared a Banquet, meet enough to haue been set before the King of Ternata himselfe (had he been there) with a very good consort of Musique, which much delighted him. He promised me to giue the people license to bring Cloues aboard vs, and requested that I would but haue patience for a day or two, that he might haue aduice from his brother then beeing at Tidore. I bestowed on him diuers Presents, and at parting ordered seven Peeces for his farewell.

The twenty fifth in the morning, a Curra Curra of the Flemmings came rowing by our shippe, scoffing at our people, and singing a song which they had made in derision of vs: they often vling thereof caused our men iustly to find themselves therewith agrieved, as also for their rowing ouer our Can-bodies diuers times, endeavouring to sinke the. Wherefore I caused the Pinnasse to be well fitted, and gaue order, that if at their returne they continued their mocking of vs, to run aboard and sinke them. They came singing and scoffing according to their custome, the Pinnasse ranne aboard them with such a surge, as that the water came through her sides; there beeing in her two of the Captaines of their Forts, well fitted with shot and darts : our men were well provided, and had two good Fowlers in the Skiffes head. They lay a good while aboard her, and willed them to take this for a warning, and leaue off their scoffing and mocking of vs, for else they would teach them better manners the next time, and so they returned aboard with their promise, that it should be no more so.

A writing sent from the Hollanders.

Towards euening they sent one of their Merchants vnto me, with a writing from their Doctor in Droits, who as we were informed, was chiefe amongst them in absence of But or Blocke, who had come out of Holland, Generall of eleuen Saile. The effect whereof was to let me know, That all the people of the Moluccas had made a perpetuall contract with them for all their Cloues, at fittie Royals of eight the Bahar, of two hundred Cattees, in respect that they had deliuered them out of the seruitude of the Spaniards, not without losse of much blood, and expence of great wealth; willing me that I should not mooue the people from their obedience, which might redound to their greater damage, they holding the Countrey to be their owne, as conquered by the Sword. Also that the Naturalls ought them much money, which was aduanced to be paid in Cloues. Answer was returned that we would not meddle with their businesse, our coming being only to trade with such as desired to trade with vs, and so dismissed him.

The twentieth seuenth, the Flemmings enforced the Prince to lie with his CURTACHITA a sterne, to keepe watch that none bring any thing aboard vs: for in our sight he commanded a Canoa aboard him, which was coming to vs (as we thought with Spice) making him returne. Towards night, two of the Naturalls brought vs some refreshing.

The twentieth eighth, the Prince vnderstanding that we tooke it not well, that hee rid so neere vs to the fearing of the Naturalls, remooued and went about a point further off, which much discontented the Flemmings. After noone, with the Skiffe well manned, I went to see if I could deale with the Prince for a parcell of Cloues, but found him gone to the Wester side. Captaine Blocke seeing my Skiffe gone into the Bay, followed vs with his CURTACHITA, and would haue landed where I was, but that I would not suffer him, which the Naturalls seeing, and that Captaine Blocke returned aboard againe without landing, diuers of the better sort came downe to vs, protesting great loue towards vs, and sent for Cocos and other fruites, and bestowed them vpon the Ging. The Master of the Cloue seeing Captaine Blocke to make such speed after vs, manned the long Boat for aide, but vpon a signe giuen returned aboard.

The thirtieth, the Flemmings brought the Prince to ride by vs in his old place. Towards euening another Flemmish ship came in, called the Moone, a proper ship of thirtie two Peeeces of good Ordnance, but not aboue fittie men: she came to an anchor so neere a head vs, as that wee could scarcely wind cleare one of the other. The Prince sent vnto me to excuse his coming backe, but now we saw that he durst not displease the Flemmings. The thirtie one, diuers harsh dealings and discourtesies passed betwixt the Flemmings and vs.

Aprill the first 1613.

The first of Aprill, the Flemmings brought an hundred and twentieth of their men ashore, which morning and euening did set and discharge the watch with Drum, Fife and Ensigne. This force they had gathered together out of their Forts and ships.

Road of Pelabry.

The second, I seeing no more hope of lading, and that Key Malladaia came not according to promise, gaue order to the Master, to cause water to be filled, and to make readie to set saile with the first faire wind. At noone, obseruing we found this Road of Pelabry, to stand in no degree, twentieth sixe minutes to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, Variation three degrees, eight and twentieth minutes, the highest land in the Island, Mechian bearing West North-west halfe a point Westerly.

The fift, we weighed anchor, little wind, the Current setting to the Southward, we droue to sea, being vnder our fore-saile, and ahead the Moone the greater ship of the Flemmish, which made a faire shot vnder our sterne, which we presently answered, close a head his Admirall, expecting farther, but heard no more of them. At noone they both weighed and followed vs, but the wind at South-west had put vs so farre to the windward, as that the Naturalls came aboard with Cloaues for a time, as fast as we could weigh and pay for them, the Flemmings not able to hinder them. Also there came an Oran Caya aboard, who promised vs a good parcell of Cloaues, if we would but come nearer the shoare in the morning.

The sixt, about fittie Cattees of Cloaues were brought aboard in diuers Canoa's, but no newes of the Gallant. Towards euening standing nearer the shoare then we were willing, but for this occasion, we had sight of a west ashore: the Skiffe was sent and spake with the Oran Caya, who said the Cloaues were readie, and in the darke should be brought aboard; but presently a Curra Curra, of the Flemmings passing by, put him into such a feare, as albeit our people would haue waisted him, yet durst he not aduenture: so they returned.

Mootiere.

The seuenth in the morning, wee were thwart of Mootiere, being distant from the Wester point of Machian foure leagues North by East, halfe a point Easterly; and from it North three leagues, is the Island Marro, and from that two leagues Tidore. There is passage betweene these Islands, or on any side of them, without danger. Wee had sight of the two Flemmings to the Southwards of vs, plying after vs: Latitude at noone no degrees, five and thirtie minutes, wind Westerly.

The

The eight, Marro, North by West, some two miles off the body of it, and one point North by East, halfe a point Easterly, and the other North-west by North, halfe a point Westerly, and the pike of Tidore North by West, and opening the East point of Tidore, and the Wester point of Bachian, they will beare the one from the other North and South, and the body of Marro West South-west halfe a point Southerly, and the Westerne part of Tidore, that you shall see West by North. Looke well out, for in the faire way is a long shoale, which lyeth euen with the water at high water, the water shewing whitish, and stretcheth North-east and South-west, betweene Marro and Battachina: and hauing brought the points of the Islands, as aboue-said, then it will be East of you, at low water you shall see it, for it ebbeth sixe foorse, the tide setting sixe houres to the Northward, and sixe to the Southward: but keepe close to the Islands for there is no feare. The Spaniards Fort is on the East-side of Tidore, where is deepe water shoare-toe. It fell suddenly calme, so that a great sea did set vs into the shoare. The Fort made a shot at vs, but willingly short: we answered with one to Sea-board: then the Fort made two more, intending to strike vs, one betweene our millen-mast and ancient staffe, the other betwixt maine-mast and fore-mast. Then they shot a Peece from the Top of the Fort without sharpe; wee answered that without, and presently they sent off a Boat with a flage of truce, the Sea still setting vs vpon the shoare, no wind, nor ground at an hundred fathom, so that we could lay it off no way, two Gallies riding vnder the Fort: when their Boat was put from the shoare, they shot their two chase peeces, but without sharpe. They came and tooke a fast a starne our shippe: there were two Spaniards souldiers of good ranke, (knowne to Hernando the Spaniard, whom wee tooke with vs from Bantan) sent from the Captaine Generall of the shoare, Don Fernando Byseere, to know of what Nation we were, what we came for, and wherefore we came not to an anchor vnder the Kings Fort. We requested them to come aboard: they said they were commanded to the contrary: wherefore I willed to let downe wine and bread vnto them in a string, from the poope, which they fell too lustily, in so great a showre of raine, as we had seene, yet would not enter the ship. I returned answer, that I was the subiect of the Kings Maiestie of Great Brittain, as by my Colours they might well discern. They said the Flemmings had many times past by scot-free, by shewing the like, which made them shoote the second shot with sharpe at vs, thinking vs to bee Flemmings. I sent them word that my comming was, to doe the best good I could to the friends of the Kings Maiestie of Spaine, but was not minded to anchor heere, but further a head, where, if it pleased Don Fernando to come aboard, he should be welcome: with which answer, they returned ashore contented. Suddenly it pleased God to grant vs a gale, so that we stood alongst the shoare. The Captaine Generall sent off the Pilot Maior of the Gallies, Francisco Gomes, a man of good preface, to bid mee welcome, offering his assistance to bring vs into the best anchoring place vnder the Fort, or elsewhere about the Island. Being darke, he brought vs to a place about one league and an halfe off the Fort, whereas he said no force was, and so intreated after supper to be set ashore, for that the Captaine Generall would dispatch away letters to Ternate, to the Master Del Campo, Don Ieronimo de Sylua, for resolution in all points, and so departed.

A dangerous shoald.

The Spaniards Fort on the East-side of Tidore.

The ninth in the morning before day, finding that we were within command of eight peeces of Ordnance, we got vp our anchor and remoued a league further to the Southward, where we rid in fue and thirtie fathome: Gomes the Pilot came aboard with two Spaniards more of good fashion, whom I bid kindly welcome, so that they tooke their lodging aboard. They brought with them a Present of eatable commodities from their Generall. I returned the like to theirs, with proffer of all friendship and assistance, that in mee lay, to supply his wants, and to accept of Cloaues for payment, desiring speedie answer, for that I would not stay long there. The two Flemmish shippes plyed, as if they would haue come to an anchor by vs; but afterwards went and rid at their new Fort Maracco.

Maracco, a new Fort of the Hollanders.

The tenth, the Captaine Generall sent to request me to stay, and the next morning hee would visit me, with the Sergeant Maior of Ternate, who was arriued with a letter from the Master Del Campo, giuing them leaue thereby to trade with me for diuers matters, and to content mee in what I requested; wherefore I resolved a while longer, to see what good might be done.

§. V.

Further obseruations touching the Molucca Islands, and their proceeding on their Voyage to Iapan.

60

He eleuenth, wee expected the Captaine Generall according to promise, and hearing nine peeces of Ordnance to be shot out of the Fort, prouided for them, thinking verily that they were comming: But it proued to bee for the arriual of the Prince of Tidore, who had bin abroad in war, and was now returned with the heads of an hundred dred Ternatans, his force being only sixtie small shot, two brasse Bases, and three or foure Fowlers: hauing ouerthrowne Key Chilly Sadang, the King of Ternate his sonne, whom the Flemmings had enforced ouer from Ternate to Machian, to keepe the countrey people from selling of Cloaues to vs. For whom returning back towards Ternate, (after our departure) the King of Tydore sonne, lying purposely in waite vpon sight of them, the Tydorians keeping themselves behind a point of land, sent out two small Prows to fish in their way, whom the Ternatans espying, did presently giue chase vnto. The Fishermen easily retire, the other earnestly pursue, vntill before they once thought thereof, they fell into their enemies hands, who spared not one man of an hundred and sixtie, the Prince of Ternate himselfe being one of the number, whose head the Conquerour brought to his wife, who was sister to the Prince of Ternate, so slaine. At their first incounter, a barrell of powder, which the Prince had bought of vs at Machian, tooke fire, which was the confusion and losse of them all. With the Prince was slaine one of his yonger brethren, and the King of Geilola. Towards euening came aboard vs the Sergeant Maior of Ternate, and Secretary of State; with the like complements to those of the Tydorian Officers, requesting me to come thither, and they would doe what in them lay for me: whereto I consented, the rather because it was in my way.

The twelfth, the Prince of Tidore sent vnto mee, to excuse his hitherto not visiting of mee, and to acquaint me that he had some store of Cloaues, which I should haue. I thanked him, and requested speedie dispatch. They promised mee to be aboard againe before day. Wherefore to preuent all treachery, we kept double watch, match in cocke, and all things in readinesse. This Tydorian Prince being a very resolute and valiant souldier, hauing performed many dangrous exploits vpon the Flemmings, and not long since surprized one of their ships (being a Man of War) then riding not farre from this place. Before day, a Gally (which the Spaniards told vs they expected) came ouer from Batta China, and were neare vs in the darke before they were aware, we hailed her, they answered, Spaniards, and your friends, and so made to the shoare with all speed, shee was but small, of fourteene oares on a side. At noone latitude no degrees, fiftie minutes to the Northward of the Equinoctiall.

The thirteenth, we weighed, the wind Northerly, and a Current setting out of the Southward: passing by the Fort, we gaue them five peeces, which they required. Diuers Spaniards boarded vs with complements, and the Princes man, saying, that if we had stayed but foure and twentie houres longer, we should haue had good store of Cloaues, but wee rather thought they intended some treachery against vs, with their Gallies, Frigats, and Curra Curra's, which by sudden departure we thus preuented. Comming about the Wester point of Tidore, we had sight of the foure Flemmish shippes, riding before their Fort of Maricco: one of them at sight of vs, shot off a peece of Ordnance, as we supposed, to call their people aboard to follow vs. We steered directly with the Fortresse of Ternate: comming neare, shortned our sailes, and lay by the Lee, and shot off a peece towards the Towne, without sharpe; which they readily answered, and sent off a Souldier of good fashion, but to as little purpose as those of Tidore had done.

Four ships of Holland.

But little wind our shippe sagged in, and no anchoring, but at night a gale at South, we stood into the Sea, hauing lost much by the Current of that wee had gotten, finding it to set to the Southward.

The fourteenth, the wind at South South-west, we steered North North-west, and at noone had latitude one degree no minutes: we had sight of a Gallie, wherefore we cast about, but finding her to stand away, went our course for Iapan.

But before we part further from this Moluccan Coast, I thinke it not amisse, to acquaint the Reader with a few Notes that I hold worthy obseruance, touching the Trade and state of those Ilands.

Throughout all the Molucca Ilands, a Bahar of Cloues doth weigh two hundred Cattees of that Countrey, euery Cattee three pound five ounces haberdepoiz, which maketh the Bahar to be fixe hundred sixtie two pound eight ounces haberdepoiz subtile. For which Bahar of Cloues, the Flemmings by their perpetuall contract (as they terme it) giue fiftie Rials of eight. My selfe for more speedie obtayning of lading, yeelded to pay them sixtie Rials of eight the Bahar. Which increase of price made them so forward to furnish vs, that had not the Flemmings by their force ouer-awed the nationals, imprisoning and threatning them with death, and keeping watch and good guards along the Sea-Coast, I had in one moneth procured our full lading. The most of these Ilands beare store of Cloues. Those of note inhabited, yeeld one yeare with another as followeth, that is to say, Ternate, one thousand Bahars. Machian, one thousand and ninetie. Tydore, nine hundred. Bachian, three hundred. Moteer, fixe hundred. Meau, fiftie. Batta China, five and thirtie. The totall is three thousand nine hundred seuentie five.

Euery third yeare is farre more fruitfull then either of the former two, and is called the great Monson. It is lamentable to see the ruines that Ciuill Warre hath bred in those Ilands, which as I vnderstood at my being there, beganne and continued in manner following. The Portingall at his first discouerie of them, found fierce warres betwixt the King of Ternate, and the King of Tydore, vnder which two Kings all the other Ilands are either subiected or confederated with one of them.

them. The Portugall for the better settling of himselfe, tooke part with neither of them, but politickely carrying himselfe kept both to bee his friends, and so fortified vpon the Ilands of Ternate and Tydore, where, to the Portugals great aduantage, hauing the whole Trade of Cloues in their owne hands, they domineered and bore chiefeft sway vntill the yeare 1605. wherein the Flemming by force displaced them, and planted himselfe: but so weakly and vnprouided for future danger, that the next yeare the Spaniard, (who whilest the Portugall remayned there, was ordered both by the Pope and King of Spaine not to meddle with them) came from the Philippinas, beat the Flemmings out of both the Ilands, tooke the King of Ternate Prisoner, sent him to the Philippinas, and kept Ternate and Tydore vnder their command. The Flemming since that time hath gotten footing there againe, and at my beeing there had built him these 10 Forts, viz.

The Holland vs planted in the Moluccas, 1605.

Vpon the Iland Ternate, They haue a Fort called Malayon, which hath three Bulwarkes, and is walled round about. Secondly Tolonco, which hath two Bulwarkes, and a round Towre walled about. Thirdly, Tacome, which hath foure Bulwarkes, and is walled about.

Vpon the Iland Tydore, Marieko which hath foure Bulwarkes.

Vpon the Iland Machian, First, Tafasoa, (the chiefe Towne of this Iland) where they haue foure great Bulwarkes walled about, sixteene Peeces of Ordnance, and about one thousand Inhabitants of the Naturals.

Secondly, Nofakia, another Towne, where they haue two Forts walled about, and another 20 Fort vpon the top of a high hill there, which freeth the Roade on the other side, and hath five or fixe Peeces of Ordnance.

Thirdly, Tabalola, a Towne where they haue two Forts walled, eight Peeces of Ordnance, and the Inhabitants hereof, (as of the former) vnder their command. This place is very strongly situated by nature.

Those of Nofakia are esteemed no good Souldiers, but are reported to take part alwayes, as neere as they can ghesse it, with the strongest. But the Naturals of Tabalola, which formerly dwelt at Cayoa, are accounted the best Souldiers of the Molucca Ilands, and are deadly Enemies to the Spaniards and Portugals, and as weary now of the Flemmings.

In these three Forts vpon Machian, there were at my being heere an hundred and twentie 30 Holland Souldiers, viz. eightie, at Tafasoa; thirtie, at Nofakia; and ten, at Tabalola: which Garrison is with the least.

This Iland Machian is the richest of Cloues of all the Molucca Ilands, and according to the generall report of the Inhabitants, yeeldeth in the yeare of the great Monson aboue eighteene hundred Bahars of Cloues.

Vpon the Iland Bachian, The Flemmings haue one great Fort.

Vpon the Iland Moteer, They haue foure Bulwarkes.

These Ciuill Warres haue so wasted the Nationals, that a great quantitie of Cloues perish, and rot vpon the ground for want of gathering. Neither is there any likelihood of peace to be made betwixt them, vntill the one part be vtterly rooted out.

40 Thus leauing them to their warres I will returne to our Trafficke, and shew in what manner we traded with the Naturals for Cloues, which for the most part was by bartering and exchanging Cotton cloth of Cambaya, and Coromandell for Cloues. The sorts requested, and prices that they yeilded.

Candakeens of Barochie, six Cattees of Cloues. Candakeens Papang, or flat, three Cattees. Selas, or small Bastas, seuen & eight. Patta chere Malayo, sixteen. Dragam chere Malayo, sixteen. Five Cassas twelue. Course of that kind eight. Betellias, or Tancoulos red, fortie foure and fortie eight. Sarassas chere Malayo, fortie eight and fiftie. Sarampourri, thirtie. Chelles, Tapsiels, & Matafons, twentie, & foure and twentie. White Cassas, or Tancoulos, fortie, and foure and fortie. Dongerijus, the finest, twelue. Those of foure and one fathome accordingly. Rice eight and twentie pound, a Riall of eight. Sagu, which is a roote whereof the Naturals make their Bread, and is their chiefeft food through the whole Countrey, it is sold in bunches, and was worth there one quarter of a Riall of eight a bunch. Veluets, Sattins, Taffataes, and other stufes of Silke of China, are very well requested heere. And this shall serue for aduice concerning the Molucca Ilands.

The sixteenth, calme till night, then a gale at West: we steered North North-west.

The seuenteenth in the morning, wind at East by South, we steered North but after variable, 60 shifting to all the points of the Compasse: towards night we had sight of land to the North-ward.

The eighteenth, calme, much raine and contrarie windes, I therefore resolued to goe for the Iland Saiem which was to the West-ward, and there to stay and refresh till the Monson would permit me to proceed. But instantly the wind came to the West, so that wee stood North and North by East. The nineteenth, little wind at West, wee continued our course North by East, very much raine and extreame hot.

A Current to the Eastward.

The twentieth, in the morning calme, and a continuall current setting to the East-ward, which we have felt euer since our departure from Ternate. In the after-noon the wind North a gale we stood to the West-ward to stemme the current, in regard of the Northerly winds subiect to calmes and the Easterly current, we stood in with a great lland called Doy, to rest and refresh our selues.

Doy a great
lland.

The one and twentieth, in the morning we were faire before the said lland, neere the Northerne point, being a low point stretching to the Southwards, we stood in East by South, wind at North by East: at noone the Skiffe was sent to search out a conuenient place to ride in, but the current did set so strong to the East-ward, as that we could not get a head, onely discovered a Bay very large, but it had a great shoale lying off the Northerne point halfe a league into the Sea, and had sixtie fathome two mile off the shoare sand, but night approaching wee stood off till morning.

A great shoale.

The two and twentieth, after Sun-set we anchored in foure and twentie fathomes, in the Bay hauing had (standing in) fittie fixe, thirtie fixe, twentie fixe, and twentie foure fathomes.

The three and twentieth, I sent the Skiffe ashore to seeke a conuenient place to water in, and to pitch a Tent for the company to defend them from the raine. They found such a place right ouer against the ship, together with a great tracke of Deare and Swine, but no signe of people: the Countrey full of Trees and abundance of Cokers, Penang, Serie, Palmitas, and Fowle, Pheasant and Wood-cockes. I went ashore, the Merchants with mee, a Tent was set vp, our Carpenter made Fal-pits very artificially to take Swine, some fish we tooke amongst the rockes, but cost much labour, one Pheasant, and two Wood-pidgeons very large bodied like Hens, some of the Companie stayed all night on shoare, to looke for the comming of the Swine to the Trap.

A strange Eclipse of the Moone.

The foure and twentieth, we saw very large Swine, but got none. This day about halfe an houre after seuen in the morning, the Moone in the full was eclipsed in the strangest manner that euer any of vs had seene, being obscured three houres and an halfe before she recouered her perfect light, which vnto vs was very fearefull.

The five and twentieth, our people searched abroad, brought to the ship great store of Cokers, some Fowles, and heads of Palmita Trees, which boyled with Beeffe are as good as Cabbage.

The eight and twentieth, the Companie laboured to get in wood and water. The Skiffe sounded about the shoale, and found ten and twelue fathome, at the Norther point neere to it, night and day very much raine.

The nine and twentieth and thirtieth were spent in getting aboard our wood, whereof wee had great store, and as good as our Billets in England.

May 1. 1613.

The first of May, the Skiffe was sent to sound to the Wester point into the Bay, and found very deepe water. Landing, they found the ruines of houses, and certaine brasse pannes, so that we were of opinion that the place had lately beene inhabited, but the Inhabitants by the Warres hunted from their home.

Doy at the Northermost
end of Geilolo.

The twelfth, we set sayle from this lland Doy, being the North-east most lland of Batta Chi-na or Geilolo in the Moluccas, latitude two degrees, thirtie fixe minutes, variation five degrees, twentie minutes Easterly, hauing remayned heere twentie dayes, beeing seuentie one persons bound for Iapan, and at noone fourteene leagues North by East, off the place where wee anchored.

The thirteenth, the shippes way to noone North by East, twentie two leagues. Wee steered North the wind West, variation five degrees thirtie minutes Easterly, with a strong Current setting to the East-ward, then the wind shifted to the West by South, West North-west, East, then a gale at West by South, and West South-west. The fourteenth, latitude five degrees twentie fixe minutes, way North by East twentie fixe leagues, wind West, and Current as afore-said: cleere weather. The fifteenth, latitude five degrees fittie fixe minutes, way North North-east, fourteene leagues current as formerly. The sixteenth, latitude seuen degrees ten minutes way North Easterly, twentie seuen leagues, wind at South-west, and West raine. The seuenteenth, latitude eight degrees twentie two minutes, way North twentie foure leagues wind South-west, but in the morning at East with raine. The eighteenth, latitude nine degrees seuen minutes, way North-easterly fifteene leagues, wind at East and East North-east very cleere weather. The nineteenth, latitude nine degrees fortie one minutes, way North eleuen leagues one third part, wind East and East North-east. The twentieth, latitude ten degrees fortie minutes, way North halfe a point Westerly, twentie leagues wind, East and North-east, with helpe of a current Northerly. The one and twentieth, latitude eleuen degrees thirtie fixe minutes, way North North-west twentie leagues, wind North-east East, North North-east, and North-east by East star-board tacke aboard. The two and twentieth, latitude twelue degrees thirtie nine minutes, way North North-west, twentie three leagues, wind East North-east, North-east by East, and North-East.

The three and twentieth, latitude twelve degrees fiftie seven minutes, way North by West, fixe and two third parts of a league wind, South-east calme. The foure and twentieth, latitude thirteene degrees fortie two minutes, way North fifteen leagues, wind South by East, very smooth water. The five and twentieth, latitude fiftene degrees, twelve minutes, way North thirte leagues, wind South, we steered North Westerly. Note, that wee find those fauourable winds in the full of the Moone. The sixe and twentieth, latitude seuentene degrees, fixe minutes, way North thirte eight leagues, wind South by West South, and South South-west a continuall stiffe gale and smooth water. The seven and twentieth, way North-east twentie foure leagues, wind at West North-west and West, with Raine, Thunder and Lightning. The eight and twentieth, way North, nine leagues wind West, and West North-west. The nine and twentieth, latitude nineteene degrees fiftene minutes, way North, nine leagues wind North-east East, West, West North-west and South, calmes and gusts. The thirtieth, latitude twentie degrees twelve minutes, way North twentie leagues, wind at South-east and East South-east. The one and thirtieth, latitude twentie one degrees, thirtie five minutes, way North by West, thirtie leagues, wind East, and East by North. Variation fixe degrees no minutes Easterly.

Iune 1. 1613.

The first of Iune, we passed the Tropick of Cancer, the Sunne in our Zenith wee could not observe, way North fortie leagues, wind at South-east, and South-east by East, variation five degrees twentie five minutes Easterly.

The second, latitude twentie five degrees fortie foure minutes, way North fortie two leagues, wind South-east and South-east by South, making account we should haue seene the Ilands, Dos Reys Magos about eight of the clocke in the morning, but as yet see none. About foure a clocke in the after-noon we made land, being a very low Iland bearing North-west about three leagues off, wind South-east by East, and hauing it North North-east, we had sight of the high-land ouer the low land, there being many little Ilands to the number of ten or eleuen, with broken ground and breaches reaching ouer to each Iland, so that wee could discerne no passage to the West-ward. At night we tackt off, tooke in our Top-sayles, and lay close by in our courses all night, wind very much at South South-east, we steered East. The Ilands lye alongst North-east and South-west.

The Iles Des Reys Magos.

The third, we stood in for the land, being a high Iland bearing North-west, seeming to vs a most pleasant and fruitfull soyle, as any we had seene since our comming out of England, well peopled, and great store of Cattle. Wee purposed to haue come to an anchor about the North-east point, and sounding had sixty fathome, had sight of two Boates comming off vnto vs, wee ysed all the meanes we could to speake with them, being desirous of a Pilot, and to know the name of the Iland, the better to bee assured where we were. But the wind was so forcible, as that we could not get in, wherefore we stood away North-west, and had sight of another Iland bearing West North-west, we steered with it, and from thence had sight of another Iland, bearing North-east halfe a point Easterly, some seuen or eight leagues off, and comming vnder the Wester-most Iland, we discerned certaine Rockes that lay off the shoare about two miles, the one aboue water, and the Northermost vnder-water, and is a great way without the other, the Sea breaking vpon it. Then the land falleth away to the South-wards round, and nere to the point you shall open a steepe Rocke, that is vpon the West-side of the Iland, resembling Charing-Crosse. Then we steered North-west with an extreame gale at South by West, and South South-west. When we had opened the Iland, and a current setting to the South-ward, at foure of the clocke we tooke in our Top-sayles and haled close vpon a tacke, the Iland being about seuen leagues North-west off vs. Way to noone North halfe a point Easterly, sixteene leagues, way North North-west three quarters Westerly, twentie leagues. At three a clocke in the afternoone we set our courses, the wind at North-west, and North-west by North, wee steered North-east some two houres, then calme and raine, variation at Sunne-setting foure degrees fortie minutes Easterly.

Variation
four degrees
fortie minutes, Easterly.

The fifth, way West by North foure leagues and an halfe, wind North North-east, wee steere North-west starboord tackt, variation foure degrees fortie two minutes.

The sixth, way North North-west nine leagues, wind East North-east, North-east by North and North-east by East, little wind, much raine, variation foure degrees nineteene minutes Easterly. At night the wind at East and East South-east.

The seuenth, way North-east by North sixteene leagues, wind at South-east and South South-west, then we steered away North-east by North, supposing to bee off Tonan twentie eight or thirtie leagues.

The eight, in the morning wee had sight of a high round Iland bearing East fixe leagues off with diuers other Ilands rising in fixe or seuen parts bearing West five or fixe leagues off: hauing made to this noone twentie two leagues North-east by North, wind at South South-west a stiffe gale. Then we haled ouer North-west with another Iland, which we found to be foure in number, being barren and many picked Rockes. Then we steered North by East, the wind at South by West, about three of the clocke wee had sight of an Iland, with three Hills like three round Sugar-loues, bearing East by S. five leagues off. At five of the clock we had sight of an Iland rising in two parts, bearing North North-east, the Northren end being an high steep vpright point, the land falling away to the Eastward North-east, and at sixe of the clock the body of it did beare East one league and an halfe off. The wind West, we stood off vpon a tacke North North-west.

Xima or Mash-ma.

The ninth, in the morning wee had sight of land, bearing North North-east, and sixe great Islands on a ranke. From the Island we descried yesternight North-east and South-west, and at the Northermost end of them all, many small rockes and hummockes, and in the Bay to the Eastward of the hummockes we saw an high land bearing East, East by South, and East South-east, which is the Island called Xima in the Plats, but called by the Naturals Mashma, and the Island afore said, North North-east, is called Segue or Amaxay: it lyeth East by North, and West by South, with many small Islands and rockes on the Southerne side of them, and is distant from the Island with the steepe point, (which wee did see the eight day) South South-west twelue leagues, the wind calme all night, yet we got to the Northward, as wee supposed, by the helpe of a current or tide.

Nangasaque.

The tenth, by breake of day the outward-most land to the Westward did beare North by East ten leagues off, the wind at North-east by North: at nine, a gale at South, wee steered North by West, and had sight of two hummockes without the point. Then wee steered North North-west, and soone after came foure great Fisher-boats aboard, about five tunnes apeece in burthen, they sailed with one saile, which stood like a Skiffe saile, and skuld with foure oares on a side, their oares resting vpon a pinne fastned on the toppe of the Boats side, the head of which pinne was so let into the middle part of the oare, that the oare did hang in his iust poize, so that the labour of the Rower is much lesse, then otherwise it must be; yet doe they make farre greater speed then our people with rowing, and performe their worke standing, as ours doe sitting, so that they take the lesse roome. They told vs that we were before the entrance of Nangasaque, bearing North North-east, and the straights of Arima, North-east by North, and the high hill, which we did see yesterday, is vpon the Island called Vsideke, which maketh the straights of Arima, where at the Norther-most end is good riding, and at the South end is the going into Cochinoh. To this noone we haue made a North-way sixe leagues. Wee agreed with two of the Masters of the Fisher-boats (for thirtie Rialls of eight a piece in money, and Rice for their food) to Pilot vs into Firando; which agreement made, their people entred our shippe, and performed voluntarily their labour, as readily as any of our Mariners. We steered North by West, the Pilots making account to be thirtie leagues off Firando. One of the foure Boats which came aboard vs, did belong to the Portugals, liuing at Langasaque, and were new Christians, and thought that our ship had been the Macan ship; but finding the contrary, would vpon no intreatie stay, but made hast backe againe to aduise them.

Their arriuall at Firando: the Habite, Rites, and Customes of the Iaponians.

*June 11. 1613.
The King of Firando and his Nephew.*

Iaponian habite.

Iaponian manner of salutation.

THe eleuenth, about three of the clocke in the afternoone, we came to an anchor halfe a league short of Firando, the tide so spent that we could not get further in: soone after I was visited by the old King Foyne Sama, and his Nephew Tone-Sama, Gouvernour then of the Iland vnder the old King. They were attended with fortie Boats or Gallies, rowed some with ten, some with fiftene oares on a side: when they drew neare to the ship, the King commanded all, but the two wherein himselfe and his Nephew were, to fall a sterne, and they only entred the ship, both of them in silke gownes, girt to them with a shirt, and a paire of breeches of flaxen cloath next their bodies; either of them had two Cattans or swords of that Countrey by his side, the one of halfe a yard long, the other about a quarter. They wore no bands, the fore-parts of their heads were shauen to the crowne, and the rest of their haire, which was very long, was gathered together and bound vp on a knot behind, wearing neither Hat nor Turbant, but bare-headed. The King was aged about seuentie two yeeres, his Nephew or Grand-child, that gouerned vnder him, was about two and twentie yeeres old, and either of them had his Gouvernour with him, who had command ouer their slaues, as they appointed him. Their manner and curtesie in saluting was after their manner, which is this. First, in presence of him whom they are to salute, they put off their shooes (stockings they weare none) and then clapping their right hand within their left, they put them downe towards their knees, and so wagging or mouing of their hands a little to and fro, they stooping, steppe with small steps sideling from the partie saluted, and crie Augb, Augb. I led them into my Cabbin, where I had prepared a Banquet for them, and a good consort of Musicke, which much delighted them. They bade me welcome, and promised me kind entertainment. I deliuered our Kings Letters to the King of Firando, which he receiued with great ioy, saying hee would not open it till till Ange came, who could interpret the same vnto him; this Ange is in their language a Pilot, being one William Adams an English man, who passing with a Flemming through the South-sea, by mutiny and disorder of the Marriners hee remained in that Countrey, and was seised vpon by the Emperour about twelue yeares before: The King hauing staid aboard about an houre and a halfe, tooke his leaue: he was no sooner ashore, but all his nobilitie, attended with a multitude of souldiers, entred the ship, euery man of worth brought his present with him, some Venison, some Wilde-fowle, some wilde Boare the largest and fattest that euer any of vs had seene, some Fruits, Fish, &c. They did much admire our shippe, and made as if they had neuer seene it sufficiently. We being pestered with the number of these visitors, I sent to the King, requesting him that order might bee taken to remoue them, and to preuent all inconueniences that might happen. Whereupon hee sent a Guardian, (being a principall man of his owne Guard) with charge to remaine and lye aboard, that no iniury might be offered vnto vs; and caused a proclamation to be made in the Towne to the same effect. The same night, Henrick Brower, Captaine of the Dutch Factory there, came aboard to visite me, or rather to see what passed betwixt the King and vs. I did write the same day to Master Adam (being then at Edoo, which is very neare three hundred leagues from Firando) to let him vnderstand of our arriuall. King Foyu sent it away the next day by his Admirall to Osackay, the first Port of note vpon the chiefe Island, and then by post vp into the Land to Edoo: giuing the Emperour likewise to vnderstand of our being there, and cause thereof.

His story written by himselfe you haue before.

Osackay.

The twelfth in the morning, there was brought aboard such abundance of fish, and so cheape as we could desire. We weighed and set saile for the Road. The King sent at the least threescore great Boats or Gallies very well mand, to bring vs into the harbor. I doubted what the cause of their coming might be, & was sending off the Skiffe to command them not to come neare the ship but the King being the head-most, weaued with his handkercher, and willed the rest to attend, and himselfe comming aboard, told me that he had commanded them to come to tow our ship in about a point, somewhat dangerous, by reason of the force of the tide, which was such, that hauing a stiffe gale of wind, yet we could not stemme it, and comming into the eddie, we should haue been set vpon the Rockes. So we sent Hawfers aboard them, and they fell to worke. In the meane while the King did breake his fast with me. Being at an anchor, I would haue requited the people for their paines, but the King would not suffer them to take any thing. We anchored before the Towne in fise fathome, so neare the shoare, that we might talke to the people in their houses. We saluted the Towne with nine peeces of Ordnance, but were not answered, for they haue no Ordnance heere, nor any Fort, but Barricados only for small shot. Our ground heere was Ozie. Diuers Noblemen came to bid me welcome, whereof two were of extraordinary account, called Nobusane and Simmadone, who were very well entertained, and at parting held very great state, one staying aboard whilest the other were landed; their children and chiefe followers in the like manner. There came continually such a world of people aboard, both men and women, as that we were not able to go vpon the decks: round about the ship was furnished with Boats full of people, admiring much the head and sterne of the ship. I gaue leaue to diuers women of the better sort to come into my Cabbin, where the Picture of Venus, with her sonne Cupid, did hang somewhat wantonly set out in a large frame, they thinking it to bee our Ladie and her Sonne, fell downe and worshipped it, with shewes of great deuotion, telling men in a whispering manner (that some of their owne companions which were not so, might not heare) that they were Christians: whereby we perceiued them to be Christians, conuerced by the Portugall Iesuits.

A strong tide.

We anchored before the Towne.

Note the danger of idolatry, euen in Popish sense, by veneration of Images.

The King came aboard againe, and brought foure chiefe women with him. They were attired in gownes of silke, clapt the one skirt ouer the other, and so girt to them, bare-legged, only a paire of halfe buskins bound with silke riband about their instep: their haire very blacke, and very long, tyed vp in a knot vpon the crowne in a comely manner: their heads no where shauen as the mens were. They were well faced, handed, and footed; cleare skind and white, but wanting colour, which they amend by arte. Of stature low, but very fat; very curteous in behaviour, not ignorant of the respect to be giuen vnto persons according to their fashion. The King requested that none might stay in the Cabbin, saue my selfe and my Linguist, who was borne in Japan, and was brought from Bantam in our ship thither, being well skild in the Mallayan tongue, wherein he deliuered to mee what the King spoke vnto him in the Japan language. The Kings women seemed to be somewhat bashfull, but he willed them to bee frolicke. They sung diuers songs, and played vpon certain Instruments (whereof one did much resemble our Lute) being belied like it, but longer in the necke, and fretted like ours, but had only foure gut-strings. Their fingring with the left hand like ours, very nimble; but the right hand striketh with an Iuory bone, as we vse to play vpon a Citterne with a quill. They delighted themselves much with their musicke, keeping time with their hands, and playing and singing by booke, prickt on line and space, resembling much ours heere. I feasted them, and presented them with diuers English commodities: and after some two houres stay they returned. I moued the King for a house, which hee readily granted, and tooke two of the Merchants along with him, and shewed them three or foure houles, houses, willing them to take their choise, paying the owners as they could agree.

Presents.
Feasting and drinking of healths in Iapan

The thirteenth, I went ashore, attended vpon by the Merchants and Principall Officers, and deliuered the Presents to the King, amounting to the value of one hundred and fortie pounds, or thereabouts, which he receiued with very great kindnesse, feasting me and my whole companie with diuers sorts of powdered wild fowles and fruits: and calling for a standing Cup (which was one of the Presents then deliuered him) he caused it to be filled with his Countrey wine, which is distilled out of Rice, and is as strong as our Aquavita: and albeit the Cuppe held vppward of a pint and an halfe, notwithstanding taking the Cup in his hand, he told me hee would drinke it all off, for a health to the King of England, and so did, my selfe and all his Nobles doing the like. And whereas in the roome where the King was, there was onely my selfe and the Cape Merchant, (the rest of our Company being in an other roome) the King commanded his Secretarie to goe out vnto them, and see that euerie one of them did pledge the health. The King and his Nobles did sit at meat crosse-legged vpon Mats, after the Turkie fashion, the Mats richly edged, some with cloath of Gold, some with Veluet, Satten, and Damaske.

Gesture at meate.

The foureteenth and fifteenth, we spent with giuing of Presents. The sixteenth, I concluded with Captaine Audasse, Captaine of the China quarter here, for his house, to pay ninetie five Ryals of eight for the Monson of fixe Moneths, he to repaire it at present, and wee to repaire it hereafter, and alter what we pleased: he to furnish all conuenient roomes with Mats according to the fashion of the Countrey.

Mashma a place of good vent for our commodities.

This day our ship was so pestered with people, as that I was enforced to send to the King for a Guardian to cleare them out, many things being stolne, but I more doubted our owne people, then the Naturals. There came in a Flemming in one of the Countrey boates, which had been at the Iland Mashma, where he had sold good store of Pepper, broad Cloth, and Elephants teeth, but would not be acknowne vnto vs to haue sold any thing, yet brought nothing backe in the boat with him. But the Iapons his watermen told vs the truth, viz. That he had sold good quantitie of goods at a Mart there, and returned barres of siluer, which they kept very secret.

The one and twentieth, the old King came aboard againe, and brought with him diuers women to be frolicke. These women were Actors of Comedies, which passe there from Iland to Iland to play, as our Players doe here from Towne to Towne, hauing seuerall shifts of apparrell for the better grace of the matter acted; which for the most part are of Warre, Loue, and such like. These Women are as the slaues of one man, who putteth a price what euery man shall pay that hath to doe with any of them; more then which he is not to take vpon paine of death, in case the partie iniured shall complaine. It is left to his owne discretion to prize her at the first, but rise he cannot afterwards, fall he may. Neither doth the partie bargain with the Wench, but with her Master, whose command she is to obey. The greatest of their Nobilitie traueilling, hold it no disgrace to send for these Panders to their Inne, & do compound with them for the Wenches, either to fill their drinke at Table (for all men of any ranke haue their drinke filled to the by Women) or otherwise to haue the vse of them. When any of these Panders die (though in their life time they were receiued into Company of the best, yet now as vnworthy to rest amongst the worst) they are bridled with a bridle made of straw, as you would bridle an Horse, and in the clothes they died in, are dragged through the streetes into the fields, and there cast vpon a dunghill, for dogges and fowles to deuoure.

The twentieth three, we had newes of two China Iunkes arriued at Langasague, laden with Sugar. By him we vnderstood, that the Emperour of China had then lately put to death about five thousand persons, for trading out of the Countrey, contrary to his Edict, confiscating all their goods: notwithstanding hope of profit enticed these men to put it in hazard, hauing bribed the new Pungas and Officers vpon the Sea-coast, which vpon the execution of the former, were placed in their steads.

the English.

The twentieth ninth, a Soma or Iunke of the Flemmings arriued at Langasague from Syam, laden with Brasill wood and Skins of all sorts, wherein it was said that there were Englishmen, but prooued to be Flemmings. For that before our comming, they passed generally by the name of Englishmen: for our English Nation hath been long known by report among them, but much scandalled by the Portugals Iesuites, as Pyrats and Routers vpon the Seas; so that the Naturals haue a song which they call the English Crosonia, shewing how the English doe take the Spanish ships, which they (singing) doe act likewise in gesture with their Cattans by their sides, with which song and acting, they terrifie and skare their children, as the French sometimes did theirs with the name of the Lord Talbot.

Seueritie for fighting and pons.

The first of Iuly, two of our Company happened to quarrell the one with the other, and were very likely to haue gone into the field, to the endangering of vs all. For it is a custome here, That whosoever drawes a weapon in anger, although he doe no harme therewith, hee is presently cut in peeces: and doing but small hurt, not only themselves are so executed, but their whole generation.

The second day, I went ashore to keep house in Firando, the household consisting of twenty six persons. Note, that at our comming we found Broad-clothes of fifteen or sixtene pound a cloth to to be sold by the Dutch in Firando, for fortie Rials of eight, which is eight pound sterling the Mat, which Mat is two yards and a quarter: but desirous to keep vp the price of our cloath, and hearing that the Dutch had great store there, I had conference with Brower, Captaine of their Factorie to this effect; That betwixt vs we should set rates vpon such clothes as both of vs had, and neither of vs in any wise to sell vnder the price agreed vpon: for performance whereof, I proffered to enter into bond to him. In the morning he seemed to approue hereof, but ere night sent word that he disliked it, excusing himselfe that he had no warrant from his Masters to make any such agreement. The next morning, he shipped away great store of Cloath to diuers Ilands, rating them at base prizes, viz. at twentie, eightene and sixteen Rials the Mat, that he might procure the more speedie dispatch of his owne, and glut the place before the comming of ours.

Bantam Pepper vngarbled, which cost at Bantam one Riall three quarters of eight the sacke, was worth here at our comming tenne Tayes the Peecull, which is one hundred Cattees, making one hundred thirtie pound English subtile. A Taye is five shillings sterling with them. A Riall of eight is worth there in ordinary payment but seuen Masse, which is three shillings six pence sterling. For a Masse is as a Riall of Plate.

Tinne the Peecull, thirtie Tayes: Elephants Teeth the Peecull eightie Tayes: Iron cast Peeces the Peecull fixe Tayes: Powder the Peecull twentie three Tayes: Aloes Socatrina the Cattee fixe Tayes: Fowling Peeces the pece twentie Tayes: Callico and such like Commodities of Choromandel, and of the Guzerates, as they are in goodnesse.

The seuenth, the King of the Iland Goto, not farre from Firando came to visit King Foyne, saying, that he had heard of an excellent English ship arriued in his Dominions, which he greatly desired to see, and goe aboard of. King Foyne intreated me that he might be permitted, for that hee was an especiall friend of his. So he was well entertained aboard, banqueted, and had diuers Peeces shot off at his departure, which he very kindly accepted, and told me, that hee should bee right glad to liue to see some of our Nation to come to his Iland, whither they should be heartily welcome.

King of Goto.

The eighth, three Iaponians were executed, viz. two men and one woman: the cause this, The woman none of the honestest (her husband being trauelled from home) had appointed these two their seuerall houres to repaire vnto her. The latter man not knowing of the former, and thinking the time too long, comming in before the houre appointed, found the first man with her already, and enraged thereat, he whipt out his Cattan, and wounded both of them very sorely, hauing very neere hewne the Chine of the mans backe in two. But as well as he might hee cleared himselfe of the woman, and recouering his Cattan, wounded the other. The street taking notice of the fray, forthwith seased vpon them, led them aside, and acquainted King Foyne therewith, and sent to know his pleasure, (for according to his will, the partie is executed) who presently gaue order that they should cut off their heads: which done, euery man that listed (as very many did) came to trie the sharpenesse of their Cattans vpon the Corps, so that before they left off, they had hewne them all three into peeces as small as a mans hand, and yet notwithstanding did not then giue ouer, but placing the peeces one vpon another, would try how many of them they could strike through at a blow: and the peeces are left to the Fowles to deuoure.

The tenth, three more were executed as the former, for stealing of a woman from Firando, and selling her at Langasacque long since, two of them were brethren, and the other a sharer with them. When any are to be executed, they are led out of the Towne in this manner: There goeth first one with a Pick-axe, next followeth an other with a shouell for to make his graue (if that hee permitted him) the third man beareth a small Table whereon is written the parties offence, which table is afterwards set vp vpon a Post on the graue where he is buried. The fourth is the partie to be executed, his hands bound behind him with a filken cord, hauing a little Banner of Paper (much resembling our wind-vanes) whereon is likewise written his offence. The executioner followeth next, with his Cattan by his side, holding in his hand the cord wherewith the offender is bound. On either side of the executioner goeth a souldiour with his Pike, the head thereof resting on the shoulder of the partie appointed to suffer, to skare him from attempting to escape. In this very manner I saw one led to execution, who went so resolutely and without all appearance of feare of death, that I could not but much admire him, neuer hauing seene the like in Christendome. The offence for which he suffered was for stealing of a sacke of Rice (of the value of two shillings six pence, from his neighbour, whose house was then on fire.

The eleuenth, there arriued at Langasacque three China Iunckes laden with Silkes. The nineteenth, the old King Foyne, intreated me for a peece of Poldauis, which I sent him; hee caused it presently to be made into Coates, which he (notwithstanding that hee was a King, and of that great age, and famed to be the worthiest souldiour of all Iapan, for his valour and seruice in the Corean warres) did weare next his skinne, and some part thereof was made into handkerchiefs, which he daily vsed.

The twentieth, a Soma or Iuncke comming from Cochinchina arriued at Langasacque, laden with Silkes, and Benjamin, excellent cleere and rich. The nine and twentieth, M. Adams arriued at Firando, hauing been seenteene dayes on the way comming from Sorongo, we hauing staid ed here for his comming fortie eight dayes. After I had friendly entertained him, I conferred with him in the presence of the Merchants, touching the incouragement hee could giue of trade in these parts. He answered, that it was not alwaies alike, but sometimes better, sometimes worse, yet doubted not but we should doe as well as others; giuing admirable commendations of the Countrey, as much affected thereunto.

The thirtieth in the morning, one of the yong Kings Gouvernours was by his order cut into pieces in the street, for being (as it was thought) too familiar with his mother. A slaue of his died with him, for endeauouring to defend his Master. This day there came to Firando certaine Spaniards of M. Adams his acquaintance, to desire passage in our ship for Bantam. These Spaniards had been belonging to a Spanish Gentleman their Generall, who about a yeare past, were come (vpon the King of Spaines charge) from Nona Hispania, to discouer to the Northward of Japan, and arriuing at Edoo, attending the Monson to goe to the Northward, which beginneth in the end of May, his Company (whereof these were two) mutinied against him, euery man taking his owne way, leauing the ship vtterly vnmanned, wherefore I thought it best to keepe them out of my ship.

The third, King Foyne sent to know of what Bulk our Kings Present to the Emperour was, also what number of people I would take with me, for that he would prouide accordingly for my going vp in good fashon both for Barke, Horses, and Pallanchins.

This day, I caused the Presents to be sorted that were to be giuen to the Emperour, and to those of office and esteeme about him. viz.

The seuenth of August, King Foyne furnished me with a proper Galley of his owne rowed with twentie five oares on a side, and sixtie men, which I did fit vp in a verie comely manner, with walle clothes, ensignes, and all other necessaries, and hauing taken my leaue of the King, I went and remained aboard the ship, to set all things in order before my departure. Which done, and remembrances left with the Master and Cape Merchant, for the well gouerning of the ship and house ashore during my absence, taking with mee tenne English, and nine others, besides the former sixtie, which were onely to attend the Galley, I departed from Firando towards the Emperours Court. Wee were rowed through, and amongst diuers Ilands, all which, or the most part of them, were well inhabited, and diuers proper Townes built vpon them; whereof one called Fuccate, hath a very strong Castle, built of free stone, but no Ordnance nor Souldiers therein. It hath a ditch about five fathome deepe, and twice as broad round about it, with a draw bridge, kept all in very good repaire. I did land & dine there in the Towne, the tyde and wind so strong against vs, as that we could not passe. The Towne seemed to be as great as London is within the wals, very wel built, and euen, so as you may see from the one end of the streete to the other. The place exceedingly peopled, very Ciuill and courteous, onely that at our landing, and being here in Fuccate, and so through the whole Country, whithersoever we came, the boyes, children, and worser sort of idle people, would gather about and follow along after vs, crying, Coré, Coré, Cocoré, Waré, that is to say, Ten Coréans with false hearts: wondering, hooping, hollowing, and making such a noise about vs, that we could scarcely heare one another speake, sometimes throwing stones at vs (but that not in many Townes) yet the clamour and crying after vs was euery where alike, none reproouing them for it. The best aduice that I can giue those who hereafter shall arriue there, is that they passe on without regarding those idle rablements, and in so doing, they shall find their eares onely troubled with the noise. All alongst this Coast, and so vp to Ozaca, we found women diuers, that liued with their household and family in boats vpon the water, as in Holland they do the like. These women would catch fish by diuing, which by net and lines they missed, and that in eight fathome depth: their eyes by continuall diuing doe grow as red as blood, whereby you may know a diuing woman from all other women.

We were two daies rowing from Firando to Fuccate: about eight or tenne leagues on this side the the Straights of Xemina-seque, we found a great Towne, where there lay in a Docke, a luncke of eight hundred or a thousand Tunnes of burthen, sheathed all with yron, with a guard appointed to keep her from firing and treachery. She was built in a very homely fashion, much like that which describeth Noahs Arke vnto vs. The Naturals told vs, that she serued to transport souldiers into any of the Ilands, if rebellion or warre shoul happen.

Straights of Xemina-seque.
A strange
luncke.

We found nothing extraordinary after we had passed the Straights of Xemina-seque, vntill we came vnto Osaca, where we arrived the twenty leuenth day of August: our Gailey could not come neere the Towne by fixe miles, where another smaller Vessel met vs; wherein came the good man or Host of the house where we lay in Osaca, and brought a banquet with him of wine and salt fruits to intertaine me. The boat hauing a fast made to the mast-head, was drawn by men, as our Barks are from London Westward. We found Osaca to be a very great Towne, as great as London within the walls, with many faire Timber bridges of a great height, seruing to passe ouer a riuer there as wide as the Thames at London. Some faire houses we found there, but not many. It is one of the chiefe Sea-ports of all Iapan; hauing a Castle in it, maruellous large and strong, with very deepe trenches about it, and many draw bridges, with gates plated with yron. The Castle is built all of Free-stone, with Bulwarks and Battlements, with loope holes for smal shot and arrowes, and diuers passages for to cast stones vpon the assaillants. The walls are at the least fixe or seuen yards thicke, all (as I said) of Free-stone, without any filling in the inward part with trumpery, as they reported vnto me. The stones are great, of an excellent quarry, and are cut so exactly to fit the place where they are laid, that no mortar is vsed, but onely earth cast betweene to fill vp voyd creuises if any be. In this Castle did dwell at our being there, the sonne of Tiquasamma, who being an infant at the time of his Fathers decease, was left to the gouernment and education of foure, whereof Ogoshosamma, the now Emperour was one and chiefe. The other three desirous of Soueraigntie each for his particular, and repelled by Ogoshosamma, were for their owne safetie forced to take vp Armes, wherein fortune fauouring Ogoshosamma at the triall in field, two of them beeing slaine, the third was glad to saue himselfe by flight. He beeing Conquerour, attempted that which formerly (as it is thought) hee neuer dream'd of, and proclaimed himselfe Emperour, and seazing vpon the true heire, married him vnto his daughter, as the onely meanes to worke a perfect reconcilment, confining the young married couple to liue within this Castle of Osaca, attended onely with such as had been brought vp from their cradles by Ogoshosamma, not knowing any other Father (as it were) then him: So that by their intelligence he could at all times vnderstand what passed there, and accordingly rule him.

Osaca.

Description of Osaca.

A faire and strong Castle.

The son of Tiquasamma, the true heire of Iapan how defeated of his right.

Right ouer against Osaca, on the other side of the Riuer, lyeth another great Towne called Sacay, but not so bigge as Osaca, yet is it a Towne of great Trade for all the Ilands thereabout.

Sacay.

The eight and twentieth day at night, hauing left musters and prices of our Commodities with our Host, we parted from Osaca by Barke toward Fushimi, where we arrived.

Fushimi.

The nine and twentieth at night we found here a Garrison of three thousand Souldiers maintayned by the Emperour, to keepe Miaco and Osaca in subiection. The Garrison is shifted euery three yeares, which change happened to be at our being there, so that we saw the old Bands march away, and the new enter, in most Souldier-like manner, marching five a brest, and to euery ten files an Officer which is called a Captaine of fittie, who kept them continually in verie good order. First, their shot, viz. Calieuers, (for Muskets they haue none, neyther will they vse any) then followed Pikes, next Swords, or Cattans and Targets, then Bowes and Arrowes: next those, weapons resembling a Welch-hooke called Waggadashes; then Calieuers againe, and so as formerly, without any Ensigne or Colours: neyther had they any Drummes or other Muscical Instruments for Warre. The first file of the Cattans and Targets had silver scabberds to their Cattans, and the last file which was next to the Captaine had their scabberds of gold. The Companies consisted of diuers numbers, some five hundred, some three hundred, some one hundred and fittie men. In the midst of euery Companie were three Horses very richly trapped, and furnished with Sables, well set out, some couered with costly Fures, some with Veluet, some with Stammet broad-cloth, euery Horse had three slaues to attend him, ledde with silken halters, their eyes couered with lether couers. After euery Troope followed the Captaine on Horse-backe, his bed and other necessities were laid vpon his owne Horse, equally peased on either side, ouer the same was spread a couering of redde felt of China, whereupon the Captaine did sit crosse-legged, as if hee had sate betwixt a couple of panners: and for those that were ancient or otherwise weake-backt, they had a staffe artificially fixed vnto the Pannell, that the Rider might rest himselfe, and leane backward against it, as if he were sitting in a chaire. The Captaine Generall of this Garrison wee met two dayes after we had met his first troop, (hauing still in the meane-time met with some of these Companies as we passed along, sometimes one league, sometimes two leagues distant one from another.) Hee marched in very great state, beyond that the others did, (for the second Troope was more richly set out in their armes then the first: and the third then the second, and so still euery one better then other, vntill it came vnto this the last and best of all.) He hunted and hawked all the way, hauing his owne Hounds and Hawkes along with him, the Hawkes being hooded and lured as ours ours are. His Horses for his owne Saddle being fixe in number, richly trapped. Their Horses are not tall, but of the size of our midling Nags, short and well trust, small headed and very full of mettle, in my opinion, farre excellling the Spanish Iennet in pride and stomacke. He had his Pallankin carryed before him, the inside of Crimson Veluet, and fixe men appointed to carrie it, two at a time.

Such good order was taken for the passing and prouiding for, of these three thousand Souldiers, that no man either traouelling or inhabiting vpon the way where they lodged, was any way injured by them, but cheerefully entertayned them as other their guests; because they paid for what they tooke, as all other men did. Euery Towne and Village vpon the way being well fitted with Cookes and Victualling houses, where they might at an instant haue what they needed, and dyet themselves from a pennie Englisch a meale, to two shillings a meale.

The Dyet vsed generally through the Countrey, is Rice of diuers sorts, one better then other (as of our Wheate and Corne here) the whitest accounted the best, which they vse in stead of Bread, Fish, fresh and salted, some pickeld Herbes, Beanes, Raddishes and other Roots salted and pickled, Wild-fowle, Ducke, Mallard, Teale, Geese, Pheasant, Partridge, Quale, and diuers others, which they doe powder and put vp in pickle, of Hens they haue great store, as likewise of Deere both red and fallow: wild Bores, Hares, Goates, Kine, &c. of Cheese they haue plentie, Butter they make none, neither will they cate any Milke, because they hold it to bee as bloud, nor tame beafts.

Of tame Swine and Pigs they haue great abundance. Wheate they haue as good as any of ours, being red. They plow both with Oxen and Horse as wee doe heere. At our being there, we bought Hens and Pheasants of the best for three pence a piece. Pigs very fat and large twelue pence a piece, a fat Hogge five shillings. A good Beefe, such as our Welch Runts, at sixteene shillings, a Goate three shillings, Rice a halfe-pennie the pound. The ordinarie drinke of the common people is water, which with their meate they drinke warme, holding it to bee a souereigne remedie against Wormes in the maw: other dringes they haue none, but what is distilled out of Rice, which is almost as strong as our Aquanita, and in colour like to Canarie Wine, and is not deare. Yet when they haue drawne off the best and strongest, they wring out of it a smaller and slighter drinke, seruing the poorer sort of people, which through want cannot reach to the better.

The thirtieth, we were furnished with ninetene Horse at the Emperours charge, to carrie 30 vp our Kings presents, and those that attended me to Surunga.

I had a Pallankin appointed for me, and a spare Horse led by, to ride when I pleased, very well set out. Sixe men appointed to carrie my Pallankin in plaine and euen ground. But where the Countrey grew hilly, ten men were allowed me thereto. The Guardian whom King Foyu sent along with vs, did from time to time and place to place by warrant, take vp these men and Horses to serue our turnes, as the Post-masters doe here in England: as also lodging at night. According to the custome of the Countrey, I had a slaue appointed to runne with a Pike before mee.

Fotoquis Japonian Temples. Priests.

Crosses and crucifying.

Surunga a very great Citie.

Thus we trauelled vntill the sixth of September, before we got to Surunga, each day fifteene or sixteene leagues, of three miles to a league as we ghesed it. The way for the most part is wonderfull euen, and where it meeteth with Mountaines, passage is cut through. This way is the mayne Roade of all this Countrey, and is for the most part sandie and grauell; it is diuided into leagues, and at euery leagues end are two small hills, viz. of either side of the way one, and vpon euery one of them a faire Pine-tree, trimmed round in fashion of an Arbor. These marks are placed vpon the way to the end, that the Hacknie men, and those which let out Horses to hire, should not make men pay more then their due, which is about three pence a league. The Roade is exceedingly trauelled, full of people, euer and anon you meet with Farmes and Countrey houles, with Villages, and often with great Townes, with Ferries ouer fresh Riuers, and many Futakeasse or Fotoquis which are their Temples, scituate in Groues and most pleasantest places for delight, of the whole Countrey. The Priests that tend thereupon dwelling about the same, as our Friars in old time planted themselves here in England. When wee approached any Towne, we saw Crosses with the dead bodies of those who had bene crucified thereupon. For crucifying is heere an ordinarie punishment for most Malefactors. Comming neere Surunga, where the Emperours Court is, wee saw a Scaffold with the heads of diuers (which had bene executed) placed thereupon, and by it were diuers Crosses with the dead CorpSES of those which had been executed, remayning still vpon them, and the pieces of others, which after their Executioners had bene hewen againe and againe by the triall of others Cattans. All which caused a most vsauourie passage to vs, that to enter into Surunga, must needs passe by them. This Citie of Surunga is full as bigge as London, with all the Suburbs. The Handi-crafts men wee found dwelling in the outward parts and skirts of the Towne, because those that are of the better sort, dwell in the inward part of the Citie, and will not be annoyed with the rapping, knocking, and other disturbance that Artificers cannot be without.

Assoone as wee were settled in our lodging in Surunga, I sent Master Adams to the Court, to let the Secretarie vnderstand of my comming, and desire of as speedie dispatch as might bee. Word was returned that I was welcome, that I should rest me, and within a day or two I should haue access to the Emperour.

The

The seventh was spent in fitting vp of the presents, and providing little Tables of slit deale of that Countrey (which smelleth verie sweet) to carrie them vpon, according to the custome.

The eighth, I was carryed in my Pallankin to the Castle of Surunga (where the Emperour kept his Court) and was attended with my Merchants and others carrying the presents before me. Being entred the Castle, I passed three draw bridges, euery of which had a corps of Guard, and comming vp a paire of verie faire and large stone staires, I was met by two graue comely men the one them Codske dona, the Emperours Secretarie; the other Furgo dona the Admirall, who led me into a faire roome matted, where we sat downe crosse-legged vpon the Mats. Anon after they lead mee betwixt them into the Chamber of Presence, where was the Emperours Chaire of State, to which they wished me fidoe reuerence. It was of cloth of Gold, about five foot high, very richly set forth for backe and sides, but had no Canopie ouer head. Then they returned backe againe to the place where before they did sit, where hauing stayed about the quarter of an houre, word was brought, that the Emperour was come forth. Then they rose vp and led me betwixt them vnto the doore of the roome where the Emperour was, making signes to me that I should enter in there, but durst not looke in themselves. The presents sent from our King to the Emperour, as also those which (according to the custome of the Countrey) I gaue vnto the Emperour, as from my selfe, were placed in the said roome vpon the Mats very orderly, before the Emperour came into it. Comming to the Emperour, according to our English Compliments, I deliuered our Kings Letter vnto his Maiestie, who tooke it in his hand, and put it vp towards his fore-head, and commanded his Interpreter, who sate a good distance from him behind, to will Master Adams to tell me that I was welcome from a wearisome iourney, that I should take my rest for a day or two, and then his Answer should be readie for our King. Then he asked whether I did not intend to visit his sonne at Edoo. I answered, I did. The Emperour said that order should be taken to furnish mee with men and Horses for the Iourney and against my returne his Letters should be readie for our King. So taking my leaue of the Emperour, and comming to the doore where I had left the Secretarie and Admirall, I found them there readie to conduct me to the staires head where formerly they had met mee, and there I tooke my Pallankin, and with my Attendants returned to my lodging.

The Castle & Court of the Emperour.

in book VI

The ninth, I went to deliuer the Secretarie his present, which in no wise hee would receiue, but heartily thanked me, saying, that the Emperour had commanded the contrarie, and that it were as much as his life if he should take any gift. But hee tooke five pound of Aloes Socatrina to vse for his health. I deliuered the Articles of priuiledge this day to Codske dona, being in number fourteene. He requested to haue them abbreviated and made as short as might bee, for that the people of Japon affect breuitie.

Japonians affect breuitie.

The tenth, the Articles so abridged, were sent by Master Adams to the Secretarie, who shewed them to the Emperour, and he approued thereof, denying one only, which was, That whereas the Chineses had refused to trade with the English, that in case we should now take any of them by force, that our Nation might haue leaue and libertie to bring them into Japon, and there make sale of the goods so taken. At the first motion, the Emperour answered, that seeing they denied vs Trade, we might take them. But vpon conference with the Lieger of China, the Emperours minde was changed, and would not allow of that Article. The rest were passed vnder his great Seale, which is not of Waxe (as ours) but stamped like a print and coloured red.

The Copie of which hee brought home and gaue mee which after followeth.

The eleuenth, the Present appointed for the Mint-master, was deliuered him, which he took thankfully, and returned to me two Japonian Gownes of Tassata, quilted with silke Cotton.

The twelfth, Master Adams was sent to the Mint-master (being the Emperours Merchant, and hauing charge of his Mint and readie monies, a man of very great esteeme with the Emperour, and one that hath vowed that whensoever the Emperour shall dye, he will cut out his own guts and dye with him.) Master Adams carryed vnto him the particular prices of our English Commodities (as before is specified.)

About noone the same day, wee departed for Edoo, to the Emperours sonne, being furnished with horse and men by the Emperour, as formerly.

The Countrey betwixt Surunga and Edoo is well inhabited. We saw many Fotoquise or Temples as we passed, and amongst others one Image of especiall note, called Dabis, made of Copper, being hollow within, but of a very substantiall thicknesse. It was in height, as wee ghesse, from the ground about one and twentie or two and twentie foot in the likenesse of a man kneeling vpon the ground, with his buttockes resting on his heeles, his armes of wonderfull largenesse, and the whole bodie proportionable, he is fashioned wearing of a Gowne. This Image is much reuerenced by Trauellers as they passe there. Some of our people went into the bodie of it, and hoope and hallowed, which made an exceeding great noyse. We found many Characters and Markes made vpon it by Passengers, whom some of my Followers imitated, and made theirs in like manner. It standeth in the maine Roade of the Pilgrimage to Tencheday, which is much frequented: for night and day, rich and poore, are comming and going to vuit Tencheday. M. Adams told me that he had beene at the Fotoqui or Temple dedicated to this Tencheday, to whom they make this deuout pilgrimage; and as he reported, there is monthly one of the fairest Virgins of the whole countrey brought into that Fotoqui, and there she sits all alone in a room neatly kept, in a very sober manner, and at certaine times, this Tentheday (which is thought to be the Diuell) appeareth vnto her, and hauing knowne her carnally, leaueh with her at his departure certaine skales, like vnto the skales of fishes: what questions shee is willed by the Bonzes, or Priests of that Fotoqui to aske, Tentheday resolues: and euery moneth a fresh Virgin is taken in: but what becomes of the old, Master Adams himselfe did not know.

The fourteenth, we arrived at Edoe, a Citie much greater then Surunga, farre fairer building, and made a very glorious appearance vnto vs; the ridge-tiles and corner-tiles richly gilded, the posts of their doores gilded and varnished: Glasse-windowes they haue none, but great windowes of board, opening in leaues, well set out with painting, as in Holland: there is a Ca wsey which goeth throu the chiefe streete of the Towne; vnderneath this Ca wsey runneth a River, at euery fiftie paces there is a Well-head, fitted very substantially of free-stone, with buckets for the neighbours to fetch water, and for danger of fire. This streete is as broad as any of our streets in England.

The fifteenth, I gaue the Kings Secretary, Sadda-dona, to vnderstand of my arriual, requesting him to let the King know thereof.

The seuenteenth, I had access to the King, and deliuered him the Presents from our King, as also certaine from my selfe (according to the custome of the Countrey.) The King kept his Court in the Castle of Edoe, which is much fairer and stronger then that of Surunga, hee was better guarded and attended vpon, then the Emperour his Father. Sadda-dona the Kings Secretary, is father to Codske-dona the Emperours Secretary, whose yeeres affording better experience, hee is therefore appointed to haue the gouernment and direction of the yong King, who (at our being there) we esteemed to be aged about two and fortie yeeres.

My entertainment and access to the King heere, was much like to the former at Surunga with the Emperour: he accepted very kindly our Kings Letters and Presents, bidding me welcome, and wishing me to refresh my selfe, and his Letters and Presents to our King should be made ready with all speed.

The nineteenth, I deliuered Sadda-dona his Presents. This day two and thirtie men being commanded to a certaine house, for not paying their debts, and being in the stocks within the house, the house in the night time by casualtie fiered, and they were all burnt to death.

Towards euening, the King sent two varnished Armour for a Present to our King. Hee sent likewise a Tatch or long sword, (which none may weare there but souldiers of the best ranke) and a Waggadash for a present to my selfe. From Edoe to the Northermost part of Iapan, it is esteemed two and twentie dayes journey by horse, little more or lesse.

The one and twentieth, we parted by Boat from Edoe to Oringgan, a Towne vpon the sea side. From whence we arrived at Surunga the nine and twentieth day, and there remained for the Emperours Letters and Presents to our King.

The eight of October, I receiued the Emperours Letters, directed to our Soueraigne Lord Iames, King of Great Britaine, the true Copie whereof is as followeth.

To the King of Great Britaine.

YOur Maesties kind Letter sent me by your seruant Captaine Iohn Saris, (who is the first that I haue knowne to arrive in any part of my Dominions) I heartily embrace, being not a little glad to vnderstand of your great wisdom and power, as hauing three plentiful and mightie Kingdomes vnder your powerfull command. I acknowledge your Maesties great bountie, in sending mee so undeserued a Present of many rare things, such as my Land affordeth not, neither haue I euer before scene: which I receiue not as from a stranger, but as from your Maestie, whom I esteeme as my selfe. Desiring the continuance of Friendship with your Highnesse: And that it may stand with your good liking, to send your Subjects to any part or Port of my Dominions, where they shall bee most heartily welcome, applauding much their worthinesse in the admirable knowledge of Nauigation, hauing with much facilitie discovered a Countrey so remote, being no whit amazed with the distance of so mightie a Gulfe, nor greatnesse of such infinite clouds and stormes, from prosecuting honorable enterprises, of Discoveries and Merchandizing: wherein they shall find me to further them, according to their desires. I returne vnto your Maestie a small token of my loue (by your said Subject) desiring you to accept thereof, as from him that much reioyceth in your Friendship. And whereas your Maesties Subjects haue desired certaine priuiledges for Trade, and setting of a Factorie in my Dominions, I haue not only granted what they demanded, but haue confirmed the same vnto them vnder my Broad-seale, for better establishing thereof. From my Castle in Surunga, this fourth day of the ninth month, in the eighteenth yeere of our Dary, according to our Computation. Resting your Maesties Friend. The highest Commander in this Kingdome of Iapan:

I also receiued the said Priuiledges for Trade in * Iapan: the Originall was left with Master Cocks: the copie thereof with the Seale in blacke heere followeth. The translation whereof (as neare to the Originall as may be) followeth.

* The Character hau by some been thought to be those of China, but I compared them with China bookes, and they seemed to me quite different, yet not letters to compound words by spelling, as ours; but words expressed in their severall characters, as the Chinese use, and the breuitie manifesteth. I take them characters peculiar to Iapan.

present saie of their commodities, without further comming or sending up to our Court.

3 Item, If any of their shippes shall happen to be in danger of shipwracke, Wee will Our subiects not uice and proper use: Wee will that no arrest bee made thereof, but that the price bee made with the Cape

Merchant, according as they may sell to others, and present payment upon the deliury of the goods. 30

7 Item, If in discovery of other Countries for Trade, and returne of their shippes, they shall need men or Victualls, Wee will that yee Our subiects furnish them for their money, as their need shall require.

Oringaw the best haven or road for vs.

A Spanish Em-bassador from the Philippinas.

Note that Oringaw is a very good harbour for shipping, where ships may ride as safely as in the Riuer of Thames before London, and the passage thereto by Sea very safe and good: so that it will be much better for our ships to saile thither, then to Firando, in respect that Oringaw is vp-on the maine Island, and is distant from Edoe (the chiefe City) but fourteene or fifteene leagues.
The place is not so well replenished with victuall and flesh-meat, as Firando is, which want only excepted, Oringaw is for all other matters to be preferred before Firando. 50

At my returne to Surunga, I found a Spanish Embassadour arrived there from the Philippinas, who only had sight of the Emperour, and deliuered him his presents, which were certaine China Damaskes, and five Iarres of sweet wine of Europe. After the first time, he could not obtaine accesse to the Emperour. His Embassage was, that such Portugals and Spaniards as were within his Dominions, not authorized by the King of Spaine, might be deliuered vp vnto him to carry away to the Philippinas: which the Emperour denyed to doe, saying, That his Countrey was a free Country, and none should be forced out of it; but if the Embassadour could perswade any to go, they should not be staied. This comming of the Spanish Embassadour for men, was caused by the great want of me they had to defend the Molucca Ilands fro the Dutch, who then made great preparation for the absolute conquest thereof. After that the Embassadour had attended for the 60 Emperours answere, the time limited him by his Commission, seeing it came not, hee departed discontented. But being at the Sea-side, there was an answere returned for him to carry, with a flender Present, viz. five Iapan Gownes, and two Cattans or Swords.

The ninth we departed from Surunga at Edoe. About a month before my comming thither, the Empe-

Emperour being displeased with the Christians, made proclamation, that they should forthwith remoue and carry away all their Churches to Langasacque, a Towne situate on the Sea-side, and distant from Firando about eight leagues: And that no Christian Church should stand, nor Masse be sung, within ten leagues of his Court, vpon paine of death. A while after, certaine of the Naturalls, being seuen and twentie in number, (men of good fashion) were assembled together in an Hospitall, appointed by the Christians for Lepers, and there had a Masse: whereof the Emperour being informed, commanded them to be shut vp in an house for one night, and that the next day they should suffer death. The same euening another man for debt was clapt vp in the same house, being an Heathen at his comming in, and ignorant of Christ and his Religion: But 10 (which is wonderfull) the next morning, when the Officer called at the doore for those which were Christians to come forth, and goe to execution, and those which were not, and did renounce the same, to stay behind: this man in that nights space was so instructed by the other, that resolutely he came out with the rest, and was crucified with them.

A proclamation against the Christians.

In our passage towards Miaco from Surunga, we had for the most part much raine, whereby the waters did so rise, that wee were forced to stay by the way, so that it was the sixteenth of October before we got thither. Miaco is the greatest Citie of Iapan, consisting most vpon merchandizing. The chiefe Fotoqui or Temple of the whole countrey is there, being built of free-stone, and is as long as the Westerne end of Saint Pauls in London, from the Quier, being as high arched and borne vpon pillars as that is: where many Bonzes doe attend for their maintenance, 20 as the Priests among Papists. There is an Altar whereon they doe offer Rice and small money, called Cundrius (whereof twentie make one shilling English: ) which is employed for the vse of the Bonzes. Neare vnto this Altar there is an Idoll, by the Natiues called Mannada, made of Copper, much resembling that of Dabis formerly spoken of, but is much higher, for it reacheth vp to the very Arch. This Fotoqui was begun to be built by Taicofania in his life-time, and since his sonne hath proceeded to the finishing thereof, which was newly made an end of when wee were there. Within the inclosure of the walles of this Fotoqui there are buried (by the report of the inhabitants) the Eares and Noses of three thousand Coreans, which were massacred at one time: Vpon their graue is a mount raised, with a Pyramis on the toppe thereof; which mount is greene, and very neatly kept. The horse that Taicofania last rode on, is kept neare vnto this 30 Fotoqui, hauing neuer been ridden since, his hooffes being extraordinarily growne with his age, and still standing there.

The description of the Citie of Miaco.

Their Bonzes, Idols, Altars, Offerings, &c.

The Fotoqui standeth vpon the top of an high hill, and on either side, as yee mount vp to it, hath fiftie pillars of free-stone, distant ten paces one from the other, and on euery pillar a Lanterne, wherein euery night lights are maintained of Lampe-oyle. In this Citie of Miaco, the 40 Portugall Iesuits haue a very stately Colledge, wherein likewise are diuers Iesuits, Naturall Iaponians, which preach, and haue the new Testament printed in the Iapan language. In this Colledge are many Iaponian children trayned vp, and instructed in the rudiments of Christian Religion, according to the Romish Church: There are not lesse then fve or fixe thousand Iaponians in this Citie of Miaco professing Christ.

Colledge of Iesuits in Miaco.
 The new Testament in the Iapan language

40 Besides the Fotoqui before described, thtre are many other Fotoquis in this Citie. The Tradesmen and Artificers are distributed by themselves, euery Occupation and Trade in their seuerall streets, and not mingled together, as heere with vs.

At Miaco we stayed, expecting the Emperours Present, which at length was deliuered to me out of the Castle, being ten Beobs, or large Pictures to hang a chamber with.

The twentieth, wee departed from Miaco, and came the same night to Fushimi.

The one and twentieth, about noone we arriued at Osaca: heere wee found the people very 50 rude, following vs, crying Tosin, Tosin, that is, Chinaes, Chinaes; others calling vs Coré, Coré, and flinging stones at vs; the grauest people of the Towne not once reproving them, but rather animating of them, and setting them on. Heere we found the Gally readie, which had attended for vs euer since our landing, at the charge of the King of Firando. The foure and twentieth at night we all embarked for Firando.

We embarked for Firando.
 November 6.

The sixt of Nouember we arriued at Firando, and were kindly bid welcome by King Foyne. All this while our people sold little, the custome of the Countrey being, that without expresse permission from the Emperour, no stranger may offer goods to sale. Besides, our chiefeest commodity intended for those parts being Broad-cloath, (which, according to former intelligence, had lately been sold there at fortie Rials of eight the matte, which is two yards, as aforesaid) the Natiues were now more backward to buy then before, because they saw that we our selues were no forwarder in wearing the thing which wee recommended vnto them. For, said they, you commend your Cloath vnto vs, but you your selues weare least thereof, the better sort of you 60 wearing Silken garments, the meaner Fustians, &c. Wherefore hoping that good counsell may (though late) come to some good purpose, I wish that our Nation would be more forward to vse and spend this naturall commodity of our owne Countrey, so shall wee better encourage and allure others to the entertainment and expence thereof.

p. VIII.

Accidents after his returne to Firando, the setting of a Factory there, departure for Bantam, and thence for England.

The seventh of November, I visited the Kings with Presents first, and after with Presence, and was kindly entertained. The eighth, Andrew Palmer, Steward of the ship, and William Marnell Gunners Mate, lay ashore all night, and in a drunken humour, went into the field and fought, and wounded each other so sore, that it is thought Palmer will hardly escape with his life, and Marnell be lame of his hands for ever. 10

The ninth, in the morning very early I went aboard the Ship, and carried M. Cockes along with me, and called the Master and all the Officers into my Cabbin, making it knowne vnto them, that it much grieved me the indirect course some of them tooke, namely, Palmer and Marnell, who went out of the Ship without license, and had wounded one another so sore, that the one was in danger of his life, and the other a lame man for ever; and that which was more, the Survivor in danger to be hanged if the other died, which could not choose but be a great hearts griefe vnto me: as also to vnderstand, that Francis Williams and Simon Colphax were in the boat, going ashore to haue fought, and John Dench and John Winston appointed to doe the like, and Dench confessed it was true, and that he saw Palmer and Marnell fighting, and went and parted 20 them, otherwise both had remained dead in the field: these matters, I told them, were grievous vnto me, and therefore I willed them it might be amended in time, otherwise they would dispeople the Ship, to the vtter ouerthrow of our Voyage, and deceiue the Honourable Companie, that had put their trust in vs.

After much contestation, each one departed, with promise to amend what was amisse, and not to offend in any sort hereafter, which God graunt may prooue true. I told them also, that Foyne Same, the old King, had made complaint vnto me, that if any more came ashore to fight and shed blood in his Countrey (contrary to his Lawes) he would cause them to be cut in peces, for that he would not suffer strangers to haue more Priuiledge in that matter then his owne Subiects. And at my returne to the English house, Foyne Same the King came to visit me, and told mee the piece of Poldauis and a Shash I gaue him, were consumed with fire when his house was burned, which 30 was a manner of begging two more, which I promised him, and got him to send of his people aboard, with my Iurebasso John Iapan, to signifie to the Company, that if any of them came ashore to fight any more, the King had giuen order to cut them in peces, and not to suffer any one to returne aboard. I did this in hope to restraints them from such drunken Combats.

Towards night came a Spaniard from Langasague, called John Comas, and brought two Letters from Domingo Francisco, one for me, and the other for M. Cockes, and sent me a Present of three baskets of Sugar, and a pot of Conserues, with many no lesse sugred conserued words of complement in his Letters, that he was sorie that our seven men were gone away in his absence, excusing both himselfe, and the Fathers or Iesuites, that they had no hand in the matter, neither euer spoke such word, that we were heretikes or theeues, yet said our men were gone away from thence, three of them in a China or Iapan Soma for the Manillias, and the other foure in a Portugall Vessel; but I hold these but words to excuse themselues, and put other men in fault: for the Spaniards loue not the Portugals, neither either of both the Iapan, much lesse the Iapan them. 40

The eleuenth, I went and visited Nobesane; he vsed me kindly, and would haue had mee come to dinner to morrow, but I excused the matter, in respect of the much businesse I had, and short time of stay. I met the old King Foyne at his house, who desired to haue two peeces English powdered Beefe, and two of Porke sod with Turnips, Raddish and Onions by our Cooke, and sent vnto him, which I caused to be done. Wind Northerly a fresh gale day and night, faire dry weather, but cold. 50

The twelfth, the two Kings Gouernours, came to visit me at the English house; and from thence went aboard the Cloue (Master Cockes accompanying them) to signifie vnto the Master and the rest of the Companie, that from hence forward, our ships Companie should haue a care how they came ashore to fight and shed blood; for that the Law of the Countrey was, that they which went out to fight, and drew weapon, were to die the death, and all those which did behold them, obliged to kill both parties, in paine of ruinating all their generation if they did not kill both parties.

The foureteenth, I sent M. Cockes and my Iurebasso to both the Kings, to entreat them to prouide me of a dozen Sea-men, that were able to doe their labour, to goe with me for England, and for wages I was willing to giue them what in reason their Highnesses thought fit. The Kings were impeached about other matters; so they spake with their Secretaries, who told them, they need not to speake about that matter to the Kings, for that they would prouide mee a dozen such as should be fit; but that there were diuers vagrant people about Towne, which no doubt would be willing to goe, yet were not fit to be carried to Sea; for that when they came there, they would 60 would serue for nothing but to spend victuals, and of such the Flemmings serued their turne without making request vnto them: and what is become of them or the Ship is not known to this day. But seeing that now the matter was referred to them, they would looke out for such as were for our purpose.

The eighteenth, Foyne the old King sent me word he would come and visit me, and bring the dancing Beares or Curtesians of the Countrey, which soone after he did, being three whoores of the Countrey, and two or three other men with them, they all dancing and making musique after the Countrey fashion, although harsh to our hearings.

The nineteenth, the Captaine Chinesa and George Dyras the Portugall came vnto me, desiring me to send to Semidone, to procure the libertie of two honest poore men, who were like to loote their liues, for bidding a poore Knaue flie, which had stolne a little piece of Lead not worth three halfe pence, and yet the Malefactor was taken and put to death, and these men in danger to haue done the like, had I not sent M. Cocks with my Ring to Semidone, to desire pardon for them for my sake, which he granted to procure, and did effect it.

Seuere iustice
in Iapan.

The twentieth, Samedon the King of Crats sent mee word hee would come aboard our Ship: So I met him there, he being accompanied with both the Kings of Firando, they had fise peeces of Ordnance at their entrie aboard, and three with shot or Bullets, were shot at a marke at the request of Samedon. He gaue me two Pikes or Iapan stauers with Cattans or Sables on the ends, and so they departed with seuen peeces of Ordnance for a farewell, one being with shot at the marke aforesaid.

The twentie two, a Present was laid out, and sent to Samedon King of Crats: it was deliuered vnto him at Tomesanes the young Kings house, he being there at Breakfast, and tooke in very kind part, sending me word by M. Cocks, that he was doubly obliged vnto mee, first in his kind entertainment aboard, and now in sending him such a Present of worth, of such things as his Countrey afforded not the like, and all without any desert of his: onely the recompence he could make was, that for his sake, if euer any of the English Nation did come within his Dominions, he would bid them kindly welcome, and shew them any fauour he could.

The twentie fifth in the morning betimes, the Purser and M. Hownsell came ashore, and told me Andrew Palmer the Steward departed out of this world about tenne of the clocke the night past, and that the Chirurgeon Thomas Warner affirmed (as he told me the like many times before) that Palmer was the occasion of his owne death, his wound being curable, if he would haue bin ruled. I willed the Purser M. Melsham to goe aboard, and that the Master and he should take order to carry him, and bury him on an Iland as secretly as might be, in respect we were about to get some Japans to goe along in our ship, which it might be hearing of the death of any one, would make them the more vnwilling.

The twentie eighth, a Iapan was put to death: some said for theft; others said he was a house-burner: He was lead by the Hang-man to execution, one carying a board before him, wherein was written the fact he had committed, as the like was written in a paper flag ouer his head, and two Pikemen followed him with the points of their Pikes hard to his backe, to haue killed him if he had offered to resist. Diuers of this place complained, that the Ships Company owed them money, and now the Ship was ready to depart, desired payment, which to preuent a greater inconuenience, I hearkened vnto, and wrote to the Master to enquire aboard who they were that were indebted, and what the summe was they owed, to the intent to make satisfaction, and so to abate it out of their wages.

Now touching a Factorie to be left there, I had on the twenty sixth, assembled my Merchandizing counsell, where vpon these considerations, viz. The encouragement wee had receiued in the Moluccas by priuate intelligence, the Dutch Factorie already planted here in Firando: The large Priuiledges now obtained of the Emperour of Iapan: The certaine aduile of the English Factories settled in Siam and Patane: The Commodities resting vsold vpon our hands appointed for these parts, and the hoped for profit which further experience may produce: It was resolved, that a Factorie should be left here, viz. eight English, three Iapan Iurebasses or Interpreters, and two seruants, who were appointed against the comming of the next ships, to search and discover the Coast of Corea, Tushmay, and other parts of Iapan, and Countreys thereunto adioyning, to see what good might be done in any of them.

The settling of an English Factorie in Iapan.

The fifth of December, M. Richard Cocks, Captaine and Cape Merchant of the English Factorie, settled at Firando in Iapan, tooke his leaue of me aboard the Cloue with his Companie, being eight English, and fise others. After their departure, our Companie was mustered aboard, finding fortie sixe English, fise Swarts, fiteene Iapaners, three Passengers, in all sixtie nine: hauing lost since our arriual here three English, two by sicknesse, one slaine, and seuen which ranne away to the Portugals and Spaniards, whilst I was at the Emperours Court. The names of the English we left in the Factorie with M. Cocks, were William Adams, (entertained at an hundred pounds the yeere into the Companies seruice) Tempest Peacocke, Richard Wickham, William Eaton, Walter Carwarden, Edward Sares, William Nelson.

min. Westerly.

rid: our course South by West, halfe a point Westerly, Latitude thirtie three degrees fouretee minutes. Note, that by exact obseruation on the shoare, we found this Iland of Firando to stand in latitude thirtie three degrees thirtie minutes, variation two degrees fiftie minutes Easterly.

It was resolved to keepe alongst the Coast of China, directly to Bantam, and so wee brought aboard our star-boord tacke, and steered away South-west, edging ouer for China, the wind at North North-east, a stiffe gale and faire weather.

The sixth, Latitude thirtie one degrees thirtie nine minutes, way South by West forty leagues.

The seuenth, it blew very much wind, a storme at North-west, wee steered South South-west no obseruation, there we felt the great Current which shoots out betweene the Iland Corea and the maine of China, which made a very great Sea, way South South-west halfe point Westerly twentie five leagues.

The eight, Latitude twentie nine degrees fortie one minutes, way South-west, twentie six leagues, wind North-west a very stiffe gale, we steered West South-west, to make Cape Sumbor vpon the Coast of China: the Sea very much growne, so much wind, that it blew our maine course out of the bolt ropes.

The ninth, Latitude twentie eight degrees, twentie three minutes, way South-west three quarters Westerly, twentie two leagues and two third parts, we sounded and had fortie nine, and fortie five fathome Ozie, the weather cleered, and the wind came to the North, but wee could see no land.

The eleuenth, no obseruation: way West South-west thirtie five leagues, verie Greene water, we kept our Leade, and had fortie nine, fortie three, thirtie five, thirtie seuen, thirtie fathome, no sight of land, yet very cleere, wind North and North-west by North.

The twelfth, before day we sounded, and had thirtie five fathome Ozie, wind North and North-west by North a stiffe gale, and in the morning esteeming our selues to bee neere the Coast of China, we had sight of (at the least) three hundred sailes of Iunkes of twentie, thirtie, and vpwards tunnes apiece, whereof two came to the wind-ward close by vs, but perceiuing them to be Fisher-men, we let them passe, vsing all the faire meanes wee could to get some of them to come aborad, but could not preuayle. Wherefore we stood on our course West by South, and presently descryed the land, being two Ilands called the Ilands of Fishers, bearing West by North halfe a point Northerly some foure leagues off. Latitude at noone twentie five degrees fiftie nine minutes, way South-west by West fiftie leagues, Depth twentie, and twentie six fathome. Soone after, the wind came to North-east, wee brought our Lar-boord tacke aboard, and steered alongst the land South South-east, very much wind. About seuen at night we came faire by a Rocke, which, by Gods mercie, wee descryed by Moone-light, and lay right in our course, supposing to haue runne from noone to this time twelue leagues. We were within twice our ships length of the Rocke depth thirtie fathome. Then we haled off South one watch togieue the land a berth, and after mid-night steered South-west, the wind at North-east very much wind, and continually following vs, as the Land trends.

The thirteenth, Latitude twentie foure degrees thirtie five minutes, variation one degree, thirtie minutes Easterly, way South-west fiftie foure leagues, wind at North-east faire weather, wee steered South-west keeping faire by the Ilands, lying alongst the maine of China, some five leagues off, much wind.

The fourteenth in the morning little wind, haying this night past had twelue and foureene fathome, then stood off into deeper water. Latitude at noone twentie two degrees ten minutes, way South-west by South one quarter Westerly fortie two leagues wind at East North-east, and at eight at night we had fiftene, thirteene fathome, at nine a clocke sixteene, twentie seuen, twentie one and twentie five, sandie ground.

The fifteenth, in the morning we came amongst many Fisher-boates, but had so much wind as that we could not speake with them. They made signes to vs to keepe vp to the West-ward (as we thought.) Our sounding the last night to this present was twentie, twentie foure, twentie five, twentie fathomes, three leagues off the land. Latitude at noone twentie one degrees, fortie minutes, way West South-west one quarter Southerly fiftie two leagues. The wind at North North-east a stiffe gale, we steered in West North-west Northerly to make the land, and about two houres after had sight of it, but by reckoning should not haue bene neere it by fiftie six leagues, so that the distance from Firando hither, is lesse by fiftie six leagues.

Note, that the Ilands which lye alongst the Coast of China, lye more Southerly then in the plats; about three in the after-noone wee were by an Iland called Sancha about two leagues off, we steered South-west alongst the land, esteeming to haue runne since noone three leagues West North-west.

The sixteenth, at noone no obseruation: way fortie leagues, South-west by South one quarter Westerly, wind at East with drizzling raine.

The seuenteenth, Latitude eightene degrees nineteene minutes, course South-west by South one quarter Westerly fortie seuen leagues, wind at East, variation fiftie minutes Westerly, we sounded, but had no ground.

The

The eighteenth, latitude fifteene degrees fortie three minutes, course South-west by South sixtie leagues, wind at East a stiffe gale, and at five at night wee had sight of land beeing an Iland called Pulo Coran, bearing West South-west, about five leagues off, wee steering South-west. This Iland is high land, and lyeth about twentie leagues (by report) from the shoale called Plaxel, to the West-ward of it we sounded about eight of the clocke, but had no ground.

Pulo Coran.Plaxel.Camboia.

The nineteenth in the morning, the maine of Camboia was on our star-boord-side about two leagues off: we steered alongst South by East Easterly, keeping the maine in sight. Latitude at noone thirteene degrees one and thirtie minutes, way South by West fortie foure leagues, wee steered alongst South South-west, making account to bee thwart a Varella: keeping about two leagues off the shoare, we sounded but had no ground at fiftie fathome. Note, that this land of Camboia lyeth more Easterly in our plats, then it should, for wee find South South-west to goe alongst the land a faire berth off. So that the land heere lyeth South South-west, and North North-east, hauing diuers Rockes like Ilands, some one league, some league, and an halfe off the maine, but otherwise no danger that we could see. Note also, that heere wee found the windes trade alongst the shoare, for from Firando hither we did goe large, finding the wind to follow vs as the land trents.

A Varella.Camboia is not so far Easterly, as it is set in our Plats.

The twentieth, Latitude ten degrees fiftie three minutes, course South by West fiftie foure leagues wind at North, a stiffe gale alongst the shoare. And three Glasses after we had obserued, wee had sight of a small Iland, which wee made to be the Iland at the end of the shoale, called Pulo Citi, and at five Glasses running we sounded and had eleuen fathome, fine land, two leagues off the shoare. We steered alongst Southwest to bring the point of the shoale called Pulo Citi a starne: then wee sounded about two Glasses after, and had fifteene fathome. Note, that wee found Ian Huijghen Van Linschotens booke very true, for thereby we directed our selues euer from our setting forth from Firando.

Pulo Citi, orPulo Cecir.Linschotens Observations true.

The one and twentieth, Latitude nine degrees fortie three minutes course South-west a quarter Westerly thirtie foure leagues, wind at East North-east a continuall stiffe gale till noone, then calme, and found that we were in a tyde girt, our depth all the last night to this noone was ten, sixteene, seuentene, eightene, twentie one, twentie one, nineteene, twentie, twentie, nineteene, eightene fathome good ground, but had no sight of land.

The two and twentieth in the morning, we had sight of land being an Iland called Pulo Condor, bearing off vs about five leagues off, we steered South-west, the wind at North-east, latitude at noone eight degrees, twentie minutes, way South-west by West, fortie leagues and two third parts. Depth eightene, nineteene, twentie two, twentie one, twentie one, twentie two and twentie one fathomes, we steered South South-west, for the land called the seven Points.

Pulo Condor.

Latitude 8.

deg. 20. min.

The three and twentieth, no obseruing, way South-west by South one quarter Southerly, fiftie one leagues, depth twentie, twentie two, twentie foure, and at noone twentie seven fathomes.

The foure and twentieth, way South-west halfe a point Westerly, thirtie three leagues one third part, wind at North-west by North, depth thirtie seven, thirtie nine, fortie three, fortie, and at noone thirtie five fathome Ozie ground.

The five and twentieth, latitude two degrees, thirtie eight minutes, course South by East, one quarter of a league Easterly, twentie two leagues one third part, the wind at North-west and East by North, Depth, thirtie foure, thirtie two, thirtie, thirtie foure, thirtie foure, thirtie foure, thirtie five. And about foure a clocke in the morning, we made the land, beeing an Iland called Pulo Timon, distant from vs some five leagues. And at sixe in the morning, the Northernmost part bearing South-west Westerly: and the South part South South-west halfe a point Westerly, we had sight of another Iland called Pulo Tinga, bearing South South-west Westerly, about sixe leagues off at noone.

deg. 38. min.

Pulo Timon.Pulo Tinga.

The sixe and twentieth, Latitude one degree eightene minutes, course South-east by South, thirtie two leagues wind at East and East by North, Depth thirtie seven, thirtie sixe, thirtie seven, thirtie five, thirtie, and twentie seven fathome.

The seven and twentieth, course South by East fortie leagues, and two third parts, Depth, twentie seven, thirtie one, twentie eight, twentie nine, twentie eight, twentie sixe, and twentie foure fathomes at noone.

The eight and twentieth, way South South-east, fortie leagues and two third parts, Depth eightene, nineteene, sixteene, eightene, nineteene, sixteene, & at noone fifteene fathome sandie ground, making account that China-bata was about one league and an half of being low land, and at the South-west point full of Trees or Bushes. At sixe Glasses after-noone wee sounded, and had twentie fathomes Ozie ground, steering alongst the Land South South-east, the wind at North North-west. Note, that those long Ilands on our star-boord-side heere, and diuers small Ilands on our Lar-boord-side doe make the Straights of China-bata, finding it to bee truely laid downe in Plat or Draught made by Ian Ianson Mole a Hollander, which he gaue to Master Hippon, and he to the Companie.

head, and therefore doubted it to bee a shoale; so narrowly elcaping a very great danger. Wee sounded and had eleuen, twelue, fourteene, fifteene fathome, but within halfe a Glasse had eight & seven fathomes & a halfe, it seemed three square sharp to the South-west-ward, & so we steered when we had first sight thereof, not farre from the entrance of the straights of China-bata. This shoale lyeth very dangerously, but is truly placed with his depths. Latitude at noone foure degrees sixe minutes, course South by West thirtie leagues, wind at North-west and North, depth twentie, thirteene, fifteene, twentie foure, twentie seven, twentie, twentie five, twentie, eightetne, ten, ten, ten, eight and ten fathomes soft sand. And at eight a clocke in the night, we came to an anchor in seven fathomes, the weather likely to bee fowle, and our experience little or nothing, the place verie full of shoales, and before our anchor was a ground wee were in sixe 10 fixe and a quarter, five and an halfe, sixe, and then in seven fathomes soft sandie ground, then wind at North-west a small gale and rainie.

The thirtie h, this morning we had sight of the Darling, plying for Coremandell, her Compa-nie one and twentie English, and nine Swarts. By them wee first vnderstood of the death of Sir Henrie Middleton, and losse of the Trades Increase, &c. The weather close, wee obserued not:
way South South-west halfe a point Westerly fifteene leagues, depth, ten, thirteene, fourteene, eleuen, ten, nine, eight, seven, sixe and an halfe, ten, ten, sixe and a halfe, seven, five, foure and an halfe, foure and a quarter, five, five, and foure fathome, hard sandie ground, esteeming thus the shoale described in Moies Plat, and not that which we made it for. This night God mercifully deliuered vs out of a great danger. For wee passed by a sunken ledge of Rockes, vnder all our 20 sayles, within a stones cast of the top thereof, which was onely seene aboue water, and, had not the noyse of the breach vpon it wakened vs, wee could not haue cleered our selues. Wee did let fall our anchor presently, being in a great Tide girt, and had seuentene, seuentene fathomes and an halfe Ozie ground.

The one and thirtieth, in the morning as we rid, the high land of Sumatra was about leagues off vs, and one Island a starne. The passed shoale or ledge of Rockes on the star-boord side, and three small Islands on our lar-boord bow, lying three square: way South three quarters Easterly, one and twentie leagues wind at North-west. Depth, ten, nine, eight, seven, nine, ten, eleuen, twelue, fifteene, twentie two fathome, about eight leagues off the high-land of Iana.
We could not get in, because it fell calne.

The first of Ianuary, beeing calme, was most spent at an anchor. The second hauing a little 30 wind we set saile, and about eight of the clocke met with the Expedition, and vnderstanding that shee was bound home-ward laden with Pepper, we writ by them to our friends in England.

The third, we came to an anchor in Bantam Roade, finding (to our great grieve) no lading in readinesse: For which I iustly blamed those whom I had left there to prouide the same, who excused themselves, saying, that they did not as yet expect me.

I questioned with Kewee, the chiefe Merchant of the Chineses, (being come aboard to visit me) what price Pepper did beare, and how he would sell. He answered that it was already knowne ashoare that I was home-ward bound, and must of necessity lade Pepper; whereof my Merchants hauing prouided none afore-hand, I might be assured it would rise. He said it was then at 40 twelue Rials of eight, the ten sakes, but he would not vndertake to deliuer any quantitie at that price. I offered him twelue Rials and an halfe for ten sakes, but found him so farre off, as that there was no hope of dealing at the present.

Note, that of the ten, left in the Factorie heere for the eight Voyage at our departure for Japan, we found now but five liuing at our returne. Betweene Firando and Bantam, wee lost only one.

The fourth, in the morning, I went ashoare, visited the Gouverneur of Bantam, and presented him with two faire Cattans, and diuers other things of worth.

This day I bargained with Kewee and Lackmoye for foure thousand sakes of Pepper, at thir-teene Rials of eight the ten sakes: Basse three the hundred, and appointed the Merchants to 50 hasten the milling thereof, all that might be.

The fifth was spent in reducing the severall English Factories in Bantam to one Gouvernment, and setting them in one house: also order was taken that the expence of Dyet should be more frugally managed, and not spent in racke houses abroad, or on Hang-by Swarts at home, as of late it had beene: and that the Ware-houses in the Towne should be fewer in number and better looked vnto, as well it might be, the goods being with more discretion orderly stowed.

The sixth, in the reweighing of the Pepper received the day before, wee found most of the sakes hard weight, and many to want of what the Kings Beame did allow. Wherefore I sent for the Weigher, vsed him kindly, intreated him to take a little more care and paines to amend this fault, which he promised to doe: whereto the better to encourage him, I appointed the va- 60 lue of five Rials of eight to be giuen him.

The sixteenth, being the Sabbath day, I stayed aboard. About two of the clocke in the afternoone the Towne was all on a fire. Wherefore our Skiffe being well manned was presently sent ashoare

alhoare to helpe the Merchants to guard the goods. The wind was so violent, that in a moment of time almost the whole towne was burnt downe, the English and Dutch houses excepted, which it pleased God of his mercy to preserve.

The whole Towne of Bantam burned downe, saving the English and Hollander houses.

The twentieth, being alhoare, I procured Lackmoy and Lanching, two Chinese Merchants, to translate the Letter which the King of Firando in Japan, had delivered mee to carry to our King James; it was written in China Character and Language, they translated it into the Malayan, which in English is as followeth, viz.

To the King of Great Britaine, &c.

Most mightie King, how acceptable your Maesties loving Letter and bountifull Present of many worthy things sent mee by your servant Captaine John Saris is unto mee, I cannot sufficiently expresse: neither the great happinesse I esteeme my selfe to be in, by enjoying your Highnesse friendship: For which I render you many thanks, desiring the continuance of your Maesties love and acquaintance. I am heartily glad of your subjects safe arrivall at my small Island, from so long a journey. My helpe and substance they shall not want to the uttermost, for the effecting of their so worthy and laudable enterprises of Discovery and Merchandizing, greatly commending their forwardnesse therein: referring their libertie entertainment to the report of your servant, by whom I returne unto your Maestie an unworthy token, wishing your Maestie long life. From my Place of Firando, the sixt day of our tenth moneth.

Your Maesties loving Friend, Commander of this Island Firando in Japan,

FOYNE SAM-MASAM

They could not well pronounce his name, for Lanching said it was * Foyne Fosbin Sam: But Lackmoy said as is above written.

* This comes to passe by the China Characters, which in proper names borrow the Characters of other words of like or nearest sound, and therefore cause often mistaking, as Ioseph Acosta hath observed. Divers English and Scottish Souldiers, February 1. Tide of twelve houres flood, and twelve ebbe in Sunda. May 16 1614. The Concord, the first ship set out for the ioynt Stocke.

The two and twentieth, such houses as the former fire had spared, were now burnt downe; yet the English and Dutch houses escaped againe: thanks be to God.

The sixe and twentieth, heere arrived a Flemmish shippe of a thousand tunnes from Holland, called the Flushing. At the Island Mayo the Company had mutined against the Captaine, and had murdered him in his Cabbin, but that it pleased God a Scotch-man revealed the matter, even when they were armed to the exployt, so that they were taken betwixt the deckes with their weapons about them. In this shippe were divers English and Scottish souldiers. Shee stayed not heere, but towards evening set saile for Iaccatra.

The seven and twentieth, I went alhoare to hasten the Merchants, divers of our Company being at this present fallen sicke. Our ship had now her full lading in.

The first of February, the Darling was enforced to returne hither, and order by common council was taken, both for her goods and present sending to Socadanna, and after to Pasane and Siam.

The thirteenth day, we got out of the Straights of Sunda. Note that in the Straight of Sunda, the Tides set twelve houres to the Eastward, which is flood, and twelve houres to the Westward, which is ebbe.

The sixteenth of May 1614. we came to an anchor in the Bay of Saldania, where wee found the Concord of London, being the first that was set out for the ioynt stocke. We found the Natives of this place very treacherous at the present, making signes vnto vs of the forcible carrying away of two of their people. They had wounded one of the *Concord*s men very sore; and whilst we were vp in the Land, they did assault those that kept our Skiffe, carried away our Grapnell, and had spoiled those that were left to tend her, but that they tooke the water.

The Beefe of Saldania taketh salt well.

The nineteenth, heere arrived a Flemmish shippe bound for Bantam, the Master, Cornelis Van Harte. We remained heere three and twentie dayes, and having well refreshed our selves, tooke with vs fourteene Oxen and seuentie sheepe alive, besides good store of Fish and Beefe, which we powdered there, finding it to take salt well, contrary to former reports. For ten dayes after our departing from Saldania, we had the wind at North-west, and West North-west, but then came to South-west, so that we might goe our course North-west.

The seven and twentieth of September, we arrived, thanks be to God at Plimmouth, where for the space of five or sixe weekes wee endured more tempestuous weather, and our lives more endangered, then vpon the whole Voyage besides. Since which, having had some spare time, I have collected certaine notes (in the Iournall omitted) and have thought good, to cause them heere to attend the former Relation.

September 27. We arrived at Plimmouth.

Intelligence concerning Yedzo, deliuered in the Citie of Edoo in Japan, by a Iapanner, who had beene there twice.

Yedzo is an I-
land.
Hairie people.

That Yedzo is an Island, and lyeth on the North-west side of Japan, and distant from thence ten leagues: That the people are white, and of good condition, but very hairy all their bodies ouer like Munkeyes. Their weapons are bowes and arrowes poysoned. The people in the Southermost part thereof doe vnderstand weight and measure: whereof within the Land thirtie dayes iourney they are ignorant. They haue much siluer and land-gold, whereof they make payment to the Iapanners for Rice, &c. Rice and Cotton cloath of Japan, is heere well requested. Iron and Lead is brought to them from Japan. Necessaries for the belly and backe are most vendible to them. Rice transported from Japan to Yedzo, hath yielded foure for one.

Matchma.

The Towne where the Iapanners haue their chiefe residence and Mart, is called Matchma, therein are five hundred households of Iapanners, who likewise haue a Fort there, the Gouvernour whereof is called Matchmadonna. This Towne of Matchma, is the principall Mart Towne of all Yedzo, whither the Natives most resort to buy and sell, especially in September, for their prouision for winter. In March, they bring downe Salmon and dried fish of sundrie sorts, and other wares, for which the Iapanners barter, which the Iapanners rather desire then Gluer. The Iapanners haue no settled being or Trade, in any other Towne then Matchma. That further to the Northward, vpon the same Land, are people of very low stature like Dwarfes. That the Yedzoes are people of the stature of the Iapanners: and haue no apparrell, but what is brought them from Japan. That there setteth a very violent current betweene Yedzo and Japan, which commeth from Corea, and setteth to the East North-east. That the winds are for the most part, as usually they are in Japan, viz. That the Northerly winds beginne in September, and end in March, and then the Southerly winds begin to blow.

Admirall Verhagen's saile for Holland.
Sir Edward Michelborne came into the road.

He seventh of October 1605. Our Generall Henry Middleton, and Captain Christopher Coulthurst departed this Roade for England. The eight, we killed one of Keygus Varones Slaues, which would haue fired our house.

The three and twentieth, here arriued a Lunck of the Flemmings from Priaman, by whom we vnderstood of Sir Edward Michelborne and Captaine Davis, there being vpon the coast, and that they had taken a Guzerate luncke in the Straights of Sunda, which came from Bantam, bound to Priaman.

The five and twentieth, we were commanded to the Court, vpon the report the Flemmings had made of Sir Edward, where it was demanded whether wee knew him, and wherefore hee should offer violence to the Kings friends, which had done him no wrong. It was answered, we knew a Knight so called, but whether he were vpon the Coast or no, we knew not, nor did know the Guzerate to be taken, but by the report of the Flemmings, which we held fabulous, and that vpon their better considerations, it might prooue rather to be one of the Flemmings ships, which set saile two dayes before the departure of the said Guzerate from Bantam. Whereupon we were willed to depart, till fur her prooffe could be made. The sixe and twentieth, Admirall Vanhagen of Viricke departed for Holland, with two ships more in company, by whom we aduised the Company of all matters at large.

The nine and twentieth, Sir Edward Michelborne came to anchor heere, in the Road of Bantam,

1am, Master Towersen and my selfe went aboard to him, where we had good entertainment: And he did intimate vnto vs the taking of the Guzerate: wee intreated him that he would not take the China Iunckes, the which he promised vs, as he was a Gentleman, he would not.

The second of Nouember 1605. Sir Edward set saile, directing his course for the Straights of Pallingban.

The thirteenth heere arriued a small ship of the Flemmings from the Moluccas, called the little Sunne.

The eighteenth, heere departed a small Pinnaffe of the Flemmings, for the discouery of the Iland called Noua ginnea, which, as it is said, affordeth great store of Gold. The foure and twentieth, Vanfoult set saile for Choromandell.

The second of December 1605. heere arriued three Iunckes from Pattanny, they brought newes of the great losse the Flemmings had had by fire there.

The seuenteenth, Generall Warwicke arriued heere from Patanny, where hee had taken a very rich Carracke, which came from Mackean, the greatest part of her lading was raw Silke.

The second of Ianuary 1605. heere departed a Iuncke of this Towne, fraughted by Chineses for Temore: their lading or commodities they caried wes Brand peeces of siluer, beaten very thin of an hand-breadth English, Iron, course Purfeline, Taffaties, China Pans and Belles. The twentieth, arriued a China Iuncke, which Sir Edward Michelborne had taken, and restitution was demanded of vs, the Gouvernour and principall Courtiers being very much offended, but by the Admirall and Sabandar were pacified. The Nockhoda of the Iuncke alledged many rich parcells taken.

The three and twentieth of May 1606. heere arriued a small Frigat of the Flemmings from Ternate, and brought away their Merchants, which had been left there by Bastianfon. The Spaniard had taken away all they had, but gaue euery man his libertie. They carried the King of Ternate for the Mannelyes, and as it was reported, they purposed to send him for Spaine. Some ten leagues from Iackatra, this Flemmish Frigat chanced to meete with the King of Bantams Fleete, which pillaged them of all which they had saued from the Spaniards. The Flemmings laboured to get restitution, but could get none of the Iauanes.

The nine and twentieth, the Kings Fleete returned, hauing done verelittle against their enemies the Pallingbanes.

The fifteenth of Iune, heere arriued Nockhoda Tingall a Cling-man from Banda, in a Iaua Iuncke, laden with Mace and Nutmegs, the which he sold heere to the Guzerats for an hundred and fiftie Rials of eight the Bahar Bantam, which is foure hundred and fiftie Cattees: he told me that the Flemmings Pinnaffe which went vpon discouery for Noua Ginny, was returned to Banda, hauing found the Iland: but in sending their men on shoare to intreate of Trade, there were nine of them killed by the Heathens, which are man-eaters; so they were constrained to returne, finding no good to be done there.

The sixt of August, the Moone was Eclipsed about eight of the clocke in the euening, continuing for the space of two houres, the Chineses and Ianaries beating of Pans and Morters during her obscurie, in such manner, as you would thinke there were no hell but there, and crying out the Moone was dead.

The fourth of October, 1606. the China quarter was all burnt downe, yet it pleased God to preferue Ours. The same night, the Carracke of the Flemmings set saile for Holland, her lading was fiftene thousand sakes of Pepper, some rawe Silke, and great store of China Sugar.

The fifth, the West Frisland arriued here from Ternata, whence she was beaten by the Spaniards: she was not aboue halfe laden with Mace, Cloues, and Cotton-yarne.

The ninth, here arriued a small Frigat from Socadanna, the Merchant was Claes Simonfon, his lading was Wax, Caulacca, and great store of Diamonds. The thirteenth, about midnight we had an Earthquake, it continued not long, but for the time it was very fearefull.

The thirteenth of December, here arriued two Iunckes of the Flemmings from Ior, by whom we vnderstood, that there was a Fleete of Flemmings, beeing eleuen ships before Mallacca. The Commander whereof was Mattelefse the younger. The ships names were as followeth: The Orangia Admirall, Amsterdam Viceadmirall, Middleburgh, Mauritius, Erasmus, Great Sunne, Little Sonne, Nassau, Prouincies, White Lyon, Blacke Lyon.

The twentie two of May, they came to an anchor before Mallacca with nine ships: for their Admirall before their comming thither, had sent the Prouincies and the Erasmus for Achen.

The fifth of Iune, they landed their men, but a little before their landing, the Portugals set fire of one Carracke and foure Iuncks which were in the Road. In Iuly, the Prouincies and Erasmus came to the Fleet at Mallacca. The twenty fifth of August, the Viceroy with a Fleete of sixterne great ships, were discouered by the Little Sunne, which was appointed to keepe watch at an Iland called Cape Rochado, who immediately came and certified their Admirall, finding him very much vnroutted, his Ordnance and men beeing ashore. But by the Portugalls calling of a Council, they gaue the Flemmings twenty foure houres time, to get his men and furniture aboard, and to fit himselfe before he came to them. Thus being readie, the Flemmings weighed, and stood out

The Orangia hauing sprung a great leake, was faine to put into Ior, the King beeing friend and assistant, the Fleet following him, where he remained one moneth, and for Mallacca againe, where he met with sixe ships of the Portugals, of the which burnt three, and the Portugals themselves burnt three. From thence they departed for Nicubars, where they found the Vice-roy with seven ships, but they were haled so that they durst not deale with them.

The twentieth, he arrived here with sixe ships. The twenty ninth, he departed for Lucas.

The foureteenth of May, 1607. here arrived a Malua Iunke from Grese, by whom stood, that Julius a Flemming, and five more, which departed this Road the thirtieth ber, 1606. for Soocadanna, was put to death at Bemermassen, and all their goods taken of that place, the occasion (as it is reported) proceeded from the Flemming, who had foule speeches of the King, which he came to the hearing of, and thereupon sent for him and Master, and by the way gaue order to kill them.

The seuateenth of August, here arrived the Great Sunne from Choromandel, the ter Isaacson, by whom we vnderstood, that vpon the Island of Selon, they tooke a v of the Portugals, out of whom they had eightie Packs seuerall sorts of cloath, eight l of Sugar bound for Malacca. Item, that in the road of Masulipatan, where their Factor took a Portugal ship very richly laden with all sorts of Commodities fit for that Co greatly for their benefit, for that they were ignorant what Commodities were there: her lading was Cloues, Mace, Nut-megs, China Taffaties, Veluets and Dan brightest colours, but no white, China Porcelaine fine and course, but your great brims are the best. Item, the Flemming hath Factories in three seuerall places vpon but not farre the one from the other, viz. At Masulipatan, at Pettapoli, and Balligertan lieth in the latitude of seuateene degrees. It is a place of great plentie of v two Hennes for a Riall, two sheep for a Riall, an Oxe for a Riall. Item, in the m the wind at West, it is so extreame hot there, that you would thinke the wind w your breath, yet can you not by any meanes sweat till the Sunne be downe, and sweat very much: wherefore in this Moneth they goe not abroad in the day time night, for there haue been many smothered.

The seuenth, here arrived a small Pinnasse from an Island called S. Lucia, in twentie foure degrees and an halfe, about a mile from the Island of Madagascar, w forced in by a leake in the Carracke, which departed from hence the fourth of C they were forced to throw away three thousand sacks of Pepper, besides other C great value. They reported vnto vs, that it is a very good place to refresh in. Capitaine David Middleton arrived here in the Consent of L

The seuateenth, the Flemmish Admirall Mateleece arrived here from the C where he hoped to haue got ten Trade, but could not: he proffered them at Can thousand Rialls of eight for a gift onely, but they would not accept it; he was the ger of taking, by sixe Carracks which came out of Maccan of purpose for him: t cast off his Pinnasse, the which the Portugals tooke. He touched at Cambaya and bought nothing but victuals.

The seuateenth of December, 1607. here arrived the Gelderland from Holland betweene S. Laurence and the maine: their first place of refreshment was at Ma Islands of Gomora, where they set vp a fine Pinnasse. It is a good harbour, but ther to be had. From thence to Calicut, where in their way they tooke a small Boat with Rice and people of diuers Nations. The Towne of Calicut lieth by the S thought to be five English miles long. The Sambrin which is their King, came down he was very rich in apparell, hauing a Crowne of Gold ouer his Turbant, a naked hand, which is the manner there, he gaue the Flemmings good words, offering to Factory there: but they durst not trust him, the Portugal being so great with him.

The twenty seuenth, here arrived Admirall Paulus van Carle, with seven very one Portugall Frigat. They refreshed at Cape de Lope Gonsaluo, which lieth vpon Ginnie, where they found very good water and fish; they continued here sixe we wind at South-east by East. the Frigat we kept. The thirtie one, we mustred our men, finding nine hundred ninetie six, all well and in perfect health.

The first of Aprill, we landed seuen hundred men, and seuen peeces of Artillerie, viz. eight Demy-Cannons of Brasse, two Demy-Culuerings of Iron, and battered vpon the Castle, but to little purpose: wherefore we brought our trenches so neere the enemye, as we could heaue stones into them. And the same night we began to make our mine, but there fell so much raine, that we were constrained to giue it ouer. Here they heaued fire-pots downe from the walls vpon vs, which scalded our men very much, and perceiuing hereof, failed out vpon vs, to our great detriment. Thus hauing been here sixe weekes ashoare, our men beeing hurt and sicke, wee brought our Ordnance and men aboard, hauing lost in all fortie men, we set saile out of the Roade, the Ca-10 file shooting very hotly at vs, so that they sunke the sterne Mast of our Fleete, which was a very tall ship: and other of our ships had thirtie shot through their sailes and hull. The Gunner was an Englishman.

Fortie Flem.

From hence we went for Mayotto, which is one of the Ilands of Gomora, to refresh our men.
Here we bought sixe hundred twenty Oxen, thirty five Sheepe, and Goates, to the great comfort of vs. These people haue knowledge of Coyne, and would deale with vs for no Commodi-tie but Rialls. The King made a decree, that no man should sell vs any Cattell, vntill the Kings were sold, the which he would not sell vs vnder three Rialls of eight the piece; but his peoples cattell we bought for a Riall of eight the piece, but sheepe and Goats cheaper. Here we mustred 20 our men againe, hauing bin here six weekes, & found our selues nine hundred & forty strong: wherfore it was determined to goe againe for Mosambique, to assault the Castle once againe. But com-ming into the Roade, we found three Carracks riding there, which were newly come from Portugal, whereupon it was held best, not to goe in againe, but to ply off and on, to see if they would come forth; but they did not, wherefore we stood away alongst the shoare some thirtie leagues off the land for Goa: where at a Towne called Seperdowne, we landed all the Guzerats which wee had out of the ships at Mosambique. At this place is good refreshing and cheape, twentie hennes for a Riall, one hundred and fiftie Egges for a shilling, and as much fresh fish as would serue all the ships companie for a day, for a Riall of eight. It lieth in eighteene degrees to the North of the line, and is not far from Chaul: we rid in seuen fathomes clay ground. The people are Moores, and from Lisbone, her lading was most Rialls of eight, currant Spanish coine; all which we tooke out, and set her on fire. The Captaine we tooke with vs, his name was Ieronymus Telbalditto. At Goa

we remained a Moneth at anchor, hoping to haue met with the Carrackes which we had seene at Mosambique, but they came not: wherefore we set saile, and went for Calicut, purposing to haue spoken with the Sambarine, but by reason of tenne Gallies, which were come from Goa and lay there, we went not ashoare, fearing some Treason. We sent him a Present, which was two pieces of Iron Ordnance, and one piece of Brasse, we sent our Caske ashoare to fill with water, but we could find none that we durst drinke. From hence we shaped our course for Cape 40 Commerin to looke for water, but could get none: wherefore wee directed our course for the straights of Mallacca, but finding the winds and Current contrary, we came directly for Bantam, hauing been out of Holland twenty one Moneths and an halfe.

cepted

cepted very kindly, he told me he had sent for me, hearing that there were two men in chaines in our house for debt, and he would know by whose order I kept them. I told him by the order of the King we had taken them vp, and hoped that he would not take them from me before I were satisfied my debt, or some part, and that it was due by them, I shewed their Bills: hee said, hee thought they were indebted, but that the King gaue vs leaue to chaine them vp, he knew to the contrary, wherefore he would haue them loosed, but with much intreatie, I perswaded that he gaue me leaue to keep them til Tanyonge, which ought foure hundred twenty Rials & a half, should pay one hundred, and Buingoone which ought five hundred Rials, & one hundred sacks of Pepper, should pay twentie bagges of Pepper, and one hundred Rials in money, according as hee had before agreed and giuen me his Bill. Wherefore hee sent one of his slaues home with me to tell the Prisoners thereof, willing them to resolute and pay me.

The foure and twentieth, I was sent for to the Court, and the Flemmings: hee demanded of the Flemming whether it was their Countrey manner to take vp a man for debt without telling of the King, the Flemming said no, whereupon he willed me presently to let them out, cleane forgetting his promise three dayes before, the which I charged him with, but all would not preuaile; wherefore he sent one of the Kings slaues and tooke them out of the house. The which strict course I hold to be taken against vs, by the instigation of the Flemmings, wrought by Lackmoye, to the end we should not trust the Chineses: so that by this course they must needs come to him, & he being fitted with all sorts of Commodities from the Flemming, will wholly ouerthrow our Trade, in respect wee cannot trust but at hazard, for there is no Iustice to bee had.

The three and twentieth of Aprill, 1609. here arrived a small Pinnasse of the Flemmings from Soocadanna and Ternata: by whom wee vnderstood that Admirall Pauls Vankerle was taken at Ternata.

The one and twentieth of May, 1609. A Pinnasse of the Flemmings set saile for Bemermassin, vpon a league made betweene them. And with purpose to search euery Creeke and corner of the Iland. For they haue heard there is much Gold there and Bezars, the which is to bee traded for with Beads and other Haberdasher-ware.

The fixe and twentieth of August, 1609. arrived Captaine William Keeling from Banda, hauing laden there twelue thousand foure hundred eighty foure Cattees one halfe quarter of Mace, fiftie nine thousand, eight hundred fortie fixe Cattees of Nutmegs, which stood them in nine, ten and eleuen Rials the Bahar, the Cattee there weighing thirteene and an halfe of our English Ounces. The smal Bahar Mace is ten Cattees, or one hundred Cattees of Nutmegs: & the great Bahar is one hundred Cattees of Mace, or one thousand Cattees of Nutmegs: so that if a man be indebted vnto you ten Cattees of Mace, and will giue you one hundred Cattees of Nutmegs you cannot refuse it.

The fourth of October, 1609. Captaine Keeling set saile from Bantam, hauing taken in the rest of his lading, which was foure thousand nine hundred bagges, three Cattees of Pepper, in the which ship called the Hector. I came for England hauing beene in the Countrey foure yeares, nine monethes, eleuen dayes.

Certaine Rules for the choise of sundry Drugges, as also from whence they may be had, as followeth.

Lignum Aloes, is a wood so called by vs, but of the Mallayens, it is called Garroo. The best commeth from Mallacka, Syam, and Cambaya. The best is that which is in large round stickes and very massie, of blacke colour intermixed with Ashe-coloured veines. In taste some-what bitter and odoriferous, and being burnt, it becommeth like vnto Pitch in bubbles. If a splinter thereof be laid vpon a fire-coale, for if it be good, it will not leaue frying till it bee quite consumed, casting forth a most delectable Odour.

Benjamin, is a Gumme called by the Mallayens Minnian. The best sort commeth from Syam, which is very pure, cleere and white, with little streakes of Amber colour. The other sort which is not altogether so white, but is also very good, commeth from Sumatra. And a third sort which commeth from Priaman and Barrowse, is very course like Horse-bread, not vendible in England, but well esteemed in Bantam.

Ciuet, the best is that which is of a deepe yellow colour some-what inclining to the colour of Gold, not whitish, for that is vsually sophisticated with Grease, yet if it bee newly taken, it is naturally whitish, and will in continuance of time become of a yellowish colour.

Muske, there are three sorts, blacke, browne and yellow, of which the first is naught, the second is good, the last best: which ought to be of colour like the best Spicknard, that is, of a deep Amber colour, inclosed with one onely skinne, and not one ouer another, as it is oftentimes to be seene, not ouer-moist which maketh it waightie, but in a meane, hauing some haire like bristles, but not ouer-many, cleere of stones, leade, or other trash intermixed, and of so strong and fragrant a smell, that to many it is offensiue, and being tasted in the mouth, it pierceth the very braine with the scent, and ought not ouer-soone to dissolue in the mouth, nor yet to re-

Bezar, there are heere of two kinds, the one brought from the West, the East-Indies, whereof the East-India Bezar is worth double the price of the other, both are diuers, some round, others long like Date-stones, others like Pidgeon like the Kidneyes of a young Goate, and others in forme of a Chef-nut, but all are blunt at the ends, not picked, and no lesse varietie is also to be seene in the co are of light redde, others of colour like Honey, many of a darke Ash-col of the Ciuet-Cat, but for the most part of a waterish-greene. The East consist of many peelings and scales, as it were artificially compacted together, i skinnies and peeles of an Onion, each inclosing other, bright and splendent, as i lished by Art, the one peeling being broke off, the next is more splendent or bri former, these peelings are some thicke, some thinne, according to the largenesse o the larger the stone is, the better for sale. This is a certaine way to make tryall the direct waight of the stone, then put him into water, and let it stand for the heures, then see if he be not crackt, wipe it dry, and weigh it againe, if it weigh a matter more then he did at the first, then build vpon it, it is not good. Thus h selfe many times in Bantam, and haue had diuers turne to Chalke with a little st dle, which hath weighed a Taile Iaua, which is two Ounces. The most Cou from Socodanna, which is vpon Borneo. These names in the Margent, are t whence they may be had.

Amber, there is hereof, if you regard the colour, many sorts, as blacke, whi gray, of all which the blacke is vually the basest, and the gray the best, of whic best clenfed from filth or drosse, pure of it selfe, of colour inclining to a white, colour intermixed with veines, some Ash-colour, other whitish, being put into ter, it ought to floate aloft. The which, although some which is sophisticated m is certaine, that none which is pure will sinke in the water. The greatest qua from Mosambique and Sofala.

To this place is great Trade in Iunkes and Prawes, for it yeeldeth great store of Diamonds, the which are accounted the best in the world. There is store to be had at all times, but specially in the moneths of January, Aprill, Iuly and October, but the greatest quantitie in January and Aprill, at which times they are brought downe the Riuer called Laué by Prawes. The manner of getting of them, is as you diue for Pearle. The reason why more quantitie is gotten in one Moneth then in an other is, for that in Iuly and October, there falleth so much raine, that it riseth nine fathomes, which causeth such a streame that they can hardly diue, and in the other moneths there is but foure, or foure fathomes and an halfe, which is held the best depth for their diuing.

§. I.

The Kings care, unreadinesse of ours, Iaponian Superstitions, strange tempest.

He seuenth of August, all things being in a readinesse, our Generall in company of Master Adams, departed from Firando towards the Emperours Court of Iapan, and tooke with him Master Tempest, Peacocke, Master Richard Wickham, Edward Saris, Walter Carwarden, Diego Fernandos, John Williams a Taylor, John Head a Cooke, Edward Barton the Chirurgions Mate, John Iapan Iurebasso, Richard Dale, Cox Swaine, and Anthony Ferre a Sayler, with a Caualeere of the

The old King sent 100. Tais in Iapan money for our Generall to spend on the way, which I put to account by our Generals order as money lent.

<sup>40</sup> Kings for Guardian and two of his Seruants, and two Seruants of M. Adams. And so they departed in a Barke or Barge of the Kings, which rowed with some twentie Oares on a side, and had thirteene Peeeces of Ordnance shot off at departure.

I went to complement with the two Kings, (as being sent from the Generall) to giue them thanks for providing so well for him for his Iourney; they tooke it kindly. And I verily thinke the old King tooke notice of some of our mens euill behauiour this last night. For he willed me to put the Master in minde to looke well to them aboard, and that I should haue a care on shoare, that matters might be as well managed in the Generals absence, as when hee was heere present, otherwise, the shame would bee ours, but the dishonour his. Wind a stiffe gale at North-east, most part of the day but calme all night.

<sup>50</sup> The ninth, a Iapan Boy called Iuan, came and offered me his seruice, hee speaking good Spanish, asking me nothing but what I pleased, and so to serue nine or ten yeares, and to goe with me for England, if I pleased. I entertayned him, the rather, because I did find the Iuribasso Murgell, which Master Adams left with me to bee something stubborne, and loued to runne abroad at his pleasure, leauing mee without any one that could speake a word. I bought him two Iapan Garments cost me foureene Mas, hee is a Christian and most of his Kinred dwell at Langa-saque: only one dwelleth heere, who came with him and passed his word for him. Hee serued a Spaniard three yeares at Mánillas.

<sup>60</sup> The thirteenth, I shewed our commodities to certaine Merchants of Maioco, but they bought nothing, only their chiefe desire was to haue had Gun-powder. Semidone went aboard the ship to accompany certaine strange Caualeeroes, and afterward hee brought them to see the English House. I gaue them the best entertaynement I could.

The nineteenth at night, began the great Feast of the Pagans, they inuiting their dead kindred, banquetting and making merry all night with candle-light at their graues: this Feast endured three dayes, and as many nights. And very strict command was giuen from the King, that euery every house should grauell the street before their doores, and hang out candle-light in the night: in doing whereof I was not slacke; and as I was informed, a poore man was put to death, and his house shut vp, for disobeying therein. The China Captaine furnished me with a couple of paper Lanternes very decent. And I was informed the Kings would ride about the streets, and come to visite me: so I made readie a banquet, and expected them vntill after midnight, but they came not at all.

Pagan Feast at Firando, being a kind of Candemas, Aljowles.

On the twentieth, one and twentieth, and two and twentieth, I sent presents to both the Kings (being informed that it was the vse of the Countrey) of Wine and banquetting stuffe; as likewise to Nabesane the yong Kings brother, and to Semydone, the old Kings Gouvernour, and Unagense, which were well accepted. Some Caualers came to visite our house, and receiued the best entertainment I could giue. 10

some.

On the three and twentieth, we made an end of landing our Gun-powder, being in all ninety nine barrells, of which I aduised the Generall by letter, to reserue conuenient store for our selues, if he sold the Emperour the rest. We landed diuers other things, which things the Master thought good to send ashore, because our men begin to filch and steale, to go to Tauernes and Whore-houses. The Purser, Master Melsham and my selfe, dined at Semydone this day: and the Master and Master Eaton were likewise inuited, but did not goe: he vsed vs kindly.

End of the great Feast.

This day the great Feast made an end, and three companies of Dancers went vp and downe the Towne with flags or banners, their musicke being Drummes and Pans; at the sound whereof they danced at euery great mans doore, as also at all their Pagods and Sepulchres. 20

Masking and dancing.

The foure and twentieth at night, all the streets were hanged with candle-light, for that the yong King and his brother, with Nabesane, Semydone, and many others went with a Maskarado, or to dance at the old Kings house: the yong King and his brother were mounted on horse-back, and had Canopies caried ouer them; the rest went on foote, and the musicke was Drummes and Kettles, as aforesaid; and Nabesane winded a Phife: I was informed they meant to visite the English House at their backe returne: so I sate vp vntill after midnight, hauing a banquet in readinesse, and in the end they returned confusedly, and out of order; so I thinke there was some discontent, once none of them entred into the English house: Captaine Brower went along by the doore, but would not looke at vs, and we made as little account of him.

The seuen and twentieth, we landed other three peeces of Ordnance, viz. all whole Culuerin, all which fixe peeces are Iron Ordnance. The old King came downe when they were about it, and seeing but twentie men, offered them seuentie or an hundred Japans to helpe them; but very quickly, in his sight, our men got them ashore, which he marvelled at, and said an hundred of his men would not haue done it so soone; so hee sent for a barrell of wine, and certaine fish, and gaue it to our people for labouring so lustily. 30

The eight and twentieth, I receiued two letters from our Generall, by the Gouvernour of Shimonoseke, dated the nineteenth and twentieth of this moneth, with two other from Master Peacock, and Master Wickham: this Gouvernour came not ashore at Ferando, but deliuered the Letters aboard to the Master, and so went directly for Langasque, and promising to returne hither shortly. A' so I carried a letter to the old King Foyne, which the said partie brought: Master Melsham and Harnando accompanied me: the King gaue a Cattan to Master Melsham, and another with a Spanish Dagger to Harnando, and gaue both me and them certaine bunches of Garlick, and gaue vs leaue to drie our Gun-powder on the toppe of the Fortresse; offering vs of his people to helpe ours, if they thought good. And I receiued aland into the English House two and twentie barres of lead, and put into our new lodge and hundred an' twentie fiue Culuerin shot, round, and langrell. And as wee were going to Supper, the old King came and supped with vs, being very merry, and tooke such fare as we had, in good part. 40

Septemb. 1.
A Mask.

The first of September, the old King, with all the Nobilitie, made a Maskerado; and this night following went to visite the yong King his Grand-child, with musicke as aforesaid, all the streets being hanged with Lanternes; and I was informed he meant to visite our English House at returne: so I made readie for him, and stayed his returne till after midnight, but he passed by with the rest of the company, and entred not into the House. I thinke there was not so few as three thousand persons in company with him, which I make account was the occasion he went by, because he would not trouble vs. 50

Taxe for Forts

The second, Semydon and others, being appointed by the King, measured all the houses in the street; our English house being measured amongst the rest: I vnderstand it was for a generall taske to bee paid for making Fortresses by the Emperours appointment. I entertained them to content.

The fourth, we had newes the Queene of Spaine was dead, and the King a Suter to the Princes Elizabeth of England. 60

The sixt, a Cauallero, called Nombosque, came to visite our English House, and brought mee a present of two great bottells of wine, and a basket of Peares. I gaue him the best entertainment I could, and he departed content.

The seuenth in the morning, much raine, with wind encreasing all day and night variable, from the

the East to the South, and in the night happened such a storme or Tuffon, that I neuer saw the like in all my life: neither was the like seene in this Countrey in mans memory, for it ouerthrew about an hundred houses in Firando, and vncovered many other; namely, the old Kings house, and blew downe a long wall which compassed the young Kings house, and carryed away boughes or branches of trees: & the Sea went so high, that it vndermined a great Wharte or Key at the Dutch House, and brake downe the stone-wall, and carryed away their Staires, and sunke and brake them two Barks, as also fortie or fiftie other Barks were broken and sunke in the Roade. It brake downe our Kitchen wall at the English House, which was newly made, and flowed into our Ouen, and brake it downe, and blew downe the tyles, and vncovered part both of the house and kitchen, and the house did shake, like as if there had beene an Earthquake; I neuer passed night in all my life in such feare, for the barbarous vnuly people did runne vp and downe the streets all night with fire-brands, that the wind carried great coales quite ouer the tops of houses, and some houses being carryed away, the wind whirled vp the fire which was in them, and carried it into the ayre in great flakes, very fearefull to behold; so that the greatest feare I had was that all would haue been consumed with fire: and I verily thinke it had, had it not been for the extreame raine which fell (contrary to the true nature of a Tuffon) being accompanied with lightning and thunder. Our shippe roade at an anchor with fve Cables, and as many Anchors, whereof one old Cable burst, but God be thanked no other hurt done: our long Boat and Skiffe were both driuen from the shippe, yet both recouered againe: And as it is said, it did more hurt at Langasque then heere, for it brake aboute twentie China Iunckes, and the Spanish ship which brought the Embassadour from the Manilleas or Philippinas.

A mighty Tuffon or Tempest, with the strange effects thereof.

Polish superstitions.

Merchants of Miaco.

Of many misdemeanours, I permit some to passe the Presse that the cause of so many deaths in the Indies, might be found rather to be imputed to their owne then the Elements distemper, and for a caueat to others which shall send, or be sent into Ethiopicke Regions; yet doe I conceale the most and worst.

Vnrulinesse of some Mariners

September, 17. 1613.

Bastian the Bawd angry that his guests were disturbed. The Kings Mistrice.

The twelfth, two Merchants of Miaco came to our English house, vnto whom I shewed all our Commodities; they laid by two broad-cloths, viz. a Stammel and a Blacke, the best they could find, and offered seuen Tais Japan money the yard: also they saw our Priaman Gold, and offered eleuen Tais Japan plate, for one Tais Gold: but went away without doing any thing. Francis Williams beeing drunke ashore, did strike one of the old Kings men with a cudgell, which gaue him no occasion at all; nor spake a word to him. The man came to the English house and complained, being very angry (and not without cause) giuing me to vnderstand, that he would informe the King his Master, how he was misused by our people. He had three or foure in Company with him, who did see him abused, and that he which did it, was newly gone aboard the ship. I gaue them faire words, and desired them to goe aboard, and find out the partie, and they should see him punished to their contents; and to that effect, sent Miguell our Iurebasso along with them: so they found out the said Williams, who would haue denied it, if the matter had not been too manifest; but he stood stiffely against it with oathes; yet the Master caused him to be brought to the Captaine in their presence, which they seeing, intreated for his pardon, knowing he was drunke, but he was so vnuly, that he tooke vp a crow of Iron to haue stricken the fellow in presence of the Master, vsing the Master in very bad termes.

The thirteenth, I vnderstood, that Foyne the old King of Firando was sicke, whereupon I sent Miguel our Iurebasso to visit him, and to carry a Present of one great bottle of the Generals sweet wine, and two boxes of Conserues, Comfits, and Sugar-bread, offering him my Seruice, beeing very sory to heare of his sicknesse, and that I would haue come my selfe, but that I knew company was not pleasing to sicke men. He tooke my Present in very good part, and returned me many thanks; wishing me not to let to aske for any thing we had need of, either for the ship, or ashore, and he would giue such order, as we should be furnished.

The foureteenth in the morning betimes, the Master came ashore, and told me that most part of the ships company had lien ashore all night without asking him leaue, notwithstanding the great wind which had continued all night, and the ship on ground. So he willed me to let Miguell our Iurebasso goe along with him to seeke them out, which I was content he should doe, and would haue accompanied him my selfe, but he was vnwilling, telling me it was needlesse. But M. Melsham the Purser went along with him, and he found diuers drinking and doimeering; he bestowed blowes amongst some of them, and notwithstanding the Master had commanded Lambart and Colphax to retire aboard, yet they staid ashore all day, notwithstanding the great need was aboard about ships businesse, diuers Japans being hired to helpe them: and Lambart and Colphax being drunke, went into the field and fought, Lambart being hurt in the arme, and remained drunken ashore all night, as Boles did the like, and so had done two or three nights before, and quarrelled with Christopher Euans, about a whoore.

The seuteenth of September, I was giuen to vnderstand the Bastian which keepeth the whoore-house gaue it out, that if I came any more into his house to seeke for our people, he would kill me, and such as came with me. Whereupon I went and complained to the young King, because the old was sicke: and at my request, the King made Proclamation, that no Japane should receiue any of our people into their houses after day light was done, vpon great paine, and that it should be lawfull for me, or any other that accompanied me to goe into any Japans house to seek for our men, without any molestation; and that they themselues should aide and assist me: and if the doore were not opened at my comming, I might lawfully breake them downe: and a fount diour was sent to Bastian to signifie vnto him, he should take heed he did not molest or disturbe me in my proceedings: for if he did, he should be the first that should pay for it. This angered our people in such sort, that some of them gaue it out, they would drinke in the fields, if they might not bee suffered to doe it in the Towne; for drinke they would, although they sought it in the country.

The Kings care of good Go-
uernment.

The sixe and twentieth, Nouasca dona came to visit me at the English house, and brought me two bottles of wine, seuen loaves fresh bread, and a dish of flying fish, and as he was with me, the old King came by the doore, and said, he met two men in the street as he came along, which hee thought were strangers, and none of our people, wherefore he willed that Swanton and our Inre- 10
basso might goe along with one of his men, and he would shew them to them, which they did, and found it was Iohn Lambart and Iacob Charke, who were drinking water at a doore in the streete as he passed by. I was glad the King looked so neare after them; for it caused our men to haue a better care of their proceedings.

Death and buriall of W. Pau-
ling.

The seuen and twentieth, M. William Pauling Masters mate, hauing been long sicke of a consumption, died at the English house, whereof I aduertised the old King by Miguel our Inre- basso, desiring a buriall place for him among the Christians, which he graunted me. So we put the dead corps into a winding sheete, and cossind it vp, letting it rest till morning. Then the Master, and diuers others of the ships company, came to the English house, to accompanie the dead corps to the graue, and then were we giuen to vnderstand, that of force we must transport it by water, as 20

tion, and no

farre as the Dutch house, onely because the Bose (or Priests) would not suffer vs to passe through the street (with the dead corps) before their Pagod or Temple: so the Master sent for the Skiffe, and conueied the dead body by water to the place aforesaid, we going all by land, and met it, and so accompanied it to the place of buriall, the Purser going before, and all the rest following after, the coffin being couered with a Holland sheet, and vpon that a Silke quilt, we being followed with many of that countrey people, both young and old. And after the corps was entered, we returned all to the English house, and there made collation, and so our people returned aboard about ships businesse. But I had almost forgot to note downe, that we had much adoe to get any one of these countrey people to make the graue, that a Christian was to be buried in; neither would they suffer the dead corps to be conueied by water in any of their boates. The King commaun- 30 ded that all the streetes in Firando should be made cleane, and channell rowes made on either side, to conuey away the water, the streetes being grauelled, and the channels couered ouer with flat stones; which worke was all done in one day, euery one doing it before his owne house. It was admirable to see the diligence euery one vsed therein: our house was not the last a doing, the Cap- taine Chinesa (our Land-lord) setting men a worke to doe it.

ence.

The thirtieth, certaine Merchants of Miac came and had sight of all our commodities, and laid out the best Stammell cloth we had, and offered twelue Tais a fat home for it, and so departed without doing any thing. We had extream winds both day & night, so that we thought another Tufon had beene come; for all the fishermen haled their boates on shoare, and euery one bound fast the couering of their houses: for a Bose (or Coniurer) had told the King (a weeke since) that this tempest would come. Our Chirurgeon being in his pots, came into a house where a Bose was 40
coniuring for a woman, to know of her husbands or friends returne from Sea: so when he had done he gaue him three pence to coniure againe, and tell him when our General would returne for this place, which in the ende he assured him would be within eightene dayes; hee said, hee heard a voice answer him from behind a wall, both when he coniured for the woman, as also when hee coniured for himselfe.

The second of October, the Master sent me word that some of our ships company were runne away with the Skiffe, viz. Iohn Bowles, Iohn Sares, Iohn Tottie, Christopher Euans, Clement Locke, Iasper Malconty, and Iames the Dutchman. I was in way to goe to the King to get boats to send after them, but our Dutch Inre-
basso, (entertained for ships vse) came running after mee, and told me our people were on the other side, making merry at a Tap-house: which speeches caused me to returne to the English house, and to get a boat for the Master to goe looke them out: but they prooued to be others; namely, William Marmell, Simon Colphax, and Iohn Dench, who had hired a Boat, and were gone ouer to an other Iland, because they could not haue swinge to walke by night in Firando. So in the meane time, our Run-aways had the more time to runne away. 50

This night about eleuen a clock, the old Kings house on the other side the water was set on fire, and quite burned downe in the space of an houre. I neuer saw a more vehement fire for the time, it is thought his losse is great; and as it is said, he himselfe set it on fire, in going vp and down in the night with lighted canes, the coales whereof fell amongst the mats, and so tooke fire.

The Kings
house burned.

The third, I went to visit the old King, giuing him to vnderstand by his Gouvernour, that I was very sorry for the mischance happened the night past, and that I pretended to haue come my selfe in person to haue holpen the best I could, but that I stood in doubt whether my companie would haue been acceptable, I being a stranger, yet assuring him that he should find me readie at all times, to doe him the best seruice I could, although it were with hazard of my life: he returned me many thanks; saying, the losse he had sustained was nothing. And in returning to the English 60 house, house, I met the young King going to visit his Grandfather. And before noone wee had word, that our Run-awayes were at a desert Iland, some two leagues from Firando, which I made knowne to both the Kings, desiring their assistance and counsel, how we might fetch them backe againe; they answered, that backe they would fetch them either aliue or dead: yet they would be loth to kill them, in respect we might want men to carry our ship backe for England. I gaue them thanks for the care they had of vs; yet withall gaue them to vnderstand, that although these knaues miscarried, yet we had honest men enough to saile the ship for England. In fine, the King made ready two boats full of souldiours to goe after them, with full determination to bring them backe either aliue or dead, which I made knowne to the Master, who desired verie much to goe along with them.

§. II.

*Lies of or on the Deuill, and vproares about fire. Deceit of Nangasack.
Suspitions, Feasts, Spanish Occurrents.*

THe fourth of October, there was report giuen out, that the deuill had answered by their Oracle to their Bose or Coniurers, that the Towne of Firando should bee burned to ashes this night, so that cryers went vp and downe the streets all night, making such a noyse, that I tooke but little rest; they gaue warning that euery one should put out their fire, yet God be thanked, the Deuill was prooued a lyer therein: for no such matter happened.

Deuill a liar, or belied,

The fifth, the old King Foyne Same came to the English house, where I gaue him the best entertainment I could: he also told me, that our Fugitiues could not escape taking, and that hee had sent out two other men of warre after the two former. And as I was talking with him about these matters, there came a Caelero, and brought him a Letter from the Emperours Court, and said, that our Generall would be here at Firando within eight or tenne dayes; for that the Emperour had dispatcht him away before his comming from thence.

The King told me, that the Gouvernour (or King) of Langasague, called Bon Din, would bee here at Firando to morrow, telling me it were good our ship shot off three or foure Peeces of Ordnance as he passed by. This Gouvernour is the Empresses brother. And there is an other Japan Gouvernour, or King, in Towne, of a place called Seam.

The seuenth, our Master, M. James Foster returned from Langasague, and had brought the Skiffe with him, but all the men were gotten into Sanctuarie in the Towne, so that he could not come to speech of any one of them. I was informed, that Miguell our Iurebasso dealt doubly both with the Master and my selfe: for I lent him along to be linguist, and assist the Master, and diuers Japans came to me, telling me, that he both spake with our people, and gaue them counsell to absent themselves. Once I did perceiue how the world went, and doubted the priuy conueyance of our people, which was like to ensue, if this Bon Din the Gouvernour were not extraordinarily dealt withall: whereupon a Present was laid out.

Afternoone, the Bon Din passed along the street before our English house on foot, hee being accompanied with the young King (who gaue him the vpper hand) with aboue five hundred followers after them. I went out into the street, and did my dutie to them, and the Bon Din stood still when he came to the doore, and gaue me thanks for the Ordnance were shot off at his passing by our ship. I desired pardon of his Greatnesse, if I had neglected my dutie hitherto, which was by meanes of the small acquaintance I had in the Countrey, but that I meant to visit him at his lodging, or aboard his Iuncke, before he went; he answered me, I should be very welcome. So it was darke night before he came to his lodging. At which time I carried the Present abovesaid, which hee accepted of in very good sort, offering to doe our Nation any good he could at the Court, whither he was now bound, or else where. And so of his owne accord, hee beganne to speake of our Fugitiues, asking me if he brought them backe againe, whether they should be pardoned all for his sake for this fault? I answered him, it was not in my power to pardon them, but in our General, which no doubt (except it were one or two, which were the chiefe authors of this and other evils which deserved punishment) that the rest might easily goe free. He said, that his desire was for pardon for all in generall, without exception. I answered, that I knew our Generall would be contented with any thing, his Greatnesse and the two Kings of Firando would desire. To conclude, he told me, that if I would giue it vnder writing of my owne hand, in faith of a Christian, that all in generall should be pardoned for this time, and that I would procure the Generall to confirme the same at his returne, that then he would send to Langasague for them, and deliuer them into my owne custody: otherwaies he would not meddle in the matter, to be the occasion of the death of any man. I said I was contented with any thing it pleased his Greatnes to command, and so to giue the said writing vnder my hand, provided all our men might be brought backe. And so I returned to the English house, the Dutch comming after with an other Present, but we were before them.

The eight, Semidone passing by our doore, told mee that Bon Din had a Brother in companie, which expected a present, although it was not fitting it should be so much, as his Brothers. So vpon aduice with others I laid by a present for him, as followeth; & going to deliuer it, the Flemmings were before me with another, Captaine Brower himselfe being with it. Hee accepted very kindly of the present, offering his assistance to our Nation, either at Court, or in the Countrey. And soone after he came to the English House himselfe, accompanied with many Caualeeres, where they looked on all our Commodities, yet hee went away and bought nothing, but gaue mee a small Cattan, and I gaue him two Glasse Bottles, two Gally-pots, and about halfe a Cattee of great Cloues, picked out from the rest of purpose, hee being desirous to haue them for Physicall matters, as he told me. I made him and his followers a collation, and so they departed content. And soone after Bon Din, & the two Kings sent a Caualeero to me, to haue me to giue it in writing vnder my hand, that our Run-awayes should not receiue any punishment for this fact, so by counsell of others I condescended thereunto, and made a Writing in promise and faith of a Christian, they procure their pardon for this time of the Generall; if I had not done this, out of doubt, we should neuer haue got them againe, but the Spaniard would haue conuayed them to the Manillies or Maluccoes, I not doubting but the Generall will allow of what I haue done. And presently after this man was gone I had word, that the Bon Din, and his Brother would goe aboard to visit our ship, so I sent some banketting stuffe aboard, and went my selfe and met them, where they were entertayned in the best sort we could, and Bon Din gaue mee two Cattans for a present, and so they departed with seuen Peeces of Ordnance shot off for a fare-well. But forth-with his Brother returned aboard againe, desiring to haue one of the little Monkeyes for his Brothers children: so I bought one of the Master Gunner, cost me fīue Rials of eight, and sent him to Bon Din, and being readie to goe ashore, he was desirous to haue me goe along with him in his Boate, which I did, he hauing three Peeces of Ordnance for a fare-well, which as I vnderstood afterwards, was much esteemed of both Brothers, and being ashore hee would needs accompany me home to our English House, which I was vnwilling of, yet hee would of force doe it. So I made him collation againe in Captaine Adams chamber: and so hee and the rest departed well contented, (as it seemed) I offering to haue accompanied him backe to his lodging, but he would not suffer mee. And late at night Foyne Same the olde King sent a man to me to know the particular of the presents giuen to both the Brothers, and put it downe in writing, but for what occasion I know not. And I forgot to note downe how Bon Din went to the Dutch House to wash himselfe in the new Hot-house, and from thence it was that hee came aboard our ship.

The ninth, Bon Din sent one of his men to me to giue mee thanks for his kind entertaynment aboard, and by the same Messenger sent mee two Barrels of Miaco Wine for a Present. And soone after his Brother sent another man with two Barrels of Iapan Wine, with the like ceremonie: both of them being very earnest to haue a Prospective Glasse, and in the end I found an old one of Master Eatons, but soone after he returned me the said Glasse with thanks, not desiring at all to haue it.

The tenth, two of the Gouernours sonnes of Langasque (I meane another Gouernour which dwelleth in the Towne) came to see our English House, they are Christians. I entertayned them in the best sort I could, and shewed them our commodities, and after made them collation and gaue them Musicke, Master Hownsell and the Carpenter by chance being heere: and as wee were at it, old Foyne the King came stealing in vpon vs, and did as the rest did, and seeing the King and these Langasquians together, I willed our Iurebasso, to put out a word for the speedie sending backe of our Run-awayes: which they all promised, provided, that they should be pardoned for this fault, as I had formerly promised, which now againe I acknowledged. The old King desired to haue a piece of English Beeffe, and another of Porke, sod with Onions and Turnips, and sent to him to morrow.

The eleventh, I sent Migell our Iurebasso to the old King, with the Beeffe and Porke accommodated as afore-said, with a bottle of Wine, and sixe Loaves of white Bread: he accepted of it in very kind part, hauing in his company at eating thereof, the young King his Grand-childe, and Nabifone, his Brother, with Semidone his Kinsman.

A great Feast
among the Pagans began this day, it being told me it was like a Lent, or Pasques of the Papists.

The twelfth, I went to visit both the Kings, and found old Foyne asleepe, but spake with his Gouernour, and from thence went to the young King, and spake with him himselfe: they gaue me thanks for the kind entertaynment I gaue vnto these strangers; which they tooke as done vnto themselves. And towards night the old King sent to visit me, and to tell me he vnderstood these people which are departed, had taken away certaine commodities from me, and payd mee what they themselves thought good, and not that which I required, I returned him answer, that it was true that they had done so, but I know not whether it were the custome of this Countrey or no; for that I was giuen to vnderstand they vsed the like course both with Chineses and Portugalls at Langasque, and that that which they had taken from mee, was not worth the speaking of. I was answered, that although they did so with the Chineses at Langasque, which were a people defended not to trade into Iapan, yet could they not doe so to Strangers that that had free priuiledge to trade, especially heere in this place where these fellowes had no command nor nothing to doe. I replyed, I would come and speake with his Highnesse my selfe, and informe him of the truth : and in the meane-time returned humble thanks, for the care hee had to vse Iustice to Strangers as well as home-borne. Captaine Brower sent me word that they had taken diuers sorts of commodities from him, and paid him what they list for it : he also sent an emptie Bottle, desiring to haue it filled with Spanish Wine, for that hee had intited certaine Strangers, and had none.

Bon Diu Brother injurious to the English and Dutch.

The thirteenth, I heard three or foure Gunnes, or Chambers goe off, which I thought had bin done to entertayne the King at the Dutch House : but they were shot out of a China Iuncke, which passed by this place, and so went for Langasque, and presently after the old King sent for me to come to dinner to the Dutch House, and Master Eaton with mee, and to bring a Bottle of Wine. Master Eaton had taken Phylicke and could not goe, but I went : wee had a very good Dinner at the Dutch House, the meate being well drest both after the Iapan and Dutch fashion, and serued vpon Tables, but no great drinking. The olde King sate at one Table, accompanied with his eldest Sonne, and both the young Kings Brothers (for the young King himselfe was not there, sending word he was not well) at the other Table. First, sate Nabesone the old Kings Brother, and then my selfe, and next me Semidone, and then the old Kings Gouernour, and next him Zanzbars Father-in-law, and diuers other Caualeeroes on the other side. Captaine Brower did not sit at all, but carued at Table, all his owne people attending and seruing on their knees, and in the end, he gaue drinke to euery one of his ghests, with his owne hands, and vpon his knees, which seemed strange to me, and when they had dined, all the Nobles went away, and Captaine Brower would needs accompany me to the English House. I asked him why he serued these people vpon his knees, they sitting at Table : he answered me it was the fashion of the Country, and if the King himselfe made a Feast, hee did the like for the more honour of his ghests. And before night the old King Foyne came to the English House, and visited all parts, and made collation, staying an houre talking of one thing and other.

A China Iuncke for Langasque.

Dinner with the Dutch.

The sixteenth, I was giuen to vnderstand that two Christians were come from Langasque, so I went to their lodging to see what they were, as also to vnderstand some newes from our men (or Fugitiues) I found the one of them to bee a * Flemming borne in Flushing, (as hee told mee) and the other an Italian borne in the * Duchie of Venice. They told mee that our seuen men (or Runawayes) were conueighed away secretly in a small Barke, which is gone for Macow, and that they were runne to get passage in our ship to returne into their Countries, they told me Master Adams knew them well. And they were very desirous to haue gone immediately aboard our ship, there to haue remayned, because they were Sea-faring men. The Flemming hauing serued the Spaniard three and twentie or foure and twentie yeares, and came a Masters Mate from Agua pulca for the Manillas or Philippinas, they had good store of money, and would haue sent it aboard our ship, or haue brought it to the English House : but I told them that in our Generals absence I durst not presume to giue them entertainment. Yet notwithstanding, I would doe them any fauour I could at his returne, and so sent Migell our Iurebasso to the King to let him vnderstand, that two such Strangers were come to Towne to seeke passage in our shippe, they being no Spaniards, nor yet Subjects to the King of Spaine. The King returned mee answere, that if they were such as I said they were, they were welcome: but if they were Castillians, or Portugalls, hee would permit none to stay in this place, his reason is, for that the Spanish Ambassador hath procured order from the Emperour of Iapan, that all Spaniards which are to be found in his Empire, shall retyre themselves into the Philippinas, but these being no Spaniards, are out of that number.

* George Peter son a Flush.
* Daman Mayn a Venetian.

The seuenteenth betimes, the two strangers came to mee, desiring me to accompany them to the old King, the better to countenance them ; which vpon good consideration I did. They told me in the way, that our Fugitiues had reported at Langasque that more would come after them, and not any man of account stay to carry away the ship; the occasion they said was, for that they which had command ouer them, vsed them more like dogges then men : adding further, that if but twentie resolute Spaniards would take the matter in hand, with a small Boat or two they might easily take our shippe. The old King gaue vs all kind entertainment, and asked the strangers many questions about the warres betwixt the Spaniards and Flemmings in the Moluccas; the which they said the Spaniards were determined to pursue very hotly, and to that effect had great forces prepared. They also told the King, they thought verily all our Fugitiues were secretly conueyed from Langasque seuen daies past in a Soma, that departed from thence for Macow: but the King would not beleue them, saying, it was not possible that such a man as Bon Diu, hauing passed his word to bring them backe, should be found to be false of his promise. In fine, he was very well contented, that these two strangers should stay heere, and goe along in our ship, if it pleased the Generall to carry them. So the poore men returned to their lodgings with much content : and told me in the way, that we might make account we had not lost all our men, but recovered two, that would remaine as faithfull to the death, as the others had proued false. Adding further, that we needed not to wish any worse reuenge to our Fugitiues, then the bad entertainment they were sure to haue of the Spaniards, comming bare and beggerly as they did, in such base sort.

Macow a Town of Portugalls neere the Continent of China.
Migell the Iurebasso, Capt. Adams his man was suspected of double dealing in this case of the Fugitiues : the circumstances, I omit.

Porke, which I sent him, and presently followed after my selfe to visite him, and carried him a small bottle of Spanish wine, and while I was there, Semedone and our Guardians father in law came likewise to visite him.

The King sent me word by Mignour Iurebasso, that he had a bad opinion of Hernando Ximenes our Spaniard, and that he went about to haue runne away when he was last at Langasague: but that I know is not so, for he had free libertie to goe when he would, without running away. Another complaint was also made of him, that he was a common Gamster, and had brought on diuers to play, and got their money: which report I doe rather beleue then the other; and I find by experience, these people are no friend, neither of Spaniard nor Portugall, and loue them of Langasague: the worse, because they loue them so wel. And I had almost forgotten to note downe, that the night past ill disposed people had thought to haue fired the Towne in three places, and in one place set a house on fire, but it was soone put out, and no hurt done; but the partie that did it was not found: out of doubt it is nothing but a villanie of these Coniurers and other base people, which are giuen to the spoile, hoping to get or steale away something when the Towne is on fire.

A shame to be-lye the Diuell
so often.

The sixe and twentieth, Master Melsham being very sicke, Zanzebar came to visite him, and put him in mind to take the Physicke of this Countrey, and that it would presently stop his Flux; and brought a Bonze or Doctor with him, to administer it: Master Melsham was very desirous to take it, but that first our Chirurgion shoulde see it: and so he gaue him two pills yesterday, two in the night, and two in the morning, with certaine other seeds; but for ought I could see, it did him no good at all: God send him his heal. h. All our waste-clothes, pendants, Brasse shiuers, and other matters were sent aboard, and the ship put in order to receiue the Generall. Another house was set on fire the night past by villaines, but soone put out, and no hurt done. Our night-criers of fire doe keepe such a horrible noise (without forme or fashion) that it is impossible for any man to take rest.

Bonze Physician.

The Captaine Chinesa being sicke, sent for some spiced Cakes, and a couple of waxe candles which I sent him, as I had done the like heretofore. Master Melsham now being weary of his Iapan Physicke, returned to our Chirurgion, Master Warner. Whereat Zanzebar and his Doctor tooke pepper in the nose.

§. III.

A strange Comædie acted by Kings and Nobles: Preventions for Night-cries and fires; Returne of the Generall from Court.

THe thirtieth day, the Captaine Chinesa (our Land-lord) came vnto me, and told mee of a generall Collation which was made throughout euery house in the Towne, to send presents of eatable commodities to the Kings, for the more honor of a great Feast they haue to morrow, with a Comædie or Play: and so by his counsell (with aduice of others) I ordained two bottles of Spanish wine, two roasted Hennes, a roasted Pigge, a small quantitie Ruske, and three boxes banquetting stufte, to send to their Feast to morrow. And before night the yong King sent one of his men vnto me, to furnish them with some English apparell, for the better letting out their Comædie, namely, a paire of Stammel-cloath breeches. I returned answere, I had none such, neither did know any other which had: notwithstanding, if any apparell I had would pleasure his Highnesse, I would willingly giue it him. And within night both the Kings sent to me, to bring Master Foster, the Master, and be a spectator of their Comædie to morrow.

Another Feast with a Comæ-die.

The one and thirtieth, before dinner, I sent our Present aforesaid to the Kings by our Iurebasso, desiring their Highnesses to pardon the Master and my selfe, and that we would come to them some other time, when there were lesse people: but that would not serue the turne, for they would needs haue our company, and to bring Master Eaton along with vs; which wee did, and had a place appointed for vs, where we sate and saw all at our pleasures: and the old King himselfe came and brought vs Collation in sight of all the people: and after Semedone did the like in the name of both the Kings; and after diuers Noblemen of the Kings followers, made vs a third Collation. But the matter I noted most of all, was their Comædie (or Play) the Actors being the Kings themselves, with the greatest Noblemen and Princes. The matter was of the valiant deeds of their Ancestors, from the beginning of their Kingdome or Common-wealth, vntill this present, with much mirth mixed among, to giue the common people content. The Audience was great, for no house in Towne but brought a Present, nor no Village nor place vnder their Dominions, but did the like, and were spectators. And the Kings themselves did see, that euery one, both great and small, did eate and drinke before they departed. Their acting Musique and singing (as also their Poetry) is very harsh to vs, yet they keepe due time both with hands and feet. Their Musique is little Tabers, made great at both ends, and small in the midst, like to an Houre-glasse, they beating on the end with one hand, and straine the cords which goe about it, with the other, which maketh it to sound great or small as they list, according their voices with it; one playing on a Phife or Flute; but all harsh, and not pleasant to our hearing. Yet I neuer saw Play wherein I noted so much, for I see their policie is great in doing thereof, and quite contrary to our Comœdies in Christendome, ours being but dumbe shewes, and this the truth it selfe, acted by the Kings themselues, to keepe in perpetuall remembrance their affaires. The King did not send for the Flemmings, and therefore I accounted it a greater grace for vs. At our returne to the English house, I found three or foure Flemmings there, one of them was in a Japan habit, and came from a place called Cusuma, within sight of Corea. I vnderstand, they sold Pepper, and other Commodities there, and I thinke haue some secret trade into Corea, or else are very likely to haue. I hope, if they doe well, we cannot doe amisse, M. Adams being the man that put them forward vnto it, and no doubt will bee as forward for the good of his owne Countrey, as for Strangers. Hernando Ximenes was with Captaine Brower, and saw the two men which came from Cusuma, and did but aske him from whence they came; whereat Captaine Brower was angry, telling him he would giue him no account thereof. And towards night, I vnderstood that two Spaniards were come from Langaſaque, and lodged at Zanzibars, and sent for our Iurebassa to come to them; but I would not let him go so soone. After, Zanzibar and they came to the English house, the one of them beeing Andres Bulgaryn, the Genowes, which passed by this place the other day; and the other is called Benito de Palais, and is Pilot Maior of the Spanish ship, which was cast away on the Coast of Japan, and is the same man which came from Langaſaque, to visit M. Adams at his being here. They told me they were come of purpose to visit their friends; namely, my selfe first of all, with many other words of complement, and then entered into speeches of our Fugitiues; saying, it was not the Fathers (as they call them) which kept our people secret, or went about to conuey them away; but rather they of Langaſaque themselues, who they reported to be very bad people. In fine, I stood in doubt that these fellows are come of purpose, to inueigle more of our people to doe as the others haue done, and thereof aduised the Master, to haue a care both to ship and boats, as also to take notice of any such as went about to keepe them company: for that it is good to doubt the worst, for the best will saue it selfe.

The first of Nouember at night, two houses were set on fire on the other side the water, but fire was soone put out, but the villaines that did it could not be found. I sent M. Foster the Master a letter, aduising him to take care of ship and boats, as also to looke vnto the behaiour of our people, for that I doubted these two Spaniards were but come as Spies, to see what we did, and to intice some other of our people to do as the former did. Also, I aduised him how I vnderstood the said Spaniards did pretend to inuite him to dinner this day; but I wished him to take heed they gaue him not a Higo: he returned me answer, that he esteemed them such as I tooke them for, and therefore would haue a care to the maine chance. But soone after he came ashore, and the Spaniards came to the English house, and with much intreaty, got M. Foster, and M. William Eaton to goe along to dinner with them to Zanzibars, and the other two Spaniards and Hernando did the like. But these two Spaniards came vnto me, and bade mee tell the Master or any other that went with them, to take heed they did not eate nor drinke any thing, but such as they did see the others taste before them; for that it was no trusting of them, of which I aduised both the Master, and M. Eaton. Also I sent Mignell our Iurebassa, to both the Kings (and other Nobles) to giue them thanks for our kind entertainment yestherday, Hernando Ximenes told me that M. Adams had goods in his hands, belonging to this Pilot Maior the Spaniard, and that his chiefe coming was, thinking to haue met M. Adams here, and doth meane to attend his coming to haue an accompt of those matters. As also they brought Letters of recommendation from the Bishop, and other Fathers to the other two Spaniards (or strangers) to perswade them to returne backe to Langaſaque: but I thinke it is not their determination so to doe.

The second, some villaines set an house on fire in the Fish streete; and it was soone put out, and the partie escaped: and it is generally thought to be some base people or Renegados, which lie loytering vp and downe the Towne, and came from Miaco, and three are much suspected, but no prooffe as yet found against them. But there is order giuen, to make Gates and Partitions ouer euery streete in diuers places, and watch to be kept at each place, and no man be suffered to walke in the night, except he be found to haue earnest businesse. Another villaine got into a poore widowes house, thinking to haue robbed her, but she making an out-cry, hee fled vp into the wood, ouer against the English house, where the Pagod is; and soone after, the wood was beset round about, with aboue fise hundred men, but the theefe could not be found. At night, as we were going to bed, there was an out-cry on a sudden, that theeues were on the top of our house, setting it on fire; but our ladders being ready reared, both my selfe and others were not long a going vp, but found nothing, but that all our neighbours houses were peopled on the tops on a sudden, as well as ours. And it is to be thought it was nothing but a false laram, giuen of purpose to see how euery one would be found in a readinesse. Yet at that very instant there was a house set on fire, but soone quenched, it being a good way from our English house.

The night past, three houses were set on fire in diuers parts of the Towne, but all put out at begin-beginning, so that no hurt was done. So now order is giuen, to take notice in euery house what people are in them, whether strangers or others; and such as are found to be suspected are to be banished out of the Countrey; and gates or bars made to shut vp the passages or ends of streets, and watch set in diuers places, without crying and making a noyse vp and downe streets in the night, as hath been for a time heretofore without either forme or fashion: yet notwithstanding all this, a villaine about tenne a clocke in the night, set a house on fire neare vnto the Pagod, ouer against our English house: but he was espied by the watch, who pursued him with all speed, but he got into the wood about the Pagod, which forthwith was beset round about, with aboute five hundred armed men, and the old King Foyne came in person with many other Noble men, assisted in the pursuit; yet I verily thinke, the villaine did runne vp and downe amongst the rest, crying, Keepe theefe, as well as the best.

Order to prevent Fire-knaues, and Night-cryes.

The fourth, the night past there was fire put in diuers places more, one in the Towne and another in the Countrey, besides the House neere ours, as I said before. Order is now giuen, to haue secret watch in diuers parts of the Towne euery night, and no man to goe out in the night except vpon vrgent occasion, and then to haue a light before them, to the end they may be seene. If this decorum be duly kept, our House burners will play least in sight. I told the Kings, and others hereof aboute a weeke past, and now it is put in execution.

The fifth, this morning I receiued two Letters, the one from Domingo Francisco the Spanish Ambassadour dated in Ximonaesque five dayes past, and the other from George the Portugall: the Ambassadour went ouer Land from thence for Langasque, and sent his Seruant with the Letters, vnto whom I shewed such Commodities as he enquired for, and referred him off for others till our Generall returne writing him a Letter in answer of his, the Copie whereof I kept: his man tooke liking of two peeces of fine Semian Chowters, and eight peeces of white Bastas, and paid seuen Tais the piece for Chowters, and two Tais the piece for Bastas. There came a Spanish Frier or Iesuite, in the Boat with the Ambassadours man, & desired to see our ship, which I willed our Master to let him, and to vse him kindly, which he did. For as the olde saying is, It is good sometimes to hold a Candle to the Deuill, &c. Master Eaton, Hernando and my selfe dined with Unagense, and were kindly entertayned.

A Iesuite:

The sixth, this day about ten a clocke, our Generall and all his company arriued heere from the Japan Court, Master Adams being in company with him. And presently the Generall sent me with John Iapan our Iurebasso, to visit both the Kings, and thanke them for their kindnesse in so well accommodatting him with a Boate, as also for the care they had of the ship, and the rest in his absence, and that he would come on the morrow to visit them, being now weary of his long Voyage. They tooke this visitation kindly, saying, they would be glad to see him at their Houses. Also certaine Merchants of Miaco which came from Langasque, came to our English House, and had sight of all our commodities, and amongst the rest, took liking of ten peeces of Castedy nill, and made price for them at three Tais the piece, which is in all thirtie Tais, and so sent them to their lodging, as other Merchants before had done the like, and so returned mee money to my content, but these sent mee nothing but a Paper, and consigned mee to receiue my money of Semidone, who was newly gone out of Towne on a Voyage, our Generall meeting him on the way: but I returned these Merchants word, that I would haue my payment of them, or else my Merchandize backe againe, but they made answer, I should haue neither the one nor other; neither would the Host of the House where they lodged passe his word for payment, so I was forced to goe to both the Kings to seeke for Iustice, but first sent word aboard, that if the Boate of Miaco weighed anchor to goe away, that they should man out the Skiffe, and stay her, which they did, and made her to come to an anchor againe, and in the meane-time I spake to the Kings, but the younger said that Semidone was a man able enough to pay me. And then I answered and asked him, that if Semidone did not, whether he would, and he told me no, and while we were talking of it, old Foyne Same came in and told me he would take order that I should haue content: yet his order had come too late, if our Pinnasse had not stayd them. So in the end the Host where they did lodge, passed his word for payment.

Capt. Saris his returne from the Emperours Court.

Merchants of Miaco ply the Merchants.

Captaine Brower and all his Merchants came to the English House to visit our Generall, and Nobisana sent him a young Porke for a Present, saying, hee would come himselfe and visit him within a day or two.

George the Portugall sent the Generall a Present of Japan Figs and Chestnuts.

Here follow certaine Letters, the first sent from the Emperour to the Prince of Orange, the rest from the English in Japan, and principally from Master Cocke, wherein the Japonian Affaires and various Occurrents for diuers yeares are expressed.

The

The Copie of a Letter sent by the Emperour of Iapan, vnto the King of Holland, by the Ship called the Red Lyon, with Arrowes, which arriued in the Texel, the two and twentieth of Iuly, 1610.

I Emperour and King of Iapan, wish to the King of Holland, who hath sent from so farre Countries to visit me, greeting.

I reioyce greatly in your writing and sending vnto me, and wish that our Countries were neerer the one to the other, whereby wee might continue and increase the friendship begunne betwixt vs through your Maiesties presence, whom I imagine in conceit to see, in respect I am unknowne vnto your Maiestie, and that your love toward me is manifested through your liberalitie in honouring mee with foure Presents, whereof though I had no need, yet comming in your name I receiued them in great worth, and hold them in good esteeme.

And further, whereas the Hollanders your Maiesties Subiects desire to trade with their shipping in my Countrey, which is of little value and small, and to traffique with my Subiects, and desire to haue their abiding neere vnto my Court, whereby in person I might helpe and assist them; which cannot bee as now through the inconueniencie of the Countrey: yet notwithstanding I will not neglect, as already I haue beene, to be carefull of them, and to giue in charge to all my Gouvernours and Subiects, that in what places and Hauens in what part soeuer they shall arriue, they shall shew them all fauour and friendship to their Persons, Ships and Merchandize: wherein your Maiestie or your Subiects need not to doubt or feare ought to the contrarie. For they may come as freely as if they came into your Maiesties owne Hauens and Countries; and so may remayne in my Countrey to trade. And the friendship begunne betwixt mee and my Subiects with you shall neuer bee impayred on my behalfe, but augmented and increased.

I am partly ashamed that your Maiestie (whose Name and Renowme through your valorous Deeds is spread throughout the whole World) should cause your Subiects to come from so farre Countries into a Countrey so unfitting as this is, to visit me, and to offer vnto me such friendships as I haue not deserved. But considering that your affection hath beene the cause thereof, I could not but friendly entertayne your Subiects, and yeeld to their requests: whereof this shall serue for a testimonie, That they in all places, Countries, and Ilands vnder mine obedience may trade and traffique, and build Houses seruiceable and needfull for their Trade and Merchandizes, where they may trade without any hinderance, at their pleasure, aswell in time to come as for the present, so that no man shall doe them any wrong: And I will maintayne and defend them, as mine owne Subiects.

I promise likewise, that the persons which I understand shall bee left heere, shall now and at all times be held as recommended vnto me, and in all things to fauour them, whereby your Maiestie shall find vs as your Friends and Neighbours.

For other matters passed betwixt me and your Maiesties Seruants, which would bee too long heere to repeate, I referre my selfe vnto them.

Firando in Japan, the tenth of December 1614.

TO this day I haue not had time to perfect up my old bookes of Accounts, by meanes of the dispatching away our people, some to one place, some to another, and then the new building of our house, and after that the buying of a Iuncke, and repairing of her, which is now ready to depart for Syam, and hath been any time this ten dayes lying at an anchor at Cochi, a league from Firando, where your ship rode at your departure from hence, expecting but a faire wind to set forward on her voyage: shee is called the Sea Aduenture, being about some two hundred Tunnes, in whom Master Adams goeth for Master, and Master Wickham and Edward Sayer for Merchants, by meanes of the death of Master Peacock slaine in Cochinchina, and likelihood of casting away Walter Carwarden, returning backe from thence, for to this houre we haue no newes of him, nor the Iuncke they went in, as I haue at large aduised the Worshippfull Company, &c. Since your departure from hence, the Emperour hath banished all Iesuits, Priests, Friers and Nunnes out of Iapan, and pulled downe, and burned all their Churches and Monasteries, soaping them away, some for Amacau in China, and the rest for Manillias. Foyne Same the old King of Firando is dead, and Vshandono his Gouvernour, and two other Seruants cut their bellies to beare him company; their bodies being burned, and ashes entombed by his. Heere are warres like to ensue betwixt Ogusho-same the old Emperour, and Fidaia-same the yong Prince, sonne to Tico-same, who hath fortified himselfe strongly in his Castle or Fortresse of Osakey, hauing eightie thousand or an hundred thousand men run awayes and banished men, mall-contents, which are rettyred out of all parts vnto him, & vntoalled themselves for three yeares. The old Emperour himselfe is come downe against him in person with an armie of three hundred thousand souldiers, and is at the Castle of Fushma: their fore-runners haue had two or three bickerings already, and many slaine on each part. All Osakey is burned to the ground, but only the Castle. So Master Eaton is gone to Sackey with his goods; yet not without danger, for part of that Towne is burned too.

Such

Such a Tempest or Tuffon hath lately happened at Edoo, that the like was neuer scene in that place, the sea overflowing all the City, drining the people up into the mountains, defacing and breaking downe all the Noblemens houses, which you know were beautifull and faire. So let this much suffice for newes in Iapan. Most terrible Tuffon.

And now for Sales of our goods: the Emperour tooke our Ordinance, with a good part of our Lead, and ten barrels of powder, and two or three Broad-cloathes, and a good part of our other Broad-cloathes are sold, namely, Blacke, Haire-colour, Synanon-colour, at fiftene, fourteene, thirteene, and twelue Taies, the Tattamy: but they will not looke on a Venice-red, nor a Flame-colour, neither are Stamels in such request as heretofore: they enquire much after white and yellow Broad-cloth. The Hollanders haue sold most of their Broad-cloth at base rates, which maketh vs to doe the like. And for our Cloath of Cambaya, they will not looke on our red Zelas, blew Byrams, nor Duttis, which are the greatest part of that you left with vs, only some white Bastas are sold at fourteene and fiftene Masse a peece: And Cassedys mill, Alleias, broad Pintados, Chader Pintados, with such spotted, striped and chequered Stuffles, most looked after, and sold at profit. We haue also sold neare halfe our Bantam Pepper for sixtie fine Masse the Peecull, and all the rest had been gone before now, had it not been for this rumour of warres. I stand in great hope we shall procure Trade into China, by meanes of Andrea, the Captaine China, and two other of his brothers, which labour in the matter, and make no doubt but to bring it to effect, for three ships a yeere to come and goe to a place neare Lanquin, to which place we may goe from hence in three or foure dayes, if the wind be good. I haue written hereof at large to the Worshipfull Company, as the like to my Lord Treasurer. Hope of Trade in China.

Some little sicknesse I haue had, but now I praise God it is past. Master Wickham, Master Eaton, Master Neallson, and Master Edward Sayer, haue all foure been very sicke, but now well reconered all, except Master Eaton, who is troubled with the Fluxe and a tertian Ague, God send him his health, for I cannot too much praise that man, for his diligence and paines taken in the Worshipfull Companies affaires. Jacob Speck, who was thought to be cast away in going from hence to the Moluccas, is now returned to Firando, Captaine of a great ship called the Zelandia, with a little Pinasse, called the Iaccatra: the cause of his so long missing was, for that the ship wherein he went from hence, passed to the Eastward of the Philippinas, the same way we came, yet by currents and contrary winds (as they say) they could not fetch the Moluccas, but were driuen to the Westward of the Iland Celebes, and so passed round about it through the Straights of Desalon, and so backe to the Moluccas, &c. The Chinaes doe much complaine of the Hollanders robbing and pilfering their Iuncke, for (as they say) they haue rifled and taken seuen. The Emperour of Iapan hath taken some distaste against the Hollanders, for he refused a Present they lately sent up to him, and would not speake to them which brought it: as he did the like by another Present the Portugalls sent him, who came in the great ship from Amacau, this yeare, to Langalague; he refusing both the Present, as also to speake to them which brought it. You thought at your being heere, that if any other ship came out of England, we might sell our Goods without carrying up any Present to the Emperour: but now I find it to be otherwise, for euery ship which commeth in must carry a Present to the Emperour, as a custome: neither can we set out any Iuncke, without procuring the yearely License of the Emperour, otherwise no Iapan Mariner dare goe out of Iapan upon paine of death, only our owne shippes from England may come in, and goe out againe when they will, and no man gain-say it. Hollanders distasted by Chinois and Iapan: Portugalls not accepted. Presents a custome for euery ship.

We cannot yet by any meanes get Trade from Tushma into Corea, neither haue they of Tushma any other priuiledge, but to enter into one little Towne (or Fortresse) and in paine of death not to go without the walles thereof, to the Landward, and yet the King of Tushma is no Subiect to the Emperour of Iapan. We could vent nothing but Pepper at Tushma, and yet no great quantitie of that, and the weight is much bigger then that of Iapan, but sold at a better rate. I am giuen to understand, that up in the Countrey of Corea, they haue great Cities, and betwixt that and the Sea mightie Bogs, so that no man can tranell on Horse-backe, nor very hardly on foote; but for remedie against that, they haue great Waggons or Carts, which goe upon broad or flat wheeles under saile, as ships doe. So that obseruing Monsons, they transport their goods to and fro in these sayling Waggons. They haue Damaskes, Sattins, Taffeties, and other Silke stuffles made there, as well as in China: it is said that Ticus-same (otherwise called Quabicondono) the deceased Emperour, did pretend to haue conveyed a great armie of Souldiers in these sayling waggons, to haue assaulted the Emperour of China on a sudden in his great Citie of Paquin, where hee is ordinarily resident, but he was prevented by a Corean Noble-man, who poisoned himselfe, to poison the Emperour, and other great men of Iapan, which is the occasion the Iapans haue lost that, which some two and twenty yeares past they had gotten possession of in Corea. Iames Turner the fiddling youth, left a wench with child beere, but the whore, the mother, kill d it so soone as it was borne, although I gaue her two Taies in plate before to nourish it, because shee should not kill it, it being an ordinary thing here. Master Foller, the Masters whistle and chaunc is found, and Master Adams hath it, and will be answerable unto him for it. I did thinke to haue sent you a Iapan Almanacke in another Letter to the same effect as this, dated the fine and twentieth Vltimo, and sent by Sea-aduventure, by way of Syam, but forgot to put it in, yet now commeth here inclosed: I pray you let this Letter suffice to Master George Sais your brother, and the rest of my louing friends; and with heartie Commendations in generall, I leaue you all to the holy protection of the Almighty, resting alwayes Corea Bogges and sailing waggons. Paquin:

Your euer louing friend at command,
RICHARD COCKS.

To

To the Worshipfull THOMAS WILSON Esquire, at his House at the Britaine-Burse, at the Strand, giue these.

Hollanders acts in Moluccas.
Spaniards and Portugals feare.
*S*r, my last unto you was of the first of December 1613. dated in the Isle of Firando in Iapan; and sent by Captaine Iohn Saris, in the ship called the Cloaue: wherein I aduertised you, how unkindly the Hollanders dealt with vs in the Maluccas. Since which time, there is not any matter of moment to aduise you of, more than I haue touched in another Letter to my good Lord Treasurer. The Hollanders giue it out heere, That it is very likely our East-India Company of England, and that of Holland shall be ioyned all in one: which if it proue true, it is thought an easie matter to drine both Spaniards and Portugals out of these Easterne parts of the world; or else utterly to cut them off, or debarre them from all Trade. For you will hardly beleue how the Hollanders already haue daunted the Spaniards and Portugals in these parts, especially in the Maluccas, where they daily encroach upon the Spaniards, which are not able to withstand their proceedings: but now stand in much feare, that in short time they will also take the Philippina: from them. Also the Portugals, which trade from Ormus to Goa, and so for Malacca and Macao in China, stand daily in feare to be surprised by them.

Hollanders rob the luncques of China.
Hollanders sea force.
*O*ne thing there is, the issue whereof I cannot well conceiue: and that is the robbing of the luncques of China, daily practised by the Hollanders in these parts: the goods whereof cannot choose but amount to great matters, and suffice to set out and maintaine a great Fleete, which is worthy of consideration. And if it should happen, that the King of Iapan should fall out with the Hollanders, and debarre them from Trade into his Dominions, (as it may fall out that he will:) then is it likely the Hollanders will make prize as well of Iapans as Chinaes. For out of doubt, their Forces at sea in these parts are sufficient to doe what they lust, if they haue but a victualling place to retire unto. And they are of late growne very stout, and mocke at them, which, all the world knoweth, were their masters and teachers. And it is very certaine that they haue gotten possession of diuers Fortresses in the Maluccas, and those parts: yet on my knowledge the people of those parts doe rather encline to the Spaniards, then to them: although at the first, they were glad of their arrivall, by meanes of the intollerable pride of the Spaniards. But now time telleth them, that the Spaniard brought them store of Rialls of plate; and in their proud humors were liberall, which was easie for them to doe, in respect they had wherewithall to doe it. But the poore Hollanders, which scrue in these parts for souldiers, both by sea and land, haue such bare pay, that it will hardly find them clothing to their backs, and meate for their bellies: Their Commanders alledge, that all the benefite which hapneth, either by reprisall or conquest, is for the States, and Winthebbers, as they call them. So that what will come of this in the end, is hard to iudge.

Iesuits play the Factors, Agēts, and Beggers in these parts, as by all Indian relations may appeare.
Fame of the English in the remote East.
*B*ut letting these matters passe, I am verily of opinion, that, if it be not for the misdemeanour of the Hollanders, we shall obtaine a Trade in China: for our demand is but for three ships a yeare to come and goe; and only to leaue Factors sufficient to doe the businesse, without bringing in any Iesuits or Padres, as they tearme them, which the Chinaes cannot abide to heare of, because heretofore they came into these parts in such numbers to inhabite, that now they will not endure it, and were alwayes crawing and begging without shame, which is a common saying among the Pagans.

Force of Tempests in Iapan.
*O*ne thing there is, which putteth me in good hope, and that is the good report and fame, which our English Nation hath gotten in these parts, since our Arrivall: which, as I am giuen to vnderstand, is come to the knowledge of the Emperour of China: and how the chiefe King of Iapan hath receiued vs, and granted unto vs very large priuiledges. As also, how that the English at all times, haue held the Castilians, as they call them, to hard meate, both by sea and land. These things the Chinaes themselves tell me: and that the Emperour and other great men in China, delight to heare reports of our Nation. But I had almost forgotten to note downe, how some China Merchants put out a question to me, to know, if we had a trade in China, whether the King of England would debarre the Hollanders from robbing and spoiling of their luncques? Which question was downe full unto me: yet I answered them, that his Maestie would take such order, that the Hollander should not misuse them.

Ill successe of some English in Cauchin-China.
*O*f late heere is come newes from Edoo, a Citie of Iapan as bigge as London, wherein the chiefe of the Nobilitie of Iapan haue beautifull houses, that by meanes of an exceeding Tiffon or tempest, all or the most part of them are defaced; the whole Citie being ouer-flown with water, and the people forced to flye up into the mountaines, a thing neuer heard of before: and the Kings Palace being stately builded in a new Fortresse, the tyles being all gilded on the out-side, were all carryed away with a whirlewind, so that none of them are to be found. The Pagans attribute it to some Charmes, or by Coniurations of the Iesuits lately banished: but the Papist Iaponians doe rather ascribe it to the punishment of God, for the banishing of such holy men.

*A*nother matter there is, which I thought good to aduertise you of, and that is of a disaster lately hapened to vs in Cauchin-China: To which place we sent a quantitie of goods and money, to the value of seuen hundred and thirtie pound sterling, as it cost in England. Master Tempest Peacock, and Master Walter Caerwarden, going for Merchants in a Iapan luncque, carryed the Kings Maesties Letters of England, with a Present of worth for the King of Cauchin-China, and arrived at their Port of Discharge, called Quinham: deliuered his Maesties Letters, and the Present, which were taken in good part, and they entertained with kind speeches, and large promises. The Hollanders seeing we aduertured to that that place, would needs doe the like, and tooke fraught in other Iunkes, and were likewise well entertained at first. But in the ende, Master Peacocke and the chiefe Merchant of the Hollanders, going on shoare, both in one boat, to receiue certaine summes of money of the King for broad-Cloath, and other Commodities sold him, were treacherously set upon in the water, and their boat ouerturned, they beeing killed in the water with harping yronlike filbes, with their Interpreters and other followers which were Iaponians: Walter Carwarden beeing aboard the Iunke, escaped and came away. But from that day to this, wee can heare no newes, neither of him, nor of the Iunke, wherefore we feare hee is cast away.

The common report both of the Chinas and Iapans is, that the King of Cauchin-china did this, to be reuenged on the Hollanders, for burning a Towne of his, and putting his people to death without mer-10 cie. The originall grew, from a great quantitie of false Dollers or Rials of eight, sent to Quinham by the 10 Hollanders, certaine yeeres past; and there put away for Silkes, and other China stufes, with the Mer-10 chants of that place. But the falshood of the money beeing espied, they laid hands on the Holland Factors, and I thinke, some one was put to death in reuenge: whereupon the Holland ships comming on that Coast, landed their men, and burned a Towne, putting Man, Woman, and Child to the sword. This was the chiefe occasion (as report goeth) that this mischance is happened now; M. Peacocke being slaine, because he was in company with the Hollanders. Here inclosed, I send you a Iapan Almanacke, whereby you may see their order of Printing, Figures, and Characters. And so I leane you to the holy protection of the Almighty. Resting alwaies

Your Worships to command,

RICHARD COCK.

From Firando in Iapan. December 10. 1614.

December 5. 1615.

10 Sir, I receiued a Letter from you by the hands of Captaine Copendall, Captaine of the Hofiander, which arrined here in Iapan the twentie ninth of August, 1615. wherein I understood of your safe arrivall at the Cape Bona Esperanza homeward bound: wherein your Worship gaue mee to understand, of the losse of some of your Company; yet I make no doubt, but by the grace of God, you are safely arrivied in 30 England long before this time. I sent you a Letter, dated the last of November, 1614. by the Hollan-30 ders ship called the old Zeeland, wherein I gaue you to understand of the death of M. Peacocke, and Walter Carwarden betrayed in Cauchinchina, which was not a little grieve to vs all. besides the losse of the Companies goods. This last yeere past, M. Wickham, M. Adams, and my Selfe, beeing bound in a Iunke which we bought for Siam, hauing great stormes and foule weather, sprung leakes in her, and were faine to beare up for the Islands Leuckes, where we stayed so long, and could not stop our leakes, we lost our Monson, and came to Firando againe. This yeere we haue trimmed her againe, and at this present readie to set sayle againe for Siam. My greatest hope in these parts is, that we shall haue a trade into China, for we haue great possibilities, and I make no doubt but ere long, to see a Factory established there, by meanes that the Captaine Cheny and his brothers haue made. We haue had here the last Summer great troubles 40 of Warres, betwixt the Emperour and Fidata Sama, which we doe not know whether hee bee slaine or fled, 40 but the Emperour hath got the victory, with losse of men of both sides, the summe of foure hundred thousand.
 Thus hauing no more newes to write, I commit you to the protection of the Almighty. From Firando Firando in Iapan. December 4. 1616.

30 W Orshipfull Sir, my humble dutie alwaies remembred: hauing so fit an oportunitie, I could not choose but trouble your Worship with these few lines, I being but newly arrivied heere in Firando, of a hard and tedious Voyage from Siam, which went in a Iunke of the Right Honourable Companies, M.
 Adams being Master, and my selfe Factor in her, hauing bought more goods then we could lade, we fraighted an other Iunke for Iapan: M. Benjamin Fary being principall of the Factory of Siam, thought it fit for me to goe in this Iunke for Iapan, for the safegard of the Worshipfull Companies goods: wherein I tooke my Voyage, the yeare beeing far spent, that we were from the first of Iune, to the seuenteenth of September, betweene Siam and Shachmar, with much torments and foule weather, hauing lost twenty of our men with sicknesse and want of fresh water. The greatest occasion of this first, was for want of a good Pilot, for we had a China Pilot, which had no understanding of Nauigation: for when he was out of sight of the Land, hee knew not where he was, nor what course to take: then he falling sicke, was not able to creepe out of his Cab-60 bin, I beeing forced with the small skill I had, to doe my best, and with the helpe of God brought the Iunke safe to Shachmar, where we arrivied the seuenteenth of September, hauing but five men able to stand on their legges, comming so late to Firando, that I could not goe this yeere to Siam, but the Companies Iunke is gone with M. Wil. Eaton, and two English Pilots, whose names are Robert Burges, and Iohn Burges.

Firando

Firando in Iapan. February 15. 1617.

Captaine Saris, My last Letter unto you, was the fifth of January, 1616. sent by way of Bantam, in the ship Thomas, which went from hence that yeere, with an other small ship called the Aduice: in which Letter I wrote you at large, of all matters which occasion then offered: as also of the receipt of two Letters of yours, the one dated in London the twenty fourth of November, 1614. and the other the fifteenth of August, 1615. Since which time the ship Aduice is returned againe into Iapan, and arrived at Firando, the second of August last past. By which conuaince I received a Letter from the Honourable Company, dated in London the thirtieth of January, 1615. Wherein they write me, &c.

Capt. George Barkely.

There are some which can tell you, that Captaine Barkely lying on his death bed, escaped a scowring of loosing sixe thousand Rialls of eight; and had he died before it was found out, paid out for Custome of Pepper, it may be some other man might haue had the credit of paying it. It is a common Proverbe, that it is a small matter for men which lie at Bantam, to be rich if they live but a little time: for as the old saying is, No man dieth without an heire.

Wee haue beene this yeare againe, before the Emperour of Iapan, but cannot get our Priuiledges enlarged, but trade onely at Firando and Langalacque, and our English shipping to come for Firando onely.

Trade in Cutchinchina unlucky.

M. Edmond Sayer went this last yeare for Cochinchina, with a Cargeson of some one thousand eight hundred Tays Goods and money: and being ready to come away, was cozened of sixe hundred and fifty Tays by a China & others, of whom he had bought Silke for the Worshipfull Company, and weighed out the Money, attending to receive the Silke, the Money lying by till it came, he and an other being in the room where it lay: but those false people made a hole through the Cane-wall, and stole out the Money, they not seeing when it was done. I am sorrie for the mischance, but he hopeth to recouer it againe this yeare, having left a man to follow the suite, and returneth backe this Monson in a China Iunke, with a Cargeson of two thousand Tais in Plate to bestow in Silke, and one Robert Hawley goeth with him for mortalities sake, and M. William Adams goeth Pilot for the Chines. God send them a prosperous Voyage, and to recouer the money lost.

Our Iunke, the Sea Aduenture, made an other Voyage the last yeare to Siam, M. William Eaton going Merchant in her, and is returned againe in her thither this yeare, God send them a prosperous Voyage.

Fight of Hollanders and Spaniards.

The Hollanders sent a Fleete of ships the last yeare from the Moluccas to the Manillias, to fight with Spanish Fleete: but they kept in for the space of five or sixe moneths, so that the Hollanders made account they durst not come out at all: and therefore separated themselves, to looke out for China Iunkes whereof they tooke and rifled some say twentie five Iunkes, others say thirtie five: once they tooke great riches, and all under the name of Englishmen. But in the end, the Spanish Fleete came out, and set upon five or sixe of their ships, burning and sinking the Admirall, and two other Holland ships, the rest escaping: but the Spaniards separating themselves to seeke out the Hollanders, the Viceadmirall of them fell with two fresh Hollanders on the morning, who fought with her all day, and made her to runne on ground, and set her selfe on fire, because the Hollanders should not take them: the which two ships, and one of them which was at former fight, came after to Firando, with two other great Hollanders from Bantam, to looke out for the Amacau ship, but missed narrowly of her, so that five great Holland ships, the least of them as big as the Cloue, came into Iapan this yeare, one of which, called the Red Lyon (which was she which rid by us at the Moluccos) was cast away at Firando in a storme, with a China Iunke they brought in for Prize, but all the Merchandise recouered, although wet. The Emperour letteth them make good price of all. They sent away the Blacke Lyon for Bantam, a ship of nine hundred Tunnes, full laden with Raw Silke, and other rich China stufes. Another, called the Flushing, of seven or eight hundred Tunnes, is gone for the Moluccas, full laden with provision and money: and the Sunne, a ship of sixe or seven hundred Tunnes, with the Gallias of aboue foure hundred Tunnes, are left to scowre the coast of China, to take what booty they can, and returne the next Monson: the Gallias is gone out already, but the Sunne attendeth the going out of the Amacau ship from Langalacque, to be doing with her. She was going out heretofore, but coming in sight of the Gallias, (the wind seruing her) returned into Langalacque againe, so I thinke she will hardly goe out this yeare: and as I said before, they haue robbed all the Chines in the name of Englishmen, which hath done much hurt to our proceeding, to get trade in that place; so that we were forced to send new supplies, to giue the Gouvernours in China to vnderstand, that they are Hollanders which did it, and not Englishmen. In fine, I haue aduised the Worshipfull Company at large of all, of which I make no doubt but you will heare: And so I commit you to God, resting Hollanders wronging the English name.

Your louing Friend assured at command,
R. C. COCK.

The Coppie of my Letter the last yeare, I send you here inclosed.

A piece of another Letter of M. Cockes.

There came two Friers in that ship as Embassadors from the Viceroy of new Spaine, with a Present for the Emperour, but he would neither receive the Present, nor speake to them which brought it, but sent sent M. Adams to tell them, they should auoide out of his Dominions, he hauing formerly banished all of their coate, and remained still in the same opinion. It is said, that Fidaia Same had promised the le- suites entrance againe, if he had got the victorie, and been settled in the Empire, which if it had taken effect, out of doubt both Hollanders and we had been turned out of Iapan. And therefore better as it is.

Also, the last yeere when we set out our Lunke, we entertained a Spaniard, called Damian Mari- na, and was the same man which thought once to haue gone along with you, in Company of George Pe- terfon. This Damian was a good helme man: and therefore entertained, and an other Spaniard, cal- led Iuan de Lieuana went with them as a Passenger: but the Lunke loosing her Voyage, they returned 10 to Langasque, where soone after arriued the Carracke from Amacau; and understanding that these two men had gone in our shipping, they laid hands of them, and put them in chaines aboard the great ship, condemning them to death, as Traytors to their Prince and Countrey, in seruing the English their enemies. Which comming to my knowledge, I tooke their defence in hand, and by authoritie from the Emperour got them set at libertie, to the great spight and hearts grieffe of both Spaniards and Portu- gals, these two men going Passengers in the Holiander for Bantam, &c. We haue had extreame trou- bles in Iapan, by meanes of these warres, in posting or transporting of our goods from place to place, to saue it. I long to heare from you of your safe arrivall, &c.

M. Adams is gone againe in the lunke for Siam, accompanied onely with M. Edmond Sayer; and M. Neallson is very sicke, but M. Wickham, and M. Eaton well: I pray you deliuer the enclo- 20 sed to my brother.

Yours, most assured at command,

RICHARD COCK.

Naugasaque in Iapan, the tenth of March 1610.

30 IT is now almost three yeeres last past since I wrote your Worship any Letter, and is by meanes of the unlooked for & unruly proceedings of the Hollanders against our English Nation in all these parts of the World, not sparing vs in these Kingdomes of Iapan, contrarie to the large Priuiledges which the Em- perour of Iapan hath giuen vs, that the Iapans shoul'd not meddle with vs. But these Hollanders this yeere hauing seuen ships great & small in the Harbor or Port of Firando, haue with sound of Trumpet pro- claymed open War against our English Nation, both by Sea and Land to take our English ships & goods, and kill our persons as their mortall Enemies, which was done by one Adam Westarwood, their Ad- mirall or Lord Commander (as they tearme him) and openly proclaymed aboard all their shippes. Also they came to braue vs before our owne doores, and picking quarrels entred into our House, thinking to haue cut all our throates, yet wotunded but two persons, and had it not bene for the assistance of the Iapa- 40 nesses our Neighbours, which tooke our parts, they had killed vs all, they being a hundred Hollanders to one Englishman: and not contented with this, they tooke our Boat going out about our businneses, where- in there was one Englishman which they carryed Prisoner into their owne House, threatening to haue kil- led him, putting him in great danger of his life, by meanes of a Company of drunken Consorts which were about him, threatening him to stab him with their Knives. The young mans name is Richard King and sonne to Captaine King of Plimmouth. And besides this, two other of our Barkes going besides their ships within the Towne and Harbour of Firando, they bent a Peece of Ordnance against them, which tooke false fire, but they shot at them with Muskets, but missed the Englishmen, and killed a Iapan: Yet for all this there is no iustice executed against them by the King of Firando, although the Em- perour hath commanded him to doe it.

Hollanders abu- ses of the Eng- lish in those parts, are here published for knowledge of the Easterne Affaires, and Occurrents, as it is meet in a Historie. But neither were these Nationall but personall Crimes, and done in time and place of pretended Ho- stilitie, and now I hope sa- tisfaction is, or shall be made. Neighbour- hood of Re- gion, Reli- gion and Cu- stomes; are easily violated by Drink, Co- uetousnesse & Pride, the three Furies that rayfed these Combu-

50 Also may it please you to understand, that two of these shippes which they brought into Firando this yeere, are English ships which they tooke from Englishmen in the Indies, as also they tooke two other this yeere from them, riding at an anchor in the Roads of Patania, where wee haue a Factorie, and not doubting any such matter: in which broyle, they killed Captaine * Iohn Iordaine, our Chiefe President for the right Worshipfull Companie in the Indies, with diuers others, and carryed the ships and goods quite away, but sixe of the Mariners which were in the English ships which they tooke, escaped from them and came to the English House, they sending to me to haue them sent backe againe: unto whom I answered, I would first see their Commission, how they durst presume to take our shipping and goods, and kill our Kings Maiesties faithfull Subiects as they did: so then they went to the Tono or King of Firando;

This Historie hath related the worth of many Worthy Hollanders; if it yeelds a Close-stooke for Westarwood (as Ever- ments rather than true Dutch) or a Graine-Tub or Swil-tub for some braue Brewers and Bores, that embrewed with Nobler bloud then themselves haue, preferre their brutish passions to Gods Glorie, Religion, and publike Peace, let it be no imputation to the Nation (which I loue and honour) but to such baser spirits as haue (like Scorbuteall humours in the long Voyages, and their lon- ger peace and want of wonted employments) bene bred as Difeates to their, and infections to our bodie. My intent is to preter- others with their Acts, my selfe with Prayers that all may be amended. * This Iohn Iordaine is said in the time of treatie to haue bene treacherously slaine.

desiring to haue their * English slaues (as it pleased them to call them) delivered vnto them, but they had answer, they must first demand them of the Emperour, and looke what he ordaines should be fulfilled. Yet in the meane time, they held not the English-men to bee slaues vnto them. This was the chiefe occasion which made them to picke quarrels against vs, to haue killed vs all, but I hope in God, his Maie-stie by the Solicitation of our right Honourable, and right Worshipfull Employers, will not suffer his true and loyall Subjects to lose their shipping, liues and goods, in such order as they doe by such an vnthankfull and theeuish Rabble of them, which are assembled together in these parts of the world, who make a daily practice to rob and spoile all both friends and foes, and I trust that you your selfe will be a Solicitor in this so iust a cause, against so common an Exemie.

This Adam Westerwood their Lord Commander, set my life at saile, offering fiftie Rials of eight, to any one that would kill me, & thirtie Rials for each other Englishman that they could kill. but hitherto God hath preserued me and the rest in this place, although they wounded two or three, yet they are not dead. And this proceedings of their Lord Commander, was told me secretly by some of their owne people (willing me) and the rest to take heed of our selues. They also informed mee of the Noble Parentage of their Lord Commander Westerwood, telling that his Father is a Close-stooke-maker at Amsterdam, or thereabouts, and the best of their Captaines either Shoemakers, Carpenters, or Beere-brewers Sonnes, God blesse such an Honourable and Worshipfull Generation, I meane, God blesse mee from them. And so to make an end of this matter, I was this yeere aboue at the Emperours Court at Miaco, to make complaint of the abuses offered to vs within his Dominions, contrary to the Priuiledges his Maie-stie had giuen vs, and I had very good words and promises that wee should haue Iustice, and the Tono or King of Firando commanded to see it performed. but as yet nothing done, although I haue many times earnestly sued for it.

And at my being at Court, and at the Emperours Palace, Portugals and Spaniards being there at the same time, to doe their duties to the Emperour, as they doe euery yeere when shipping commeth. There was a Hollander in the Court, (which had liued in Iapan almost twentie yeeres, and speaketh the Iapan Language well) this fellow, in my hearing and others, beganne to extoll their King of Hoiland, to be the greatest King in Christenome, and one that held all the others vnder, he little thinking that we had vnderstood what he said: but I was not behind hand to tell him that he needed not to lye so loud, for that they had no King at all, in Holland, but were gouerned by a Count, or rather they gouerned him. But if they had any King at all, in whom they might boast it was the Kings Maie-stie of England, who hitherto had bene their Protector, otherwayes they had neuer bragged of their States, at which speeches, both Spaniards, Portugals, and others did laugh apace, and so the Hollanders mouth was stopped, &c.

And now for newes in these parts, may it please you to vnderstand that this Emperour is a great Enemy to the name of Christians, especially Iapans, so that all which are found are put to death, I saw fifty fine martyred at Miaco, at one time when I was there, because they wold not forsake their Christian Faith, & amongst them were little Children of five or sixe yeeres old burned in their mothers armes, Crying out, Iesus receiue their soules. Also in the Towne of Nauasaku, there was sixteene more martyred for the same matter, whereof five were burned and the rest beheaded and cut in pieces, and cast into the Sea in Sackes of thirtie fathome deepe: yet the Priests got them vp againe, and kept them secretly for Reliques. There is many more in Prison in diuers other places, as also beere, which looke howely when they shall die, for very few turne Pagans. Also this last yeere before Christmas, the Emperour hath displaced one of the greatest Princes of Iapan, called Fushima Tay, of sixtie or seuentie Mangocas, and turned him into a Corner, in the North parts of Iapan, where hee hath but a small portion in respect of that was taken from him, and this must hee doe or cut his belly. It was thought there would haue bene much trouble in Iapan about it, for all Fushima Tayes Subjects were in Armes, and meant to haue held it out to the vttermost, having fortified the Citie of Fushima, and gotten prouision into it for a long time, but the Tay himselfe and his Sonne being in the Emperours Court, he commanded them to write to their Vassals, to lay downe their Armes and submit themselves to the Emperours pleasure, or else forth-with to cut their bellies. So life was sweete vnto them, and all rendered vnto the Emperour, and those pardoned which had taken vp Armes in the defence of the Tay. And the Emperour hath giuen his Dominions being two Kingdomes, to two of the Emperours owne Kinsmen, and now this yeere the Emperour hath pulled downe his Castle at Fushima, which I thinke was farre bigger then the Citie of Rochester, a very beautifull and gallant thing, wherein I saw him this yeere, and all the stores are carried to Ofackay, and that old ruined Castle which Ticus Samma built, and Ogotha Samma pulled downe, must now bee built againe, three times bigger then it was before, so that all the Tones or Kings, haue each one their taske set them to doe at their owne proper charge, not without much grudging, they hauing leaue after so many yeeres, to returne to their owne Lands, and now on a suddaine, are all sent for againe to come to the Court, which angreth them not a little, but they must, will they will they; in paine of belly-cutting. Yet at this very instant, heere is a secret muttering, that Fidaia Samma the Sonne of Ticus Samma is aliue; and in the Daires House at Miaco. but I thinke it hath bene reported diuers times heretofore that hee was aliue, and in other places but proued vntrue, yet here are some rich Merchants at Miaco, hereat present, which are afraid, and are readie to goe up on a suddaine, for feare the Emperour should burne Miaco, if it be true, he be aliue, and out of doubt if he be aliue, it may turne the Emperours Estate upside downe, for hee is no Marshall man, but a great Politician: once, howsoeuer it bee, it cannot bee worse for vs then it is, &c. And as I aduised you in my last, of the pulling downe of all the Churches in Iapan, yet there were some remnants standing in Naugafaque till this yere, and the Monasterie of Misericordia not touched, neither any Church-yard nor Buriall place, but now by order from the Emperour all is pulled downe, and all Graues and Sepulchres opened, and dead mens bones taken out, and carried into the Fields by their Parents and Kindred to be buried else-where. And streets made in all their places, where both Churches or Church-yards were, except in some places, where the Emperour hath commanded Pagods to be erected, and sent Heathen Priests to live in them, thinking utterly to roote out the memory of Christianitie out of Iapan. For there were certaine places a little without the Citie of Naugafaque, where diuers Fathers and other Christians were martyred, in the time of Ogoshia Samma, where their Parents and Friends had planted greene Trees, and set up Altars neere each Tree, unto which place many hundreds went euery day to pray, but now by command from the Emperour, all the said Trees and Altars are quite cut downe, and the ground made euen, such is his desire to roote out the remembrance of all such matters.

And in Anno 1618. in the moneths of Nouember and December, heere were two Comets scene over all Iapan, the first rising in the East, being like a great fiery beam rent to the South-wards, and there within the space of a moneth vanished away. The other did also rise in the East, being a great blazing Starre, and went North-wards, and within a moneth vanished quite away about the Constellation of Charles-wayne, or Vrsa Maior. The Wiffards in these parts doe prognosticate great matters thereof, but hitherto nothing of moment hath happened, but the deposing of Frushma Tay, aforesaid.

Comets which appeared also in the parts.

But I am ashamed to write you the newes the Portugals and Spaniards report, and some of them haue shewed me Letters to verifie it, and is of a bloudie Crosse scene in the Ayre in England, against which an English Preacher speaking in the Pulpit was strooke dumbe, which Miracle, as they terme it, caused our Kings Maiestie to send to the Pope, to haue some Cardinals and Learned men to come into England, for that he meant all England should turne Roman Catholikes. I pray you pardon me for writing such fopperies which I doe, to the intent to haue you laugh a little, yet I assure you, heere are many Portugals and Spaniards, will not be perswaded to the contrary. I know not what else to write, but I hope by the next shipping which commeth for this place to come towards England, where God grant I may find you in good health, &c.

Ex vincte Leonem. You may guesse of their Tales of Miracles at home & abroad, by this.

He Iland which we fell with, lyeth some ten leagues to the South of the Bay, the latitude is eight degrees, it hath no inhabitants, nor did I learne the name. It hath some Plantans, and by report good watering and wooding for ships. Some league from the shoare is a dangerous breach of a rocke, scarcely at high water to bee discerned. The Bay of Sierra Leona is about three leagues in breadth. On the South is high land, full of trees euen to the Sea-side, hauing diuers Coues, in which wee caught plentie and varietie of fish. On the further side of the fourth Coue is the watering place, of excellent water continually running: at which place, on the rockes, we found the names of 20 diuers English men which had bin there; amongst the rest, of Sir Francis Drake, which had bin there seuen and twentie yeeres before, Thomas Candish, Captaine Lister, with others. About the middest of the Bay, right from the third Coue lyeth a land, neere about which, is not about two or three fathome; in most places else eight or ten close to the shoare. It floweth East South-east, and higheth fixe or eight foote, a strong tide of ebbe; the latitude eight degrees and a halfe North.

The King keepeth his residence in the bottome of the Bay, and is called by the Moorres, Borea, or Captaine, Caran, caran, caran. Hee hath other pettie Kings vnder him, whereof one, called Captaine Pinto, a wretched old man, dwelleth at a Towne within the second Coue: and on the other side the Bay, Captaine Boloone. Boreas Dominions stretch fortie leagues into the land; he hath tribute of Cotton-cloath, Elephants teeth and gold: he hath power to sell his people for 30 slaues, (which he proffered vnto vs) and some of them are by Portugall Priests and Iesuits made Christians, and haue a Chappell, wherein are written in a table, such dayes as they are to obserue holy. The King, with some about him, are decently cloathed in Iackets and Breeches, and some with hats, but the common sort go naked, saue that with a Cotton girdle about their waste, they couer their priuities; the women couer theirs with a Cotton-cloath, tacked about their middles and hanging to the knees, wrapped round about them; the children goe starke naked. They are all, both men and women, rased and pinked on all parts of their bodies very curiously, hauing their teeth also filed betwixt, and made very sharpe. They pull off all the haire growing on their eye-lids. Their beards are short, crispe, blacke, and the haire of their heads they cut into allyes 40 and crosse pathes; others wear it iagged in tufts, others in other foolish formes; but the women haue all close to the flesh.

Their Townes consist of thirtie or fortie houses, all clustered together (yet each hath his own) couered with reed and enclosed with mud-walls, like our houels or hog-sties in England, hauing at the entrance a matre in stead of a doore, locked and bolted, not fearing robbery, where the house-hold holds correspondence to the house. In stead of a carued bed-sted, they haue billets of wood laid ouerthwart, vpon which, in stead of a fether-bed, they spread a matre or two. Some are so proud, that they haue their (Arras) hangings also of mattes about the walles, yet most about their beds betwixt them and the wall. Their other furniture, is two or three pots of earth to keepe water in, and to boyle such meate as they can get, a gourd or two to fetch Palme-wine, and a halfe gourd for his quaffing cup, earthen dishes for their loblolly, a basket or two by the walles for his Maria to gather cockles, with a snap-sacke for himselfe made of rindes of trees to carry his prouant, with his Tobacco and Pipe, and thus is their house furnished. When they goe abroad each weareth one of those snap-sackes on his shoulder, wherein he carrieth his prouision and Tobacco (which in no wise must be long from his mouth) with his do-little sword by his side, made by themselves of such iron as is brought them; hauing also his bow and quiuer full of poysoned arrowes, pointed with iron in forme of a Snakes-sting, or else a case of Iauelins or Darts, pointed with iron of a good breadth and sharpe; and sometime with both. They are bigge and well set men, strong and courageous, of a ciuill-heathen disposition. They keepe themselves for the most part vnto their owne wiues, of whom they are not a little iealous. I could not learne their Reli- 60 gion what it is: they haue some Images, yet know there is a God aboue: for when wee asked them of their wooden Puppets, they would lift vp their hands to heauen; more they knew not: but howsoeuer it comes to passe, their children are all circumcised. They are very iust and true, and theft is punished with present death. When any dieth, a little thatched shed is set ouer his his funerall hearfe, vnder which in earthen pots they continually keepe fresh water, and in earthen platters set diuers meates, sticking about them some three or foure bones.

To the South of the Bay, some fortie or fiftie leagues distant within the Countrey, inhabiteth a very fierce people which are man-eaters, which sometime infest them. The Moors of Sierra Leona feed on Rice, of which they haue no great quantitie, sowing only what is needfull, in places neare to their houses, where they haue burnt vp the wood, not hauing otherwise so much free ground: they sow also another little seed which they call Pene, of which they make bread, not much vnlike to Winter-sauory seed. They haue some few hennes about their houses, but no other flesh, except sometime they get a Fawne of the wilde Deere, running in the Mountaines (not many) or some fowle. They feed also vpon Herbs, Cockles, Oysters, whereof they haue great store growing on the rockes and trees by the sea-side, but of a flash taste. They take much good fish with waues and other deuices. They feed also much on rootes, and plant about their houses many Plantan-trees, Gourds, Potatoes, Pompions and Guinne-Pepper. But Tobacco is planted about euery mans house, which seemeth halfe their food: the boll of their Tobacco-pipe is very large, and stands right vpward, made of clay well burnt in the fire. In the lower end thereof they thrust in a small hollow cane, a foot and halfe long, thorow which they sucke it, both men and women drinking the most part down, each man carrying in his snap-sack a small purse (called Tuffio) full of Tobacco, and his Pipe. The women doe the like in their wrappers, carrying the Pipe in their hands. Vnto their Tobacco they adde nothing, but rather take from it: for I haue seene them straying forth the iuyce of the leaues, being Greene and fresh, before they cut and drie it (making signes that otherwise it would make them drunke) then doe they shread it small, and drie it on a sherd vpon the coles. We beheld in a certaine Iland neare (and no where else) halfe a dozen of Goats, but could not get a taile of one all our time.

They haue innumerable sorts of fruits, growing wilde in their woods; whole woods of Limmon trees, especially a little on this side the watering place neare the Towne, and some few Orange trees. Their drinke is for the most part water; yet the men deuour much Palmito wine, which they call Moy, giuing little or none to the women. It is strange to behold their manner of climbing these trees, which haue neither boughes nor branches, saue only on the top, being also of great height and bignesse: with a withe he graspeth his body and the tree together, and so bearing backe his body, and lifting vp his withe before him, he foots it vp with such speed and certaintie, comming downe againe also so orderly, bringing his gourd full of wine on his arme, that it was admirable. They haue diuers sorts of Plummes, one like a wheaten Plumme, whole some and sauoury: a blacke one also, as bigge as a Horse-plumme, much esteemed, hauing an aromaticke sauour: Mansamillias like to a wheaten Plumme, very dangerous, as are likewise the boughes of the tree, full of sappe, perillous to the sight, if it should happely flye in. They haue Beninganions about as bigge as a Limmon, reddish on the rinde, very wholesome: another fruit called Beguill, as bigge as an apple, with a rough knottie skinne, which being pared, it eateth like a Strawberry, being like it also in colour and graine, of which wee did eate many: there is store of wilde grapes in the woods, of a wooddie and bitterish taste. They eat the nuts roasted which fall from the Palmito tree: they vse small store of Pepper and graines, this in Surgerie, that in Cookery. They haue certaine fruits growing sixe or eight together on a bunch, each as long and bigge as a mans finger, of a browne yellowish colour, and somewhat downie, containing within the rinde a certaine pulpie substance of pleasant taste; I know not how wholesome. There grow in the woods trees like Beeches, bearing fruits like Beanes, of which I obserued three kinds: one great and tall, bearing a cod like a Beane-cod, which hath in it foure or fve square Beanes, almost like the seed of a Tamarinde, enclosed with a hard pill like a shell, within which is a yellow kinnell, a dangerous poison vsed by the Negros, to enueneome their arrowes; they call the fruit Ogon. The second is lesse, his cod crooked byas-wise, of a thicke rinde, sixe or seuen inches in the bending, and halfe so much in breadth, containing fve large beanes of an inch long. The third is large, hath short leaues like the former, the fruit much bigger, on a strong wooddie stalke, thicke and massie, a little indented on the sides, nine inches long, and fve broad: within which are fve long beanes, larger then the other, called by them Quenda, which they affirme also to be dangerous.

I saw Trees like Willowes, bearing fruits like Pease-cods. They haue a fruit called Gola, which growes vp further in the Countrey, inclosed in a shell; it is hard, reddish, bitter, about the bignesse of a Wal-nut, with diuers corners and angles: this fruit they much set by, chewing it with the rinde of a certaine Tree, then giuing it to the next, and he hauing chewed it to the next, so keeping it a long while (but swallowing none of the substance) before they cast it away, to which they attribute great vertue for the teeth and gummies, these Negros being vsually as well tched as Horses. This fruit passeth also amongst them for monie, this happie-haplesse-people knowing none other. They plant also Potatoes, and higher within Land, Cotton, called manma, wherof with a Spindle they make a good Threed, and weaue it artificially, making cloth thereof a quarter broad, to make couerings for their members, and being sewed together, jackets and Breeches. They haue another Wood called Cambe, wherewith they dye their Purles and Mats.

- Limon Tree. Mats red. The Limon Tree much resembleth a Crab-Tree, and is exceeding full of prickles, carrying a slender leafe like a Willow, abounding with fruit as our Crab-trees, beginning to ripen in August, and continuing on the Trees till October; whither they beare twice a yeere I know not.
- Plantan Trees or Reeds. The Tree which beareth Plantans is of a reasonable height, the bodie about the bignesse of a mans thigh, and seemeth to be an annuall Plant, and in my iudgement might better bee accounted amongst Reedes then Trees; the bodie not being of wooddie substance, compact of many leaues, wrapped close one vpon another in manner of an Artichoke stalk, adorned with leaues in stead of boughes from the very ground, which are for the most part about two ells long, and some ell broad, hauing a very large rib in the middle thereof. The fruit is a bunch of ten or twelue Plantans, each a span long, and almost as thicke as a mans writ, some-what crooked or bending inwards, growing on a leaue stalke on the mids of the Plant, at the first greene, growing yellow as they ripen, and tender: the rinde being stripped off, the substance within is also yellowish, pleasant in taste. Beneath the fruit on the same stalke hangs downe a leaue tuft, sharpe-pointed, which seemeth to haue bene the flowre, which I know not whether it hath any seed or no. They call this fruit Bannanas, and haue reasonable plentie: they are ripe in September and October: we carryed some to Sea greene, which lay fixe weekes in ripening.
- Bannanas.
- Guinny Pepper. Guinny Pepper is not plentifull, it groweth in the Woods wilde, a small Plant like Priuet, or Pricke-wood, adorned with little slender leaues, bearing a small fruit like vnto our Barberie in forme and colour, greene at first, turning as it ripeneth, red; but not growing in bunches as Barberies, but heere and there two or three together about the stalke: they call it Bangue. Of their Pene whence they make their bread is spoken, a small slender herbe like grasse, the stalke full of Seed, not inclosed with any huske; the same I thinke which the Turkes call Cuscus, the Portugals Ifunde.
- Millet or Panike.
- Palmito Tree. The Palmito Tree is strait high, knottie (only in the rinde) the wood of a soft substance without boughes, except in the top, those also seeming rather Reeds then boughes, being all pithie within, inclosed with a hard rinde: the leafe long and slender in manner of Sword grasse, or the flagge of Calamus: the boughes are from the bodie of the Tree some yard or better in length, beset on both sides with sharpe and strong prickles, standing like the teeth of a Saw, but longer. It beareth a small fruit like to an Indian Nut, as bigge as a Chestnut, inclosed in a hard shell, and streaked with threeds on the out-sides, contayning a kernell of a hard hornie substance without taste. The people eat them roasted, and call the Tree Tobell, and the fruit Bell. The manner of extracting the Wine is this: they cut off one of the branches within some spanne of the head, a little opening the place by incision, and thereto make fast the mouth of a guord, which in foure and twentie houres will be filled with a cleere whitish water, distilling from the Tree of good rellish and strong, wherewith the people will be drunke.
- Oyster Trees. There grow likewise within the Bayes great store of Oysters on Trees, resembling Willowes in forme, but the leafe broad and of thicknesse like Leather, bearing small knops like those of the Cypress. From this Tree hang downe many branches, (each about the bignesse of a good walking sticke) into the water, smooth, lithe, pithy within, ouer-flowne with the tyde, and hanging as thicke of Oysters as they can sticke together, being the only fruit the Tree beareth, begotten thereof, as it seemeth, by the Salt-water.
- Fishes. Fishes they haue many of ordinary kind, and some which seemed to vs extraordinarie: Mulletts, Raies, Thorne-backes, Old-wiues with beetle Browes, Fishes like to Pikes, Gar-fishes, Caul-lions (like Mackerell) Sword-fishes with snowts a yard long, toothed on both sides like the teeth of a Saw, Sharkes, Dog-fishes; Sharkers, like a Sharke, but hauing a snowt flat and broad like a Shouell; Shoormakers, hauing on each side the mouth pendants like Barbels, and grunting like Hogges, &c. We caught in an houre fixe thousand of a kind, like Bleakes.
- Fowles. Of Fowles are Pellicans, white, as bigge as Swannes, with a large and long bill; Hearnies, Curlews, Boobies, Oxe-eyes, with diuers strange kindes of water-fowles. On Land are great numbers of gray Parrets, as also store of Guinny Hennes, which are very hurtfull to their Rice. This is a beautifull Fowle, about the bignesse of a Pheasant, with parti-coloured feathers. I saw also among the Negres many Porcupine Quills, with other strange Fowles in the Woods, whereof we knew not the names. There are store of Monkeyes leaping to and fro the Trees, Lions, Tygres, Ounces on the Mountaines; heere are Elephants but no store; wee saw but three, for they are further within Land. The Negres told vs of a strange beast (which the Interpreter called a Carbuncle), oft seene, yet only by night, hauing a stone in his fore-head, incredibly shining and giuing him light to feed, attentue to the least noyse, which he no sooner heareth, but he presently couereth the same with a flme or skinne, giuen him as a naturall couering, that his splendor betray him not. The Commodities here are few, but are further vp, viz. Gold and Elephants teeth, which at certaine times of the yeare, the Portugals get of them for Rice, Salt, Beads, Bels, Garlick, French Bottles, Copper Kettles; low-prized Knives, Hats, Linen checkered like Barbers Aprons, Lattin Balons, edge-tooles, Iron barres, and sundry specious trifles, but for your Toyes they will not giue Gold in this place but Victuals.
- Wild beasts.
- Carbuncle, a beast strange, if true.
- This diligent Observer hath taken likes paines touching Soldania, but because wee touch there often,*

§. II.

10

His place is rather a Bay then Cape or Point, not hauing any land, much more bearing out then the rest, it lyeth in twentie three degrees, thirtie eight minutes of South latitude, hath variation fiteene degrees fortie minutes, hauing on either side breaches, which make it easie to be discerned, lying some league from the Mayne West South-west. Right from the Bay is deepe water to Sea-ward, but when you are entred, the ground is so shelue, that you shall haue one Anchor aground on the North in twentie two, and your other in about sixtie fathomes, and in some places more inward, not two foot at a low water, and ouer that, deepe againe neere the shoare, yet all soft Ozie ground. The land within a mile or two is high, stonie, barren, full of small Woods. In the bottome of the Bay runne two Riuer, the Land about them sunken, sandie Land: forth these Riuer, came so strong a fresh, that the flood neuer stils them, although it floweth at least two fathomes, wherewith the water is thicke and muddie. Great store of Canes come downe, of which wee had seene some store, twentie or thirtie leagues off at Sea. It lyeth open to a North-west wind, we caught heere Smelts of a foot long, and Shrimps of ten inches. The best fishing is on the sandie shoare of the low Land, neere which the Natiues catch many with strong Nets. A ledge of Rockes trending alongst, breakes off the force of the Sea. Within the Woods, we found on the low Land, infinite numbers of water Melons, which yeelded good refreshing: the Riuer nothing, saue hurt to one by an Allegator, the water not also very good, but wooding plentie.

Strange trees.

The place seemeth not very populous. We saw not at any time about twentie together: the men are comely, lustie, tall and wel-set, of a tawnie colour, wearing no apparel, but a Girdle made of rindes of Trees to couer their priuities: the haire on their beards blacke, and reasonable long; on their heads likewise, which they pleate and frizzle very curiously, neither haue they bad sinels on their bodies. Behind on their Girdles are many Trinkets, fastned with Allegators teeth, some hollow to carrie Tallow to keepe their Darts bright, which are their chiefe Weapons (of which each carries a small bundle) and a faire Lance artificially headed with Iron, and kept as bright as Siluer. Their Darts are made dangerously with holes on each side backe-ward. They carry about them certaine Kniues, like Butchers Kniues, artificially made. They therefore regard no Iron, nor will barter for any thing but Siluer, for which we bought a sheepe for twelue pence, a Cow for three shillings and sixe pence, they asked Beads into the bargaine, for which yet alone they would giue nothing, saue a little Milke brought downe in gourds, excellent sweet and good.

Their Cattell haue great bunches on their fore shoulders, like a Sugar-loafe in fashion and quantitie, which is a grissie substance, and good meat; their beefe not loose, like that of Soldania, but fast and good, little differing from English; as also their sheep, which haue tayles weighing twenty eight pounds a peice, therefore vsually cut off from the Ewes, least it should hinder their breeding. In the woods neere about the Riuer, is great store of beasts, as big as Munkies, a h-coloured, with a small head, long taile like a Fox, garled with white and blacke, the furre very fine. Wee killed some with Peece, not being able to take them aliuie. There are Bats as big bodied almost as Conies, headed like a Foxe, with a hairie furre in other things like Bats. We killed one, whose wings extended an ell in length: their cry is shrill and loud. Here are Hernes plentie, white, blacke, blew, and diuers mixed colours; many bastard Hawkes; birds of infinite varietie of colour, hauing for the most part crests on their heads, like Peacocks. There are store of Lizards and Chamelions, which agree to Plinies description; onely it is airie, that they lue of aire without other meat: for hauing kept one aboard but a day, we might perceiue him to hunt for flies, in a very strange manner. Hauing espied her setting, he suddenly shootes a thing forth of his mouth (perhaps his tongue) lothsome to behold, the fashion almost like a Bird-bolt, wherewith he takes and eates them, with such speed, that a man can scarcely discern what he doth; euen in the twinkling of an eie. In the woods on the hills are many great Spiders, which spin their webs from tree to tree, it being very excellent strong silke of a yellow colour, as if it were died by art. I found also here great Wormes, in manner of our Grubs, with many legges, which are enclosed within a double cod of white silke, hanging on the trees.

There groweth great store of herbe Aloes, and also Tanterind trees by the waters side. Here was also store of a very strange Plant, which I deeme a wild Coco-nut, sel some growing to the height of a tree, of a shrubby nature, with many long prickled stalkes, of some two yards long. At the ende of each foot-stalke, standeth a lase about the bignesse of a great Cabbage leafe, sharp round halfe the leafe, like sword grasle. From the tops thereof amongst the leaues, come forth many many woodie branches, as thicke set commonly with fruit as they can stand, one by another (I haue seen fortie together clustering on one branch) about the bignesse of a great Katherine pear, and like it in colour being ripe, at the first greenish, fashioned almost like a sheepes bell, with a rinde bearing forth neere the head, flat at the top, and smooth; within which rinde is contained a hard substance, almost like the Coco-nut-shel, in which is included a round white kernell, of a hard gristly substance, yet to be eaten: and within that (for it is hollow) is about a spoonefull of pleasant sweet water and coole, like milke, or that rather of the Coco-nut.

Here groweth also another as big as a Pear tree, thicke set with boughes and leaues, like those of the Bay-tree, bearing a great foot-ball fruit (such is the round forme) sticking to a strong stalk, diuided by certaine seames into foure quarters. The rind of it beeing cut greene, yeelds a clammy substance, sauouring like Turpentine. The rind is very thicke, with which I found diuers parcels packed together, almost like the substance that groweth on trees, but harder, rather like a piece of browne woody Agarike, being thirteene in number, couched neatly together, within each of which is contained another great kernell of a darkish white colour, hard, bitter, and vnpleasant of tast.

Socotora.

In Socotora, the Guzerats and English build them houses for the time of their stay, sleight with stones (the whole land seemeth nothing else) and pieces of wood laid ouerthwart, couered with Reed and Date branches to keepe out the Sunne, for raine in that time they feare not. About the head of the Riuer, and a mile further into the land, is a pleasant Valley replenished with Date-trees. On the East side is Dibree a little Towne, little inhabited, except in their haruest of Dates.

Dibree.

Strange winds

The King of Cussem in Arabibia ha h here
foure Iles.

Irmanas two.

Socotora.

In this Valley the wind bloweth with such violence in Iune and Iuly, that it is strange; yet within a flight shot off towards the Town of Delisba, ouer against the road, you shal not haue a breath of wind. About an hundred yeers since, this land was conquered by the King of Cauxem (or Cussem, as the Arabs pronounce it) a King of no great force, able to make two or three thousand souldiors: he hath this, and the two Irmanas, and Abba del curia subiect to him. The two Irmanas, or two Brethren, are stonie, small, barren, hauing nothing but Turtles or Tortoises, not inhabited. Abba de la curia is large, hath store of Goates, and some fresh water, not aboue three or foure inhabitants, as we were certified. The Kings sonne Amor Benzaid resideth at Socotora, which he ruleth during his fathers pleasure. They haue trade to the Iles of Comoro, and to Melinde, for which he hath heere two good Frigats, wherewith they fetch Rice and Melo from the maine, which is their chiefe food.

The Arabs
there.

Their armes.

Persons.

Apparell.

The Arabians here are in manner slaues to the Snakee or Prince, are all souldiours, and attend on him when he commands; some of them are shot. Moreover, euery of them weares a kind of wood-knife, or crooked dagger on their left side, without which they dare not bee seene abroad. They haue also thin, broad, painted Targets. Their dagger handles and chapes, the better sort set forth with Siluer, the other with Red Latten. They are tawney, industrious, ciuill in gesture: the women are some of them reasonable white, much like to a Sun-burned countrey maid in England. The men are of stature like ours, well proportioned in their limmes, wearing their haire most of them long, binding a cloth or Turbant about the same like the Turkes, and a cloath wrapped about their middles, which hangeth downe to their knees; not wearing vsually other apparell, except sometimes a paire of sandals on their feet, fastened with thongs; carrying their sword naked on their shoulders, or hanging from the shoulder in the sheath by a strap, or else on their arme; and thus they march vp and downe. They loue Tobacco, but are loth to giue any thing for it.

Their women.

Galantry.

Their children

Popish argument of faith.

Diuers of them sling a Pintado or other cloth in manner of an Irish mantle ouer their shoulders, and others make them shirts and surpleses of white Calico: some weare a paire of linnen breeches vnder, like the Guzerates. But their women goe altogether in these smockes hanging downe to the ground, of red, blew, or for the most part of a light black colour, being died Calicoes: and ouer their heads they put a cloth, with which (when they lust) they hide their faces, making very dainty to be seene, yet are scarcely honest. And though the men be very poore, and haue but to defend necessitie, yet their women (whereof some keepe foure, five, or sixe, as many as they are able) are so laden with Siluer, and some also with some Gold, that I haue seene one not of the best, which hath had in each eare at least a dozen of great Siluer rings, almost like Curtaine rings, with as many smaller hanging in them: two Carkanets or chaines of siluer about her necke, and one of Gold bosses; about her wrists, tenne or twelue Manillias of Siluer, each as big as ones little finger, but hollow, one about another, on one arme: almost euery finger laden with rings, and the small of her legs with siluer rings like horselockes. And thus adorned, they cannot stirre, but they make a noyse like Morris-dauncers. They are kept closely by their iealous husbands. They delight in Christall, Amber, or Currall beads, but haue little to buy them, but will either beg them, or make a swap with you in priuate. The young children (except of a few of better sort) go naked till they come to some age. They are married at tenne, or twelue yeares olde. They call themselves Musselmen, that is, Catholikes, or true beleeuers, according to their false faithlesse faith of Mohomet: yea they alledge this reason for themselves (let Iesuite-Catholikes acknowledge their owne) the great multitude of them, and the small number of vs, all the world, say they, being

ing of our Religion, and but a handfull of yours. They eate their meat on a Mat spread on the ground, but neither vse Spoones nor Kniues (hands are the elder) in vnmannely manner: they drinke vsually water, yet in secret can be content to be drunke with wine. They make in the time of yeare some wine of Dates, pleasant and strong.

Their diet.

Thus much for the Conquerours. They call the conquered Caffars (misbeleeuers, or if you will heretikes) and subiect them to great slavery, insomuch that some remaine in the Mountaines, liuing in a wild liberty like beasts, the other not suffered to haue any weapons. They are well shaped, more swart then the Arabs, weare nothing on their heads, weare their haire long, I suppose neuer cut, staring as if they were frighted. About their middles they weare a cloath wrapped about them, made of Goats haire, or course wooll, wouen by themselves, on their feet slight sandals. Their women goe all in smocks of coloured Calico, or course cloth hanging to the ground, on their heads vsually nothing: in imitation of the Arabs, haue Manillas of earth painted or of yron, about their armes and legs, beads in stead of Karkānets, painting their faces with yellow and blacke spots, loathsome to behold. For Religion, they are meere Heathen all of them, as the Arabians certified vs, obseruing no rites of Marriage, but vse their women in common. Their naturall language is much different from the Arabique, which yet the most learne. They liue very miserably, and many of them are famished with hunger. Flesh they are not permitted to kill, so that they are forced to liue of fish which they take at Sea, and by their share of Dates, not hauing wherewith to buy Rice, except with the vse of their womens bodies to the Gazerales, while they remaine there. Such as haue the keeping of the Cattell, maintaine themselves with the milke.

Cattell and victuals.

Eshac a kind of Capers.

Coho. Other notes and remembrances.

I could learne of no Merchandise the Iland yeeldeth, but Aloes, Sanguis Draconis, and Dates, and as they say, on the shoare of Aba del curia, blacke Ambergreese. Of Aloes, I suppose they could make yearly more then Christendome can spend, the herbe growing in great abundance, being no other then Semper vivum, in all things agreeing to that description of Dioscorides, in seed, stalke, &c. It is yet all of a red pricklie sort, and much chamfered in the leaues, so full of a rosin-oyce, that it is ready to breake with it. The chiefe time to make it, is when the winds blowe Northerly, that is, about September, and that after the fall of some raine, which being then gathered, they cut in small pieces, and cast into a pit made in the ground, well cleansed from filth and pained: there it lieth to ferment in the heat of the Sunne, whereby it floweth forth. Thence they take and put it in skinnies, which they hang vp in the wind to dry, where it becommeth hard. They sold vs for twentie Rials a Quintall, which is an hundred and three pound English: but we were after told, that they sold to others for a whitte, which considering the abundance and easie making, may be credible. Their Date trees beare fruit twice a yeare; one haruest was in Iuly whiles we were there. It is a principall part of their sustenance, pleasant in tast: and when they are through-ripe, are laid on a heap vpon a skin lying sloping, whence distilleth a liquor, receiued in earthen pots placed in the earth, and is their Date-wine, referred for drinke, wherewith they will also be drunke. Those dates beeing thus drained, they take out their stones, and pack them hard into a skinne, which will so keepe long. Another meanes to preserue them, is by cutting before they are through ripe, and taking out their stone, to dry them: these are the best of all, and eate as if they were candied: whole they will not keepe. In haruest time in euery Valley where these trees grow, the King hath a Deputy which seeth all gathered, and brought to a certaine place (none daring to touch a Date vpon paine of death without order, or seuer punishment) where he diuideth them in three equall parts; one for the King, one for the Arabs, and the third for the Caffars: which are after distributed seuerally, but not alike to each.

This Iland hath store of Ciuil cats, which the Caffars take in the Mountaines with traps, and sell them for twelue pence a piece to such as will buy them. Flesh is deare, teane Rials of eight a Cow, one Goat, or two sheepe for a Rial of eight; their cattell good and fast flesh, like English beefe: their Goats large and good flesh, their sheep small, like our English sheepe, bearing course wooll: of Goats and Sheep they haue great abundance. They make very good butter, but it is alway soft like Creame, at foure pence or sixe pence a pound, Goats milke at three pence a quart, store of Hennes, but five for a Riall of eight, or twelue pence a piece. In the whole Iland are not aboue one or two Horses, very small of the Arabian breed, and some Camels. At Delisha they take much good fish, Lobsters and others. On the Strand groweth cotton Plants, but few: there groweth also amongst the stones a shrubby Plant, with thicke, round, Greene leaues, as big as a shilling, with a fruit like Capers (of which it is a kind) called Eshac, eaten in Sallets. Orenge there are few and deare, exceeding sweet Basil: and on the shoare many faire shels are found, with cuttle bones, and peeble Oyster shels, which the people affirme to driue thither: for there are none found, yet shels abundant.

They are beggers, buy what they can, beg what they may, yet giue faire vñage. Their best intertainment is a China dish of Coho, a blacke bitterish drinke, made of a berry like a Bay berry, brought from Mecca, lapped off hot, good for the head and stomacke. And thus much for his discourses of these places, to which I thought good to adde these notes taken out of his Iournall.

November the twenty ninth, 1607. in thirty foure degrees, we saw a monstrous ouergrowne Whale

A huge Whale. Whale comming vp close vnder our sterne, and spouting water in great quantitie; having much trash growne about his head which we iudged to be Limpets, and other Shel-fish. At his going downe he turned vp his taile, which we deemed neere as broad as our after Deck, estimating him to be at the least one hundred tunnes in weight.

Barrennesse.
A stranger tree.
* Of these Churches and of this whole Iland, See Iohn d' Castro. For they were in times past Christians, which (as all other not of their Faith) the Mahometans call Cassars: but rude and brutish, the easier pray to these Arabs.

In Socotora at our first landing, the people hauing receiued before iniurious dealings from the Portugals, (which, they said, had carried some of them away) were all fledde from vs for feare to the Mountaines. Their Towne which they had left is built of stone houses covered with Rafts and Palme-branches, with artificiall doores and wooden lockes. Neere the Sea side stands their Church enclosed with a wall in manner of a Church-yard; within it a couple of Crosses and an Altar, with Frankinsence, Wood and Gumme. They said (when we came to speech) that this was not Socotora but Abba del Curia, which wee after found false, wee walked vp a wood of three mile, not seeing so much as a sprig of greene graspe, but many Date trees, and one other tree very strange, about the height of a man, or little better, great at the roote, and litle and litle toward the top where it ended almost piked; the trunk smooth, not covered with bark, casting forth in the top some branches of a Cubite long void of leaves, bringing forth Reddish floweres, which after change into a fruit first greene, in forme and bignesse not vnlike to the Date: within which is containd many small whitish kernels, bitter, as are also the branches, full of rousious substance. Whether this be the Mirrhe I leaue to better iudgements. They also saw another Church with a Crosse on the top of it.

Occurents in India touching the English, Dutch, Portugals, and the Mogols dealing with the English.

Surat.
Hee neuer calls C. Hawkins, Lord Embassador, but C. Hawkins. For he, Master Canning and Master Edwards had no such Commission, but only Letters from his Maiestie, and orders from the Company, &c.
The danger which men of War occasion to their Countrymen, honest Merchants, especially amongst remote and Ethnik people, I adde not the scandall of their Religion and Countrey. Portugall treachery and hostilitie.

The eight and twentieth of August, 1608. Captaine Hawkins with the Merchants and certaine others landed at Surat, where the Captaine was receiued in a Coach, and carried before the Dawne. Wee had poore lodging allotted vs, the Porters lodge of the Custome house: whither the next morning came the Customers who searched & tumbled our Trunkes to our great dislike, which had yet brought ashore only necessities. We were inuited to Dinner to a Merchant where wee had great cheere: but in the midlt of our Banquet sowre sawce, for hee was the man that had sustayned almost all the losse in a ship that Sir Edward Michelborne tooke. The Captaine also of that ship dined with vs. Which when it was there told vs, the Captaine answered that hee neuer heard of such a matter; and rather iudged it done by Flemmings: but they said, that they knew certainly that they were English, deploring their hard fortunes, and affirming that there were Theeues in all Countries: nor would they impute that fault to honest Merchants. This speech somewhat reuiued vs. The day after, Mede Colce the Captaine of that ship aforesaid inuited vs to Supper.

The second of October, wee imbarqued our goods and prouision, gaue Shek Abdelreheime Present, and got dispatch to depart: the Customers denying leaue, till they had searched the ship whether she had discharged all her goods, to ship any new; but meeting with Frigats they supposing them Malabars, durst not aduenture their own Riuer. These Frigats were Portugals, which desired one to come talke with them, and Master Bucke rashly doing it, they detayned him, and after (I and Nicholas Vfflet being ashore) Master Marlow and the rest beganne to flee; the Cockson would haue fought, which he would not permit, but running a ground through ignorance of the Channell, they were taken going on the sandie Iland by Portugall treacherie, and the fault of some of themselues, nineteene with Master Bucke: but the Gunne put off the Pinnace, and notwithstanding the Portugall Bullets, rowed her to Surat. Foure escaped by swimming and got that night to Surat, besides Nicholas Vfflet and my selfe, neere twentie miles from the place. Yet had we resisted, we wanted shot, and in number, & armour they very much exceeded vs. The fourth, the Captaine of the Frigats sent a reuiling Letter to the Gouvernour of the Towne, calling vs Lutherans and Theeues, and said we were Flemmings and not English; charging him (on continuance of their friendship) to send aboard the Captaine with the rest of vs: which Abdelreheime not only denied, but in the Mogols name commanded him to render the goods and men.

The fifth, came a Captaine of one of the Frigats which vsed peremptorie words, and before the Gouvernour stood vpon it that the King of Spaine was Lord of those Seas, and that they had in Commission from him to take all that came in those parts without his Passe.

The thirteenth, the Gouvernour called all the chiefe Merchants of the Towne vpon their conscience to value our cloth (before carryed to his house) which they did at a farre vnder rate, the Gouvernour affirming that hee must and would haue it, the Captaine denying his content.

On the sixteenth, we were forced to accept for some of our cloth in their hands, promise of a little more, and were permitted to carrie away the rest: causing vs to leaue fiftie pieces, and fourteene teene Denonshire Kersies for the King, with nine and twentie other Kersies; and fifteene clothes for Shek Ferred, keeping also the foure clothes which wee referued for Presents for the King. Wee were otherwise molested by a contention betwixt Shek Ferred and Mocrow Bowcan (or Mocreb Can) about the Custome-house, that wee could not get our goods from thence. Wee heard that the Portugals sold our goods for halfe that they cost: Our men were sent to Goa.

The fifteenth of December, came Mo. Bowcan with a Iesuite Padre Peniero; to this our Capitaine shewed kindnesse for hope of his men; to the other he gaue Presents: both dealt treacherously in requitall, the Iesuite (as it was reported by Mo. Bowcan himselfe) offering a Jewell which he said was worth two hundred thousand Rials to betray vs. This day came to vs R. Carelesse an Englishman, who had long liued amongst the Portugals, from whom hee now fledde for feare of punishment for carrying necessaries to the Dutch at Muselpatan, desiring to bee entertained, which we did with much circumspection.

The seuen and twentieth, Mo. Bowcan desired great abatements vpon our cloth, or else hee would returne it, and (will wee will wee) abated two thousand seuen hundred and fiftie Manudies, before hee would giue vs licence to fetch vp the rest of our goods to make sales. My selfe was very ill of the bloody Fluxe (whereof Master Dorchester dyed) of which that Englishman Carelesse, (next vnder God) recouered me. I learned of him many matters, as namely of the great spoile done the last yeere to the Portugals by the Hollanders, who lying before Malacca with sixteene ships, inclosing the Towne with helpe of other Kings by Sea and Land; newes was carryed to the Vice-Roy, (then before Achen accompanied with all the Gallants of India) hauing with him a very great Fleet of Ships, Gallies and Frigats, and foure thousand Souldiers, being commanded by the King to take Achen, and there to build a Castle and appoint an Alphandira; and thence to goe and spoile Ior and chastise the Moluccas for giuing the Hollanders traffique, being minded to roote out the Holland name in those parts, for which purpose came two thousand Castilians from the Manillas.

Andrew Hurtado then gouerned within Malacca, and sent word of their present distresse, vpon which the Vice-Roy weighed from Achen (which otherwise had beene spoyled) whereof the Dutch Generall aduertised, got his men and Artillery a-boord, and went forth to meete him; where after a long and bloudie fight, with much losse on both sides, the Dutch departed, enforced to stop the leakes of their Admirall, likely otherwise to perish. The Portugals let slip this opportunitie, and fell to merriments and bragges of their Victorie, not looking any more for the Hollanders, who hauing stopped their leakes at Ior, new rigged and returned vpon the Portugals, whom they found disordered and feasting ashore, where they funke and burned the whole Fleet, making a cruell execution: and had not the Vice-Roy before sent sixe shippes on some other seruice, they had beene all heere vtterly extinguished. After this fell such sicknesse in the City, that most of them dyed, amongst which the Vice-Roy was one: and shortly after the Gouernour of the Spaniards in the Moluccas, so that their strength was laid in the dust, and the Archbishoppe made and yet * remayneth Vice-Roy.

This last yeere the Malabarres vexed the Portugals, and tooke or funke of them at times, sixtie saile or more.

This yeere also was expected a Vice-Roy to come with a strong Fleet, to driue the Hollanders out of India.

This Fleet consisted of nine shippes of Warre, and sixe for the Voyage: they were separated in the calme of Guinea, and neuer met together after. Two of them came to Mosambique, where they were fired of the Hollanders, who also much distressed the Castle, but could not take it: and the time of the yeere requiring their departure, they set sayle for Goa, to the number of fifteene shippes and one Pinnasse, where they rode at the Barre, challenging the great Capitaine Andrew Hurtado, who durst not visit them. Another of that Voyage hauing aduise that the Hollanders rode at the Barre, put to the Northward, where they presently landed their money and goods and set fire of their shippe, to saue the Dutch a labour: and lastly, the Souldiers fell together by the eares for the sharing of the money. This Fleet departing from Goa sailed alongst the Coast of Malabar, spoiling and burning all they could meet with. There was report of leaue giuen them by the Samorine, to build a Castle at Chaul.

This moneth here was also newes of an Ormus ship taken by the Malabarres, and three Frigats: and shortly after of a Fleet of twentie five Frigats from Cochin, whereof sixteene were taken and burnt by the Malabars, which the rest escaped, if miserable spoile be an escape: also of fiftie Frigats and Galiots of the Malabars spoiling on their Coast.

In Ianuary, came other newes of thirtie Frigats which put for Diu richly laden, taken by the Malabars, beeing at this time Masters of these Seas. They are good Souldiers, and carry in each Frigat one hundred Souldiers, and in their Galiots, two hundred.

The first of February, the Capitaine departed with fittie Peons, and certaine Horsemen.

bout this time was great stirre touching the Queene Mothers ship, which was to be laden for Mocha: the Portugals then riding at the Barre with two and twentie Frigats, threatned to carry her to Diu: at length they fell to compounding, the Portugals demanding an hundred thousand Mamudies for her Cartas or Passe, and after twentie thousand; at last taking one thousand Rials and odde money, with diuers Presents, which the Mogolls were faine to give them. Mo. Bowcan gaue me faire words, but the Diuell was in his heart, he minded nothing lesse indeed then payment of his debts, seeking also to deduct some, others imbefelled, striking off by new accounts seuentene thousand of one and fortie thousand. I thought he meant to shift, if hee could, and pay nothing, secretly departing the Towne, owing much to certaine Banians, who must get it when they can: at last I got his Cheet for some, though with great abatements, esteeming halfe better secured, then to endanger all.

Ma'acca againe besieged.

The six and twentieth of March 1609. it was here reported that Malacca was besieged with thirtie ships of Holland, in succour of which the Vice-Roy assembled all these his Northerne Indian forces, appointing Andrew Hurtado Generall, being the more cranke, by newes of a New Vice-Roy with fourteene saile to winter at Mosambique. Meane while a ship of Cambaya which had been at Queja, came for Goga, which the Portugalls finding without Cartas, made prize of. The Customers at that time by new prices and reckonings, sought to make prize in great part of vs. I was also in the beginning of Aprill taken with a burning Feuer, which drew from me much blood, besides ten dayes fasting with a little Rice: and after my Feuer, miserable stiches tormented me. The next moneth I was visited againe with a burning Feuer.

The twelfth of May came newes that Melik Amber, King of Decan, had besieged the Citie of Aurdanagar (which had been the Metropolitan of that Kingdome, conquered by the Aca-bar) with two and twentie thousand horse, and that after diuers assaults, the Mogolls made shew to deliuer vp the Citie, vpon condition that hee would withdraw his armie some foure or fve * Cofe from thence, that they might passe with more assurance with bagge and baggage: which being done, they suddenly issued forth with all their forces vpon the vnprovidd enemy, and made a great slaughter, but feared hee would bee reuenged on those parts which were lesse able to resist. The Canchanna gathered great forces, and demanded of Surat three hundred thousand M. towards the charge, sending also for the Gouvernour, an expert Decan Souldier.

Andrew Hurtado
Vice-Roy.

The twentieth of Iune, came newes of the arriual of fve shippes at Goa, and of the Vice-Royes Death, whereupon Andrew Hurtado was chosen Vice-Roy, being the only stay left of all those parts, and reported a braue souldier. He presently gaue order for shipping to be built, intending after the breaking vp of winter to make a bolt or shaft with the Hollanders, which were now reported to lye before Malacca with eightene ships. The Portugall ships in the way had met with one of this Towne, and finding her without Cartas, brought her with them as prize for Goa, where on the Barre shee was cast away; whereupon the Gouvernour for Can-Channa, and the Customer for Mo. Bowcan seised on Tappidas the owner, a Banian, for money owing to them, whereby also we lost his debt to vs, for which we may thanke the Portugall.

Great warres

The twentieth of Iuly, Sha Selim commanded Can Channa and Manisengo, two great Commanders of his, to invade all the Kingdomes from hence to the South, euen to Cape Comori; for which a huge armie was assembling. In resistance of whom, three great Kings were combined, the King of Decan (whose chiefe Citie is Genefro) the King of Visapor, and the King of Golconda (whose chiefe Citie is Braganadar) who also gathered great forces, making head neare Bramport, vpon the Mogolls Frontiers, expecting the breaking vp of winter, both armies lying abroad in Tents.

Ascension lost.

In August I receiued flying newes of an English Pinnasse at Gandoue, which departing thence, was againe forced thither by three Portugall Frigats: I supposed that it might belong to some of our shipping, which standing for Socatora, might not be able to fetch in, and so be forced to fall on this Coast; which proued accordingly, it being the Ascensions Pinnasse, wanting water, wood, and victuall, the Master, John Elmer, with fve men and two boyes. The Master and foure of the Company came hither on the eight and twentieth, but I had no small adoe with the Townsmen of Surat, for bringing them into the Towne, they taking them from me, pretending we were but allowed Trade, indeed fearing the Portugalls, till I should send to the Nab four course off, fearing force: to which euill, was added a worle of the Portugalls comming into the Riner with fve Frigats, and carrying away the Pinnasse, weighing also the two Falcons, which they had cast by the board: and yet a worle report came the fifth of Septemb. of the casting away of the Ascension, the company about seuentie persons being saued, which the next day came to Surat, but were forced by the Towne to lye without amongst the trees and tombes, I being not able to procure leaue for the Generall himselfe (notwithstanding diuers letters of recommendation which hee brought from Mocha, besides letters from the King himselfe) into the Towne. Such is their slavish awe of the Portugalls, two Iesuits threatning fire, faggot, and vtter desolation, if they receiued any more English thither. That which I could doe, was to send them refreshing, and carry them to the Tanke, where they were conveniently lodged, yet amongst tombes.

tombes, till the Governor appointed them a more convenient place at a small Aldea two Course off, and with much ado got leave for Master Rinet, Master Jordan and the Surgeon, to come hither to provide necessaries for the rest. I had other trouble by the disorder and riot committed by some of them, especially one Thomas Tucker, which in drinke had killed a Calf, (a slaughter more then murder in India) which made mee glad of their departure, fifteen staying behind sicke, or unwilling to goe for Agra: and some returned againe.

The sixt of October, came Letters from Captaine Hawkins, importing his marriage with the daughter of an Armerian: and others in the latter end of the next moneth, for my coming to Agra. In December, we stood much in feare of Badur his coming vpon Surat, he lying within two dayes iourney, with sixe hundred horse and many foote: for which cause the Governour celled all men with the entertainment of souldiers, setting vpon my head ten men. I went to him, and told him that I had twentie English at his command, for which hee thanked mee, and freed mee of further charge. During this time, the Banians were forced to labour to barricado all the streets of the Citie: great watches were appointed at the gates, certaine peeces drawne from the Castle, and from Carode Garrison fiftie horse, which had not sufficed, had not the Governour of Amadanar sent one thousand horse, and two thousand foot to our succour: vpon newes of which forces, Badur withdrew to his Holds. Two yeeres before our coming, had this man sacked Cambaya, whereof his Grand-father had been King.

The eighteenth of January, I departed out of Surat towards Agra, willing yet to leave some notice thereof before I leave it. The Citie is of good quantitie, with many faire Merchants houses therein, standing twentie miles within the land vpon a faire Riuer. Some three miles from the mouth of the Riuer (where on the South-side lyeth a small low land ouer-flowed in time of Raine) is the Barre, where ships trade and vnlade, whereon at a spring tide is three fathome water. Over this, the Channell is faire to the Citie side, able to beare vessels of fiftie tunnes laden. This Riuer runneth to Bramport; and from thence, as some say, to Musselpatan. As you come vpon the Riuer, on the right hand stands the Castle well walled, ditched, reasonable great and faire, with a number of faire peeces, whereof some of exceeding greatnesse. It hath one gate to the Green-ward, with a draw-bridge and a small Port on the Riuer side. The Captaine hath in command two hundred horse. Before this lyeth the Medon, which is a pleasant greene, in the midst whereof is a May-pole to hang a light on, and for other pastimes on great Festiualls. On this side, the Citie lyeth open to the Greene, but on all other parts is ditched and fenced with thicke hedges, hauing three gates, of which one leadeth to Varian, a small Village, where is the ford to passe over for Cambaya way. Neare this Village on the left hand, lieth a small Aldea on the Riuer banke very pleasant, where stands a great Pagod, much resorted to by the Indians. Another Gate leadeth to Bramport, the third to Nonsary, a Towne ten cove off, where is made great store of Calico, hauing a faire Riuer coming to it. Some ten cove further lyeth Gondoree, and a little further Belfaca, the frontire Towne vpon Daman. Hard without Nonsary gate is a faire Tank sixteene square, inclosed on all sides with stone steppes, three quarters of an English mile in compass, with a small house in the midst. On the further side are diuers faire tombes, with a goodly paved court pleasant to behold: behind which groweth a small groue of Manga trees, whither the Citizens goe forth to banquet. Some halfe cove behind this place, is a great Tree much worshipped by the Banians; where they affirme a Dew to keepe, and that it hath been oftentimes cut downe and stocked vp by the rootes, at the *Moore*s command, and yet hath sprung vp againe. Neare to the Castle is the Alphandica, where is a paire of staires for lading and vnlading of goods: within are roomes for keeping goods till they be cleared, the custome being two and an halfe for goods, three for victualls, and two for money. Without this gate is the great Gondoree or Bazar. Right before this gate stands a Tree with an Arbour, whereon the Fokers (which are Indian holy men) sit in state. Betwixt this and the Castle, on the entrance of the Greene, is the market for horse and cattell. A little lower on the right hand over the riuer, is a little pleasant Towne, Ranele, inhabited by a people called Naites, speaking another language, and for the most part Sea-men: the houses are faire therein, with high steps to each mans doore, the streets narrow: they are very friendly to the English. Heere are many pleasant Gardens, which attract many to passe there their time: and on the trees are infinite number of those great Bats, which wee saw at Saint Augustines, hanging by the clawes on the boughes, making a shrill noise. This fowle the people say, ingendreth in the eare; on each wing it hath a hooke, and giueth the yong sucke.

The Winter heere beginneth about the first of Iune, and dureth till the twentieth of September, but not with continuall raines, as at Goa, but for some sixe or seuen dayes euery change and full, with much wind, thunder and raine. But at the breaking vp, commeth alway a cruell storme, which they call the Tuffon, tearefull euen to men on land; which is not alike extreame euery yeare, but in two or three at the most. Monions heere for the South, serue in Aprill and September, and for Mocha in February and March: from the South, ships come hither in December, January and February, and from Mocha about the fifth of September, after the raines: from Ormus for the Coast of India in Nouember. Description of Bramport.

He second of January, I departed from Comuarian (a small village three Cose from Surat) to Mutta a great Aldea 7 c. 21. 8 c. to Carode, a great countrey Towne, by which on the North runneth Surat Riuer. It hath a Castle, with two hundred horse Parais good souldiers, twentie two to Curka 12 c. it is a great Village with a Riuer on the South side. In the way 7 c. is Beca, a Castle with a great Tanke, and a pleasant Groue, 23. 10 c. to Necampore a great Towne vnder the Pectopshaw. In this way on the right hand beginneth a great ridge of mountaines, which come from Amadanar-wards, neare which Badur keepeth, holding diuers strong holds thereon, that the King with all his force cannot hurt him. These Mountaines runne to Bramport: on them are bred many wilde Elephants, 24. to Dayia, 8 c. a 20 great Towne. In the mid-way you passe a stony troublesome Riuer. This Towne hath a Castle, and is almost encompassed with a Riuer, seated in a fertile soyle. 25. to Badur, 10 c. a filthy towne and full of theeues: heere is made much wine of a sweete fruit called Mewa, but I found it not wholesome, except it be burnt. This Towne is the last of note in Pectopshaws Land, who is a small King or Raiaw, a Gentile, keeping on the top of inaccessible Mountaines, which beginne at Curka, and extend many Courtes. He holdeth two faire Cities, Salere, and the other Mu- liere, where the Mamudees are coyned, each hauing two mightie Castles, which haue way to them but for two men abreast, or for an Elephant at most to get vp; hauing also in the way eigh- tie small Fortresses disperied on the Mountaines to guard the way. Vpon the top of these Moun- taines is good pasture, and abundance of graine, fountaines running thence into the Plaines. The 30 Acabar besieged him seuen yeeres, and in the end was forced to compound with him, giuing him Narampore, Dayia, and Badur, with diuers other Aldeas, for the safe conducting of his Mer- chants alongst this Plaine; so that he now remaineth this Kings friend, sends Presents yeerely, leaues one of his sonnes at Bramport, for pledge of his fealtie. He is said to haue alway in readi- nesse foure thousand Mares of a strange breed and excellent: and one hundred Elephants. 26. 7 c. to Nonderbar a Citie, short of which are many Tombes and houses of pleasure, with a Castle and a faire Tanke. seuen and twentie to Lingull, 10 c. a beastly Towne, with theeuish inhabitants, and a dirtie castle; a deepe sandie way neare the Towne. 28. 10 c. to Sindkerry, a great dirtie Towne. In the way the Gouvernour of Lingull (with others as honest as himselfe) would haue borrowed some money of me, but seeing it proue powder and shot, gaue ouer, and wee drew on 40 our Carts without trouble. On the further side of Sindkerry runneth a Riuer of brackish water, with drinking whereof, I got the bloody fluxe, which accompanied me to Bramport. 29. 10 c. to Taulneere, a theeuish way, the Towne faire, with a Castle and a Riuer, in time of raine not pas- sable without Boat. 30. 15 c. to Chupra, a great Towne. I rested two dayes by reason of raine, in which time came the Gouvernour of Nonderbar with foure hundred horse, without whose com- pany I could not haue proceeded without danger, Can-Canna hauing been beaten, and retired to Bramport, after the losse of the strong and rich Towne of Ioulnapore, whereupon the Decanes grew so insolent, that they made roades into this way, and spoyled many passengers.

The second of February, 6c. to Rawd, a countrey Village. The vnseasonable thunder, wind and raine, with my diseafe, almost made an end of me: which made vs make Mukom the third 50 and fourth, the fifth to Beawle 10c. a great towne, with a faire castle, 6. stayed by foule weather, 7. 16 c. to Rauere, a great Towne, 8. 10 c. to Bramport, where I pitched my Tent in the Armeni- ans yard, not being able for money to get an house, the Towne was so full of souldiers. Some 2 c. short of this Citie lyeth Badurpore, a faire City, and betwixt these two Cities, the Campe of Can-Canna vnder Tents, 2 c. in length (hauing some fifteene thousand Horse, two hundred faire Elephants, an hundred peeces of Ordnance of all sizes) on the North side. On the other side, within twentie or thirtie course, lay Amberchapon, an Ab:shed, and Generall of the King of Decans Forces, with some ten thousand of his owne cost, all braue souldiers, and som forty thou- sand Decanees: in so much that the Citie of Bramport had certainly been lost, had not the Prince 60 Saltan Pernis, and Raiaw Manisengo, come instantly downe with great forces. For at this time he had sent to the Can-Canna to yeeld vp the Citie vpon composition, deeming him not able to hold it against him.

This Citie is very great, but beastly, situate in a low, vnholosome aire, a very sickly place, cau- sed especially by the bad water: On the North-east is the Castle on the Riuer bank (comming from from Surat) large and well fortified. By the Castles side in the Riuer lyeth an Elephant of stone, so liuely, that a liuing Elephant comming one day to drinke, ranne against it with all his force, and brake both his teeth. The head is painted red in the fore-head; and many simple Indians worship it. Some two Cose forth of the Citie, is Can Cannas Garden called Loll bage; the whole way thereto being vnder shade trees very pleasant. Within it are diuers faire walkes, with a stately small Tanke standing square betweene foure trees, all shaded and inclosed with a wall; at the entrance without, a faire Banketting house built aloft betweene foure trees.

Artificiall Elephant.

I rested to the twelfth, for recouery (which God sent) vnder my Tent. Two dayes after my comming came newes of the sacking of Rauere, by fifteene hundred Decan Horle with other places neere thereto, we blessing God for our safe arriual, the way now not passable with one thousand Horle. I was here certified also by an Armenians Letters, of a great ouerthrow giuen to the Portugall Armada vpon the Mallabar Coast, consisting of fiftie Frigats and two Gallies, which being disperled with foule weather, were sudainly out of diuers creekes assailed by the Malabars, which was attended with spoile, fire, taking the rest fleeing. On the twelfth I rode to visit the Prince, and on the thirteenth, gaue him a Present, found him courteous, promising what I desired. The Prince had with him twentie thousand Horse, and three hundred faire Elephants, and with him, Asaph Can with some three thousand, and Emersee Rastein late King of Candbar, with some thousand old Souldiers. And during my abode in the Campe, came also Raia Manisengos with ten thousand Horse, all Resboots, and neere a thousand Elephants: so that all the Plaines for a great distance were couered with Tents very braue to behold: with the Armie came diuers great Boates for the transportation of forces ouer waters. The Prince remouing I returned to Bramport: and on the sixe and twentieth, hee beeing aduanced 3 c. towards the Enemy, I went to him to take my leaue, where newes came of the ouerthrow of certaine of Manisengos forces.

The first of March, the Gouvernor of Bramport departed for Agra, and I with him 12 c. to Barre a great Village, stonie & steep way, being the passage ouer the great ridge of Mountaines which come from Amadaurwards. About some 4 c. of this way lyeth the strong and inuincible Castle of Hassere, seated on the top of a high Mountaine, large and strong, able to receiue (as is reported) fortie or fiftie thousand Horle. And on the top are many faire Tankes and good pasture grounds. It hath had in the dayes of Badur Sha late King thereof, some sixe hundred Peeeces of Ordnance. The Acabar besieged it a long time, circling it on all sides, and at length tooke it by composition. For it is said, that there bred such an innumerable sort of Emmets or other small Wormes in all the waters, that the people swelled and burst with drinking thereof: which mortalitie caused him to compound and deliuer it, being by meere humane force inuincible. The third, 11 c. to Camla, a small Aldea, stonie, troublesome way. The fourth, to Magergom 4 c. a great Aldea, bad way. The fifth, 10 c. to Kergom a great Village, steepe way. The sixth, 13 c. to Berkul a small Village. The seuenth, 8 c. to Taxapore a small Towne. At 2 c. on this way, you passe a faire Riuer called Neruor which comes from Baroche: vpon the Banke is a prettie Towne and faire Castle, and vnder it the Ferrie place. To passe ouer with Camels is a way a C. lower on the left hand, where is an ouerfall, and not aboue three foot in the passage, but neere a mile ouer. The eight, 5 c. to Mandow, 3 c. whereof is vp a steepe stonie Mountaine, hauing way but for a Coach at most.

This ridge of Mountaines extendeth North-east and South-west. On the top at the edge of the Mountaine standeth the gate or entrance of the Citie, ouer which is built a faire Fort and House of pleasure; the walls extending all along the Mountaines side for many Coses. On the left hand at the entrance some two or three miles distant, on the toppe of a picked Mountaine standeth a strong Fort, and in other places disperled some ten or twelue more. For 2 c. or better within this gate the City is ruined all saue only Tombes and Meskites, which remayne in great numbers to this day, with some tottered walls of great Houses. The olde City is from gate to gate 4 c. long North and South, but East and West ten or twelue Coses; and yet to the East-ward of all lyeth good pasture ground for many courles. Aloft on this Mountaine are some sixteene faire Tankes here and there disperled about the Citie. That which is now standing is very faire, but small in comparison of the former, with diuers goodly buildings all of firme stone, and faire, high gates, that I suppose the like not to be in all Christendome. At the entrance on the South within the gate of the City now inhabited, as you passe along on the left hand, stands a goodly Meskite, and ouer against it a faire Palace, wherein are interred the bodies of foure Kings, with exceeding rich Tombes. By the side thereof standeth a high Turret of one hundred and seuentie steps high, built round with Galleries and Windowes to euery roome, all exceeding for goodly Ports, Arches, Pillars; the walls also all interlayed with a greene stone much beautifying. On the North-side where I came forth lyeth a piece of a foot and an halfe bore in the mouth, but the breech was in the ground. The gate is very strong with a steepe descent; and without this fixe other, all very strong, with great walled places for Courts of Guard betweene gate and gate. On this side is also a small Port, but the way thereto is exceeding steepe. All along it on the side also runneth the wall, with flankers euer here and there among; and yet is the hill so steepe of it selfe, that it is not almost possible for a man to climbe vp on all ioure to any part of it. So that to mans iudgement it is altogether inuincible; and yet was taken partly by force, partly by Treason by Hamawne, this mans Grandfather, forcing Seic Sha Selim whose Ancestors had conquered it from the Indians some foure hundred yeeres agoe. This Sha Selim was a very powerfull King of Dely, and once forced Hamawne to flye into Persia for ayde; from whence returning with Persian forces, he put him againe to the worst; who yet held out against him all his life time, as also a long time of Ecabars Raigne, flying from one Mountaine to another. Without the wals of the City on this side, the Suburbs entred 4 c. long, but all ruinate, saue certaine Tombes, Meskits and goodly Serais; no man remayning in them.

The way exceeding stony and bad at 4 c. end lyeth Lunebeira, a small Saray where wee pitched the ninth. Betweene this and the ruines about 3 c. of the way, is a goodly Tanke inclosed with stone, and a banketting house in the middest: On the South whereof are faire houses of pleasure now ruinated, from whence goeth an arched bridge to the banketting house in the Tanke.

Some halfe a Cose beyond Lunebeira on the right hand, are foure or five faire Tankes with a great Pagode, a very pleasant place. The tenth, to Dupalpore 14 c. good way, a small Towne. The eleuenth, to Ouglue a faire City twelue long Coses. This Countrey is called Malua, a fertile soile, abounding with Opium. Here the Cose or Course is two miles English. The twelfth, wee made Mukom. The thirteenth, to Conoscia, 11 c. good way, a little Village. I enquired the price of Opium. They giue the head three scratches, from whence issue small teares, at the first white, which with the cold of the night turneth reddish, which they daily scrape, not without infinite trouble, the head beeing very small and yeelding little. The fourteenth, to Sunenarra 8 c. way much stony and theeuish, a people called Gracia, inhabiting the hills on the left hand, which often vngraciously entertayn Carauans. A hundred of them had done the like to a Cassila now, had not our comming preuented. It is a small Towne, short of which is a great Tanke full of wilde fowle: The fifteenth, 10 c. to Pimpelgom a ragged Aldea. At 4 c. end of this way lyeth Sarampore, a great Towne with a Castle on the South-west side, with a faire Towne-house. Here are made faire Turbants and good linnen. Short of this Towne we met Cann John a great Minion of the Kings with ten thousand horse, many Elephants, and Boats carryed on Carts, going for Bramport. On the way also we passed diuers of Manisengos men, hee hauing in all some twenty thousand, so that it was deemed there were one hundred thousand Horse assembled.

The sixteenth, 7 c. to Cuckra, a great Countrey Towne abounding with all sorts of Graine, Victuall and Mewa Wire: at 4 c. lyeth Berroul a great Aldea. The seuenteenth, 12 c. to Delout, a great Aldea, the way for the five last Coses theeuish, hilly, stony, the other pleasant Plaines. The eighteenth, 7 c. to Burrow a small Towne, but plentifull of Victuall, except flesh which is scarce all this way; the way dangerous. The nineteenth, 7 c. to Sukefera a small ragged Towne. The twentieth, to Syrange 9 c., a very great Towne, where are many Betele Gardens. The one and twentieth and two and twentieth, wee made Muckom. The three and twentieth, to Cuchenary Saray 8 c. The foure and twentieth, to Sadura 5 c. The five and twentieth, to Collebage 7 c. The sixe and twentieth, 12 c. to Qualeres, a pretty small Towne encompassed with Tamarind and Manga Trees. The seuen and twentieth, to Cipry seuen of Surat Coules a mile and an halfe way theeuish, stony, full of Trees, a Desert passage: a walled Towne, faire Houses couered with Slate. Two nights before some fixtie or seuentie Theeues (mistaking for a late passed Carauan) assailed in a darke night one hundred and fiftie Potan Souldiers, and fell into the pit they digged for others, ten being slaine and as many taken, the rest fled. The eight and twentieth, to Normay 12 c. a Desert rascally way full of Theeues. In the Woods sate diuers Chuckees to prevent robbing, but the Foxe is often made the Goose-heard. One pretty neat Meskite and in one place at the foot of the gate, a few poore Inhabitants wee saw in this dayes iourney, and nineteene faire Serais ruinated.

The Towne at the foot of the hill, hath a Castle on the top of a stony steep mountaine, with a narrow stone causway leading to the top some mile or better in ascent. In the way stand three gates very strong, with places for Corps du guard. At the top of all is the fourth gate, which leads into the Castle, where stands a guard, not permitting any stranger to enter without order from the King. The Towne within is faire and great, with a descent thereto; being situate in a Valley on the top of a Mountaine very strangely. As it is reported, this cliffe is in circle some 5. or 6 c. and walled round with Towers and Flankers here and there dispersed, without treason inuincible. This hath been the gate or border of the Kingdome of Madow, and hath been beautifull, and stored with Ordnance, but now is much gone to ruine. The twenty ninth to Palacha 7 c. the thirtieth to Antro, a great Towne 12 c. the thirty one to Gualere 6 c. a pleasant Citie with a Castle. On the East side is on the top of a steep piked hill, a ruinous building where diuers great men haue been interred. On the West side is the Castle, which is a steep craggy cliffe of 6 c. compasse at least (diuers say eleuen) all inclosed with a strong wall. At the going vp to the Castle adioyning to the Citie, is a faire Court, enclosed with high walls, and shut in with strong gates, where keeps a strong guard, not permitting any to enter without publike order. From hence to the top, leads a stone narrow cawsey, walled on both sides; in the way are three gates to be passed, all exceeding strong, with Courts of guard to each. At the top of all, at the entrance of the last gate, standeth a mightie Elephant of stone very curiously wrought. This Gate is also exceeding stately to behold, with a goodly house adioyning, whose wals are all set with greene and blue stone, with diuers gilded Turrets on the top. This is the Gouvernours lodging: where is place to keepe Nobles that offend (he is said to haue three such Noble-Prisons or Castles, this, and Rantimore 40 c. to Rantimore 10 which are sent such Nobles as he intends to put to death, which commonly is some two moneths after their arriual, the Gouvernour then bringing them to the top of the wall, and giuing them a dish of milke, which hauing dranke, he is cast downe thence on the Rockes. The third is Rotas, Rotas. a Castle in the Kingdome of Bengala, whither are sent those Nobles which are condemned to perpetuall imprisonment) from whence very few returne againe. On the top of this Mountaine of Gualere, is very good ground, with three or foure faire Tankes, and many other faire builings. On the Towne side are many houses cut out of the maine Rocke, for habitation and sale of goods. On the North-west side, at the foot of the hill is a spacious meadow, inclosed with a stone wall, within which are diuers gardens and places of pleasure, fit also to keepe horses in time of warre. This Castle was the Gate or frontier of the Kingdome of Dely, bordering on Madow, and is neere a mile of ascent.

The first of Aprill 1610. to Mendaker 9 c. the second 10 c. to Doulpore. Within 2 c. of the Towne, you passe a faire Riuer called Cambere, as broad as the Thames, thort of which is a narrow passage, with hills on both sides, very dangerous. The Castle is strong, ditched round, and hath foure walls and gates one within an other, all very strong, with steep ascents to each, paved with stone; the Citie is inhabited most what with Gentiles. The Castle is three quarters of a mile through, and on the further side hath like Gates to be passed againe. The third to Iaiow 9 c. the fourth to Agra 9 c. In the afternoone, the Captaine carried me before the King. I here found at my comming, Captaine Thomas Boys, with three French Souldiours, a Dutch Inginer, and a Venetian Merchant with his sonne, and a seruant, newly come by land out of Christendome.

In May and part of Iune, the Towne was much vexed with fires night and day, flaming in one part or other, whereby many thousands of houses were consumed, besides Men, Women, Children, and Cattell, that we feared the iudgement of Sodome and Gomorrah vpon the place. I was long dangerously sicke of a Feuer; and in Iune the heat so exceeded, that we were halfe roasted aliue. Iune the twenty eighth, arriued Padre Pensero, an arch-knaue (a Iesuite I should say) who brought Letters from the Viceroy, with many rich Presents, tending only to thwart our affaires. In this time, Mo. Bowcan was complained of by the Captaine to the King, who commaunded Abdel Hassan the chiefe Vizier to doe iustice; but birds of a feather will flie together, and Mo. Bowcan partly mis-reckoned, partly turned vs ouer to a Bankrupt Bannian; so that of thirty two thousand five hundred one M. and an halfe due, he would pay but eleuen thousand: neither would he pay that present.

In Iuly, came newes of the ill successe of the Kings forces in Decan, who beeing within some foure dayes Iourney of Andananager, hoping to raise the siege thereof, were forced through famine and drought, to make their retrait for Bramport, whereupon the Citie, after much miserie indured, was lost. This armie consisted of one hundred thousand horse at the least, with infinite numbers of Cammels and Elephants: so that with the whole baggage, there could not bee lesse then five or sixe hundred thousand persons, inso much that the waters were not sufficient for them; a Muslocke of water being sold for a Rupia and yet not enough to be had, and all victualls at an excessive rate. For the Decan army still spoyled the Countrey before them, and cut betwixt them and supplies for victualing them out of Guzerate and Bramport, daily making light skirmishes vpon them, to their great disaduantage, that without retiring the whole army had been endangered. At their returne to Bramport, there were not to bee found thirty thousand horse, with infinite number of Elephants, Cammels, and other Cattell dead. This Moneth also came newes of the sacking of Potana, a great Citie in Parrop, and surprising of the Castle where the Kings Treasure lay, the Citizens flying without making resistance. But vpon this Caualeero, presently came a great Ombra adioyning, and tooke him in the Castle. The Citizens returning, he sent twelue of the chiefe of them to the King, who caused them to be shauen, and in womens attire, to bee carried on Asles through all the streets of Agra, and on the next day (as it is said) cut off their Heads.

All this Moneth also was much stirre with the King about Christianitie, hee affirming before his Nobles, that it was the soundest faith, and that of Mahomet lies and fables. He commanded also three Princes, his deceased brothers sonnes, to be instructed by the Iesuites, and Christian apparell to be made for them, the whole City admiring. And yet at the same time, Abdel Hassan iudgement was, that it was not iustice to pay debts to Christians, in Mo. Bowcans case, whereof againe we had reference from the King to him, perhaps on like ground, as some European thinke.

thinke it lawfull to make price of the goods and ships of Ethnikes, eo nomine, therefore setting out men of warre, so to make the Christian Name, not as an ointment poured out, that the Virgin soules may be conuerted, and loue Christ, but as filthy matter running out of rotten hearts and poisoned lips, yea, with force and armes, to exoccupate the Kingdome of Christ in those parts: at least, let reformed Professors reforme this Man-of-warre-Profession against innocents, that the Name of God through them be not blasphemed among the Gentiles. But to returne to this dissimulation (as since it hath to the world appeared) those three Princes were Christened solemnly, conducted to Church by all the Christians of the Citie, to the number of some sixtie horse, Capitaine Hawkins being in the head of them, with S. Georges colours carried before him, to the honour of the English Nation, letting them lie in the Court before Sha Selim himselfe. The eldest was named Don Philippo, the second Don Carlo, the third Don Henrico: and on the ninth of September, was christened another young Prince, the Acabars brothers sonnes sonne, by the name Don Duarte, the King giuing daily charge to the Fathers for their instruction, that they might become good Christians.

October the twelfth, we were certified by Letters of M. Iourdain from Surat, that thirtie Frigats of the Portugals were cast away on the barre of Surat, hasting before the winter was broken vp, to catch more English; many of the men escaped, and were glad to beg releefe at the English doore.

He first of Nouember, I was sent to buy Nill or Indico at Byana. I lodged that night at Menhapoore, a great Saray, 7<sup>c</sup>. by which is a Garden, and Moholl or summer house of the Queene Mothers, very curiously contriued. The second at Cannowa, 11<sup>c</sup>. at 4<sup>c</sup>. end, is a Moholl of the Kings. And at euery cose end from Agra, is erected a stone pillar for 130<sup>c</sup>. to Asmere, where lieth interred the body of a great Moorish Saint, called Hog-hee Mondee, whereto the Acabar wanting children, made a foot-pilgrimage to beg for issue, and caused a pillar at each course to be set vp; and a Moholl with lodgings for sixteene great women at euery eighth course alongst, and after his returne obtained three sonnes.

At 7<sup>c</sup>. on this way, and 12<sup>c</sup>. from Agra, is seated the famous citie of Fetipore, built by the Acubar, and inclosed with a faire stone wall, which yet standeth fresh, hauing foure faire and strong Gates, it being some three English miles betwixt gate and gate. In the midst it is all ruinate, lying like a waste desert, and very dangerous to passe through in the night, the buildings lying wast without inhabitants; much of the ground beeing now conuerted to Gardens, and much sowed with Nill and other graine, that a man standing there, would little thinke he were in the midst of a citie.

To the entrance of the gate from Agra, some course in length vpon a stony ascent, lie the ruines of the Suburbs; as also without the Southwest gate for two English miles in length, many faire buildings being fallen to the ground: and on the left hand are many faire enclosed Gardens, three miles alongst from the citie. At the entrance of the Northeast Gate, is a goodly Bazar (market place) of stone, halfe a mile long, being a spacious straight-paued street, with faire buildings on either side. Close within the gate is the Kings Saray, with large stone lodgings, but much ruined. At the head of this street stands the Kings house and Moholl, with much curious building: and on the further side hereof, vpon an ascent, stands the goodliest Meskite of the East. It hath some twentie foure or thirty steps of ascent to the Gate, which is one of the highest and fairest (I suppose) in the whole world: on the top are a number of clustering pinnacles, curiously disposed. The top of this Gate may be plainly seene eight or tenne miles distance. Within is a goodly spacious court, very curiously paued with free stone, about sixe times the largeness of Londons Exchange, with faire large walkes alongst the side, more then twice as broad, and double the height of those about the Burse of London, the pillars vpholding them, beeing of one intire stone: and round about are entrances into many goodly roomes, neatly contriued. Opposite to the Gate toward the further side, stands a faire and sumptuous Tombe, artificially inlaied with mother of Pearle, and inclosed with a grating of stone curiously carued. Ouer head is rich pargetting and paynting. Herein lyeth the body of a great Kalender, at whose cost the whole Meskite was builded. Vnder the court yard is a goodly Tanke of excellent water; none other being to be had through the citie, but brackish and fretting, by drinking whereof was caused such mortality, that the Acubar before it was quite finished, left it, and remooued his seat to Agra, so that this goodly Citie was short liued, in fifty or sixty yeares space beeing built and ruinate.

It was at the first called Sykary, which signifieth, seeking or hunting; but after the Acabar was returned from his Asmere Pilgrimage, and was father of this Sha Selim, hee named it Fetipore, pore, that is, a Towne of content, or place of Hearts desire obtained. The North North-west side of the Citie, without the walles, is a goodly Lough for 2. or 3 c. in length, abounding with good fish and wilde fowle; all ouer which groweth the herbe which beareth the Hermodyctyle, and another bearing a fruit like a Goblet, called Camolachachery, both very cooling fruits. The herbe which beareth the Hermodyctyle, is a weed abounding in most Tankes neare Agra, spreading ouer all the water; the leafe I obserued not, but the fruit is inclosed with a three cornered shell, of a hard woodie substance, hauing at each angle a sharpe picked pricking point; and is a little indented on both the flat sides like two posternes. The fruit being greene, is soft and tender, white and of a mealish taste, much eaten in India, being exceeding cold in my iudgement: for alwayes after it, I desired Aqua-vite. It is called by the people Singarra. The other beareth a fruit in maner of a Goblet, flat on the toppe, and of a soft greenish substance, within which a little eminent, stand fixe or eight small fruits like Akornes, diuided from each other, and inclosed with a whitish filme, at the first of a ruslettish greene, tasting like a Nut or Akorne; in the midst is a small greene sprigge naught to be eaten.

Hermodyctylus described.

Cannowa is a small countrey Towne, round about which is made very good Nill, by reason of the fastnesse of the soile, and brackishnesse of the water: it maketh yeerely some fise hundred M. Ouchen 3 c. distant makes very good; besides which, no Towne but Byana it selfe, compares with this. I remained heere to the two and twentieth and three and twentieth. 6 c. to Candere, a roguish dirtie Aldea. At 2 c. on this way, is one of those Moholls, before mentioned. It is a square stone building: within the first gate is a small court, with a place for the King to keepe his Dar-sany, and two or three other retiring roomes, but none of note. Within the second court is the Moholl, being a foure-square thing, about twice as bigge, or better, then the Exchange; hauing at each corner a faire open Deuoncan, and in the midst of each side another, which are to bee spread with rich carpets, and to sit in to passe the time: And betwixt each corner and this middle-most, are two faire large chambers for his women (so that each Moholl receiueth sixteene) in seuerall lodgings, without doores to any of them, all keeping open house to the Kings pleasure. Round by the side goeth a faire paved walke, some eight foot broad: and in the midst of all the court stands the Kings chamber, where he like a Cocke of the game may crow ouer all. At Candere I remained till the eight and twentieth, and returned to Bachuna, 4 c. backe in the way.

The twentieth of December, I went to Byana 8 c. a backe way thorow the fields. This citie hath bene great and faire, but is now ruinate, saue two Sarayes and a long Bazar, with a few stragling houles, many faire ones being fallen, and many others not inhabited (except by rogues or theues) so that many streets are quite desolate. On the North-west some three or foure cote off, are the ruines of a Kings house, with many other faire buildings: the like ruines are to bee seene on the South-west side, ouer against a Towne called Scanderbade, in like distance vpon the height of the rocky mountaines: the way leading vp is a narrow steepe stony cawsey, not to be passed on horse-backe, some quarter of a mile the ascent: the entrance is thorow a small wicket, passing the lips of the mountaines in a narrow gutte. On the right hand, vpon the very edge, stands a pleasant building, where are diuers Tombes: from each side, the way may be made good with stones against millions of men. Passing a mile hence on a faire cawsey, you come to the Kings house, sometimes faire, now ruinate, where a few poore Googers remaine in the ruines. Many Tombes and Monuments yet remaine. At the foote of the hill toward Scanderbade, is a pleasant Valley inclosed with a wall, and therein many gardens of pleasure. This City hath been in ancient times the seate of a great Pasane King, and hath had the walles extending on the cliffes 3 c. in length, in those places where is any possibilitie of getting vp, the rockes otherwhere ouer-hanging: the fortifications on the other side I saw not. It hath bene a goodly city, inhabited now only with Googers, which are keepers of cattell, and makers of Butter and Cheefe. From hence notwithstanding all this strength, did the Acabar force Sha Selim the Tyrant, and then laid it waste, as he hath done Madow, and most of the strong holds which he tooke. The country which affordeth that rich Nill which takes name of Byana, is not aboue twenty or thirtie cote long.

A strong Fort.

The herbe Nill, groweth in forme not much vnlike Ciues or Cich-pease, hauing a small leafe like that of Sena, but shorter and broader, and set on a very short foot-stalke, the branches hard and of a woodie substance like vnto broome. It vsually groweth not aboue a yard high, and with a stalke at the biggest (which is at the third yeare) not much exceeding a mans thumbe. The seed is included in a small round codde about an inch long, resembling Foenigræcum, saue that it is more blunt at both ends, as if it had been cut off with a knife. It carryeth a small flower like that of Hearts-ease: the seed is ripe in Nouember, and then gathered. The herbe once sowne dureth three yeeres, being cut euery yeere in August and September after the raines. That of one yeere is tender, and thereof is made noote, which is a weighty Reddish nill sinking in water, not come to his perfection: that of the second yeere is rich, and called Cyree, very light and of a perfect Violet colour, swimming on the water: in the third yeere the herbe is declining, and this Nill is called Catteld, being a weightie blackish Nill, the worst of the three. This herbe being cut the

Then they let the water forth into another round cisterne, in the midst of which is another small cisterne or center: this water being thus drawne forth, they labour with great stauers, like batter or white starch, and then let it settle, scumming off the cleare water on the toppe: then labouring it afresh, and let it settle againe, drawing forth the cleare water, doing this oft, till nothing but a thicke substance remaine; which they take forth and spread on cloth, to dry in the Sunne: and being a little hardened, they take it in their hands, and making small balls, lay them on the sand to dry (for any other thing would drinke vp the colour) this is the cause of the sandy foot. So if raine fall, it looseth his colour and glosse, and is called Alia. Some deceitfully will take of the herbe of all three crops, and steepe them altogether, hard to be discerned, very knauishly. Fowre things are required in Nill: a pure graine, a violet colour, his glosse in the Sunne, and that it be dry and light, so that swimming in the water, or burning in the fire, it cast forth a pure light violet vapour, leauing a few ashes.

The Great Mo-gol in danger of a Lyon.

About the sixt of Ianuary, the King being on hunting, was assailed by a Lyon which hee had wounded with his Peece, with such fiercenesse, that had not a Captaine of his, a Resboot, Tutor of the late baptized Princes interposed himselfe, thrusting his arme into the Lions mouth as hee ramped against his Maiestie, he had in all likelihood been destroyed. In this strugling, Sultan Corom, Raiaw Ranidus, and others came in, and amongst them slew the Lyon, that Captaine hauing first receiued thirty two wounds: whom therefore the King tooke vp into his owne Palanke, with his owne hands also wiped and bound vp his wounds, and made him a Captaine of five thousand horse, in recompence of that his valourous loyaltie.

His thankful-
nesse.

Kings manner of hunting.

The Kings manner of hunting is this: about the beginning of Nouember, accompanied with many thousands, he goeth forth of his Castle of Agra, and hunteth some thirty or forty Course round about the Citie; so continuing till the ende of March, when the heat driues him home againe. He causeth, with choise men, a certaine wood or desert place to bee incircled, so contracting themselves to a neerer compasse, till they meet againe; and whatsoever is taken in this inclosure, is called the Kings Sikar or game, whether men or beasts; and whosoever lets ought escape, without the Kings mercy, must loose his life. The beasts taken, if mans meat, are sold, and the money giuen to the poore: if men, they remaine the Kings slaues, which he yearly sends to Cabull, to barter for horse and dogs; these being poore miserable theeuish people that liue in woods and desarts, little differing from beasts.

The last of his

Petbery, who after seuen times taking a Potan King, was at last by him taken and slaine. He began the Potan Kingdome. They came from the moun-taines betw. Candihar and Catull. The second built by Togall Sha, a Potan King. The third little of note. The fourth by Sher Shafelim, where is that Tombe of Hamaron. * A stately Obeliske with Greeke or Hebrew inscriptions, as some affirme, supposed to be set there by Alexander.

This Moneth, the King was prouiding more forces for Decan, notwithstanding the Decanees required his peace, offering to restore what they had taken, Caun Asom was sent Generall, and with him twentie thousand horse, accompanied with Matrobet Caun another Great Captaine, together with infinite treasurie. With these forces went John Frenchman, and Charles Charke, entertained in his seruice for the warres.

Ianuary the ninth, I departed from Agra for Labor to recouer debts, and carried twelue carts laden with Nill in hope of a good price. The places I passed were Romnotha twelue courses, Badeg Sara 10. Acabarpore 12 c. formerly a great city, still famous for the Antiquities of Indian Gobins or Saints. A little short of this place, is a faire Deury inclosed with a stone wall, in which is a Devoncan, and round about a little distance in vaults (or cloisters) are to be seen many Pagods, which are stone images of monitrous men feareful to behold, but adored by the Indians with flowers and offerings. Hondle 13 c. At the entrance of the Saray is a faire fountaine three stories, and one hundred steps. Pulwooll 12 c. Ferreedabade 12 c. Dely 10 c. On the left hand is seene the carkasse of old Dely, * called the nine castles, and fiftie two gates, now inhabited onely by Googers. A little short is a stone bridge of eleuen arches, ouer a branch of Gemini: from hence a broad way shaded with great trees, leading to the sepulchre of Hamaron this Kings Grandfather, in a large roome spread with rich carpets, the Tombe it selfe couered with a pure white sheet, a rich Semiane ouer head, and a front, certaine bookes on small tressels, by which stand his Sword, Tucke, and shooes: at the entrance are other Tombes of his Wiues and Daughters. Beyond this, vnder like shaded way you come to the Kings house and Moholl, now ruinous. The City is 2 c. betweene Gate and Gate, begirt with a strong wall, but much ruinate, as are many goodly houses: within and about this Citie are the Tombes of twenty Potan Kings, all very faire and stately. The Kings of India are here to be crowned, or else they are held Vairpers. It is seated in a goodly plaine, environed with goodly pleasant Gardens and Monuments.

Nalero is hence 14 c. about 2 c. without Dely, is the remainder of an auncient Mole or hunting house, built by Sultan Berusa a great Indian Monarch, with much curiositie of stone-worke: with and about the rest, is to be seen a stone * Pillar, which passing through three stories, is higher then all twenty foure foot, hauing at the top a Globe, and a halfe Moone over it. This stone they say, stands as much vnder the earth, and is placed in the water, being all one entire stone, (some say Nascerdengady a Potan King would have taken it vp, and was prohibited by multitude of Scorpions, and that it hath inscriptions.) In diuers parts of India the like are to be seene, and of late was found buried in the ground about Fettipore a stone pillar of an hundred cubits length, which the King commanded to bring to Agra, but was broken in the way, to his great griefe. It is remarkable, that the Quarries of India, specially neere Fettipore (whence they are carryed farre) are of such nature, that they may be cleft like logges, and sawne like plancks to seele chambers, and couer houses of a great length and breadth. From this Monument is said to bee a way vnder ground to Dely Castle. Now here remaine onely Googers, and there are store of Deere. We saw in the way the ruines of diuers places, and neere the same, the ruines of a wall 20. in circuit, being a Parke for game. Some part of this way was theeuish, and some report being giuen out of the Kings death, many Rogies with that false alarme were abroad: we met the Folder of Dely with some 2. thousand horse and foot in their pursuit, who burnt their Townes, & tooke the and theirs whatsoeuer he could get: and the next day at breakfast we were like to be surprized by theeuers.

On the North-west extend Mountaines neere to Labor from hence, with snow on the tops. Tanassar 14 c. here is a Castle, a goodly Tanke, and by it Pagods, much reuerenced by all the Gentiles throughout India. Neere it also are the Sal-armoniacke pits. Shabad or Goobade 10 c. Amballa 12 c. Hollowa Saray 14 c. Syrinam 7 c. it hath a faire Tanke with a Summer-house in the midst, to which leads a Bridge of fifteene stone arches very pleasant. From hence is a small Riuer cut to the Kings Garden a corse distant, with a cawsey of forty foot broad, planted with trees on both sides to it. The Garden is fowre square, each square a cote in length, or better, inclosed with a Bricke-wall, richly planted with all sorts of fruits and flowers, rented yeerely (as I was told) for fifty thousand Rupias: crossed with two maine walkes forty foot broad, and eight high, with water running alongst stone channells in the midst, and planted on both sides thicke with faire Cypresses: one of these cawseys is also paved with pebble curiously inter-wrought. At the crossing stands an eight square Mohol with eight chambers for women, in the midst thereof a faire Tank; ouer these eight other roomes, with faire Galleries round about: on the top of all a faire Iouner; the whole building curiously wrought in stone, with faire painting, rich caruing, and par-getting: and on two sides two faire Tankes in the midst of a faire stone chounter, planted round with Cypresse trees: a little distant is another Mohol, but not so curious.

den. Some say

From hence we passed to Dorapy 15 c. Pullocequer Saray 13 c. Nicoder 12 c. Sultanpoore 11 c. Fettipore 7 c. a Saray built (if it were finished) by Sha Selim, in memorie of the ouerthrow giuen Sultan Cussroom his eldest sonne: the occasion whereof was this. Sha Selim vpon some disgust tooke armes in his fathers life time, and fled into Purrop, where he kept the strong Castle of Alobasse (but came in some three moneths before his fathers decesse) whereupon Acubar gaue the Crowne to Sultan Cussroom his sonne. But after Acubars death, Selim by his friends, seized on the Castle and treasure, and his sonne fled for Labor, where hee gathered some twelue thousand horse all good souldiours and Mogols, possessing the Suburbs twelue daies, and proclaimed King in the Castle, and his Father in the Castle. In this place he gaue battell to Strek Forced, and discomred his three hundred horse, and put them to the sword: to the second of him came Melec Ale Cutwall (the King being some 20 c. behind) with some two hundred horse, beating vp the Kings drummes, and giuing a braue assault, shouting God saue King Selim, vpon which the Princes souldiours faunted and fled, the Prince himselfe fleeing only with five horse, and got 30 c. beyond Labor for Cabul, which if he had gotten, he would have put his father to further trouble: but being to passe a Riuer where hee gaue Mohors of Gold, the Boate-man grew in distrust, and in the midst of the Channell leapt ouer-boord, and swamme to the shoare, where hee gaue notice to the Gouernour of the Towne adioyning, who presently with fiftie horse came downe to the Riuer, where the Boat was still floating, imbarqued himselfe in another, and saluted him by the name of King, dissemblingly offering his aide, and inuicing him to his house: which the Prince accepting, was locked vp with his Company and guarded, till hee had sent the King word, who sent Germanabeg to fetch him fettered on an Elephant. From hence his Father proceeded to Cabul, punishing such as he found tardie in this reuolt, carrying his sonne with him prisoner, and returning by this place where the battell was fought (as some say) caused his eyes to be burned out with a glasse; others say, onely blind-folded him with a napkin tying it behind, and sealing it with his owne seale, which yet remaineth, and himselfe prisoner in the Castle of Agra. All alongst on both sides the way from Cabul to Agra, a reasonable distance, the King caused trees to be planted to shade the way, in remembrance of this exploit, and called this place Fettipore, that is, hearts content, as ye before heard of the Citie, which for his birth was named so by his Father Acubar: these as any decay, must by the peoples toyle be supplied.

fled to the Persian with some ten thousand Turkes, and had obtained some Iaggere neere thereto, whereof he purposing to make himselfe King, was ouerthrowne, and being lent for by the Persian, refused to come, till deluded by promise of a mariage, he was got to the Court, and there lost his head. We heard also of the Persians taking from the Turke, the strong Castle of Curdes, after a yeeres siege, with other Asian and European newes.

Description of Lahor, and of the Kings house there : how the Mogolls entred India : Of diuers strong holds, strange Beasts, and Plants; fond Superstitions : Of the Wayes, Theeues, Outlawes, Cities, Buildings, adioyned and intermixed : Princes not subiect : Agra and Echebars Sepulchre described. 10

Lahor is one of the greatest Cities of the East, containing some 24 c. in circuit by the ditch which is now casting vp about it, and by the Kings command, now to be inclosed with a strong wall. In the time of the Potans it was but a Village, Multan then flourishing, till Hamaw enlarged this. The Towne and Suburb is some 6 c. thorow. The castle or Towne is inclosed with a strong bricke wall, hauing thereto twelue faire gates, nine by 20 land, and three openings to the Riuer : the streets faire and well paved, the inhabitants most Banians and handicrafts men ; all white men of note lying in the Suburbs. The buildings are faire and high, with bricke and much curiositie of carued windowes and doores : most of the Gentiles doores of sixe or seuen steps ascent, and very troublesome to get vp, so built for more securitie, and that passengers should not see into their houses. The castle is seated on Rauce, a goodly Riuer which falleth into Indus, downe which go many Boats, of sixtie tunne or vpwards, for Tatta in Sind, after the fall of the raine, being a iourney of some fortie dayes alongst by Multan, Seetpore, Buchur, Rauce, &c.

This Riuer commeth from the East, and runneth Westerly by the North side of the Citie : vp- on which within the Castle is the Kings house, passing in at the middle gate to the Riuer-ward. 30 Within the Citie on the left-hand, you enter thorow a strong gate ; and a Musket shot further another smaller, into a faire great square court, with Atefcanna for the Kings guard to watch in. On the left-hand, thorow another gate you enter into an inner court, where the King keepes his Darbar, and round about which court are Atefcanna's also for great men to watch in. In the middest there stands a high pole to hang a light on. From hence you go vp to a faire stone Ioun- ter or small court, in the middest whereof stands a faire Deuoncan, with two or three other reti- ring rooms, wherein the King sits out all the first part of the night, commonly from eight to ele- uen. On the walles is the Kings Picture sitting crosse-legged on a chaire of State : on his right- hand Sultan Peruise, Sultan Caroone, and Sultan Timoret, his sonnes : next these, Sha Morat, and Don Sha, two of his brothers (the three baptized before spoken, were sonnes of this later) 40 next them Emersee Sheriff, eldest brother to Cann Asom (of whom it is reported his estate to be such, that of one hundred chiefe women which he kept, he neuer suffered any of their clothing af- ter their first wearing to be euer touched by any stranger, but caused them to bee buried in the ground there to rot : as also that he alway had in seruice five hundred Masfalgees, in so much that whensoever he went from court to his house in Agra, which was at least a corse, no man remoued foote with his torch, but stood all alongst to his house) next this man, Emersee Rostene, late King of Candhar, then Can Canna (which signifie h Prince of the Cannes) then Cutius Cann, Raiaw Manisengo, Cann Asom, Asoph Cann, Sheck Fereed, Kelish Cann, and Raiaw Inggonat (who at his death had seuen of his friends that burned themselues with him, besides one of his sisters, and a brothers childe.) On the left hand of the King stands Raiaw Bowsing, who beats away flies, then 50 Raiaw Ramdas, who holds his sword, Cleriff Cann, Cann Iohn, Iemana Lege or Mambet Cann, Mocrow Bowcan, Raiaw Bosow, Raiaw Ransing, Maio Kesso, and Lala Bersing. Note also that in this Gallery, as you enter, on the right-hand of the King, ouer the doore is the Picture of our Sa- uiour ; opposite on this left-hand of the Virgin Mary. This Deuoncan is very pleasantly seated, ouer-looking the Rauce.

From hence passing thorow a small entrie to the West, you enter another small court, where is another open Chounter of stone to sit in, couered with rich Semianes. From hence you enter in- to a small Gallery, at the end of which, next the Riuer, thorow a small window, the King looks forth at his Derfancee, to behold the fights of wilde beasts on the meadow by the Riuer. On the wall of this Gallery is drawne the Picture of the Acabar sitting in his State, and before him 60 Sha Selim his sonne, standing with a Hawke on his hit, and by him Sultan Cussroom, Sultan Per- uis, Sultan Coroome, his three sonnes : at the end is a small Deuoncan, where the King useth to sit ; behind which is his lodging chamber, and before it all open into a paved court, alongst the right- hand whereof runneth a small Moholl of two stories, each containing eight faire lodgings for reuel all feuerall women, with Galleries and windowes looking to the Riuer, and to the court. All the doores of these chambers are to bee fastened on the out-side, and none within. In the Gallery where the King vsith to sit, are drawne ouer-head many Pictures of Angels; with Pictures of Banian Dews, or rather Diuels, intermixt in most vgly shape, with long hornes, staring eyes, shagge haire, great fangs, vgly pawes, long tailles, with such horrible difformity and deformity, that I wonder the poore women are not frightened there with. Within this court is a pleasant Deuoncan and lodgings, and the way to another Moholl for the King to passe, but none other.

Pictures of Angels and Banian Dews.

Now to returne to the former court, where the Adees or Guard keepe their watch, there is also on the left hand the new Derbar, beyond it another small court with Atescanna, and passing 10 thorow another gate, a faire large square Moholl, called the new Moholl, of that largenesse that it may lodge two hundred women in state all feuerall. Likewise returning to the great court, passing right on, you enter another small paved court on the left hand, and into another Moholl, the stateliest of the three, contriued into sixteene feuerall great lodgings, each hauing faire lodgings, a Deuoncan (or Hall) a small paved court, each her Tanke, and enioying a little world of pleasure and state to her selfe; all seated very pleasantly vpon the Riuer. Before the Moholl of Sultan Casserooms mother, is placed an high pole to hang a light on, as before the King, for that shee brought forth his first sonne and heire. In the midst stands a goodly Gallery for the King to sit in, with such vgly Pictures ouer-head as before. At the end are drawne many portraictures of the King in state sitting amongst his women, one holding a flaske of wine, another a napkin, a 20 third presenting the Peally, behind one punkawing, another holding his sword, another his bow, and two or three arrowes, &c.

women and

Before this Gallery is a faire paved court, with stone gratings, and windowes alongst the waters side; at the end a faire marble Iounter, conuexed ouer-head, looking ouer the Riuer, beneath it a Garden of pleasure; behind, the Kings lodgings very sumptuous, the walles and feelings all ouer-laid with pure gold; and round alongst the sides, about a mans height, some three foote distant are placed faire Venice Looking-glasse, three and three each aboue other: and below these alongst the walles, are drawne many pictures of this mans Ancestors, as of Acabar his Father, Hamorne his Grand-father, Babur his great Grand-father, who first set foote into India, with thirtie of his Nobles, all clad like Kalendars or Fookeers, which so came to Dely to Secanders Court 30 then raigning, where by his very countenance he was discouered, yet found mercy, and returned vpon his oath not to attempt any thing during the said Secanders raigne; which he performed: but after his death, he sent his sonne Hamorne vpon his Successor Abram, from whom he tooke the whole Kingdome. Yet at length rose vp a great Captaine of the Blood-Royall in Bengala, who fought a great battel with Hamorne near Ganges, put him to flight, and so closely followed him, that he draue him forth of the Kingdome to the Persian Shaw; of whom hee obtained new Forces (with whom came Byram, Cann Canna his father, for Generall) and reconquered all, liuing after that in security. This King dying, left Acabar very yong, appointed Byram Cann Protector, whom the Acabar, comming to yeares, cast off, and on a Roomery or Pilgrimage to Mecca, as is said, made away with him. His sonne Can Canna or Cann, of the Caunees, doth also much 40 curbe Sha Selim the King, with his friends and Allyes, being able to make better then an hundred thousand horse. Sha Selim affirmeth himselfe to be the ninth lawfully descended from the loynes of Tamerlane the Great, being the Great-grand-child of Babur, King of Cabul.

But to returne to the entrance of this Moholl, passing forth of that court thorow a strong gate, you enter into the City againe; this house and appurtenances of Mohols being at the least two Englisb miles in circuit. On the East-side of the Castle hard without the wall, is the Garden of Asoph Cann, small, neat, with walkes (planted with Cypresse-trees) diuers Tankes and Ioun-50 ters: as you enter, a faire Deuoncan supported with stone pillars, with a faire Tanke in the midst, and in the midst of that, on foure stone pillars, a Iounter for coolenesse. Beyond are other Galleries and walkes, diuers lodgings for his women neatly contriued; and behind, a small Garden, and Garden-house. In the midst of the Garden is a very stately Iounter with faire buildings ouer-head, and a Tanke in the center with large and goodly Galleries alongst the foure sides thereof, supported with high stone pillars. Adioyning to this is a Garden of the Kings, in which are very good Apples, but small, Toot white and red, Almonds, Peaches, Figges, Grapes, Quinces, Orenge, Limmons, Pomgranats, Roses, Stock-gellow-flowers, Marigolds, Wall-flowers, Ireos, Pinkes white and red, with diuers sorts of Indian Flowers.

fruits and flowers.

On the West-side of the Castle is the Ferry to passe ouer to Cabul (and so to Tartary or Casscar), a very grtat road-way, and the further side of the Riuer is a goodly Countrey. Infinit numbers of Gardens full of rarity exceeds, two or 3 c. in length. Passing the Sugar Gonge is a faire Moskite built by Shecke Fereed; beyond it (without the Towne, in the way to the Gardens) is 60 a faire monument for Don Sha his mother, one of the Acabar his wiues, with whom it is said Sha Selim had to do (her name was Inmacque Kelle, or Pomgranate kernell) vpon notice of which the King caused her to be inclosed quicke within a wall in his Moholl, where shee dyed: and the King in token of his loue, commands a sumptuous Tombe to be built of stone in the midst of a foure-square Garden richly walled, with a gate, and diuers roomes ouer it: the conuexity of the Tombe he hath willed to be wrought in workes of gold, with a large faire Iounter with roomes ouer-head. Note that most of these monumets which I mention, are of such largenesse, that if they were otherwise contriued, would haue roome to entertaine a very good man, with his whole household. Without the Dely Droware, where the Nolat or great Drum beats, is a goodly streight street, about three quarters of a mile long, all paved; at the end of which is the Bazar, by it the great Saray, besides which are diuers others, both in the City and Suburbs, wherein diuers neate lodgings are to be let, with doores, lockes and keyes to each. Hence to the North-east lyeth Amber, the place of hospitality: from hence to the South-east the habitation of diuers louing, &c.

Anno 1611.
Cabull sacked
by theeues.

The seuenteenth of May, came news of the sacking of Cabul by the Potan theeues, which kept in the Mountains, being eleuen thousand foot, and one thousand horse, the Gouernour thereof being at Gelalabade about other affaires, & the Garrison so weak, that they were able only to maintaine the Cattle. In six houres they spoiled the City and retired with great booty. The King for better awing of these rebels, hath placed twenty three Ombracs betwixt Lahor and Cabul, and yet all will not serue, they often falling from the mountains, robbing Carauans and ransacking townes. The eighteenth of August, arriued a great Carauan from Persia, by whom we had newes from an Armenian, which had serued M. Boys, of the French Kings death, and of affaires betwixt the Turk and Persian; he hauing destroyed the country about Tauris, rased the Citie, and filled vp the wells to hinder the Turks armie: the Merchants by this means (to our grieve) not daring to aduenture beyond Candhar.

Tar Chaun.

China.

From Cabul to Cascar, with the Carauan, is some two or three moneths iourney. It is a great kingdome, and vnder the Tartar. A chiefe Citie of trade in his Territorie is Tar Chaun, whence comes much Silke, Purilane, Muske, and Rheubarb, with other Merchandize: all which come from China, the gate or entrance whereof is some two or three moneths iourney from hence. When they come to this entrance, they are forced to remaine vnder their Tents, and by license send some ten or fifteene Merchants at once to doe their businesse, which being returned, they may send as many more. But by no meanes can the whole Carauan enter at once.

Goes his trauell from Lahor to Cabul and China
Cassimere.

From Lahor to Cassimere the way is as in Cabull way to Guzerat: from thence North, or somewhat Easterly withall 16 c. to Bimbar; to Soagek Hately 14 c. to Chingessj Hately 10 c. to Peckly 10 c. to Conowa 12 c. thence 8 c. you ascend a mountaine called Hast Caunk Gate, on the top of which is a goodly plaine, from whence to Cassimer is 12 c. thorew a goodly Countrey. The City is strong, seated on the Riuer Babat, the Countrey is a goodly Plaine, lying on the mountaines, some 150 c. in length, and 50 c. in breadth, abounding with fruits, graine, Saffron, faire and white women. Heere are made the rich Pomberies which serue all the Indians. This Countrey is cold, subiect to frosts and great snowes, neare to Cascar, but seperated with such mountaines, that there is no passage for Carauans: yet there commeth oft-times Musk, with Silke and other merchandize this way by men, and goods are faine to be triced vp, and let downe often by engines and deuices. Vpon these mountaines keepes a small King called Tibbot, who of late sent one of his daughters to Sha Selim to make affinitie.

Nicholas Vphet made another way from Agra to Surat, by Fetipore, Scanderbade, Hindoin, Cheningom, Mogoll Saray, Nonnigong at the foot of a Mountaine, which with others adioyning, are held by two Raiaws of no note. Opposite to these on the left hand, beginne the mountaines of Maywa, which extend neare Amadauer. Vpon these mountaines stands an impregnable Castle, called Gur Chitto, the cheefe seat of Rana, a very powerfull Raiaw, whom neither Potan, or the Acabar himselfe could euer subdue: which comes to passe by reason that all India hath been Gentiles, and this Prince hath bin, and still is esteemed in like reuerence by them, as the Pope of Rome by the Papists. And for this cause the Raiaws, which haue been sent against him, frame some excuses that they may not indamage much his Territories, which extend hence alongst Amadauer way an hundred and fifty great corfes, and in breadth toward Ougen 200 c. inclosed for the most part part with inaccessible mountaines, and fortified well by art in places accessible. He is able to make twelve thousand good horse vpon any occasion, and holds many faire Townes and goodly Cities. The way followeth by Gangra, Charfoot (chiefe seat of Raiaw Manisengo his Prigones) Ladane, Moufalde, Banderande. Prigones are Lordships.

Asmere, seated vpon the top of an inaccessible Mountaine of 3 c. ascent, being a Fort inuincible: the Citie at the foot not great, inclosed with a stone wall, ditched round, the buildings reasonable faire; without the wals are many Antiquities, amongst which some 2 c. toward Agra is a very faire Tanke. This place is only famous for the Sepulchre of Hoghee Mundee, a Saint much respected by the Mogols, to whom (as is said before) the Acabar made a Romery on foot from Agra to obtayne a Sonne. Before you come to this Tombe, you passe three faire Courts, of which the first containeth neere an acre of ground, paved all with blacke and white Marble, wherein are interred many of Mahometts cursed Kindred: on the left hand is a faire Tanke inclosed with stone. The second Court is paved like the former, but richer, twice as bigge as the Exchange in London; in the midst whereof hangs a curious Candlesticke with many lights. Into the third you passe by a Brazen gate curiously wrought; it is the fairest of the three, especially, neere the doore of the Sepulchre, where the pavement is curiously interlaid: the doore is large and inlaid with Mother of Pearle, & the pavement about the Tombe of interlaid Marble; the Sepulchre very curiously wrought in worke of Mother of Pearle, and Gold, with an Epitaph in the Persian Tongue. A little distant stands his seate in a darke obscure place, where he sat to fore-tell of matters, and is much reuerenced. On the East-side stand three other Courts, in each a faire Tanke; on the North and West stand diuers faire houses, wherein keepe their Sides or Church-men. Note, that you may not enter any of these places but bare-foot.

Description of Asmere before the Mogoll made it his Royall residence.

Esteeme of a Mahumetan S. Hoghee Mundee.

From hence the way lyeth to Cairo, Mearta (which hath a stone Castle with many faire Turrets, a faire Tanke, and three faire Pagodes richly wrought with inlayd Workes, adorned richly with Iewels, and maintayned with rich Offerings) Pipera, louges gong Setrange, Candernpe, Ielowe, (this last is a Castle, seated on the height of a steepe Mountaine, 3 c. in ascent, by a faire stone cawsey, broad enough for two men to passe a-breast. At the first Cose end is a gate and place of Armes: there the cawsey is inclosed with wals on both sides, and at the 2 c. end is a double gate: at the 3 c. stands the Castle where you must enter three seuerall gates, the first very strongly plated with Iron, the second not so strong, with places ouer it to throw downe scalding Lead or Oyle: the third strongly plated with Pikes, sticking forth like harping Irons. Between each of these gates are spacious Courts for Armes, and within the further gate is a faire Portcullis. Being entred on the right hand stands a faire Meskite, with diuers Deuoncans adioyning, both to doe Iustice, and to take the Aire. On the left hand stands the Gouernours house on the height of the hills ouer-looking all.

Pagodas. Ielowe a strong Castle.

A flight-shot within the Castle is a faire Pagode built by the Founders of the Castle, Ancestors of Gidney Cann which were Indians. He turned Moore, and hereaued his elder Brother of this hold by this stratageme. He inuited him and his women to a Banquet, which his brother requiting with like inuitation of him and his, instead of women he lends choice Souldiers well appointed and close couered, two and two in a Dowle; who beeing entred after this manner, possesse themselves of the Ports, and held it for the Great Mogoll, to whom it now appertayneth, being one of the strongest seated Forts in the world. Some halfe Cose within the gate is a goodly Tanke foure square, cut directly downe into the Rocke, affirmed to bee fiftie fathome deepe, of cleere and good water. A little further is a faire Plaine shaded with many goodly trees, beyond which on the top of a little piqued Mountayne, is the Sepulchre of King Hassward, while he liued a great Souldier, since his death a great Saint, honoured in these parts. Here lye also interred two sonnes of Gillould a Potan King of Dely: neere to which is a wall which diuides the Castle neere a Cose in circuit, (the whole Castle beeing about 8 c. in compasse) nigh whereto is said to keepe a huge Snake of fife and twentie foot long, and as bigge as a man in the waste, which the people will by no meanes hurt, holding it a good fortune; for it hurts no man, but keepe amongst the bushes and bryars of this piqued Mountaine. This Castle is called the Gate or Frontire of Guzurate. From hence you come to Mudre, Billmall (the foundations of whose ancient wall, are yet seene) they haue beene 24 c. in circuit, many goodly Tankes also going to ruine, by one of which is the Founders Sepulchre, whither the Indians resort to worship: From hence to Amadabade, is a deepe sandy Defart Countrey. Rodeapore in this way hath many Sepulchres, (I let passe it and the rest.)

Cunning treachery. A Dowle or Dowle is a Chaire or Cage wherein they carry their Women on mens shoulders.

A huge Snake.

Billmall a great Citie.

Amadabade or Amadaur is a goodly City, and scituate on a faire Riuer, inclosed with strong wals and faire gates, with many beautifull Turrets. The Castle is large and strong, where resideth Cann Asom his Sonne, the Vice-Roy in these parts. The buildings comparable to any Citie in Asia or Africa, the streets large and well paved, the Trade great (for almost euery ten dayes goe from hence two hundred Coaches richly laden with Merchandise for Cambaya) the Merchants rich, the Artificers excellent for Caruings, Paintings, Inlayd Workes, imbroydery with Gold and Siluer: at an houres warning it hath in readinesse sixe thousand Horse; the gates perpetually strong guarded, none suffered without license to enter, nor to depart without Certificate. The cause of this is Badurs Neighbour-hood in his strong hold, within 50 c. of this Citie to the East, where Nature with some helpe of Art and Industry hath fortified him against all the Mogolls power; power; and whence some foure yeeres since (proclaiming Liberty and Lawes of good fellow-ship) hee sacked Cambaya with a sudden power, combined by hope of spoile, of one hundred thousand men, which for fourteene dayes continued possessors there and sharkers. There is also betwixt this and Trage a certaine Raiaw on the Mountaines able to make seuentene thousand Horse and Foot, the people called Colles or Quullees, keeping in a Desart Wildernesse which secures him from Conquest: and on the right hand is another able to make tenne thousand Horse, holding in a Desart Plaine a Cattle impregnable; whose Land is subiect to Gidney Cauns gouernment, but these seuen yeeres hee hath denyed him Tribute, and stands on his defence. This Raiaw is said to haue a Race of Horses not equalled in all the East, each valued at fiftene thousand R. reported to bee much swifter then the Arabian, and able to continue with reasonable speed a whole day without once drawing bitte; of which he is said to haue one hundred Mares. From Geloure to this Citie is all a sandy, woody Countrey, full of theeuish beastly men, and of Mankind, Sauage Beasts, Lions, Tygres, &c. 30 c. about this City is made Nill called Cickell, of a Towne 4 c. from Amadanar, not so good as that of Biana.

Cambaya is hence 38 c. sandy, wooddie, theeuish way: it stands by the Sea, encompassed with a strong bricke wall, the houses high, and faire, the streets paved in a direct Line with strong gates at the end of each, the Bazar large: about the Citie are such infinite numbers of Munkeyes, leaping from house to house, that they doe much mischief, and vntying the houses, are readie to braine men as they passe in the streets with the stones that fall. On the South is a goodly Garden with a Watch-tower of an exceeding height; on the North are many faire Tankes. It is the Mart of Guzerat, and so haunted by the Portugals, that you shall often finde two hundred Frigats at once riding there. It aboundeth with all sorts of cloth and rich Drugges. The Bay is 8 c. ouer, dangerous to passe by reason of the great Bore which drownes many, and therefore requires Guides skilfull of the tydes: in the neape tydes is least perill. Theeuies also, when you are ouer the Channell, are not a little dangerous, forcing you (if not the better provided) to quit your goods, or in long bickerings, betraying you to the tydes fury, which comes so swift that ten to one you escape not. Foure Coses beyond this Bay is Ioumbeser, now much ruined, and from thence eightene to Boroche, a woodie, dangerous passage, in which are many wilde Peacocks. Within 4 c. of Boroche is a great Mine of Agats. It is a faire Castle seated on a Riuer twice as broad as the Thames, to the mouth of which is hence 12 c. Here are made the rich Baffatas, in finenesse surpassing Holland Cloth, for fiftie Rupias a Booke, which contayneth fourteene English yards, and are not three quarters broad.

Hence to Uriaw 20 c. a goodly Countrey and fertile, full of Villages, abounding with wild Date Trees, which generally are plentiful by the Sea-side in most places, whence they draw a liquor called Tarric or Sure, as also from another wild Coco-tree called Tarric, 3 c. hence is Surat.

In a Towne betweene Boroche and Amadanar, lyeth a Great Saint of the *Moore*s called Polle-Medomy much resorted to out of all places of India, for wealth, children, or what else they desire. Diuers in the way goe with great chaines on their legges, and with their hands chained together, and their mouthes locked vp, (only opening them for food) and when they come before him in this manner of their humble deuotion, they asseme that presently their chaines and lockes flye open, not one returning in vaine; if themselves bee not vaine in their hopes, and in these and other like affections, which wayting on lying Vanities, forsake their owne Iudge.

From Agra to Cannowes is 130 c. East, the Citie great and vnwalled, seated on an ascent, and the Castle on the height well fortified: at the foot whereof anciently Ganges tooke his course, but hath now broken a passage thorow the Valley some 4 c. distant, notwithstanding as yet a small branch remayneth there. Ganges is within his bounds three quarters of a mile broad, but with great raines swells ouer his barres, couering the whole Vale neere 10 c. It hath thirtie Ri- uers of note which fall into it, as doth he himselfe into the Gulfe of Bengala. In it are innume- rable Alagaters or Crocodiles, there called Murgurmach. It hath eightene faire branches. Thence to Lacanowes is 30 c. a Towne of great traffique for Linnen and other Merchandize. To Oude 50 from thence are 50 c. a Citie of ancient note, and seate of a Potan King, now much ruined: the Castle built foure hundred yeeres agoe. Heere are also the ruines of Ranichand Castle and Houses with the Indians acknowledge for the great God, saying, that he tooke flesh vpon him to see the Tamasas of the World. In these ruines remayne certaine Bramenes, who record the names of all such Indians as wash themselves in the Riuer running thereby; which custome they say, hath continued foure lackes of yeeres (which is three hundred ninetie foure thousand, and five hundred yeeres before the Worlds Creation.) Some two miles on the further side of the Riuer is a Caeue of his, with a narrow entrance, but so spacious and full of turnings within, that a man may well loose himselfe there, if he take not better heed; where it is thought his ashes were buried. Hither resort many from all parts of India, which carry from hence in remembrance cer- taine graines of Rice as blacke as Gun-powder, which they say haue bene reserved euer since. Out of the ruines of this Castle is yet much Gold tryed: here is great Trade, and such abundance of Indian Ass-horne, that they make hereof Bucklers, and diuers sorts of Drinking Cups. There are of these Hornes, all the Indians asseme, some rare of great price, no lewell comparable, some esteeming them the right Vnicornes Horne.

From

From Oudee to Acabarpore 30 c. some 30 c. from whence lyeth Bonorce the principall Mart of Bengala goods. From Acab, to Iounpore 30 c. seated on a small Riuer, ouer which is a bridge with Houses like London Bridge, but nothing so good. The Castle hath beene a seat of the Potan Kings, there yet remayning two faire Meskites, with many other ancient Monuments: the houses are like those of Amadanar, the circuit some 8. or 10 c. Hence come excellent sweete Oyles, Carpets, Hangings embrodered with Silke, all sorts of fine Linnen, &c.

Thus much from Agra to Iounpore this way: from thence (returning that way to Agra) to Alabasse is 110 c. 30 c. all which are thorow a continuall Forrest. The Towne and Castle stand on the further side of Ganges pleasantly seated, called anciently Praye, and is held one of the Wonders of the East. Diuers Potan Kings haue sought to build here a Castle, but none could doe it, till Acabar layd the foundation and proceeded with the Worke. It stands on a Point or Angle hauing the Riuer Gemini on the South-side falling into Ganges. It hath beene fortie yeeres a building, and is not yet finished, neither is like to bee in a long time. The Acabar for many yeeres had attending this worke by report twentie thousand persons, and as yet there continue working thereon some five thousand of all sorts. It will be one of the most famous buildings of the World. In this Castle Sha Selim kept when he rebelled against his Father. The outward wals are of an admirable height, of a red square stone, like Agra Castle, within which are two other wals nothing so high. You enter thorow two faire gates into a faire Court, in which stands a Pillar of stone fiftie Cubits aboue ground (so deeply placed within ground that no end can be found) which by circumstances of the Indians, seemeth to haue beene placed by Alexander or some other great Conquerour, who could not passe further for Ganges. Passing this Court you enter a lesse, beyond that a larger, where the King sits on high at his Dersane to behold Elephants and other Beasts to fight. Right vnder him within a Vault are many Pagodes, being Monuments of Baba Adam, and Mama Hanah, (as they call them) and of their Progenie, with Pictures of Noah and his Descent.

The returne from Iounpore another way to Alabasse to Agra.
Alabasse Castle
A mighty Castle.

The Indians suppose that Man was heere created, or kept heere at least for many yeeres, affirming themselves to be of that Religion, whereof these Fathers were. To this place resort many thousands from all parts to worship: but before they approach these Reliques, they wash their bodies in Ganges, shauing their heads and beards, thereby deeming themselves cleansed from all their former sins. Out of this Court is another finely paved where the King keepes his Darbar; beyond it another whence you enter into the Moholl; large, diuided into sixteene seuerall Lodgings for sixteene great Women with their Slaues and Attendants: in the midst of all, the Kings Lodgings of three Stories each containyng sixteene roomes, in all eight and fortie Lodgings, all wrought ouer-head with rich Pargetting and curious Painting in all kind of Colours. In the midst of the lowest storie is a curious Tanke.

Alexanders Pillar.

Mon. of Adam and Eue, and of the Creation, Pilgrimage & Holy-water.

In this Moholl is a Tree which the Indians call the Tree of Life (beeing a wilde Indian figge Tree) for that it could neuer bee destroyed by the Potan Kings and this mans Ancestors, which haue sought to doe it by all meanes, stocking it vp and sifting the very earth vnder it to gather forth the sprigs, it still springing againe, insomuch that this King lets it alone seeking to cherish it. This Tree is of no small esteeme with the Indians. In the waters side within the Moholl are diuers large Deuoncans, where the King with his Women often passe their times in beholding Gemini, paying his Tribute to Ganges. Betweene them and the waters side at the foote of the wall is a pleasant Garden shaded with Cypresse Trees, and abounding with excellent fruits and flowres, hauing in the midst a faire Banqueting House, with priuie itaires to take Boate. From hence in October or Nouember when the great Frost is past, you may passe by Boats for Bengala; but the passage is dangerous: 4 c. downe are two Castles opposite on the Bankes, Harrayle and Gussie, seated on two hills rayled by industry, built by the Potans.

Strange Tree.

From Alabasse to Menepore is 20 c. alongst the Riuer Ganges. At 2 c. on this way is a sumptuous Tombe for this Kings first Wife, Mother to Sulian Cusseroon, and Sister to Raia Marissen-go, who vpon the newes of her Sonnes reuolt poysoned her selfe. From hence passing Ganges is a more direct way to Iounpore.

Menepore.

To Chappergat is 12 c. here is one of the fairest Sarais in India, liker a goodly Castle then a Inne to lodge strangers, the lodgings very faire of stone with Lockes and Keyes able to lodge a thousand men: a man can scarce shoote from side to side with an Arrow; neere to it is a faire bridge both built by one man: the way perillous for Theeues. Itay is thence 12 c. anciently the seate of a Potan King but now ruined. On the height of the hill cut steep downe, is seated a strong Castle double walled, hauing at the entrance the figure of a mans face which the Indians much worship powring abundance of Oyle vpon it. To Amedipore is 43 c. a plentifull Countrey full of good Sarais for Carauans. Much Indico called Cole of a grosse sort is made in this way, which is spent in India, or transported for Samercand, Cascat, and those parts, none passing into Christendome, except mixed with that of Biana. Hence to Agra is 7 c. passing Gemini close to the Citie.

Chappergat.
A faire Saray.

Itay. Face worshipped.

Lands lying Easterly from Lahor with their Lords.

Alongst the Rauce Easterly, lyeth the Land of Raiw Boffow, whose chiefe seate is Tem-mery, Tem-mery. 50 c. fro Lahor. He a is mighty Prince now subiect to the Mogol, a great Minion of Sha Selim.

- Out of this, and the adioyning Regions, come most of the Indian Drugges, growing on the Mountaines, Spikenard, Turbith, Miras, Kebals, Gunlack, Turpentine, Costus, &c. This Raia confines the Kings Land Easterly. Bordering to him is another great Raia, called Tulluck-Chand, whose chiefe City is Negercoat, 80 c. from Labor, and as much from Syrinan, in which City is a famous Pagod, called Je or Durga, vnto which worlds of people resort out of all parts of India. It is a small short Idoll of stone, cut in forme of a man; much is consumed in offerings to him, in which some also are reported to cut off a piece of their tongue, and throwing it at the Idols feet, haue found it whole the next day (able to lye I am afraid; to serue the father of lyes and lyers, how euer) yea some out of impious piety heere sacrifice themselues, cutting their throats, and presently recouering: the holier the man, the sooner forsooth he is healed, some (more grievous sinners) remaining halfe a day in paine, before the Diuell will attend their cure. Hither they resort to craue children, to enquire of money hidden by their parents, or lost by themselues, which hauing made their offerings, by dreames in the night receiue answere, not one departing discontented. They report this Pagan Deity to haue beene a woman (if a holy Virgin may haue that name) yea that shee still liues (the Diuell shee doth) but will not shew her selfe. Diuers Moors also resort to this Peer. This Raia is powerfull, by his Mountaines situation secure, not once vouchsafing to visite Sha Selim.
- On this Raia Easterly confineth another, called Deccampergas, a mightie Prince, his chiefe seat Calsery about an 150 c. from Agra, his Country held 500 c. long, North and South 300 c. broad, populous, able to raise vpon occasion fise hundred thousand foot, but few or no horse; the Land plentiful in it selfe, but sends forth little.
- To the Eastward of this Raia, betwixt Iemini and Ganges lyeth the Land of Raia Mansa, a mighty Prince and very rich, reported to be serued, all in vessels of massie gold: his Countrey 300 c. long, and one hundred and fifty broad, his chiefe seat Serenegar: the Mountaines called Dow Lager, vpon which in time of Winter falls such extreame Snowes, that the Inhabitants are forced to remooue into the Valleyes. Yet doe I not thinke that any of these Lands extend Northerly aboue forty degrees, but the height of the Mountaines causeth this extremity of cold. This Raia Land extendeth within some 200 c. of Agra, part within 50 c. of Syrinan, very plentiful.
- On the further side of Ganges lyeth a very mighty Prince, called Raia Rodorow, holding a mountainous Countrey, his chiefe seat Camow; his territories extend 400 c. long, and not much lesse in breadth, abounding with graine, haue many goodly Cities: thence commeth much Muske, and heere is the great breed of a small kind of Horse, called Gunts, a true traueiling scalecliffe beast. This Prince is puissant in foot, but hath few Horse or Elephants, the mountaines not requiring the one, and the cold excluding the other: his Lands thought to reach neare China.
- To the South of this Raia, thwart the streames of Ganges, is seated another, Raia Mugg, very powerfull in horse, foote, and Elephants. In his Land is the old rocke of naturall Diamonds, which yeelds him no small benefit. His Lands extend East, somewhat South 700 c. from Agra. Beneath him amongst the streames of Ganges, keepeth a Potan Prince of the Dely-Kings race, whom the King cannot subdue, by reason of the streames and Ilands of Ganges. He confineth vpon Purrop, and makes often inroades vpon the Kings lands, enforcing Sha Selim to maintaine a frontire army. Hence to the mouth of Ganges, all is the Kings land: only in the mouth, the Portugall Out-lawes hold a small Fort, and doe much milchiefe, liuing in no forme of subiection to God or man.
- On the further side of Ganges, is the mightie King of Arracan, enioying a large territory, and infinite numbers of small Barkes. Eastward from him is the Kingdome of Siam; behind it Oua and Iangoma. Betweene Tanassar and Arracan is the Kingdome of Pegu; the Land now lyeth waste. To the South is the Kingdome of Queda, Malacca, &c. On the Sea-coast of Bengala, this King hath two chiefe Ports, Ongolee (tyrannized by the Portugals) and Pipilee, passing which, and the Land of Orixa, you enter into the Lands of Goloconda, on whom Sha Selim maketh warres, and hath forcibly taken much of his Land. His chiefe Port is Masulipatan, and his Royall seat Braganadar and Goloconda, that late builded. Alongst the sea side toward the Cape, is the mightie King of Bezeneger, vnder whom the Portugals hold Saint Thome and Negapatan, but are not suffered to build a Castle. But I let passe these neighbouring Indies, and returne to Agra, the Mogols royall residence.
- Agra* hath not been in fame aboue fiftie yeeres, being before Acabars time a Village, who removed (as you haue heard) from Fetipore for want of good water. It is spacious, large, populous beyond measure, that you can hardly passe in the streets, which are for the most part dirty and narrow, saue only the great Bazar and some few others, which are large and faire. The Citie lyeth in manner of a halfe-moone, bellying to the land-ward some 5 c. in length, and as much by the Riuer side. vpon the bankes, whereof are many goodly houses of the Nobility, pleasantly ouer-looking Gemini, which runneth with a swift current from the North to the South, somewhat Easterly into Ganges. Vpon the banke of this Riuer stands the Castle, one of the fairest and admirabest buildings of the East, some three or foure miles in compasse, inclosed with a faire and strong wall of squared stone; about which is cast a faire ditch, ouer it draw-bridges. The walles walles are built with bulwarkes somewhat defensible, regalled with a counter-scarfe or front without, some fiftene yards broad. Within this are two other strong walls and gates. To the Castle are foure gates, one to the North, by which you passe to a Rampire with great peeces, another West to the Bazar, called the Cichery gate, within which, ouer against the great gate, is the Casi his seat of Chiefe-Iustice in matters of law, and by it two or three murtherers very great (one three foot in the bore, and fiftene long) of cast brasfe. Ouer-against this seat is the Cichery or Court of Rolls, where the Kings Viseir sits euery morning some three houres, by whose hands passe all matters of Rents, Grants, Lands, Firmans, Debts, &c.

Seats of Iustice.

Beyond these two gates you passe a second gate, ouer which are two Raians in stone*, who were slaine in the Kings Derbar before the Kings eyes; for being ouer-bold in speech, they selling their liues brauely, in remembrance of which they are heere placed. Passing this gate, you enter into a faire streete, with houses and munition all alongst on both sides. At the end of this street being a quarter of a mile, you come to the third gate, which leads to the Kings Derbar, alwayes chained, all men, but the King and his children, there alighting. This gate is to the South called Acabar Dromage, close within which is the Whores child, many hundreds of which attend there day and night, according as their seuerall turnes come euery seventh day; that they may bee ready when the King or his women shall please to call any of them to sing or dance in his Moholl, he giuing to euery one of them stipends according to their vnworthy worth.

* It is said that they were two Brothers Rebels Tutor to a Prince their Nephew, whom the King demanded of them. They refused, and were committed, but drew on the Officers, slew twelve, and at last by multitudes oppressing were slain, and here haue Elephants of stone, and themselves figured. Singsters or whoores attending. Some say they are there as a Court of guard of women, of which are here two or three hundred daily by succession. Tessillam is a gesture of humiliation. The Kings Derbar.

The fourth Gate is to the Riuer called the Derfane, leading into a faire Court extending alongst the Riuer, in which the King lookes forth euery morning at Sun-rising, which hee salutes, and then his Nobles resort to their Tessillam. Right vnder the place where he lookes out, is a kind of scaffold whereon his Nobles stand, but the Addees with others awayt below in the Court. Here also euery noone he looketh forth to behold Tama'shan, or fighting of Elephants, Lyons, Buffles, killing of Deare with Leopards; which is a custome on euery day of the weeke, Sunday excepted, on which is no fighting; but Tuesday on the contrary is a day of blood, both of fighting beasts, and iusticed men, the King iudging and seeing execution. To returne to the third Gate, within it you enter into a spacious court with Atesanna's round about like shops or open stalls, wherein his Captaines according to their degrees, keep their seventh day Chockees. A little further you enter within a rayle into a more inward Court, with in which none but the Kings Addees, and men of sort are admitted, vnder paine of swacking by the Porters cudgells, which lay on load without respect of persons.

Being entred, you approach the Kings Derbar or Seat, before which is also a small Court inclosed with railes, couered ouer head with rich Semianes to keepe away the Sunne; where aloft in a Gallery, the King sits in his chaire of State, accompanied with his Children and chiefe Vizier (who goeth vp by a short ladder forth of the Court) no other without calling daring to goe vp to him, saue onely two Punkaw's to gather wind. And right before him below on a scaffold is a third, who with a horse taile makes hauocke of poore flies. On the right hand of the King, on the wall behind him, is the picture of our Sauour; on the left, of the Virgin. Within these railes none vnder the degree of foure hundred horse are permitted to enter. On the further side of this Court of preience, are hanged golden bells, that if any be oppressed and can get no iustice by the Kings Officers, by ringing these bells when the King sits, he is called, and the matter discussed before the King. But let them be sure their cause be good, least he be punished for presumption to trouble the King. Here euery day betweene three and foure a clocke, the King comes forth (and many thousands resort to doe their duties, each taking place according to his degree) where hee remains hearing of matters, receiuing of newes by letters read by his Vizier, graunting of suites, &c. till shutting in of the Euening, the drumme meane while beating, and Instruments playing from a high Gallery on the next building opposite: his Elephants and Horses passing by in braue fashion, doing their Tessillam, and being perused by Officers to see if they prosper. In the Castle are two high turrets, ouer-laid with pure massie gold, which may be seen from farre, one ouer his Mohol, the other ouer his Treasury. After his going in from the Derbar in the Euening, some two houres after he comes out againe, sitting forth in a small more inward Court, behind the other, close to his Moholl, into which none but the Grandes, and they also with tickets to be renewed with euery Moone, are permitted to enter, where he drinks by number and measure, sometimes one and thirtie, and running ouer, mixing also among, seuerall iudicatures. From this Court is his priuy passage into a curious Garden, and to his Barge, by which he often passeth the Riuer to an other Garden opposite. It is remarkeable, that both in Court, and here in these Gardens, no Courtiers or Gardeners are tied to attendance, but by their seventh dayes turne.

Of his Elephants yearly presenting, of his Treasures in this Castle, &c. see Capt. Hawkins former relations. Of other things, see that which follows in Sir T. Roes Journall.

Some adde, * that the Citie hath no walls, but a ditch round about, not broad, and dry also: adioyning to the ditch without the Citie are very large suburbs. The City and suburbs are one way seven mile in length, three in breadth. The Noble mens houses and Merchants built with bricke and stone, flat roofed, the common sort of mudde walls, couered with thatch, which cause often and terrible fires. The Citie hath sixe Gates, the adioyning Riuer Gemini being broader then the Tames at London, on which are many Boats, some of one hundred Tunnes, but these cannot returne against the streame. Most of the Noble mens houses are by the Riuer side. From Agra to Labor fixe hundred miles, the way is set on both sides with Mulbery-trees.

Description of King Acabars Sepulchre is 3 c. distant from Agra in the way to Labor, nothing neere finished as yet, after tenne yeares worke. It is placed in the midst of a faire and large Garden, inclosed with bricke walls, neere two miles in circuit; is to haue foure Gates (but one of which is yet in hand) each, if answerable to this foundation, able to receiue a great Prince with a reasonable traine) along the way side is a spacious Moholl for his fathers women (as is said) to remayne and end their dayes in deploring their deceased Lord, each enioying the lands they before had in the Kings time, by the pay or rents of fise thousand horse the principall, so that this should be to them a perpetuall Nunnery, neuer to marry againe.

In the Center of this Garden stands the Tombe foure square, about three quarters of a mile in compasse. The first inclosure is with a curious rayle, to which you ascend some fixe steps into a small square Garden quartered in curious Tankes, planted with variety of sweets: adioyning to which is the Tombe, rounded with this gardenet, being also foure square, all of hewne stone, with faire spacious Galleries on each side, hauing at each corner a small beautifull Turret, arched ouer head, and couered with various Marble. Betwixt corner and corner are foure other Turrets at like distance. Here within a faire round coffin of Gold, lieth the body of this Monarch, who sometimes thought the World too little for him. This Tombe is much worshipped both by the Moors and Gentiles, holding him for a great Saint. Some tenne or twelue foot higher, you ascend by staires to another Gallery, (like, but narrower, to the former, as are also the rest that follow) containing onely three of those Turrets between corner and corner. Here in the midst is his Wardrobe for a memoriall. The third story hath but two of those middle Turrets on a side: the fourth one: the fifth hath only the corner Turret, and a small square Gallery. The Tombe was not finished at my departure, but lay in manner of a coffin, couered with a white sheet, interwrought with Gold flowers. By his head stands his Sword and Target, and on a small pillow his Turbant, and thereby two or three faire gilded bookes. At his feet stand his shooes, and a rich Bason and Ewre. Euery one approaching neere makes his reuerence, and puts off his shooes, bringing in his hand some sweete smelling flowers to bestrew the Carpets, or to adorne the Tombe.

At my last sight thereof, there was onely ouer head a rich Tent, with a Semiane ouer the Tombe. But it is to be inarched ouer with the most curious white and speckled Marble, and to be seeled all within, with pure sheet-Gold richly inwrought. These foure last Turrets also inclosing the Sepulchre, are of most rich curious Marble, & the ground vnderfoot paved with the like. There are in continuall worke about this and other buildings about it, the Moholl and Gate, not so few as three thousand. The stone is brought from a rich Quarrey neere Fetipore, which (wee haue said) may be cut in length and forme, as Timber with lawes, and Plankes and feelings are made thereof.

CHAP. V.

The ninth Voyage of the Indian Companie to the East Indies, in the Iames, whereof was Captaine M. EDMUND MARLOWE of Bristoll, and the Master IOHN DAVY, which wrote this Iournall.

February 1611

He tenth of February, 1611. we departed from the Downes vpon our Voyage. The thirteenth at night we anchored within the Ile of Wight, where we stayed till the one and twentieth of the same Moneth, and then set saile and turned out at S. Helens point. The same day at noone we had Dynnose North from vs three leagues off, the Dragon before vs, and the Hosiander and the Salomon put in the Needles.

Aprill 11. 1612.
They crosse the Equinoctiall.

The eleuenth day of Aprill, 1612. by obseruation wee were vnder the Equinoctiall line: and in longitude from the Meridian of the Lizard, fixe degrees twenty minutes West. This night the variation was fise degrees thirty seuen minutes from North to the East. The twenty seuenth, the variation of the Needle was foureteene degrees seuen minutes. This day at noone we were in latitude by obseruation, nineteene degrees fortie minutes: the longitude from the meridian of the Lizard, eleuen degrees twenty foure minutes West. These twenty foure houres we sailed two leagues South by East. Here we saw an Iland South-east from vs fourteene leagues. This Iland I saw when I was with Sir Edward Michelborne. This Iland is like Corno. The latitude is twenty degrees thirty minutes: the longitude eleuen degrees thirty minutes West from the Lizard. The variation of the Needle foureteene degrees thirty minutes. This Iland riseth ragged: vpon the Easter end standeth a little pike, but the Iland is round like Corno. East North-east from this Iland is another Iland or two in sight, seuen or eight leagues off.

This seemeth to be the Ile de Martin Vaz.

The

The seven and twentieth of June, at nine of the clocke at night, wee saw the Land of Saint Laurence, in latitude by iudgement foure and twentieth degrees eight minures, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, five and twentieth degrees no minures. The variation was fifteene degrees, and ten minutes.

The eight and twentieth, in the morning the variation of the needle was fifteene degrees, no minutes, in foure leagues off the shoare; betweene the headland of the Bay, and the Ilands before the Bay, is no ground in seuentie or eightie fathomes.

This night wee anchored in the Bay of Saint Augustine, in five fathomes by the South-land. 10 This day wee weighed and came in by the Riuer with the shippe. The one of our anchors lay in five and thirtie fathomes, and the other in ten fathomes. You may ride in shoalder water off each side, if you will: for this channell of deepe water is but narrow. Here no Sea can come to hurt you, because the Shoalds and Land breake it off. It may well be called an harbour, for the goodnesse of the place. Wee spent twentie dayes in this Bay.

They anchor in the Bay of Saint Augustine.

The eighteenth of Iulie, in the morning we set saile for Bantam, and wee steered off West by north from the riuer to go to the northward of the Ilands. And in this course you haue no ground with the lead; for it is all steepe home to the shoare of the other side: for when you haue twentie fathomes within the Ilands, you are hard by the stones: but by the Ilands and shoalds is faire shoalading from seven to thirtie fathoms, and no ground, the gut betweene the hills being East by South from you, you goe right into the rode, or East.

Iulie 18.
They depart
from the Riuer of Saint Augustine.

20 The eighteenth, at noone wee were in latitude three and twentieth degrees, five and fortie minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, two and twentieth degrees, eight and fiftie minutes East, and two leagues off the next land. Heere the land is all white by the waters side.

The nineteenth, in the morning the variation was fifteene degrees no minutes, and then the ship was from the neere land twelue leagues: and the latitude by iudgement three and twentieth degrees, five and fiftie minutes. At noone, the latitude by obseruation foure and twentieth degrees, one and thirtie minutes: and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope two and twentieth degrees, two and twentieth minutes East. These foure and twentieth houres we sailed vpon a right line South-west by South, twentie leagues. This night the variation was fourteene degrees thirtie minutes.

They saile toward Bantam
by the ouer side of the Ile of Saint Laurence.

The foure and twentieth of September, in the morning wee saw the Iles of Nintam, which 30 are in latitude, one degree, thirtie minutes. The Sound betweene the two great Ilands is eighteene leagues from Priaman, and eluen leagues from the Shoalds before Tecou. Beware you come not neere these Shoalds by night, but rather lie short three or foure leagues till day-light. And then when you see three hommockes, that will rise vp like three Ilands, haue a speciall care, that you haue one at your bolt-spreet end, to giue warning of any spots in your way: for there are Corralhoods that you may easily perceiue. Your course from this Sound of the two great Ilands of Nintam to goe for Tecou or Priaman, is East North-east to the shoalds aforesaid. But when you come thorow the Sound, keepe your lead going: and come no neerer the South great Iland then sixteene fathome: for towards the East side are Shoalds: and a breach off the Norther-Iland also, as you shall see vpon your Larboard-side going in.

September 24.
Iles of Nintam.

40 For your better knowing when you draw neere the Shoalds of Tecou, set the three hommockes which are like three Ilands, but are vpon the Maine, for it is low land by them: and when you haue them North-east and by East, you shall begin to meet with them: and when the said land is North North-east you are past them. But bee very carefull euery where: for it is all bad ground hereabout before you passe the high land of Manancabo, which is in latitude foure degrees, thirtie minutes, or thereabout.

The fixe and twentieth, wee anchored in the rode of Priaman; where wee found the Thomas: and wee stayed there to recouer sicke men fourteene dayes. And then the Hector and wee did set saile for Bantam. The latitude of Priaman is in fiftie minutes Southerly. The variation foure degrees ten minutes. The Rode is behind the second Iland in fixe fathomes: vpon which Iland 50 you haue fresh water and wood. The Barre of Priaman is fast by.

They arrive in the Rode of Priaman in Sumatra.

The eight of October, the ship came downe by the Hector, where wee stayed for her to goe for Bantam, and in the morning set saile.

October 8.

The three and twentieth, wee came into the rode of Bantam with the James and the Hector.

The fourth of Nouember 1612. wee weighed from the rode of Bantam, to goe for Coromandel, by the straight of Sunda: but the wind and streames were so much against vs, that we were forced into the Straight of Sunda againe, to fit our ship being much weather-beaten.

They arrive at
Bantam.
Nouember.

The eleuenth of December, wee anchored againe by Pulo Panian, and went to worke to ro-mage our ship to take in ballast.

December 11.

The tenth of Ianuarie, being ballasted, watered, and fitted, wee set saile for the Straight of 60 Malacca: but being late in the monson, streames and winds both against vs, with much toyle to ship and men wee plied seuentie leagues from Bantam, and could get no farther from the tenth of this moneth to the first of March: whereupon our hope was then past for that. And taking aduise amongst ourselues, wee concluded to water and wood, and so to returne for Bantam, and to proceed without Sumatra.

Ianuarie 10.
The Straight
of Malacca.

They are put back: to *Ban-

The

- The eleventh, being fitted with wood and water, we bare vp for Bantam the second time.
- June 5. 1613. The fifth of June 1613. at noone, in latitude 12. degr. no minutes, and longitude from the salt hills, 23. degrees no minutes West. Heere you shall see plainly, that we haue been carried with the streame foure degrees, thirty minutes, which is ninty leagues. For whosoeuer he be, that shall faile downe from Bantam, or vp, he shall find such vncertaine sailing, if he looke not well to the variation of the needle, that he may well misse his expectation for the arriuall at his Port. For there is neither English nor Hollander, that can find any way how to deale with those streames, but only by the variation: for that will helpe much in ten or fifteene leagues, if it be carefully obserued. Heere we saw the land, it is so low, that you cannot see it before you see the Pagods or Pagan Churches: and we were when we saw the land foure leagues off. You may be bold with your lead in fifteene fathomes by night vpon the Coast, and by day in ten fathomes: but take heed you haue a sure man at the lead, for it will shoald suddenly; for after you come to haue thirty fathoms, you will come presently to shoald water, for it is like a well, and the ground Ozie. Your course along the shoare is North and by East to Paleacate, and so vp to Masulipatan. This land was about Negapatan. Heere we steered North North-east all night, in three and twenty and seuentene fathoms, three or foure leagues: the variation thirteene degrees, ten minutes, you shall in twelue degrees of latitude surely see the land.
- A special note.
- They discerie the Land.
- Negapatan*.
- They arriue at Paleacate.
- The sixth at noone, we anchored in the Road of Paleacate in eight fathoms sand. There is a middle ground, where you haue but five fathoms, and sixe, seuen, eight, within that againe. The markes for the Roade are the round Hill by the other hill West Northerly, and the Hollanders Fort South-west and by West, as wee road. The variation is thirteene degrees, ten minutes. The latitude thirteene degrees, thirty minutes.
- The eighth at noone, we were in latitude fourteene degrees, forty minutes: we sailed since we weighed the last night twenty three leagues, the depths five and twenty and three and twenty fathoms: the course North and by East; but the lead is our guid vnder God.
- The ninth at noone, in latitude fifteene degrees, thirty minutes. Heere you haue the land in sight, but not the high land of Petepoli. These foure and twenty houres wee sailed seuentene leagues North in fifteene and sixteene fathoms. And this high land is a Pagodie or Pagan Church. You may, if you will, hale in with it into five fathoms, when the hill is North North-west, but you must goe off East for it, for we did so. But beware in going off for a lownesse of sand, and come no nearer it then twelue or thirteene fathoms, till you be surely past it. This high land is from the high land of Petepoli sixe leagues.
- A good note.
- They Anchor in the Road of Petepoli.
- The tenth, we anchored in the Road of Petepoli, in five fathoms sand. This new high Island North North-west from vs, and the platforme of Palme-trees vpon the Island East North-east, Easterly, and the Barre North-west and by North from vs. All the Sea-coast is low land. The latitude fifteene degrees, two and fiftie minutes. The variation thirteene degrees, fifty minutes, perfect and full.
- A Factory with nine men erected at Petepoli.
- The nineteenth, in the after-noone we set saile, when the Factory was fitted. The Merchants which wee left there, were Master George Chaussey, and our Purser, with seuen men more to keep our house and goods.
- A great tree, a chiefe marke for to know the Roade.
- The twentieth calme, you goe East South-east nine leagues, in seuen or eight fathomes, and then North North-west: feare not in five fathoms or lesse, after you are about the point, for it is low land. There is but one great tree bigger then any of the rest to know the Road by, that must you bring West and by North from you, and you shall haue three fathoms and a quarter soft Ozie, and ride three miles off the land.
- They arriue at Masulipatan.
- The one and twentieth, we anchored in the Roade of Masulipatan, where we found a ship of Holland: heere we were well entertained. Heere we did stay about sixe moneths, to wit, vntill the sixteenth of Ianuary: and then we weighed and went for Petipoli, where wee arriued the nineteenth of the same, and stayed there to take in the goods and Merchants, till the seuenth of February. And then wee set saile for Bantam, and kept the same courses which wee did before downe, all the way vp. We arriued at Bantam the twentieth of Aprill 1614. where we stayed till the tenth of Iune 1614. and then set saile for Patane.
- They retorne from Petepoli for Bantam.
- They arriue at Bantam.
- They set out for Patane.
- June 10. 1614.
- The tenth of Iune 1614. at noone, we had sight of the Islands nine leagues from Bantam, our going is from five, sixe, seuen, eight, twelue, fourteene, and so to foure and twentie fathomes: at this time our course was North North-east, after you are cleare off the Road, the wind from the East South-east: the latitude Southerly five degrees, foure and forty minutes.
- The eleventh, at sixe of the clocke in the morning, we were by the two Islands that lye North from Bantam, in five degrees of latitude by Sumatra, in twentie fathomes, which is the surest course out and home. Heere you must be carefull to looke well out for two sands, that lye euen with the water. From six in the morning we sailed seuen leagues North North-east, in sixteen, fifteene, fourteene and thirteene fathoms, and are now from Bantam seuen and twentie leagues North and by East nearest, the wind from the East to the South South-east. From twelue in the night we sailed eleuen leagues North, in ten and eleuen fathoms Ozie: but when you passe the Riffe, you haue hard sand: the latitude foure degrees, twelue minutes Southerly. Beware by night, night, goe not without ten fathomes, nor within to the Maine to lesse then fixe or seuen. And so be bold with a sure man at the Lead: for that must be the best Pilot.

The twelfth, in the morning from eight degrees Easterly, wee sailed seuen leagues North North-east in eight, seuen, fixe and five fathomes, and are with the second Riffe.

From the second in the morning to eleuen in the morning, wee sailed seuen leagues North North-east by iudgement: but the streame did set so fast in, that wee were forced to anchor in foure fathome and a quarter lesse: the riffe land in sight, but not Lucapara. Heere must especiall care bee had, when you come with the land off the Riffe, that is, twelue leagues short of Lucapara, and fortie eight leagues from Bantam, that you come not within fixe fathomes till you see Lucapara, for it is very vncertaine ground, full of pits. And for a warning to auoid it, beware you bring not the Riffe land last mentioned South-west and by South, but keepe off in seuen fathomes, till you see Lucapara, and then you need not feare, for the Island is bold two leagues off, but remember you must leaue it to the Eastward of you, and when you see it, feare not five or foure fathomes, for that is the depth you may be bold in with the Maine of Sumatra, but in the best toward the Island is five and an halfe, and fixe fathomes. The streame setteth North North-west, and South South-east, it hath fixe foot water. The floud commeth from the South-ward, and the ebbe from the North-ward. The thirteenth, we rid still with very vncertaine weather.

The Ile Lucapara.

The fourteenth, we came with the Island and Maine, and put through betweene them in five fathomes and an halfe. And at noone we had the Island East North-east a league from vs, for so neere is the deepest water: then steere North till the point bee North-west and by West in five or fixe fathomes. The distance is foure leagues, keepe the Island South South-east from you, for about it is very vncertaine ground.

Then the next reach lyeth North North-west neereft: but keepe Sumatra side, and not Banca, although you haue deeper water: for Banca side is Rockes, and sounding depths, Sumatra is Ozie. And you may bee bold in this first reach: and you shall haue nine, ten, eleuen, twelue, eightene or twentie fathomes, till you come with the high land of Banca, which at Lucapara wil shew like Islands, then shal you see Islands, besides the great Island of Banca three leagues before you, and Sumatra side fall in with a bite, and all flat ground: wherefore come no neerer then seuen, and no farther off then nine fathomes, but rather for aduantage hale neere vnto the flats of Sumatra in fixe or five fathomes. Here is the Channell and narrowest: here goes tydes strongly one way, as well as the other. The fifteenth, the next reach lyeth North-west by North eight leagues, and wee were with it fixe degrees East.

Banca is a great Island.

The sixteenth, the next reach lyeth North-west and by West, and West North-west downe to Palimbam point: but keepe neere Sumatra in fixe or seuen fathomes: for Banca side is not good: although it bee deeper water, yet there are many Rockes toward the end of the great Island of Banca. This reach is seuentene leagues long to the Towne of Palimbam, and the hill Monpin is North from you, which standeth vpon the Norther end of Banca. Then is the Road of Palimbam South South-west from you: your depth ten fathomes off Sumatra side. The distance betweene the Island and Sumatra at this end is fixe leagues in my iudgement.

Palimbam point.

The hill Monpin, vpon the Northerne end of Banca.

Keepe Sumatra side by night or day in seuen fathomes, till you haue the Norther end of Banca East South-east for a Riffe that lyeth off the Norther end two leagues: and then will your latitude bee one degree, one and twentie minutes Southerly, and foure leagues off Banca. But you must alter courses to bring it thus. For when Banca is North-east and by East. Then you must steere North North-east, and North, as Lead and discretion shall guide: but goe not with lesse then ten fathomes by night.

The seuenteenth, at noone one degree ten minutes Southerly: Here you saile North in eight or nine fathomes Ozie: and here you see that Ile of Pulo Tuio without you. Here by reason we had it calme, we anchored in nine fathomes. Heere the streame did set West South-west and East North-east.

The Ile of Pulo Tuio.

The eighteenth, heere your course is North North-east, seuen, eight, nine and ten fathomes. And when you haue the two Northermost Islands in the Offing South-east from you, then is Pulo So North-west and by North. And being thus it hath two hills with a Valley in the midst, and two little Islands by it. And when it is South-west, it sheweth round like the Mew-stone.

The nineteenth, this Island hath water and wood, but none Inhabitants. The latitude of this Island is fortie minutes South.

The twentieth, now your depths must bee from fifteene to twentie in and off, and your course North to Linga, the land is faire in sight, goe not off by any meanes, rather anchor. Heere is hard ground.

Linga.

Now your course to Bintam is North & by West neereft, but go not without foure and twentie, nor within twentie. And that will bring you in sight of the round hill of Bintam, which hath in latitude one deg. ten min. and is the fairest way. The hill standeth in the middle of the Island.

Bintam.

The one and twentieth, now your course for Pulo Timon is North North-west, and North by West hauing alwayes sight of land, I meane Islands; and your depths are twentie, nineteene, and eigh eene fathomes, Ozie. The latitude of Pulo Timon is two degrees fortie seuen minutes Northerly, or much thereupon.

Pulo Timon.

Pulo Capas.

The two and twentieth, from Pulo Timon to Pulo Capas is thirtie fixe leagues North by West neereft in eightene, nineteene, twentie, and twentie two fathomes. And when you haue the Ilands West off you, then haue you thirtie fixe fathomes close by the Iland. If occasion serue you may goe betweene the Ilands and the Maine in a faire Channell. These Ilands are in the latitude of foure degrees fiftie two minutes Northerly.

The foure and twentieth, from Pulo Capas to the other Ilands, which are so many that you cannot tell them, the course is North-west by North fourteene leagues: and then the Norther end of the Iles is distant from the Souther end nine leagues. The depths are twentie two and twentie foure fathomes.

The five and twentieth, now your course to Patane is West North-west fortie eight leagues: 10 goe no further off the land then twentie leagues, nor no neerer, then twelue or thirteene leagues, vnlesse you haue occasion to anchor. The Land is bold and high. After you passe sixteene leagues West North-west, there are no more Ilands till you come to Patane, but only one Rocke: and you may if you will, goe betweene the Maine and it. This Rocke is fourteene leagues short of Patane.

They arrive at
Patane.
Sangora.

The thirtieth, we anchored in the Roade of Patane in three fathomes and an halfe, where we did ride til the first of August: and then set saile for Sangora to trimme our ship. This Sangora is a very good place vnder two Ilands, fast by the Maine, and from Patane fourteene or fiftene leagues.

August, 3, 1614.

The third of August 1614. we came to an Anchor in the Road of Sangora vnder the Easter- 20 most Iland of the two, and there we trimmed our ship well, and came away the ninth of September, arrived at Patane the next day following, where we stayed till the sixt of October, to take in the goods of the Globe, to carrie them for Bantam.

The ninth of October we set saile from Patane, being bound for Bantam; holding the same course backe, that we came forth: and the ninth of Nouember we arrived safe at Bantam. Wee rid there till the seuen and twentieth of Ianuary, to lade our ships, and to fit all things for our Voyage home for England.

They returne
for England.
The death of Capt. Edmund
Marlow.

The nine and twentieth, wee set saile from thence: And within some hundred leagues from Bantam home-ward bound dyed our Captaine Master Edmund Marlow, an excellent man in the Art of Nauigation, and all the Mathematicks. The first place at which we anchored was the Bay 30 of Saldanha, where we stayed for our Consort the Globe: which arrived there the next day following.

The nine and twentieth of Aprill 1615. wee came to an anchor in the Roade, where wee stayed till the seuenteenth of May. And then being well fitted in both our ships, wee did set saile for Santa Helena, where wee safely arrived the third of Iune, and rode there till the seuenth in the morning. Then wee set saile together for England, where, God bee prayfed, we safely arrived the third of August 1615.

CHAP. VI.

A Rater, or briefe direction for readie sayling into the East-India, digested into a plaine method by Master IOHN DAVIS of Lime-house, vpon experience of his five Voyages thither, and home againe.

§. I.

Nauticall Obseruation of places betwixt the Lizard and Saint Augustine in the Ile of Saint Laurence.

Lancerota.

First, the Lizard hath in latitude fiftie degrees ten minutes. The Cape Finisterre in Galicia hath in latitude forty three degrees twentie minutes, and longitude from the Meridian of the Lizard, two degrees thirtie six minutes West. The Iland of Lancerota hath in latitude twentie eight degrees, forty minutes, and longitude from the Lizard five degrees twentie foure degrees West. The variation of the 60
Compass is sixe degrees sixe minutes from North to East. And when you are in the latitude of thirtie three degrees thirtie minutes, and chance to haue five degrees twentie minutes of variation, you may assure your selfe to be North North-east from the said Iland, and your course is South South-west to goe with it.

Grand Canaria.

The Grand Canaria hath in latitude twenty seuen degrees fortie minutes, and longitude from the the Lizard sixe degrees thirtie minutes West. The variation is sixe degrees from North to East. Likewise in the latitude thirty degrees thirty minutes: when you haue five degrees and fiftie minutes variation, you haue the said Iland South and by West from you.

The Iland of Saint Marie, being the Eastermost of the Azores, hath in latitude thirtie seven degrees; and longitude from the Lizard fourteene degrees West. The variation of the Compass is one degree fortie minutes from North to East. But when you are in the latitude of thirtie degrees thirtie minutes comming home-ward, and finde five degrees variation, and would see the Ilands in your course, goe North-east for Saint Marie: but it is better to goe more Northerly, and so you shall bee sure to see some of them: for the variation is much vpon that rate in the North-east course, till you come in with the Ilands.

10. The latitude of Sal, which is one of the Ilands of Cape Verde, is ten degrees thirtie minutes, and longitude from the Lizard twelue degrees twelue minutes. The variation three degrees, thirtie minutes from North to East.

Sal.

Bonauista is from Sal sixe leagues. The mid-way betweene the Meridian of Cape Verde and these Ilands in the latitude of nine degrees, you haue two degrees fifteene minutes of variation to the East-ward: and the nearer you are to the Main land, the lesse variation. But when you come in five degrees of latitude, if the Ternados doe not meete with you before, there you shall beginne to haue them, which are winds blowing euery-where.

Bonauista.

20. But if you will passe the Equinoctiall, vse what diligence you may, in plying to get from these vnhealthfull and troublesome windes: but keepe your selfe so, that you may bee butt South and by East, or South South-east from Mais, because it may bee in your minde, that your much going to the East-ward will bee a helpe when you stand ouer with the generall wind. But you may there spend much time, and get little aduantage. Now assoone as you haue the wind at South South-east, and are in two or three degrees off the Line, stand away with it. For if you may passe the Line in ten degrees of longitude from the Lizard, your variation will be sixe degrees ten minutes from North to East, and you shall feele neither the East South-east streame to hurt you, nor the North-west and by West streame, that setteth ouer to the West-Indies.

The best course to passe the Equinoctiall Line.

30. But if the wind doe hinder you much, feare not to passe the Line in fourteene degrees of longitude from the Lizard, your variation will bee in that place sixe degrees fortie five minutes. And being past, make your way to the South-ward as speedily as you may: but if the wind be at East North-east or East, as many times it will bee, doe not goe to the East-ward of the South-east and by East, although in your minde it were the best course: for if you doe, you shall find the wind at South-east and South South-east, and it will bring you downe to your South course againe, although you haue spent so much time as in your South course would haue carried you without the Tropicke into the variable winds way, which is in twentie sixe or twentie eight degrees.

40. For it is great oddes, when a man may saile thirtie sixe leagues in foure and twentie houres, and will sayle but foure and twentie close vpon a wind. For when you haue brought your selfe into the variable winds way, it cannot be long before you haue a flent to get vp to the Cape of Good Hope, where you shall note, that your variation will increase in running South from the Line. For when you come in twentie degrees to the South-ward, you shall haue fifteene degrees of variation, and more to the West-ward fourteene. Whereby if you note it well, you shall perceiue, that in these parts, betweene the Tropickes I meane, it keepeth no method in Easting or Westing, as it doth without them: as you may see at the Ile De Fernando de Leronha, the latitude whereof is foure degrees South, and longitude from the Lizard nineteene degrees twentie minutes West. The variation is there eight degrees ten minutes, from North to East: if you come there to ride, the Roade is vpon the North-east side, but it is ill ground in some place. The depth, nine, eight and seuen fathomes water, sandie grounds, with a stone or Increase of variation in running South-ward of the Line. The Ile of Fernando de Leronha.

50. Rocks heere and there.

This land riseth like Pauls steeple, and that land like the steeple will bee when you are in the Roade South South-west from you. There is much broken ground and Ilands by the Ile it selfe. Heere is good refreshing and good water, but dangerous landing for the Sea to sinke your Boats and drowne your men.

The Portugals of Fernamburo haue some few Slaues heere that make Cotton and keepe their Cattell. They haue Guiney Wheate there growing.

60. The Iland of Santa Helena hath in South latitude sixteen degrees, & longitude from the Lizard foure degrees thirtie minutes East: and from the Cape of Good Hope twentie three degrees thirtie minutes West. The variation is seuen degrees thirtie minutes from North to East. This Iland is one of the best for the bignesse thereof for the refreshing of men, that I know in the Sea: it standeth so healthy, and hath so good a Roade for Shippes, as a man can desire. The Roade is open to the North-west side: right before the Chappell you may ride in twelue, tenne, nine, eight, or seuen fathomes water, good ground and no danger, but what you see along the shoare.

The Ile of Santa Helena.

The Iland is little, but very high land, a man may see it eightene leagues off. Vpon it are all things fitting for a mans comfort, comming with it in distresse. If you will see this Iland, you haue the wind alway at South-east or thereabouts. Therefore keepe your selfe in the latitude of sixteene degrees tenne minutes, or fiteene degrees, and runne West vpon that height, and you cannot misse it: whether it bee day or night you need not feare, but this you may assure your selfe, that in your course from the Cape of Good Hope, there is nothing that will wrong you. I meane no fireame nor Current. For I haue seene that my selfe three times comming from the Cape the South-east wind will take you in thirtie degrees, and sometimes before, and will carrie you to the North-ward of the Equinoctiall Line.

The Bay of
Saldanha.

Saldanha, which is the Bay where we doe commonly anchor out-ward bound, hath in latitude thirtie foure degrees twentie five minutes, and longitude from the Lizard twentie eight degrees East. The variation thirtie minutes from North to East. For the knowing of the land hereabout Saldanha, it is all high land. But commonly when you come from the West-ward it is foggie and darke vpon it, so that you shall see the breach of the shoare, before you can come to make it, or know it. If you see the land when you are in the Offing rise like a Table, and other round hills by it, one like a Sugar-loafe; bring this Table East by South, and then stirre so see, till you come close vnder the land, for this course will bring you in with the point of the Souther land going into the Roade. Now when you see the point it selfe, which is low land, you shall see the Ile of Penguin: but keepe your selfe neerer the point then to Penguin Iland, because there are sunken Rockes all toward the Iland: keepe your Lead going, for toward the point you shall haue ground at fiteene fathomes, and then you may bee bold to goe by it in ten fathomes water. Then the Roade is South-east by East from this point in fixe fathomes, or five if you list. The Table will bee South South-west the middle of it, and the Sugar-loafe South-west halfe Westerly. The worst winds for that Roade are from the North-west to the North-east. Heere is good watering and fresh victuals, when the people come downe with it.

There is fresh-fish in the Riuer to bee had at sometime of the tyde with a seine: it doth high sometimes five foote water, and sometimes fixe, sometimes more, and sometimes lesse.

The highest variation betweene Brasil and the Cape of Good Hope.

Betweene the Coast of Brasil and this Roade the Compasse hath twentie degrees variation, and more or lesse as you are to the North-ward or South. For the more you are to the South-ward, the more you haue, and to the North-ward the lesse. But in thirtie three degrees thirty minutes, you haue the highest variation twenty one degrees from North to East, & longitude from the Lizard seuen deg. thirtie minutes, or from the Cape of Good Hope, thirtie five deg. thirtie minutes West: Now when you come in eleuen degrees no minutes of variation, you may assure your selfe, if your variation bee good, you are three hundred and thirtie leagues short: and it will keepe a good method in decreasing after the rate of thirtie or eight and twentie leagues to a degree: for when you are in two degrees of variation, you shall bee eight and fortie or fiftie leagues short: and when you haue fortie minutes, and cannot see the land, you are but ten leagues off.

Now if you can see the Land close by the waters side, before you can see the other high land, the fogge hanging vpon the shoare, and are in thirtie foure degrees of latitude, you may see white sandie wayes close by the waters side, your course is to the point, if they beare East South-east from you, and beeing neere the shoare is North-east. For these white sandie wayes are almost three leagues short of that point going into the Roade, and fast by the point to the South-west from the said point going for the Roade, the two points doe lye North-east and South-west. And then the land toward the Cape lyeth South-east and by East, and South South-east. So likewise the land lyeth to the North-ward off the Bay North North-west, and South South-west.

Connie Iland.

Penguin Iland and this Point lye North and by West, and South and by East.

To the Northward of this Iland is an Iland called Connie Iland, and it lyeth in latitude thirtie three degrees twentie seuen minutes, and North North-west from Penguin Ile. This Connie Ile hath bad ground about it: but you may goe betweene the Maine and that Iland. If you will anchor, this Ile vpon the Wester-side hath a dangerous ledge of Rockes lying off it to the Seaward. The Maine all along the shoare is bold, but what you may see.

Chapmans
Chance.

Chapmans Chance hath in latitude thirtie foure degrees tenne minutes, and is an Harbour, which lyeth within the South-west point vnder a little Hill like Charing Crosse, close hanging by the Sea-side of the South South-west-side of the land like a Table, standing in the very bottome of the Bay.

This is a very good Harbour for the ships: for the maine land of the Cape will be shut in vpon the Wester-side of the land: and there is good ground, and a good depth to ride in, as ten, nine, eight, seuen, fixe, or five fathomes.

This Harbor is not past ten miles ouer land to Saldanha from it: and a man may come away with with that wind that you cannot come forth withall from Soldanha. Wherefore when any shall haue beene there with a ship, they shall better know it. Wee went not in with our ship, because we were all fit to goe about, before wee did know it to bee a Harbor. For wee did suspect it by chance standing in with a scant wind, and being toward night our Captaine Master Edmund Marlow sent one of the Masters Mates in the Pinnasse to see whether it were a Harbor or not, hauing little wind, and by that time hee came in with it, the Sunne was downe, so that he could not see and take that notice he would, for quick returning to the ship.

Cape Falso hath in latitude thirty foure degrees thirty minutes, and is distant from the Cape of Good Hope, nine leagues East South-east.

Cape Falso.

- 10 Betweene these two Capes there is a deepe Bay, and before it there is a Rocke euen with the water; but it lyeth neere the Cape of Good Hope. In this Bay is the great Riuer called Rio Dolce, that runneth farre vp in the Land. There is good refreshing, as the Hollanders report, for they haue beene there with their ships.

Rio Dolce.

Heere at Cape Falso is no variation that I can find by obseruing South from it. The Land lyeth to the Cape das Aguilhas East South-east from the Cape of Good Hope, and is distant sixe and twentie leagues: no danger is to be seene, but a bould shoare along the coast. And so it is bould sixtie leagues to the Eastward: for so farre I haue sailed to the East-ward of Cape Das Aguilhas the land lyeth East Northerly for one hundred leagues.

No variation:
Cape das Aguilhas.

- 20 The very Cape Das Aguilhas hath in latitude thirtie foure degrees, fiftie minutes South, and is very low land. But there is high land to the East-ward of the last named Cape. You may haue ground with your Lead in seuen or eight leagues off the land, for one hundred leagues East, at seuentie, sixtie, sixtie fve, fiftie fve, fittie, fortie fathomes, sandie blacke ground vpon your Leade, which will helpe you much in comming home if you cannot obserue the variation nor latitude. The variation of Cape Das Aguilhas is no degrees thirtie minutes from North to West. And at the Cape of Good Hope the Compasse is varied from North to East fve and twentie minutes. Assoone as you are to the West-ward of Cape Das Aguilhas, you shall haue Ozie and deepe water; whereby you may see that this will helpe you well in darke weather to know how the lands are from you, and how to hale in with the Cape of Good Hope.

- 30 When you saile into the East-India from the Cape of Good Hope, you must bee very carefull in your course: for till you come vp to haue seuen or eight degrees of variation, you shall find it sometimes very vncertaine, shrouts of streames that will let a man sometimes one way, sometimes another as I haue often found it to bee so, and haue had none other meanes to helpe my selfe, but by the variation, which is very sure, if you bee carefull in obseruing. But after you passe eight degrees of variation, you shall not need to feare the streames, if you bee bound to the East-ward, for the streames or tydes doe set betweene the variation afore-said, and the Cape Das Aguilhas.

The great benefit of the Variation.

- Now if you find betweene the Cape and this variation of seuen or eight degrees that you doe not alter it to your ship running East; for this is your fittest course, if you bee bound for Bantam, or within for any place of the Ile of Saint Laurence, till you come vp to the variation afore-said, as you may chance at fve or sixe degrees, assure your selfe you are wrong with it. For the variation will increase by the rate of nine and twentie or thirtie leagues, to the Ile of Saint Laurence. I meane these leagues in Easting from the Meridians, and not the course you saile by, for if you saile North-east and by East, and you shall haue thirtie sixe leagues for one degree and halfe Easting, or longitude, which will alter one degree of variation.

- And the more North-ward your course is, the lesse variation you haue, as you shall plainly vnderstand: for in fve and twentie of latitude in sight of Saint Laurence, you haue sixteene degrees no minutes. And running North by the land to the Riuer of Saint Augustine, you shall haue but fteene degrees in the latitude of twentie three degrees and thirtie minutes, which is plaine that it is lesse to the North-ward, then to the South-ward. So likewise vp to the East-ward in the latitude of eleuen degrees no minutes, the highest variation is twentie three degrees forty minutes. And in the latitude of thirtie three degrees no minutes, the highest variation is twentie seuen degrees ten minutes, as I haue seene and obserued my self, and in my iudgement in ten leagues Easting and Westing of the same Meridian, as hereafter shall more plainly appeare in their due places.

Note.

p. II.

A note for finding out of the Riuer of Saint Augustine in Saint Laurence; of diuers small Iles in the way thence to Achen; and of many Ports and passages in and about Sumatra.

His Riuer of S. Augustine hath in latitude, twenty three degrees thirtie five minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, twenty three degrees twenty minutes East. The variation is fourteene degrees fifty minutes from North to West. But when you goe for it, seeke the land in the latitude of twenty foure degrees twenty minutes, because in the latitude of twenty five degrees tenne minutes, there is dangerous falling for Rockes and shoalds, which I haue seene. And in this latitude twenty foure degrees twenty minutes, you haue the variation fifteene degrees forty minutes. The shoare bold, but what you see before you. And the coast lieth South and North by a meridian Compasse, without counting the variation, or meddling in this place with it, but steere North and North and by East, as discretion will guide you by the land: then comming along the shoare in twenty foure degrees tenne minutes, you shall see a head-land, which hath vpon it a round hill of white sand, and is like a Castle, with some few trees by it. This head-land is short of the Bay thirteene leagues, and your courie is North and by East and North still, no danger till you see the Iles and shoalds before the Bay: and in the Countrey you shall see a land rise like vnto Westminster Hall, and a gut betweene two high lands, like Dartmouth. The Riuer is between these two hills: when you come with the Iles and shoalds, and will goe into the North-ward of them, you may be bold of the shoalds in seuen fathomes, if you will loofe in by them, but anchor not by them: for it is bad ground, with Corral that will cut your Cable in funder, if you ride but little time there; but rather hale East, vp for the Channell comming from the Riuer, where you haue Ozie by the Maine, in twelue, foureteen, or twenty fathomes water: and you shall find deepe water in along to the Riuer, till you come fast by the two hills, and Westminster Hall within the point on the West North-west side. There you may choofe your roade from twenty fathomes to twelue, eleuen, tenne, nine, eight, seuen, sixe, or five fathomes. But it is Ozie ground without the two headlands, and sand within. This Riuer lieth from the Iles without shoalds East, and is distant five leagues. Here is good filling of water, and wooding, very good victuals; but you pay siluer: for that they desire most. The people are of a reasonable disposition; but you need not to trust them, nor none else where you come, but stand alwayes vpon your Guard, while your Boat goe into the Riuer to fill water. You shall haue a very good Oxe for foure shillings, and a Goat for one shilling English, and as good as you haue in England. The men of this place are tall and well made.

The Riuer of
S. Augustine in the lie of S.
Laurence.

The Cape of
S. Sebastian.

Santa Lucia, a good place of refreshing.

The Ile of S.
Mary.

The Cape of S. Sebastian hath in latitude twentie five degrees fortie five minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, twentie five degrees no minutes. The variation of the Compasse sixteene degrees fortie minutes, from North to West. Here vpon the South-east side is a very good place for refreshing, as the Hollanders report, much vpon the latitude of twenty foure degrees no minutes. It is named Santa Lucia; for as they haue reported to mee, there is a race of the Portugalls left there. They say the ships ride verie secure, and haue about nine or eight fathomes water, sandie ground, and an Iland or two before it. And this must bee much better for shipping bound vp or downe, then the Riuer of S. Augustine, because it is vpon the head of the Iland.

The Ile of S. Marie, vpon the East side of S. Laurence, hath in latitude sixteene degrees thirtie minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope thirty one degrees no minutes. The variation on nineteene degrees fiftie minutes from North to West. This Iland is inhabited; and there we had Hennes, Limons, and other refreshing, good water; but neuer a Harbour, all Roads: you may ride off the West side, before a Towne of twelue or sixteene houses. The depth of water is twenty fathomes, more or lesse. The distance from this Iland, ouer to the Maine is tenne leagues. To the North North-west, from this Iland is a great Bay, that lieth sixteene leagues deepe West North West in from the Souther-side of the Bay, there is good riding vnder a little Iland, and in from that vpon the Maine, there is a Riuer of fresh water. And there is likewise water and wood vpon the Ile by the Roade, you may ride in twelue, tenne, nine, or eight fathomes: but you had need to shue your anchors: for it is so soft Ozie, that your anchors will come home. Here you haue Rice in abundance, hens, and some cattell. The people haue warre, one side of the Bay with the other. Trust these people not too farre for treachery. It is a place of very vncertaine and contagious weather, for raine, thunder and lightning, as euer I came in, and very vnholiome; for we lost many men here. But if distresse vrge a man to it, you may unlade a ship, or doe any businesse by the Iland, with standing vpon your guard, and vsing the people friendly, as the Hollanders haue been driuen vnto. The latitude of this Bay is, fifteene degrees fortie minutes. But if you go with S. Marie first, you cannot misse it: for it is the next Bay vpon the Maine vnto the Iland. The name name of this Bay is Antongill. We did ride here in the first East Indies Voyage for the Merchants of London, in the yeere 1601. from December to March, and then we went for the East Indies.

Antongil.

The latitude of the Ile de Roque Piz is eleven degrees no minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, forty one degrees no minutes of the great Circle East. Here in the sight of these two Ilands, we had the highest variation of the Compasse, which was twenty three degrees thirty minutes. Now South from this place, as neere as I can iudge by sundry times going vp and downe, we haue likewise the most variation, that is: if you be in the latitude of twentie seven or twenty eight degrees, then you haue twenty six degrees no minutes: if you bee in thirty three degrees no minutes of latitude, you haue twenty seven degrees twenty minutes of variation. And this you may see in my Voyage in the James, begun in February, 1611. and ended the third of August, 1615.

The Ile de
Roque Piz.
The highest
variation.

The Shoalds, called Baixos das Chagas, haue in latitude sixe degrees no minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, fiftie three degrees thirty six minutes East. The variation is nineteen degr. fiftie min. from North to West. These shoalds are very dangerous. There are three or foure Ilands and other dry sands: we were twenty foure houres vpon and among these Shoalds. There is in some places corall, in other some sand; sometimes tenne fathomes, and by and by sixe fathomes: the best water the ships had, was foure fathomes: but God be thanked, we had no hurt to any one of the ships. We were cleere by keeping the Iles South South-west from vs: for vpon the North North-east side it is, that we found the way out. If they had been well laid in our Charts, we had missed them.

Baixos das Cha-
gas.

In the Channel of Maldina, the Compasse varieth 17. degrees. And at the Cape de Comori sixteene degrees. The Ilands of Nicubar, lying off the North end of Sumatra, haue in North latitude seven degrees tenne minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope, seuentie three degrees no minutes East. The variation is seven degrees five minutes from North to West. If you goe with these Iles of Nicubar, as you come from the West-ward, when you come within fiftie or fortie leagues, you shall meete with ouerfalls, or the running of some tydes, which will make you mistrust shoald water: but we found none with our Lead when we sounded. Many such you shall passe. I thinke they be the streames comming from the Bay of Bengala. Among these Ilands there is no danger, but what you see: you may bee bold to water and sit your selues here. The people will not come aboard your ship, but will buy and sell in their Canoes. Farther into the North-ward are more Ilands; as in eight degrees lieth an Iland called Ilha de Sombrero, because vpon the Souther-side the land is like a hat. Vnder this Iland is good riding; and the people will come to your shippe from the other Ilands to the East-ward, for there are many Ilands.

Achen, which is a Citie vpon the West North-west side of Sumatra, hath in latitude five degrees forty minutes, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope seuentie foure degrees fortie minutes East. And the variation is sixe degrees twentie five minutes from North to West. You may ride in seven or eight fathomes, or at low water in five or sixe; it hyeth five foot vpon the Barre. Your roade is to the Eastward of the Castle, and a round hil in the Countrey South-east from you. The ground is Ozie where you ride. There is high land vpon the Wester-side of the Towne. The hill, which is South-east of you, is called the hil of Pedir, because there is a Towne of that name vnder it, twenty five leagues from Achen. Before the Road in the Offing are five or sixe Ilands. The Pepper of this place is better then the Pepper of Bantam. At Pedir Pepper is to be had, but little else. The land lieth from the Road of Achen forty or fifty leagues East and West.

Achen in Su- matra.

And if you will goe for the straight of Malacca, there is no danger till you come to the Eastward of the Iles das Iarras, but a faire depth, at twenty five or thirtie fathomes water. The tydes set as much one way as the other. At these Iles das Iarras, you may see the high land of Malacca: but here about Sumatra, is all low land. And your variation here about the Equinoctial is all one, as I said before, when I spake of the highest, that there is within lesse variation then without, in the latitude of foureteene or fifteene degrees. For when you haue seven degrees fiftie minutes in the Offing, you are much vpon seven degrees thirtie minutes longitude from Bantam. And that distance you are in for longitude from Bantam, when you are vnder the Equinoctial line, and haue sixe degrees thirty five minutes of variation. So that much vpon that rate of thirtie one leagues in the Offing of Easting or Westing, will alter one degree of variation, or one degree and an halfe of longitude; and within you runne fortie leagues, or two degrees. This I haue found by experience both within and without going home from Bantam.

The Iles das
Iarras.

If you were at Achen, and would saile for Priaman, which is a Towne vpon the West side of Sumatra, and hath in latitude no degrees fiftie minutes South, and longitude from the Cape of Good Hope seuentie seven degrees forty minutes East: The variation foure degrees forty minutes from North to West: The surest way is this. To the East-ward of Priaman there are Ilands, in the South latitude of one degree and thirty minutes, which are called the Iles of Nimam. Your course is to goe with these Ilands, and come not betweene the maine, but keepe the Sea, till you see those Ilands: keepe in one degree twenty minutes of South latitude, and you shall surely fall with the North end of the biggest. Now this great Iland being the biggest of the two, is twenty leagues long very neere; and there are many little Ilands neere it. And when you are with this

Iland, go vp by it, for it is the bolder of the two, but haue your Lead going now and then to preuent dangers, yet I haue found the least to be tenne fathomes water. When you are shut within these Ilands, your course is East by North eightene leagues: but saile not by night, but hull rather, and saile by day. Now although Priaman and this Iland doe lie East by North, and West by South, yet your best way is, to direct your course East North-east, and North-east by East, among; and then you shall see three hummocks in the maine, before you can see the low land; and then hauing sight of them, you may goe in till you see the low land of the Maine: but looke well about you: for when these hills come to the North-east from you, there is shoald water, and bankes of stone: but you may borrow of them with your Lead in seuen fathomes: then are you six leagues from the roade of Priaman, and your course East South-east, or South-east by East with your Lead going now and then. For the knowing of the roade of Priaman, when you haue the hills North and West from you, you shall see many Ilands to the South-ward; but the first will shew white, and none of the rest. So that Iland lieth West South-west from the roade three leagues.
And the land in the Countrey about Priaman is high, and like a Saddle in the middest. This high land beareth from the road North-east and by East. I set it downe with this notice, because there are foure Ilands before the roade within which you ride, and may mistrust to goe within these Ilands, when you come from the West North-west, because they will not be open, but shew like a paire of breeches till you haue brought them East North-east from you; then will they beginne to open, for there is good going in betweene them, leauing two on the one side, and two on the other. But come not neere that little vttermost Ile by the maine: for there is all flat ground. But keepe in nine or eight fathomes, till you come with the other three Iles that lie in a row, and then goe into the South-ward of the Norther of these three Ilands, and vnder that Iland is the road. Wherefore be bold of it in fise or sixe fathomes, because it is but narrow between that Ile, and the Riuer running from the Towne, to wit, much vpon the breadth of the Thames at Black- wall. Vpon this Ile, vnder which you ride, is a Well made artificially by those that haue vsed to water there. It is a good road when you are in, but moore your ship sure. The people here are co-uetous, and still begging for one thing or other; yet they vsed vs very well, and brought vs hens and such victualls as the place affordeth. Here is good trade from Jana with Iunkes, for their Pepper they bring them salt, which is verie scant vpon this side of the Iland. And about September and October there commeth euery yeare a Guserate with Cotton cloth to serue this side of the Iland, and ladeth away Pepper, and carrieth away some Gold: for Gold is more plentie there, then Siluer, as we might plainly see by the Countrey-people: for they are very desirous of Rials of eight. Here is some Benjamin to be had, and verie good Storax, with other Commodities.
Tecou is seuen leagues from this road, but it is shoaldie water, and ill for ships, because they must ride farre off. But Prawes and such small vessels as the Countrey people vse, are fittest, and will bring all their Commodities vnto you into Priaman road, after they know a shippe to bee there, tenne leagues.

To the Northward of Priaman there are no Ilands three or foure leagues off: but to the Southward the coast is full of Ilands along till you come into two degrees and an halfe of latitude. The coast lieth from Priaman two degrees twenty minutes of latitude South. Your course is South, when you set saile from Priaman, you may goe within those Ilands by the road: because by the Souther Iland lieth a shoald close by the off side: your depth is fise and sixe fathomes. In going downe to the Southward, keepe the maine still, and goe not without among those Ilands: for it is ill ground and shoalds. But saile not by night, till you come into the latitude of two degrees thirtie minutes. For as you passe by the high land, that is distant from the road of Priaman thir-teene leagues, it is very dangerous: keep your selfe in twenty or thirty fathomes water off the maine, and looke well about you when this high land commeth toward the East. Between that gut of high land as you passe like Dartmouth, is the Towne of Celledai. I haue had by going neere those Ilands here, about thirteene leagues from the aforesaid road, but foure fathomes water, and haue seen the stones vnder the ship, and haue gone but little in againe toward the maine, and haue had sixteene fathomes, and twelue fathomes water: wherefore there is no feare by the maine land, keeping your Lead going: then being cleare off these Ilands, your course is South and by East by the maine, till you come to two degrees thirtie minutes: and then the land lieth to three degrees tenne minutes South-east, and then South-east and by South to foure degrees, and so to fise degrees no minutes by the same course.

The land is very high and bold heere in fise degrees, no minutes. In fise degrees and thirtie minutes lyeth the Ile of Engano, but there is no anchoring by it; for I haue sought to anchor, but it is rockes and deepe water. But if you haue any occasion, you shall find in the latitude of foure degrees, ten minutes, a very good roade vnder an Iland fast by the maine, where you may ride in seuen fathoms, and no danger but what you see, but may boldly turne into the Roade, if the wind be at South-east, Ozie ground. Heere you may haue wood and water, if you haue need:
But beware, two leagues West South-west from this Iland, it is very dangerous shoald in the sea, the water breaketh much vpon it; wherefore keepe in by the Iland, and giue the point a birth:
but you cannot go betweene the maine and this Ile with a ship, because it is narrow and shoaldy water.

water. This Road or Harbour is named by the Countrey people, Celebar: we did ride heere with Sir Edward Michelborne thirteene daies, to doe some businesse. You shall neuer with a South-east wind misse some Iunckes of Iaua, or of some other place riding there. The land to the Northward in the countrey is high, but by the sea-side reasonable, not very low neither. This high land in five degrees, twentie minutes, is called Manancabo, and is extraordinary high. The course alongst the shoare is South South-east, Easterly, till you come to see a little Island fast by the maine, that lieth in sixe degrees, no minutes, or much thereupon. Heere you shall see a round hill in the countrey East from you, which will be North, when you come with the three Isles by the point of Sumatra, that lye East one from the other. Then shall you haue the Salt-hills East and by South from you, when this hill is North, and the distance from the three Islands lying East and West, to the three salt hills, which are three Islands, that lye South and North one from another, to be ten leagues. The Land of Sumatra, from the little Island to the other three Islands, lyeth East South-east, and is distant foure leagues. This land is not very high, but in the countrey it is high land. The depth by this land is foure and fiftie fathomes; and by the three East and West Islands, there is sixteene fathoms water; and further vp, you haue thirtie fathomes, when the round hill is North from you. Now you must vnderstand, that heere as you goe vpon the Coast of Sumatra, are more Islands then a man can number. But if you will go into the Road of Marrongh, you may boldly beare in among those Islands that lye North-east and by East, till you come to the maine land of Sumatra, where you shall haue twentie or thirtie fathomes, and no danger, but what you see. Now when you come in with the maine foure leagues West South-west from this Head-land, which is called Marrongh, you shall haue all to the Northward off you low land, and many Islands; but you must go East South-east vnto the Head-land of Sumatra: for this Road of Marrongh is along the shoare from the three little Islands fast by the maine, till you come almost to the point that maketh the Straight of Sunda, you may anchor in twentie or twelue fathomes water, Ozie ground, a faire birth off: There is good refreshing, and Riuer all along the shoare. The land is very high heere in from the Road. But if you come with the three Salt hills or Islands, that lye South and North one from the other, which are distant, as I said before, from the three East and West Islands by Sumatra ten leagues, and would go for this place of Marrongh, steere in with the high land North, when you are to the Eastward of the South Salt hill, and you go right with it; for the land aboue it is like a barne, and none there-about like it: you may be bold euery way hereabout, for there is no danger, but what you see with your eyes, no where without the Straights mouth. In the very straight or narrow betweene Sumatra and Iaua side, which you will, if you go to the Westward of the three South and North Islands, you need not feare, although you see three rockes stand three miles West from the Salt hill; for you may come fast by them, or put betweene any of those Islands, the depth will bee much about twentie or thirtie fathoms. The course from the Head-land of Sumatra, where the three East and West Islands are, is East North-east with the Point or Head-land of Sumatra, that maketh the Straights entrie. The Coast of Iaua lyeth from the Point of Talimbam downe to seven degrees almost of Southerly latitude; where are many Islands on this side, South-west and North-east, and you haue ground with the lead at thirtie or fortie fathomes in some place: But a little without the Point of Palimbam you may anchor in twelue fathomes, Ozie ground. The latitude of the South-east salt hill, is sixe degrees, ten minutes: The longitude from the Cape of Good Hope eightie one East, the variation three degrees, twentie minutes. These salt hills stand nearer Iaua then Sumatra by two leagues, you may see both Maines at one time, if it be cleare, and you be in the mid-way. The land of Iaua is high within the countrey, and low by the water-side. The streame in the Straight setteth twelue houres one way, and twelue houres the other, but most strongly; for you cannot beare a head with a hard gale at some times: wherefore go off on one side, and anchor, it maketh no matter on which. But if you chance to go in by Sumatra side, keep nearer Sumatra by a good deale, then to the Islands, till the Islands bee East and by South from you, for there is a rock vnder water, which breaketh at low water, that lyeth West and by North from the Island. Sumatra is bold, so you can keepe off the land; and so is Iaua side also. The way to Bantam, when you are about the Point of Palimbam, is by the land East South-east, and South-east and by East, with your lead going till you see a flat Island called Pulo Panian, which is distant from the Point of Palimbam nine or ten leagues. When you come to this Island, you may go without it, or within it at your pleasure: but keepe your lead going, and come not nearer then five or sixe fathomes off that Island. Then if you looke in vpon the maine, you shall see a round hill in the countrey bearing South, or betweene that and South South-west. This hill standeth right ouer the Towne of Bantam: if you haue it South South-west from you, goe in with that course, till you come to see five Islands together, right from Pulo Panian. Your Road is by these five Islands called Pulo Lima, where you may ride in what depth you will vnder foure fathoms, Ozie ground. It higheth five foote water in the Road. Wherefore when you chuse to ride, remember the Tide, for otherwise you may bee on ground at low water. The variation in the Road is three degrees from North to West. Heere are many Islands in this Road round about you.

§. III.

The way from Bantam to the Strait of Palimbon, upon the East-side of Sumatra, of Banca, Bintam, Straights of Sincapura, and Sunda, with other places.

When you weigh from Bantam Roade, you goe North-east by East in foure or five fathoms, till you come with the point of the maine, where it commeth to beare South-east by South, you haue very shoald water vpon that spit of hard ground. Wherefore 10 keepe off betime: before you come neare in foure or five fathoms, there is a good bigge Island on your North North-west, as you go from Bantam, which you may leaue on your larbord side in going from the aforefaid Towne, and your depthes are five or sixe fathoms. Heere will the land toward the Strait make like an Island, because you haue lost sight of the low land. Heere in your North North-east course, you haue a long bed of small Islands in your way, and low with-all, but bold: for there is eightene or twentie fathomes water among them, Bantam bearing South-west by South Westerly from these Islands. Their latitude is from five degrees, to five degrees, thirtie minutes.

When you are at the Norther end of these Islands, go North North-east and North ouer for the Coast of Sumatra: and in your course your depthes will be thirteene, twelue, ten, nine, eight, 20
seuen, sixe, five, foure and a halfe fathomes; and then you shall see the low land of Sumatra, the trees I meane, and your ground vnder your lead will be Ozie. The latitude about three degrees, thirtie minutes South. Now when you come in with a riffe of hard sand here-about, and haue in your North and by West course foure fathoms and an halfe: Note it well, and hale off againe East North-east into your old depthes, which are from ten to seuen fathoms or five off Sumatra, your course North by West, and North North-west, to hold the coast from five to ten fathoms. But go not without ten fathoms neither by night nor day; for the Coast is bold in sixe fathoms. But if you go from Bantam North, you must looke very carefully about for a shoald, that lyeth in that course from the aforefaid Towne off the Roade, till you haue sight of the two Islands vpon the Coast of Sumatra, that lye three leagues from that maine land; and then you haue no more 30 Islands by Sumatra, till you come in three degrees of South latitude; and there shall you fall with Lusapara-falsa, which is the first of those foure Islands, at the South South-west end of Banca. And looke out very well for them, in going your North by West course, as the depths wil guide you from five or sixe, to nine or ten fathoms, Ozie ground. When you haue sight of these foure Islands, you shall see much broken ground by them, and among them very shoald water. Heere likewise you shall see two round homockes of a good height: and though they seeme to you to stand vpon the maine of Sumatra, yet they doe not so, but vpon the Island of Banca. The aforesaid foure Islands haue three degrees, no minutes South latitude. When you come to haue these Islands East from you, your shoalding will be five and foure fathomes, and your course North, and 40 North by West, till you haue the Southermost Isle South-east by East from you. Then you goe North North-east by Banca, in eight and seuen fathomes, for the Island of Banca is steepe. When you come with these Islands, keepe Sumatra side for the holder side: the channell is in breadth three miles. Now in edging to the other side, you shall go from eight fathoms into three fathoms. Then haue you hard ground on that side, and Ozie ground on Sumatra side. This course of North North-east, is but one reach or three miles, before you go North againe. Heere at the narrow the Tide setteth North and South, and runneth twelue houres one way, and twelue houres the other. When you are past the bankes or shoalds by these Islands, your depthes are ten and nine fathoms: then you saile three leagues North by the land. The next reach lieth North by West, and the depth in the best is fifteene fathoms. And when you draw neare to the high land vpon the North 50 side of the Island of Banca, your course is North North-west, and the best depthes twentie fathomes. It is very flat and shoald heere vpon Sumatra side. This course of North North-west, and North-west by North, continueth nine leagues. Then you saile twentie leagues North-west by West, the depth will be foure and twentie fathoms. The latitude in this course, is one degree, eight and thirtie minutes South. When you haue the North-end of these Islands South-east by South from you, it will shew like broken Islands. But as you go, keepe off the maine, because it is shoald still. Your next course is North ten leagues, in ten, nine, eight and seuen fathoms. Heere you haue sight of three or foure Islands, to the Northwards of the great Island, but no sight of the maine land. The latitude heere is one degree, five minutes South. Then your course is North-east by North, with a round Island, and other little Islands by it. This round Island is 60 like the Moniton of Dartmouth, the depthes ten, nine, eight, and seuen fathoms, and latitude about fortie minutes South. This Isle is called by the Countrie people Pulo Sio, but Linscor calleth it Pulo Pome. Heere you may haue water and wood, if you need. Then your course is to go without Linga from hence North North-west, and the depth is fifteene or sixteene fathoms: and the distance from Pulo Sio to Linga, is thirteene leagues. At the Souther end of Linga are many Islands:

Ilands; and there are at the Norther end also many. This Island of Linga lyeth vnder the Equinoctiall line, as wee found by obseruation, where the Charts make it to lye almost a degree in South latitude. It is full of Ilands and suncken grounds hereabout. Heere we found the tide to runne South South-east, and North North-west. The depth in the offing is twentie fathomes, Ozie ground: your course is North by West fifteene or sixteen leagues, where you shall see eight other Ilands. But in your going beware of the tide, and keepe in fifteene or sixteen fathoms water, and Ozie ground: the latitude of these eight Ilands is fiftie minutes North. Heere you may likewise haue wood and water among these Ilands. These Ilands and suncken grounds continue to one degree, ten minutes of North latitude: the Tide runneth twelue houres, the flood from the Northward, and ebbe from the Southward, the depth twentie fathomes. Heere along by these Ilands is fourteene fathomes, till you come vp to the Ile of Bintam, which hath in latitude one degree, ten minutes North, vpon the South-east side of this Island is bold shoalding from fourteene to nine fathomes, yet hath a round hill in the midst of it, and it is a greater Island; then any that is neare it: vpon the Easter point I came ouer in seven fathomes: the Tide of the Norther side setteth West by North. And when you are past this Easter point, you are open of the Straight of Sincapura. Heere the Tide setteth East from the Straight of Sincapura. Thence you go North-east and by North seven leagues, with a strong streame against you, for an Island called Pulo Tinge, vpon the Coast of Ior, in latitude two degrees, twentie minutes North, you may see the round hill of Bintam euen with the water, for their distance twentie leagues, and the course is North by West. Heere wee saw an Island called Pulo Timon: and the other Ilands by it are called Pulo Lore, leauing two round hilles vpon it. And Pulo Tinge, where we roade, hath a piked hill vpon it. Their latitudes are two degrees, thirtie minutes, and two degrees fortie minutes.

Linga lyeth vnder the Equinoctiall Line.

The Straight of Sincapura.

Pulo Tinge.

Pulo Timon.

Ior.

The Coast of Ior is bold from Pulo Tinge. When you haue made the Straight of Sincapura, and would goe for Ior, your course is North-west by West. But beware of the Current, you may bee bold in fifteene, eightene, twentie, or fiew and twentie fathomes, and good ground to anchor.

From Pulo Sio steere South-east for an Island called Pulo Paccadure, distant from Pulo Sio eleven leagues, in latitude one degree no minutes South. It is a ragged Island, and hath by it two little Ilands. The depth is fifteene fathomes. Be sure to keep in that depth, and you shall goe without danger. From this ragged Island your course is South-east by East nine leagues, to another Island called Pulo Pagadure, and your depths are fifteene or sixteen fathomes. In that course be very carefull: for Banca vpon this side is all Rockes and breaches, in some places eight or nine leagues off, and so it is without you againe all bad ground. Then from this Island your course is South-east by East, to an Island called Pulo Calasai, or the Mariners Island: and their distance is fortie leagues: when you see this Island of Mariners, lie short off it, because you cannot anchor by it for fowle ground. Your depth from this Island to the other is fifteene fathomes. From this Mariners Island, you may see the high land vpon Banca beare West by North from it, and is distant fifteene leagues.

Pulo Paccadure.

Pulo Pagadure.

Pulo Calasai.

Banca.

The head of Banca lieth from this Ile South-west by West nine leagues. Saile not by night by any meanes when you see this Island: for if you goe neuer so well by your Compasse, the streames will deceiue you, and put you to the East-ward of an Island called Chinabata. Your course is to goe betweene Banca and these Ilands; because it is all Rockes to the East-ward like steeples. This Ile of Chinabata and Pulo Calasai, lie South and North one from the other, and are distant thirteene leagues. Your course betweene Banca and Chinabata is South South-west: looke to the streame, and borrow of Banca in this place in twentie or twentie fiew fathomes. The distance betweene them is tenne leagues. The Rockes in the Offing are called Pulo Pelican. From which straight to the coast of Sumatra, the course is South-west by South, till you haue shoalding off the maine. And goe as you did outward from Bantam, keeping the shoalding of Sumatra in seven or eight fathomes, till you draw neere the straight of Sunda.

Chinabata.

I haue hereunto added like Nauticall obseruations, I suppose, written by Thomas Clayborne, leauing the censure and vse to the more skilfull. He intituleth them,

Certaine principall Notes, gathered by mine owne experience, in my three Voyages into these parts: wherein the true course, and distances, with shoalds and rockes is shewed: and on which side you may leaue them: as hereafter followeth.

Note:

The Souther-most Salt hill lyeth in fixe degrees no minutes of South latitude; and if you bee bound for Bantam, you may goe betwixt the Salt hills, or on either side of them, if neede be: but most men goe to the South of them. If you bee South from the Southermost Salt hill, about two leagues, or lesse, your best course to Palimbam point, is betweene the North-East by East, and and the East North-east. The distance betwixt the Salt hills and that point twenty leagues. In that course you shall leaue the Iland that maketh the straights of Sunda on the Lar-boord side, and that Iland is five leagues short of Palimbam point. From Palimbam point your course is East South-east about three or foure leagues with Pulo Pangam: then leauing that Iland on your Lar-boord side, and being cleare of it, you must steere East South-east, about two leagues more: then South South-west, and South by West about one league, and that will bring you into Bantam roade, where you may come to an anchor in three fathomes, soft Oze.

Certaine Notes from Bantam Roade to the Ilands of the Maluccaes, with the course and distances: as hercafter followeth.

10

From Bantam roade North-east by North two leagues, then East by North, and East North-east two leagues, and that will bring the low point to the Eastward of Bantam Bay, South from you about one league: but come no neerer that point then three fathome; then East, and East by North foure leagues, and then you shall haue foureteene fathome, and shall be neere five Ilands, with white sand without them, and a Ledge of Rockes East from them about halfe a mile; these you must leaue to the North-wards of you. From these Ilands your course is East South-East, with the Eastermost Iland of Iacatra. From the Eastermost Iland of Iacatra, which is the North-east most from this Iland, your course is North-east by East foure or five leagues, then East thirtie leagues; then looke out for a sand that lieth about three leagues from the Maine, and if it be cleare weather, you shall see a low Iland to the North of you, but you may goe either betweene the Iland and the sand, or betweene the sand and the Maine: but the best way is to goe three leagues to the Southward of the Iland. Then East by South and East seuentie leagues, and that will bring you in sight of Madura. Note, if you be foure or five leagues from the West end of Madura, you shall haue thirtie three fathome; and being five leagues off the Easter end, you shall haue fortie one or fortie two fathomes. All alongst this coast, you shall haue Ozie ground. From the West end of Madura, your best course is to steere East by North, while you haue brought your selfe in the latitude of sixe degrees: and then keepe your selfe in that latitude if it be possible, and so (by Gods helpe) you shall goe cleare betweene the shoales of Celebes, and another shoale that lieth South South-west from the shoales of Celebes. The Southermost point of the shoales of Celebes lieth in six degrees. From the South point of the shoales of Celebes, your course is East North-East with the straights of Celebes: the distance betweene them is thirtie leagues. From the straights of Celebes to Ternata, the principall Iland of the Maluccas, vpon a straight line, the course is North-east, distant about two hundred leagues.

Note.

The straights
of S. Thomas.

If you be minded to goe for the Moluccas, then from the straights of Celebes, your course is North-east by East, and North-east thirtie leagues, and that will bring you into a fraight between two lands, namely, Celebes and Cambyna: the distance betweene these two lands is five leagues: in the middle between them, you shall haue thirtie eight fathomes, sandy ground. But this is to be noted, when you come betweene these two Ilands, you cannot faile by night: for it is dangerous, while you be cleare of the straights of S. Thomas, distant from this place aforementioned twenty leagues; so that you must goe vpon seuerall courses, as hereafter followeth.

The straights
of Bengalia.Machian.Bachia.

First, North-east by North sixe leagues, then North North-east eight leagues, then East and East by North tenne leagues, and this will bring you into the straights of S. Thomas, which straights you shall hardly perceiue, vntill you come very neere them: for they are narrowe, and one land thooteth in an other. The going through is East about one league, and the least water you shall haue in running of that league, is eleuen or twelue fathomes. In running of those twenty leagues afore-named, you shall be land-locked, and shall see sixe or seuen sands dry with the rimme of the water, most of them will be on your Lar-boord side: but this course aforementioned (by Gods helpe) will carry you cleare of them all. From the straights of S. Thomas, your course is North-east by East, and East North-east foureteene leagues, and that will carry you into the Sea, but not out of the sight of land: then North North-east thirtie eight leagues; and then looke out for a small Iland, and a shoale that lieth North North-west from that small Iland. You must bring that small Iland East from you about two leagues, or seuen miles: then steere North by East, and North North-east five leagues, then West North-west, and North-west by North two or three leagues, then North-east by North foure or five leagues, and that North-east by North course, will carry you betweene two shoales, that lie in two degrees no minutes South latitude. The distance between them is not one mile, and they are dry at low water: you shall haue foureteene fathome betweene them. When you are cleare of these shoales, and are within one league of that land, which that North-East by North course doth carry you vnto, then you must steere East South-east about two leagues, then North-east by East with the straights of Bengalia, which lie in one degree twenty minutes to the South of the Equinoctial: this straight lyeth North-east by North, and so you must goe through.

From the straights of Bengalia to Machian, the course is North-east by East distant seuentie two two leagues. Bachian lieth in no degrees thirty minutes to the North of the Equinoctiall, and being neere this Iland, if it bee cleare weather, you shall see all the Cloue Ilands, which shew like high piked hills in the midst of them. You may steere with any of them at your pleasure, if wind and weather serue: for there is no danger lying neere them.

Botun is a great Iland, and an high land, the longest part of it lieth North North-east, and South South-west. Vpon the North North-West part or ende of the Iland, there is a Riuer of fresh water. If a man be at the Norther ende of Botun, and bee minded to saile to the Kings Towne, his course is betweene the South by West, and South South-West, and so shall sayle along the land twenty leagues, as it were vp a Riuer, betwixt two lands, Botun to the Eastward, and Cambyna to the West, distance betweene them foure leagues, in some places but three, in some places but two leagues, and in some very narrow.

In this course afore-named, nine leagues short of the Kings Towne, there is a shoale, not very bigge, yet dangerous, and dry at a low water. Now to know when you are neere it, you shall see a round hill vpon Bustoon, neere the water side: that hill and the shoale lie East by North, and West by South one from the other; you must leaue that shoale on your Lar-boord side. From this shoale, your course is still betweene the South by West, and South South-West, to goe with the narrow Straights, foure miles short of the Kings Towne: this Straight is one league through, and about halfe a mile broad, the course is South South-West through, and it is no great matter for the course in that place, so you keepe the shippe in the middle, which is best: for there is no riding in the narrow, by reason of the swift Tydes that runne there. Hee that goeth through, must take his Tyde with him to driue him through, for (lightly) there is neuer any wind there, the land is so high ouer the Maits on both sides. But you may anchor two leagues short of this narrowe, and ride well (by Gods helpe) in thirty fathome sand. So, when you be through this straight, you must steere South South-west one league, to goe cleare of a point of land that you must leaue on your Lar-boord side; and beeing cleare of that point, you must hale vp South South-East about foure miles, if the wind will giue you leaue, and then you may come to an anchor in eight and twentie fathome, hard sand, neere a flat Iland.

A dangerous shoale.

Then you shall see the Towne of Botun, vpon the side of an hill, from you about one league. The Roade of Botun lieth in five degrees fifteene minutes of South latitude. From Botun road West South-West foure leagues, then South-West, and South-West by South five leagues, then West by South and West thirtie leagues, and that will bring you to the Straights of Celebes.

The road of Botun is in five degrees fifteen minutes of South latitude;

From the Straights of Celebes to the Iland of Banda vpon seuerall courses, as followeth: First, East seven and thirtie leagues, then East by South fifteene leagues, then North-east halfe a point to the North-ward, about seveneene leagues, and that will bring you into the latitude of five degrees tenne minntes, and then your best course is East North-east, with Buro, distance betweene that and Buro sixtie three leagues. From the South part of Buro to the South part of Amboyne, are eight and twenty leagues. From the South part of Amboyne to Banda, the course is East South East distance about thirty leagues. Banda lieth in foure degrees fortie minutes. Your going in is betweene the high Mountaine called Gunappi, and the great Iland of Banda, the hill beeing on your Lar-boord side, and the great Iland on your Star-boord side.

Amboyne.
Banda.

August 1.

THe first of February, 1611. we set saile from Grauesend, and anchored in Tilbury Hope.

The two and twentieth of March, at noone latitude obserued fifteene degrees, 20 twentie minutes. At two of the clocke in the after-noone faire aboard Maio.
Bonanista and Maio lye South-west by South, distant some twelue leagues. Note that the North North-west, and the North part of Maio is all foule ground; and due North from the high homockes, there lyeth a great ledge of rockes from the land, some fue or sixe miles off: and a mile without the rockes you shall haue twentie fathomes water. On the West-side of the Island you may borrow in twelue or fifteene fathomes, till you come into the Roade, where we anchored in foure and twentie fathomes.

The eight and twentieth in the morning, we came close by an Island, the latitude of it is twen-tie degrees, thirtie minutes, and longitude from the Meridian of Maio, one degree, fittie minutes East. We did not land vpon it, but came within two or three miles of it. I take it there is hard- 30 ly anchoring to be found: there may be some refreshing in it; wood there is, and there may bee water: for on the Souther part of it there is a faire plaine plot, and it was very greene: wee could not finde ground comming within two or three miles of it. From this Island East Northeast, some seuen or eight leagues lyeth another Island: and from the first Island East by South, or East South-east, lye two or three high white rockes, some foure or fue leagues off.

The eight and twentieth of Iune, we all set to sea: we stayed in Saldanha Road one and twen-tie dayes, and bought for the three shippes nine and thirtie Beeues, and an hundred and fifteene sneepe, with a little brasse, which we cut out of two or three old kettles: The sheepe we bought 40 for small pieces of thinne brasse, worth some peny or three halfe pence a piece: the Beeues with the brasse cut off kettles, to the value of twelue pence for a Beeve. It is a place of great refreshing:
for besides the Beeve and Mutton, there is great plentie of good fish, and fowles of many sorts, great store of fat Deere, but wee could kill none, very excellent Riuer of fresh water, and an healthfull and good ayre. I landed eightie or ninetie sicke men, and lodged them in Tents eigh-teene dayes, and they all recovered their healthes, saue one that dyed. From the seuenth of Iune, till the day of our departure from Saldanha, being the eight and twentieth of Iune, we had nothing but faire weather; the Sunne very warme, and the ayre very sweet and healthfull. Wee were an hundred leagues East from Cabo das Aguilhas, before wee found any current, and then found it strong.

The one and thirtieth of Iuly, Latitude obserued seuentene degrees, eight minutes, and lon- 50 gitude twentie degrees, seuen and fortie minutes, the wind at South, faire weather. At foure in the after-noone, we saw the Island de Iuan da Noua from vs East South-east, distant foure leagues, in bignesse, so much as we saw, (and I thinke wee saw all of it) for length some three or foure miles, very low, and riseth like rockes; off the West-end, a mile or two from it, we saw a breach, but we could not get ground with an hundred and thirtie fathomes, sounding with our Pinnale or skiffe: the latitude of it is seuentene degrees, no minutes, very certainly obserued, and in our iudgements well laid in our plats, both for latitude and longitude: it is a most sure signe of being neare this Island de Iuan da Noua, if you find or see great store of fowle; from hauing the I-land North-east to South-east, we saw much fowle, some white, their wings topped or painted only with blacke, and some blacke fowle.

The first of August, North North-east thirtie leagues, latitude fifteene degrees, one and fortie 60 minutes, longitude one and twentie degrees, two and twentie minutes.

The second, North-east by North one quarter North, sixe and twentie leagues, latitude fourteene degrees, fue and thirtie minutes, longitude one and twentie degrees, eight and fiftie minutes.

Then

The third, North-east by North, one quarter North two and twenty leagues latitude observed thirteene degrees, five and thirtie minutes, and longitude from the Cape twenty two degr. thirty minutes, the wind at South South-east, partly calme. Note that comming this course from the Isle Iuan da Noua, we haue not met with any Currents: whereby it is euident that the Current which runneth to the South-west, very strongly aboard the Maine, from the latitude of fourteen degr. South, doth not runne in the offing twenty leagues from land. At foure in the after-noon we saw land East North-east, and North-east by East from vs, some twelue leagues off; hauing on the Easter-part of it a very faire Sugar-loafe hill. This Ile is called Mal-Ilha, and is one of the 10 Iles of Comoro. Also at the same time we saw the Iland Comoro bearing off vs North North-west and North by West high-land.

Note.

Mal-Ilha one of the Iles of Comoro.

The fourth, at six in the morning, we were faire aboard the South South-east end of Mal-Ilha, and haling in with the hand to haue found some place to anchor in, when we were some eight or nine miles from the shoare, we saw the ground vnder the ship; but not lesse then eight or ten fathoms water: the Hoflander being two miles within vs, shee finding not lesse then foure or five fathoms, but her Boat was in three fathoms. Then we sent off both our Pinnasses, which kept shoalding on a Banke of eight, ten, and twelue fathomes, being from the Banke halfe a Cables length, no ground in an hundred fathomes. At the North-end of this Mal-Ilha there is a faire big Iland high land, and may be some five or sixe miles about; and from this little Iland to the maine land of Mal-Ilha, may be some eight or nine miles, full of rockes, two of them of good height. 20 Now the Banke or ledge of Rockes, for so it is, lyeth all along the West-side of Mal-Ilha: and continueth vntill the little high Iland (before mentioned) beare South-east of you, and then it endeth. Heere I had sixteene fathom, faire white sand, fishing ground. And thus being at the North-end of this Ledge, and the little Iland bearing South-east, you may steere in with land, keeping the Iland faire aboard: and within the rockes or broken ground and Mal-Ilha, you shall see a Bay, wherein there is good anchoring. The Dutch shipping hath been there sixe or eight 30 saile of them together: That yeare they were heere, when they assaulted Mozambique, two of my men now in my ship, were then in the shippes. Now to the Eastward of you, as you come in from the Banke or Ledge of Rockes, you haue likewise a great shoald, and the offermost end of it lyeth from the little Iland North-east, or North-east by East, but from the Iland at least five 40 or sixe miles, and no ground betweene, that we could find, in forty or fifty fathomes. In fine, all the North-side of Mal-Ilha is very dangerous: but the channell mentioned, without danger: for we stood in as farre as the little Iland: but the wind being faire Southerly, we could not lead it in. For I would haue anchored in the Bay, if I could haue got in; for a mile to the West-ward of the Bay is a Towne, the people good, and great refreshing; as Beeues, Goats, Hennes, Limons, Coco Nuts, of each great store; and good water. The aforelaid Fleet of Hollanders, in this place, reco- 50 uered the healthes of foure or hie hundred men in five weekes. In those parts there is no place of greater refreshing then this. Now the best way to come to this place, is to come by the South-east side of the Iland. Mal-Ilha hath latitude twelue degrees, thirty minutes, and longitude three and twenty degree, two minutes; Variation fifteene degrees, twenty minutes. This Iland is well 60 named Mal-Ilha, for it is the most dangerous of any place that euer I saw: it is the next to Comoro, on the South-east side of Comoro, and is distant some twelue or fourteene leagues.

Shoald-water.

A great Ledge of Rockes.

Six or eight ships of Hol- land at Mal-Ilha.Mal-Ilha next to Comoro.

September 1. Sight of land.

The first of September, at the breaking of the dawning, we saw the land East from vs, some three or foure leagues off. When we saw the land, I was short of my reckoning eightie or nine- tie leagues: which I iudge to proceed of some Current from the Coast of Melinde, setting to the East: neither from the latitude of Socatra to Daman could we see the Sunne, to know that va- 10 riation.

The third, at seuen in the morning, we commanded two Boats of the countrey, by shooting foure peeces to them, to come aboard of vs: and they told vs that the Church, and Castle, and Towne which we saw, and now did beare off vs South-east by South, was the Towne of Daman. 20 Out of these two Boats I tooke two men, which vndertooke to carry the Dragon to the Barre of Surat, with promise that they would not bring me into lesse then seuen fathoms water.

The fifth, a Boat of Surat came aboard of vs with Iaddow the Broker, which had serued Cap- taine William Hawkins three yeeres, and Sir Henry Middleton the time of his being heere; and the Customers brother, and three or foure others. All which continued with vs till the seuenth day. And then at foure in the after-noon we came to an anchor at the Barre of Surat: the Barre hath 30 latitude one and twenty degrees, ten minutes. Variation sixteene degrees, twenty minutes, or sixteene degr. seuen and twenty min. Heere I came to an anchor in eight fathomes and a quarter at high water, and at low water sixe fathoms and an halfe nepe tides: but in the spring tides it would rise heere in the offing, for so haue I found, three fathoms, and three fathoms and a halfe.

They arrive at the Barre of Surat.

60 The eleuenth, Thomas Kerridge came aboard, and signified their kind intreaty, and much wel- come to the people, and brought with him from the Iustice and Gouvernour of Surat, a Certificate vnder their Seale for our quiet and peaceable trade and entercourse with them, and also a Letter of relation written by Sir Henry Middleton, which hee left with the Mocadan of Swally. The same day we returned him againe with Hugh Gittins.

Their Acts with the Mogols Subiects, and fights against the Portugals: setting a Factorie, and departure to Achen.

TH E thirteenth of September, sixteene Sailes of Portugall Frigats put into the Riuer. The two and twentieth it was determined by counsell, that wee should send a Post to Agra to the King, to signifie our arriual, and to require his answere certaine, Whether hee would permit vs trade, and to settle a Factorie. Otherwise to depart his Countrey. 10

The thirtieth, this morning I heard of the taking of Master Canning the Purser, and William Chambers: whereupon I caused the Guzerat ship to anchor fast by me, thereby to stay her, till I might see and heare how all stood on land. Also wee stayed a Barke of Rice, being informed that it belonged to the Portugals of Bassare: and from Bassare she came. In fine, I tooke out of her twelue or fourteene Quintals of Rice, and gaue them thirteene pence a Quintall for it. After I had the ship, I wrote to the chiefe on land, that they should send me all my men, with the value of all the goods which I had landed; which being performed, I would then deliuer their ship with all their people, and gaue time till the fift of October to returne mee answere: by which time if they did not, then I would dispose of ship and goods at my pleasure. Some tenne of the chiefe men of the ship I tooke into my ship: in the ship there being some foure hundred men, or foure hundred and fiftie. 20

The sixth, Medi Ioffer came aboard accompanied with foure chiefe men, and many others. Hee brought me a great Present. He came to intreate of Trade, and releafe of the ship which I held.

The Gouvernor
of Amadaur
came to Swally.

The tenth, I left the Barre of Surat, and came to the Roade of Swally, and anchored in eight fathomes at high-water. It is from the Barre of Surat some ten or twelue miles North. The fteuenteenth, the Gouverneur of Amadaur came to the water-side. The nineteenth, I landed, hauing aboard of my ship foure men for pledges. The one and twentieth, I concluded with the Gouvernours and Merchants for trading with them, and setting a Factorie in any part of their Countrey. 30

The Articles agreed vpon, and sealed by the Gouverneur of Amadaur, and the Gouverneur of Surat, and foure principall Merchants, and to be confirmed by the Seale and Firme of the Great Mogoll within fortie dayes after the former sealing, or else to be void; for the setting of Trade and Factories in the Cities of Surat, Cambaya, Amadaur, Goga, or in any other part or parts of this Countrey within the Great Mogols Dominions. Witnessed vnder our hands and Seales, the one and twentieth of October, 1612. 40

1 IN primis, that all which concerneth Sir Henrie Middleton be remitted, acquitted and cleared to vs: that they shall neuer make seisure, stoppage, nor stay of our Goods, Wares and Merchandizes to satisfie for the same.

2 That they shall procure from their King the great Mogoll at their proper cost his grant and confirmation of all the Articles made vnder the great Mogoll his Land, and shall deliuer the same vnto vs for our use of perpetuall anie and dealing with them with- 50

3 That it shall be the duty of the Mogoll to keepe his Embassadour at the Court of the Great Mogoll in peace and quietnes, and to compound and end all such great and weighty matters as shall be made of the breach of peace.

4 That at all times the Mogoll shall bee Proclamation in the Citie of Surat that all sorts of people shall bee allowed to come downe to the English and to trade with vs.

5 That all English Commers shall be allowed to trade with the Mogoll at the time that it is put into the Cash and to beareth

6 That all pettie and Pedlerly wares shall be sold at the rate of eight Rials of eight. 60

7 That we shall haue ten Manu for our use, and for the same rate backe againe: and for Carts to be used at Surat, and at Surat to repaire to the Broker for Cash.

8 That if any of our men dye in those parts, that then neither the King, nor Gouvernour, nor under Officer shall make title or challenge to any thing that to the dead belonged, nor demand fees, nor any kind of Taxes, nor Customes.

9 That if all our men dye heere in these parts, betweene the times of the comming of our shippes, that then by some Office thereto appointed iust and true Inuentorie, notice, and knowledge be taken, of all such Monies, Goods, Iewels, Provisions, Apparell, and what else to our Nation belongeth: and the same shall safely preserve and keepe, and deliuer to the Generall, Captaine, or Merchants of the first ships that shall after heere arrive: and to receiue a discharge from the Generall, Captaine, or Merchants, to whom such Goods and Monies shall be deliuered.

10 That they secure our men and goods vpon the Land, redeeming all such both goods and men as shall happen to be taken vpon the Land by the Portugals: and shall deliuer both men and goods againe to vs free of all charges, or the value of our goods and men instantly.

11 That as in all Kingdomes there are some Rebels and disobedient Subiects; so in our Nation there may be some Pirats, and Sea-Rouers, which may happen to come into these parts, and heere may rob and steale: if any such shall happen, then will not we by our Trade and Factorie heere bee lyable or answerable for such goods so taken, but will ayde them with our best meanes that are so griued, by Iustice to our King, for redresse and restitution vnto them.

12 That all such provisions of victuals as shall bee spent during the time that our ships shall remayne heere in the Roades of Surat and Swally, halbe free of Custome: provided, it doe not amount vnto aboue a thousand Dollers in Money.

13 That in all Questions of wrongs and iniuries that shall be offered vnto vs, and to our Nation, that we doe receiue from the Iudges and those that be in authoritic, present and speedie Iustice according to the qualitie of our complaints and wrongs be done vs, and that by delayes we be not put off, and wearied either by time or charges.

The fourteenth, I landed the Present for the Great Mogol, and brought it to the Tent of the Gouvernour of Amadaur, who tooke notice of the particulars: also of our Kings Letter to their King to aduertise their King thereof. Which done, I returned the Present to my shippe againe, according to agreement with the said Gouvernour. For I had told him, that vnlesse their King would confirme the Articles concluded on, and likewise write our King a Letter, I would not deliuer the Present, nor our Kings Letter: for if he refused so to do, then was he not a friend, but an enemie, and to the enemie of my King, I neither had Letter nor Present. Also the same day, the former finished, I deliuered our Present to the Gouvernour of Amadaur, and another to his sonne.

The fourteenth of Nouember, 1612. the Cassia of Frigats came in sight of vs, some two hundred and fortie saile. I had thought they had come to fight with vs: but they were the Fleet of the Merchant men bound for Cambaya. And euery yeare there commeth the like Fleet, all Portugals from the South Coast, to wit, from Goa, Chaul, &c. to goe to Cambaya: and from thence they bring the greatest part of the lading, which the Caracks and Gallions carrie for Portugall. By which may appeare the great Trade that the Portugals haue in these parts.

The seuen and twentieth, I receiued Letters from Master Canning and Edward Christian: both signified of the comming of foure Gallions to fight with vs, and that they were readie, riding at the Barre of Goa, the fourteenth of Nouember.

The nine and twentieth, Master Canning came aboard: and the Portugall Fleet comming in sight of vs yesterday, drew neere vp with the floud: and at two in the after-noon I did set saile, and at foure I was about two Cables lengths from the Vice-Admirall, fearing to goe neerer for want of depth, and then I began to play vpon him both with great and small shot, that by an houre we had well peppered him with some fittie fixe great shot. From him wee receiued one small shot, Saker or Minion into our Maine Mast, and with another he sunke our long Boate: now being night we anchored, and saued our Boate, but lost many things out of it.

The thirtieth, as soone as the day gaue light, I set saile and steered betweene them, bestirring our selues with our best endeouours, putting three of their foure shippes on ground on the sands thwart of the Barre of Surat.

At nine I anchored. This morning the Hosiander did good seruice, and came through also betweene the ships, and anchored by me, vpon the floud the three ships on ground came off: we set saile, they at anchor, and came to them, and spent vpon three of them, one hundred and fittie great shot: and in the morning some fittie shot: and at night we giuing the Admirall our foure Peeeces out of the sterne for a fare-well, he gaue vs one of his Prow Peeeces, either a whole or Demi-culuering, which came euen with the top of our Fore-castle, shot thorow our Dauncie, killed one man, to wit, William Burrell, and shot the arme of another.

This day the Hosiander spent wholly vpon one of the ships, which was on ground, and from the enemie receiued many shot, one of which killed the Boat-swayne Richard Barker. Night being come wee birthed our selues some fixe miles from them, and anchored: and at nine of the clocke they sent a Frigat to vs, which being come neere, came driving right on the halfe of the Notice of foure Gallions. The fight betweene foure Portugals Gallions and vs. Of these fights see a larger Relation in my Pilgrimage, lib. 5 cap. 7. § 4. The Portugals had foure great Gallions and some twentie fixe Frigats. They lost in these fights their quondam credit and one hundred and sixtie, or as others fiftie hundred men. And English Trade settled maugre their force. Nathaniel Salmon of Leigh, was Master of the Hosiander.

Their Acts with the Mogols Subiects, and fights against the Portugals: setting a Factorie, and departure to Achen.

TH E thirteenth of September, sixteene Sailes of Portugall Frigats put into the Riuer. The two and twentieth it was determined by counsell, that wee should send a Post to Agra to the King, to signifie our arriual, and to require his answere certaine, Whether hee would permit vs trade, and to settle a Factorie. Otherwise to depart his Countrey. 10

The thirtieth, this morning I heard of the taking of Master Canning the Purser, and William Chambers: whereupon I caused the Guzerat ship to anchor fast by me, thereby to stay her, till I might see and heare how all stood on land. Also wee stayed a Barke of Rice, being informed that it belonged to the Portugals of Bassare: and from Bassare she came. In fine, I tooke out of her twelue or fourteene Quintals of Rice, and gaue them thirteene pence a Quintall for it. After I had the ship, I wrote to the chiefe on land, that they should send me all my men, with the value of all the goods which I had landed; which being performed, I would then deliuer their ship with all their people, and gaue time till the fift of October to returne mee answere: by which time if they did not, then I would dispose of ship and goods at my pleasure. Some tenne of the chiefe men of the ship I tooke into my ship: in the ship there being some foure hundred men, or foure hundred and fiftie. 20

The sixth, Medi Ioffer came aboard accompanied with foure chiefe men, and many others. Hee brought me a great Present. He came to intreate of Trade, and releate of the ship which I held.

The Gouvernor
of Amadaur
came to Swally.

The tenth, I left the Barre of Surat, and came to the Roade of Swally, and anchored in eight fathomes at high-water. It is from the Barre of Surat some ten or twelue miles North. The fenteenth, the Gouverneur of Amadaur came to the water-side. The nineteenth, I landed, hauing aboard of my ship foure men for pledges. The one and twentieth, I concluded with the Gouvernours and Merchants for trading with them, and setting a Factorie in any part of their Countrey. 30

The Articles agreed vpon, and sealed by the Gouverneur of Amadaur, and the Gouverneur of Surat, and foure principall Merchants, and to be confirmed by the Seale and Firme of the Great Mogoll within fortie dayes after the former sealing, or else to be void; for the setting of Trade and Factories in the Cities of Surat, Cambaya, Amadaur, Goga, or in any other part or parts of this Countrey within the Great Mogols Dominions. Witnessed vnder our hands and Seales, the one and twentieth of October, 1612. 40

1 INprimis, that all which concerneth Sir Henrie Middleton be remitted, acquitted and cleered to vs: that they shall neuer make seisure, stoppage, nor stay of our Goods, Wares and Merchandizes to satisfie for the same.

2 That they shall procure from their King the great Mogoll at their proper cost his grant and confirmation of all the Articles of agreement vnder the great Seale of his Land, and shall deliuer the same vnto vs for our securitie and certaintie of perpetuall amitie, commerce and dealing with them within fortie dayes after the sealing hereof. 50

3 That it shall bee lawfull for the King of England to keepe and continue his Embassadour at the Court of the Great Mogoll during the time of the said peace and commerce, there to compound and end all such great and weightie Questions, as may any way tend to the breach of the said peace.

4 That at all times vpon the arriual of our ships in the Roade of Swally there shall bee Proclamation in the Citie of Surat three seuerall dayes together, that it shall bee free for the Countrey people of all sorts to come downe to the water side, there to haue free trade, dealing and commerce with vs.

5 That all English Commodities shall pay custome, according to the value or price that it beareth at the time that it is put into the Custome-house, after the rate of three and an halfe the hundred.

6 That all pettie and Pedlerly ware be free of Custome, provided that it exceed not in value tenne Riials of eight. 60

7 That we shall haue ten Manu for our Manuda carryed from the waters side to Surat: and after the same rate backe againe: and for Carts we are to repaire to the Moccadam of Swally to send for Surat, and at Surat to repaire to the Broker for Carts downe againe.

8 That

8 That if any of our men dye in those parts, that then neither the King, nor Gouvernour, nor under Officer shall make title or challenge to any thing that to the dead belonged, nor demand fees, nor any kind of Taxes, nor Customes.

9 That if all our men dye beere in these parts, betweene the times of the comming of our shippes, that then by some Office thereto appointed iust and true Inuentorie, notice, and knowledge be taken, of all such Monies, Goods, Jewels, Promissions, Apparell, and what else to our Nation belongeth: and the same shall safely preserve and keepe, and deliuer to the Generall, Captaine, or Merchants of the first ships that shall after beere arrive: and to receiue a discharge from the Generall, Captaine, or Merchants, to whom such Goods and Monies shall be deliuered.

10 That they secure our men and goods vpon the Land, redeeming all such both goods and men as shall happen to be taken vpon the Land by the Portugals: and shall deliuer both men and goods againe to vs free of all charges, or the value of our goods and men instantly.

11 That as in all Kingdomes there are some Rebels and disobedient Subiects; so in our Nation there may be some Pirats, and Sea-Rouers, which may happen to come into these parts, and beere may rob and steale: if any such shall happen, then will not we by our Trade and Factorie beere be lyable or answerable for such goods so taken, but will ayde them with our best meanes that are so grieued, by Iustice to our King, for redresse and restitution vnto them.

12 That all such provisions of victuals as shall bee spent during the time that our ships shall remayne beere in the Roades of Surat and Swally, shall be free of Custome: provided, it doe not amount vnto above a thousand Dollers in Money.

13 That in all Questions of wrongs and iniuries that shall be offered vnto vs, and to our Nation, that we doe receiue from the Iudges and those that be in authoritic, present and speedie Iustice according to the qualitie of our complaints and wrongs be done vs, and that by delays we be not put off, and wearied either by time or charges.

The fourteenth, I landed the Present for the Great Mogol, and brought it to the Tent of the Gouvernour of Amadanar, who tooke notice of the particulars: also of our Kings Letter to their King to aduertise their King thereof. Which done, I returned the Present to my shippe againe, according to agreement with the said Gouvernour. For I had told him, that vnlesse their King would confirme the Articles concluded on, and likewise write our King a Letter, I would not deliuer the Present, nor our Kings Letter: for if he refused so to do, then was he not a friend, but an enemie, and to the enemie of my King, I neither had Letter nor Present. Also the same day, the former finished, I deliuered our Present to the Gouvernour of Amadanar, and another to his sonne.

The fourteenth of Nouember, 1612. the Castila of Frigats came in sight of vs, some two hundred and fortie saile. I had thought they had come to fight with vs: but they were the Fleet of the Merchant men bound for Cambaya. And euery yeare there commeth the like Fleet, all Portugals from the South Coast, to wit, from Goa, Chaul, &c. to goe to Cambaya: and from thence they bring the greatest part of the lading, which the Caracks and Gallions carrie for Portugall. By which may appeare the great Trade that the Portugals haue in these parts.

The seuen and twentieth, I receiued Letters from Master Canning and Edward Christian: both signified of the comming of foure Gallions to fight with vs, and that they were readie, riding at the Barre of Goa, the fourteenth of Nouember.

The nine and twentieth, Master Canning came aboard: and the Portugall Fleet comming in sight of vs yesterday, drew neere vp with the floud: and at two in the after-noon I did set saile, and at foure I was about two Cables lengths from the Vice-Admirall, fearing to goe neerer for want of depth, and then I began to play vpon him both with great and small shot, that by an houre we had well peppered him with some fiftie sixe great shot. From him wee receiued one small shot, Saker or Minion into our Maine Mast, and with another he sunke our long Boate: now being night we anchored, and saued our Boate, but lost many things out of it.

The thirtieth, as soone as the day gaue light, I set saile and steered betweene them, bestirring our selues with our best endeouours, putting three of their foure shippes on ground on the sands thwart of the Barre of Surat.

At nine I anchored. This morning the Hosander did good seruice, and came through also betweene the ships, and anchored by me, vpon the floud the three ships on ground came off: we set saile, they at anchor, and came to them, and spent vpon three of them, one hundred and fiftie great shot: and in the morning some fiftie shot: and at night we giuing the Admirall our foure Peeeces out of the sterne for a fare-well, he gaue vs one of his Prow Peeeces, either a whole or Demi-culuering, which came even with the top of our Fore-castle, shot thorow our Dawie, killed one man, to wit, William Burrell, and shot the arme of another.

This day the Hosander spent wholly vpon one of the ships, which was on ground, and from the enemie receiued many shot, one of which killed the Boat-swayne Richard Barker. Night being come wee birthed our selues some fixe miles from them, and anchored: and at nine of the clocke they sent a Frigat to vs, which being come neere, came driuing right on the halfe of the Notice of foure Gallions. The fight betweene foure Portugals Gallions and vs. Of these fights see a larger Relation in my Pilgrimage, lib. 5 cap. 7. § 4. The Portugals had foure great Gallions and some twentie sixe Frigats. They lost in these fights their quondam credit and one hundred and sixtie, or as others fiftie hundred men. And English Trade settled maugre their force. Hosfander: and being discovered by their good watch, they made to shoote at it; the first, caused it to set saile; the second went thorow their sailes, and so they tooke their leaue. Their purpose, doubtlesse, was to haue fired vs, if they had found vs without good watch.

The first of December, 1612. we rode, they not comming to vs, nor we to them: they might without danger of the lands haue come to vs, not we to them. This day I called a Counsell, and concluded to go downe to haue a broader channell, hoping also that the Gallions would follow vs. The second, we went downe some fixe or seuen leagues, but they followed vs not. The third, at flood we plyed vp againe, and anchored faire in sight of them.

The fourth in the morning, we weighed, and stood away before them. In the after-noon they gaue vs ouer, and stood in with the land againe: and at night we directed our course for Diu. 10

The fifth at night, we anchored some foure or five leagues to the Eastward of Diu in fourtene fathoms, faire aboard the shoare.

The ninth, we came to Madafeldebar, and anchored in eight fathomes. It is from Diu some ten or eleuen leagues, and lyeth nearest East and by North, a faire Coast, no danger but that you see: your depth, if neare Diu, fiftene, sixtene, when halfe-way, twelue fathoms, then ten and nine, not lesse: it is a faire sandy Bay; and on the West-side of the Bay is a Riuer that goeth farre into the Countrey: and this place is some five or sixe miles short to the Westward of the Isles of Mortie. The fifteenth in the morning, we departed from Madafeldebar, to go to Mohar, only to discover the Bay: because some that were there in the Ascension, reported it to be a good place to winter in. At foure of the clocke in the after-noon, we anchored in the Bay of Moha; which is 20 from Madafeldebar nine or ten leagues, East North-east. Hauing found the Coast and channell very good, depth ten fathomes; no danger, but what you see. I sent our Pinnasse on land, where presently we had twenty good sheepe, at three shillings a sheepe, the best we had this Voyage.

The sixteenth in the morning, I sent our Pinnasse on land, where we found few people, but the ruines of a great Towne.

The seuenteenth in the morning, the Generall of the Campe sent to me foure men, to intreat me to send vnto him one of my men, that he might talke with mee.

The one and twentieth I landed, and had much conference with the Generall of the Campe: he much desired that I would land two peeces of Ordnance, making many and great promises of fauour to our Nation; but I refused him. He presented me with a horse and furniture, and two 30 Agra Girdles: And I presented him a Vest of Stammell, two Peeces, two Bottels of Aquasinte, and a Knife. The two and twentieth, we saw the foure Gallions comming toward vs, and at nine at night they anchored within shot of vs.

The three and twentieth in the morning, by Sunne, we weighed, and began with them, and continued fight till ten or eleuen. Then they all foure weighed, and stood away before the wind, and so went from vs: for they sailed large, much better then wee: wee followed them two or three houres, and then anchored. This day I spent vpon them an hundred thirtie three great shot, and some seuen hundred small shot. In this fight John Hackwel was killed with a great shot. The foure Gallions anchored from me some two leagues.

The foure and twentieth, by Sunne rising, I weighed and went to the foure Gallions, and by 40 eight began our fight, and continued it till twelue. And this day shot two hundred and fiftie great shot, and one thousand small shot. By this time both sides were weary, and we all stood into the sea, and steered away South by East. The foure ships following of vs, at two or three of clocke they laid it about and anchored. Now I began take knowledge of our powder and shot, and found more then halfe of our shot spent, and of the Hosfanders, hauing now spent on the foure shippes fixe hundred, five and twenty great shot, and three thousand small shot. Being from the land some foure or five leagues, we met with a sand, whereon there was some two or two fathoms and an halfe, and it lyeth from Mosa South South-east, or thereabout, the end of the said sand. I went ouer it in nine fathoms: and then were the two high hills, which are ouer 50 Goga nearest North of vs. Vpon this sand was the Ascension cast away. The shoallding is something fast. Betweene the land and this sand is nine and ten fathoms. Wee continued steering South, with an ebbe. At low water we anchored in eight fathoms, the tide setting at East North-east, and West South-west, by the Compasse. At twelue at mid-night I weighed, wind at North North-west, and steered South South-east, depths twelue and fourtene fathoms. At foure steered East South-east. At sixe steered East still twelue fathoms, halfe a fathome more or lesse. At nine we met with a banke, seuen fathomes, five or sixe castes, then presently ten, twelue, fourtene. Then the wind shortned on vs: we lay South-east. And about twelue saw the land of Daman East South-east. The high land to the Southward of Daman South-east by East. And being 60 ouer this sand, we had presently fourtene, fiftene, seuentene, twenty fathoms. At two, being high water, we anchored in seuentene fathoms, faire in sight of land, Daman East South-east. The highest land to the Southward, South-east by South. At eight at night, wee set saile halfe tide, calme, still fiftene and sixtene fathoms, anchored all the ebbe.

The sixe and twentieth, at nine of the clocke in the morning, we set saile, in the afternoone anchored off the Barre of Surat.

The

The seuen and twentieth in the morning, we were three or foure miles short of Swally, and about twelue of the clocke we anchored in the Road of Swally. In the after-noon Thomas Kerridge and Edward Christian came aboard.

The sixt of February, the Firma came to Swally, as a priuate Letter: therefore I refused to rereue it, being iealous it was a counterfeit; requiring the chiefe men of Surat to come downe and deliuer it to me, with those rights that to it belonged. February 6.

The eleuenth, the Sabandar, his father in law Medigoffer, and diuers others came to Swally, and deliuered it to me, with profession of their Kings loue to our Nation.

10 The fourteenth, we landed all our cloath, three hundred and ten Elephants teeth, and all our Quick-siluer. The Gallions came within some three or foure miles of vs.

The sixteenth, I landed Anthony Starkey, to trauerse home ouer-land for England, with Letters and aduertisement of our good successe.

The seuenteenth, I receiued all my goods from Surat: at night I set saile, taking my leaue of these coasts: it fell calme, and I anchored. Note that in the Land of Cambaya it floweth Southwest and North-east.

The eighteenth, I set saile againe, came faire by the Gallions. They all weighed and followed me some two or three houres, and then we departed without shooting a shot on either side.

The nineteenth, thwart of Basaim we tooke three Malabars, which had nothing in them: we tooke a Boat from one of them.

20 The twentieth, still we were faire aboard some five leagues off, and came along the shoare in fourteene, eightene, twentie fathomes water. At night we were faire ouer-against Chaul, seeing both Towne and Castle.

The one and twentieth in the after-noone, wee were faire aboard Dabul, and heere were aboard three Iunckes, all of Calicut, laden with Cokers.

The two and twentieth, the Hoflander in the morning sent her Boat vnto two Iunckes. At twelue of the clocke we were at the rockes, which lye at the Northward of Goa, ten or eleuen leagues, and lye from the Maine fixe or eight miles. Two or three of these rocks are higher then the hull of any ship. At fixe we were thwart of Goa, which is easily knowne by the Iland, which lyeth at the mouth of the Riuer, and vpon the Iland a Castle. From Daman till you come to 30 Goa, the shoare is very faire, no danger, and faire shoalding, not without sixteene or seuentene, nor within ten fathoms: good anchoring all the Coast. And all this Coast from Daman to Goa, lyeth nearest South and North, we steered along the Land.

The foure and twentieth, we saw a Fleet of Frigats, some sixtie or eightie saile. bound to the Southward: heere Norther latitude thirteene degrees, halfe a minute. The high land by the waters side left vs; and the land began to be very low, and faire shoalding sixteene or seuentene fathomes, some three or foure leagues off. In the after-noone we came into a Bay, where all the Frigats, and three or foure Gallies were, and fetched out a ship laden with Rice: all the Portugalls fled in their two Boates; and also there were two Frigats aboard of her, so that all good things they carryed away with them.

A Fleet of Fri-
gats.

A prize taken.

40 The five and twentieth, we romaged our prize, finding nothing but Rice and course Sugar, of which we stored our selues, and tooke out both high masts, and what firing we could, and at night suncke her, taking out of her all the people, twentie or five and twentie, all Moors.

The sixe and twentieth, wee met with a little Boate of Maldina, laden with Cokers, bound for Cananor, into which I put all the people of the prize; onely eight I kept for labour, one of them a Pilot for this Coast. At twelue we were thwart of Cananor, latitude eleuen degrees.

Cananor:

The seuen and twentieth, we were shot a little past Calicut, and were thwart of Pannaire, at noone latitude ten degrees, thirtie minutes.

Calicut.

The eight and twentieth in the morning, we saw Cochin, which maketh it selfe by the Towers and Castle: and in latitude nine degrees, fortie minutes, or there-about. Note that from Goa to 50 Cochin, we neuer had about twentie fathomes, being sometime foure or five leagues from land:
and being three, foure and fixe miles off ten or twelue fathomes, from latitude eleuen degrees, thirtie minutes to Cochin, very low land by the waters side; but vp in the Countrie all along high land. Note that short of Cochin foure or five leagues, you shall see a high land in the Coun-trie, somewhat like a table, but rounding aloft. And to the Northward of this round hill, high long hills or mountaines. All this day we ran within six or eight miles of the land, in nine, ten, twelue fathomes.

Cochin.

Shoaldings.

Marks of land.

The nine and twentieth, calme, latitude eight degrees, some fixe leagues off, no ground in fortie or fiftie fathomes.

February 1,

60 The thirtieth, we anchored in fiteene fathomes, some fixe and twentie leagues short of Cape Comori, against a little Village: and presently fixe or eight Canoes came aboard, and brought vs all prouisions, water, Hennes, Cocos, &c. The name of this place is * Beringar: the Kings name Trauancar.

The one and thirtieth, all the day the people came to vs with Hennes, and other victuals.

The first of February, the people came with prouisions, and the King sent a messenger to me, to know whether I would trade with him : which if I would, he offered to lade my shippe with Pepper and Cinamom.

The fourth, the people still came to vs with prouisions. At two of the clocke in the afternoone, we set saile from Beringar : all the night I anchored.

The fifth in the morning we set saile, being faire aboard Cape Comorin : and heere met with a freshe gale of wind at East by North, which split our fore-top-saile and maine bonnet, yet a Canoa with eight men came aboard me, three or foure leagues from land : in the after-noon came another Canoa. Heere we were troubled with calmes and great heate, many of our men taken sicke, my selfe one of them. The eight, we came againe into the Roade of Beringar.

The Thirteenth, we set saile from Beringar. Note that this place giueth good refreshing, with plentie of water, and the people harmelesse, and not friends with the Portugals. From this place to the Cape, all the people that dwell by the waters side are Christians, and haue a Portugall Frier or Priest that dwelleth among them. All the night we anchored some foure of fve miles from the two rockes, which lye off the Cape in eightene fathomes. The two rockes lye fve or sixe miles from land.

Variation at Cape Comerin,

longitude from
the Cape of

sixe degrees,

A very dangerous suncken rocke.

The fourteenth in the morning, I set saile, wind at East, and plyed to windward : wee haue a little current to the Southward. Note that the Coast of Malabar, euen from Daman to Cape Comorin is free of danger, and faire shoalding on all the Coast from Cochin to the Cape : more neale sixteene, eightene, twentie fathoms faire by the land : and fve or six leagues off no ground after you come within fve and twentie or thirtie leagues of the Cape. The variation at Daman is sixteene degrees, thirtie minutes. And halfe way to the Cape, it is fifteene or thereabout : and heere at the Cape it is fourteene. And the Cape hath latitude North seuen degrees, thirtie minutes. In the after-noon, we ran off open of the Cape, and found much wind at East South-east, which gaue no small hope of going to the Eastward, till the end of the Monson, which will bee the fifth of Aprill, or thereabout, as the Indians report. So I bore vp and anchored foure or fve leagues within the Cape, in twentie fathomes, faire by the two rockes. Right off from these two rockes, lyeth a suncken rocke, which is very dangerous, and is some two miles without the fore-said two Rockes. If you come within twentie fathomes, you shall be in danger of them : but safe and free of danger, is not to come within foure and twentie or fve and twentie fathomes. Heere we stayed nine dayes.

The Isle of Ceylon.

The eight and twentieth in the morning, at sixe of the clocke, we saw the Isle of Ceylon, East South-east, off some eight or nine leagues : little wind at South, latitude obserued seuen degrees North. At foure of the clocke, we were faire aboard the land, depths thirteene, fifteene, sixteene fathomes. At eight stood off till day : little wind at South, being from the land fve or six leagues, no ground in sixtie or seuentie fathomes.

March 1.
Columbo in sixe degrees, thirtie
minutes.

The first of March, all the morning becalmed : in the after-noon a Sea-turne at North-west and West. At sixe of the clocke, we were faire aboard Columbo, the latitude whereof is six degrees, thirtie minutes, or neare there-about, dephts foure and twenty, fve and twenty fathoms, three leagues off.

The twelfth, we stood in with the land, and anchored in foure and twentie fathomes, wind at South-east and South. I sent my Boat on land, foure leagues to the North of Punta de Galle :
and after some stay, a woman came to talke with an Indian, that went out of our Boat : shee told him that we should haue there no prouisions : but said shee would go and tell the men ; which we desired. Afterward two men came to my Indian, and told him, that we should not haue any thing there, for that our Nation had sometimes taken a Boat of theirs : but it was the Hollanders, and not our Nation.

The fourteenth in the morning, at sixe of the clocke, the Southermost point of Ceylon, called
Tenadare, whose latitude is fve degrees, thirtie minutes, and lyeth from Punta de Galle, East South-east, some ten or twelue leagues, bare East North-east some fve leagues off.

A sand lying some two leagues off the shore.

The seuenteenth, we were neare to one of the sands that Linscot writeth of : it lieth from the land two leagues. We had fve and twenty fathomes when we staid : vpon the land right against this sand is a high Rocke like a great Tower. The land lieth here East North-east.

The Kings
Present.

The twelfth of Aprill at noone, we came to an anchor in the Road of Achen, in twelue fathomes ; but you may ride in tenne or eight fathomes. Your best road is, to the East-ward of the Castle, and Riuer mouth. The thirteenth, I landed the Merchants, the King not beeing in Towne. The fifteenth, the King came, and sent his Chap to me for my landing, brought by an Eunuch, and sixe or eight more, and also the Xabandar. To whom we gaue an hundred and twenty Mm. With them the same day I landed : and two houres after my landing, the King sent me a Present in victuals : I hauing presently vpon my landing sent the King two peeces : for the custome is, at landing to present the King with some small thing, and he requiteth it by seuerall dishes of meate.

The seuenteenth, the King hauing sent an Elephant with a bason of Gold for our Kings letters, I rode to the Court accompanied with fortie of our men, all admitted into the Kings presence; and after many complements, the King returned the Letter vnto me, for to read it: and so the substance of it was deliuered vnto him in his owne language. The contents pleased him very well. The day wel spent, the King told me, he would now shew me some of his pleasures; and caused his Elephants to fight before vs: and after sixe of them had fought, then he caused foure Buffles to fight before him, which made a very excellent and fierce fight. Their fiercenesse was such, that hardly sixtie or eightie men could part them, fastening ropes to their hinder legges, to draw them asunder. And after them some tenne or twelue Rams, which likewise made a very great fight, and so continued till it was so darke that we could not see any longer. The King presented me with a banquet of at least foure hundred dishes, with such plentie of hot drinckes, as might haue sufficed a drunken army. Betweene nine and tenne at night, he gaue me leaue to depart, sending me two Elephants to carry me home; but I rode not on them, they hauing no couerings on them.

Our Kings letter read to the King of Achen.

The eighteenth, I went to the Court againe, the King so appointing; where we beganne to treat of the Articles formerly made by his Grand-father, and M. James Lancaster. And comming to the matter of hauing all goods both brought in, and carried out free of custome, wee ended, without concluding any thing.

The nineteenth, the Embassaour of Siam came to visit me, telling me of the three Englishmen that came to the King of Siam, and of their great entertainment, and ioy of their King to receiue a Letter from the King of England: and that it was some thirty Moneths since. They also told me how ioyfull their King would be, if our shipping came to his coasts; telling me what great quantities of cloath of Portugall, which is English cloth, would sell in their Countreys. The colours most in request, stammel and reds, with some others, as yellowes, and other pleasing light colours, as at Surat. They also told me, that their King had made a Conquest ouer the whole Countrey of Pegu, and so is now the greatest King of this Orientall part, except the King of China, and hath vnder him twentie sixe petty Kings; and in the warres is able to make sixe thousand Elephants. Their coyne is all Siluer. Their Gold is lesse esteemed then the valew thereof. In their Countrey is great store of Pepper, and rawe Silke. He saith, that the Hollanders haue their Factories, whom they call English, at Patane, which is an excellent Port: the entrance twelue and foureteene fathomes. Likewise Siam is a good Port, and is neerer vnto the Kings Court then Patane. Those that doe goe to the Citie of the King, alwaies come to this Port of Siam. And from this Port of Siam to the Kings Court, is some twenty dayes iourney by land. I moued the Embassaour for his Letter to the King, which he promised me, and also for his Letter to the Gouvernours of Ports, in fauour of our Nation, when we should come vpon those coasts. And lastly, changed coynes with him, giuing of our English coyne, and receiuing the Kings coine of Siam. I had after this, often entercourse with these Embassaours.

The Embassaour of Siam came to visit me. Of this you may read in M. Floris his Iournall. English broad clothes well sold in Siam. Gold of lesse esteeme then the value thereof in Siam. Hollanders called or calling themselves English.

The twentieth, I went to the Court, but spake not with the King: whereupon I sent to the Kings Deputie, and complained of my dishonour, and of some abuse by the Xabandar offered vnto me. He promised that I should haue present redresse, and that he would enforme the King thereof: which accordingly he performed the same day. The twentie one, the King sent two Officers vnto me, to signifie that at all times I might repaire vnto his Court, with free acceffe, and passe all the Gates without stoppe, or attending for his Crest, and likewise remooued the Xabandar, and appointed me the Gentleman, whom the King sent Vice-Embassaour into Holland, to attend, and accompany me at all times to the Court, and elsewhere at my pleasure.

The foure and twentieth, I wrote vnto the Court, and had acceffe vnto the King, who gaue me all content, and promised the ratifying of all the Articles, formerly agreed vpon by his Predecessour, and M. James Lancaster. So after diuers complements, he tooke leaue, and sent me home presently after my returne an Elephant to attend me, and to carrie me whither soeuer it pleased me to trauell. And this is a signe of the honourable esteeme that they hold of the parties to whom they send their Elephants: for none may haue an Elephant, nor ride on them, but those whom the King doth honour.

A signe of most honourable esteeme.

The second of May, the King inuited me to his fountaine to swimme, and I was with him; it being some five or sixe miles from the Citie, and he sent me two Elephants to carrie me and my prouision; and hauing washed and bathed our selues in the water, the King presented me with an exceeding great banquet, with too much Racke, all to be eaten and drunken as we sate in the water; all his Nobles and great Captaines being present. Our banquet continued from one of the clocke till towards five: at which time the King released me; and halfe an houre after all strangers, and presently after followed himselfe.

May 2. 1613.

The foureteenth, certaine Portugalls came into Achen, which came from Malacca with an Embassage from the Gouvernour to this King. The wind short, they landed three leagues to the Eastward of the Road of Achen. This day I sent the Hofander to seeke the Barke which came from Malacca, making Edward Christian Captaine in her. The seuenteenth in the morning, the Portugall Barke was brought vnto me aboard the Dragon. But before she came aboard, the King sent two Messengers to me, to desire me to release both her, and that which might bee in her: which I refused to doe: answering, that I would not release her, vntill I had seen both the Barke and that which was in her: but willed them to tell the King, that in honour of him, whatsoeuer he required, I would doe for him. Afterward the Barke came, and by Edward Christian I was informed, that there were some foure or fise fardels in her, and that nothing was medled withall, that was in her. Wherein being certified, I came on land, and found my Merchants to be at the Court, who by and by after came in, informing me of the Kings great displeasure, for taking the Portugall Barke in his Port, protesting by his god, That he would make them all prisoners, if the Barke were not released. The King hauing intelligence of my comming on land, presently sent for me. And on the way to the Court, as I was going, I met a Gentleman that came from the King, to desire me to release the Barke. But I told him, I would first speake with the King. In fine, I came to the Court, and presently was brought before the King: where after much discourie, at the Kings request, I gaue him the Barke, and all that was in her, with which hee was much pleased, and gaue me an honourable title, to wit, Arancaia Puto: which signifieth, The honourable White man, requiring his Nobles to call me by the same name. And further, to acknowledge his thankfulness to me, he sold me his Benjamin at mine owne price; namely, at twenty Tayls the Bahar, it being worth thirty foure and thirty fise, professing by generall tearmes his loue, and much esteeme of mee, willing me to aske whatsoeuer I would of him. I required onely his Letters of fauour vnto Priaman, which he most willingly promised. Of his Mangoes, whereof himselfe did eate, he gaue me to eate, and likewise to carry to my lodging, and so I tooke leaue and departed.

The seuen and twentieth, Malim Gany came to Achen, by whom I receiued Letters from our Merchants at Surat, and also a Copie of the Kings Firma, sent them from Agra, bearing date the twenty fifth of Ianuary, and the seuenth yeare of the Great Mogols raigne, confirming all that was passed betweene the Gouvernour of Amaduan and me.

The seuenteenth of Iune, 1613. came there a Merchant of the Hollanders into Achen from Masulipatan, and had been eight moneths on his iourney. He told vs of the death of Captaine Anthony Hippon, who died in Patane, and of M. Browne Master of the Globe, who died in Masulipatan, and that they had been euill dealt with at Masulipatan.

The foure and twentieth, I receiued of the King his Present for the King of England; namely, 30 his Letter, a Cryse or Dagger, an Hasega, foure pieces of fine Callicott lawne, and eight Camphire dishes.

See this Letter transcribed, as a raritie for the Reader, out of M. Copelands Iournall, which was Minister in that Voyage, and followeth in the next Chapter.

The third of Iuly, the Kings Armada arriued, and had been but twenty dayes from the coast of Ior to Achen. In Ior they tooke the Factorie of the Hollanders, and made a prey of all their goods, and brought hither prisoners of the Hollanders some twenty or twenty foure. The seuenth, I receiued the Kings Letter for Priaman, and the Chap for my departure. The twelfth, I tooke my leaue in Achen, and came aboard.

The thirteenth in the morning, I set saile, and comming neere the great Westermost Iland, open of the Northermost gut; in the same Ile we found faire shoalading twenty fathomes, cleane ground, sand, a good birth from the land. This depth with cleare ground continued almost to the end of the Iland: so that on the East side of this Iland, there is very good anchoring, and on the Iland great store of wood. But beeing neere the great Iland, to the East-ward of this, wee could get no ground: betweene these two great Ilands is the best and safest course, going on or out to the road of Achen. Likewise, to the Eastward of the Eastermost Iland, but that is out of the way. Note, that from the twelfth of Aprill to the middest of Iune, we had much raine, seldome two dayes without raine, with gusts and much wind. From the fifteenth of Iune, to the twelfth of Iuly, very much wind, very fore strestes, alwayes at South-West, and West South-West, and West.

§. III.

Trade at Tecoo and Passaman: their going to Bantam, and thence home.

Priaman.

Tecoo.

Passaman.

They arriue
at Tecoo.

He third of August, we were in sight of Priaman, nine or tenne leagues off, it bearing from vs North-east by East, it shewing with two great high hills, making a faire swamp or saddle betweene them both. We sawe also Tecoo the high land on it: it is not more then halfe so high as Priaman land, and riseth something flat. Then we saw also the high land of Passaman, which lieth some seuen or eight leagues to the North-ward of Tecoo, euen mid way betweene Passaman and Priaman, which Mountaine is very high, and riseth like Monte Gibello in Sicilie.

The seuenth in the afternoone we came to Tecoo, and anchored on the East side of the three Ilands Ilands in seven fathomes. The Southermost Ile bore West South-west. The middlemost West North-West. The Northermost North, and halfe East a mile from the Ilands.

The ninth, I landed my Merchants; and in the afternoone I landed with the King of Achens Letter. The eleventh, I called a Counsell for sending the Hosiander for Priaman with the Kings Letter, which departed the next day, and returned the eighteenth, and was sent to Bantam.

The five and twentieth, there came in a Juncke of Bantam, the Owners Chineses. They confirmed vnto me the death of Sir Henrie Middleton, with the losse of most of the men of the Trades Increase, and Maine Mast which brake with forcing her downe to carine her, and that now she was gone from Pulo Panian to Bantam: that three hundred Chineses dyed in working on her.

Death of Sir
H. Middleton.
The Trade per-isheth.

The eight and twentieth, my Boat and men returned from Passaman, hauing beene well in- treated, and brought with them the Scriuane of the place to deale with me: with whom I dealt and went through.

The fourteenth, the Gouvernour called me on Land, being set with all the chiefe: I came to him, and after much talke agreed for the price of Pepper: Money, eightene Dollers the Barre. Laftage, eight pence the Barre. Canikins, thirtie the Barre. Seilars, thirtie five the Barre. They indented for Presents to sixteene great men.

The thirtieth, Henrie Long came from Passaman, and gaue mee knowledge of the sicknesse of Master Oliver and diuers others dead, whereupon I sent my Shalop to fetch both him and all o- ther of my men away, and to surcease my Factorie there.

The one & twentieth of October, the Hosiander returned. The Merchants from Bantam wrote to me that they had readie seuenteen thousand bags of Pepper: all which, if it pleased me to come thither, I should haue, or as much thereof, as should seeme good vnto me, at thirteene Dollers the Timbane. Out of these and many other considerations, I presently called a Counsell: wherein we concluded that the Dragon should goe for Bantam; and the Hosiander should stay in the Road of Teco, vpon the sale of Surat goods: all which being put aboard of her, I departed from the Roade of Teco the thirtieth of October.

In this Roade I had stayed eleuen weekes, and bought one hundred and fiteene or one hun- dred and twentie tunnes of Pepper, and buried of our men five and twentie. All which either dyed, or contracted their deaths at Passaman, and not at Teco. And certainly, had wee not at- tempted trading at Passaman, they had beene either all, or the greatest part of them now liuing. Therefore I doe with all our Nation neuer to attempt the sending of our men to Passaman. For the Ayre is so contagious there, and the water so euill, that it is impossible for our people to liue there.

Passaman is a very contagious place.

The thirtieth, in the after-noon I set saile from Teco: at sixe at night wee were thwart of the offermost of the three Ilands; all night we steered South South-west.

He departeth from Teco.

The eleventh of Nouember, we arrived in the Roade of Bantam in foure fathomes one quarter lesse. The twelfth, I called the Merchants aboard, and concluded on the price of Pepper at thir- teene Dollers the Bahar: which is sixe hundred pound of our weight.

They arrived in the Road of
Bantam.

The fourth of March at eight at night I set saile from Saldanha, hauing bought heere with a little Copper, which at ten pence the pound might be worth some three pound tenne shillings, foure hundred ninetie foure Sheepe, foure Beeues, nine Calues. On the day of our coming to Sea the people brought vs more then we could buy, or knew what to doe withall. We brought to Sea eightie Sheepe, two Beeues, and one Calfe.

The foure & twentieth North North-west halfe West till nine, ten leagues & an halfe. Then West till sixe in the morning twelue leagues. Then we saw Santa Helena from vs West North- west some eight or nine leagues off. I find the latitude of it to be sixteene Southerly. Also we ob- serued at noone: and it hath longitude from the Meridian of the Cape of Good Hope, twentie two degrees. At three of the clocke we anchored in the Roade right against the Chappell.

They saw Santa Helena.

While I was at Santa Helena, I sent my Boates to the West-ward to find a shorter way to the Limon Trees, and to bring downe Goates and Hogges with more ease. For from the Chappell to the Limon Trees is a most wicked way: and euen a dayes worke to goe and come. In fine, in seeking they found some three or foure miles to the South-west a faire Valley, which leadeth directly vp to the Limon Trees. It is the greatest and fairest Valley from the Chappell; and ei- ther the next or the next saue one from the South-west point from the Chappell: Heere in this Valley is better water, and more cleere, then at the Chappell, the Reade all one for ground and depth. Heere at this Valley it is much better being then at the Chappell, both for getting of all prouisions, and for watering. It is from the Chappell some three or foure miles, and is from it the fourth Valley or Swampe: and from the Point to the West-ward of it, the second. So that you cannot misse of it. It is heere much better riding then at any other place on the Iland. From this place you may goe vp to the Limon Trees, and downe againe in three houres. Heere we got some thirtie Hogges and Pigges, and some twelue or fourteene hundred Limons. In eight or ten dayes a man may heere get two hundred Hogges, and many Goates, lying on land of pur- pose to kill them. The variation is here seven degrees thirtie minutes.

Another Road
at Santa Helena, better then the former.

The best water

The

The Lizard.

The fourth of June 1614. we saw the Lizard North from vs, some foure or five leagues off. And now our longitude from the Cape of Good Hope was twentie seven degrees twentie minutes, and two degrees carryed by the Current. So tha. the difference of longitude betwene the Cape of Good Hope and the Lizard is twentie nine degrees twentie minutes, or very neere thereabout.

Comming suddenly out of long heat into the cold, seemeth to bee a great cause of the Scuruie.

They arrive in the Thames.

Note, that this day three moneths at night I did set saile in the roade of Saldanha: yet notwithstanding our short passage, hauing bene from Santa Helena but two moneths and nine dayes, the one halfe or more of our Company are laid vp of the Scuruie: and two dead of it. Yet had we plentie of victuals, as Beefe, Bread, Wine, Rice, Oyle, Vinegar, Sugar; and all these without allowance. Note, that all our men that are sicke, haue taken their sicknesse since wee fell with Flores and Corno. For since that time wee haue had it very cold, especially in two great stormes, the one with the wind at North and North North-east: The other with the wind at South-west. From the Cape of Good Hope to the Ilands of Flores and Corno, I had not one man sicke. The variation foure or five leagues off, the Start is nine degrees thirtie minutes, little more or lesse.

The fifteenth, wee came into the Riuer of Thames, it being that day fixe moneths since wee came from Bantam in Iana.

Blessed bee God.

§. I.

Remembrances taken out of a Treatise written by Master PATRIKE COPLAND Minister in the former Voyage.

In the Tropickes are seldome or no stormes, but a smooth Sea with soft gales: flying fishes are frequent as bigge as a small Whiting: they flye twice the length of a ship. Turnados (gusts within two degrees of the Line) cause all things, specially cloaths, to smell. They had ninetie or a hundred sicke, the rest weake, before they came to Soldania.

Commendarions of Soldania.

Their persons and their apparell.

The Table. Porcupins Quills.

The Bay of Soldania and all about the Cape is so healthfull and fruitfull, as might grow a Paradise of the World; it well agrees with English bodies, for all but one in twentie dayes recovered, as at the first day they set forth. They had then in June, Snow vpon the hills, the weather warmish. The Countrey is mixed, Mountaines, Plaines, Medowes, Streames, the Woods as if they were artificially planted for order. There is free stone to build with, plentie of fish and fowle, wilde Geese, Partridges and Duckes, Antilopes, Deere, Riuers. They had thirtie nine Beeves, one hundred and fiftene sheepe for a little Brasse cut out of two or three old Kettles. For the sheepe worth one penny, or one penny halfe penny the piece; the Beeves twelue pence. The people are louing, afraid at first by reason of the vnkindnesse of Dutch (which came there to make traine Oyle, who killed and stole their Cattell) and at our returne more kind: of middle size, well limmed, very nimble and actiue. They dance in true measure all naked, only weare a short Cloke of sheepe or Seale skinnes to their middle, the hairie side inward, a Cap of the same, and a kind of Rats skinne about their priuities; some had a Sole on their feet tyed about; their neckes were adorned with greasie Tripes, which sometimes they would pull off and eat raw. When we threw away their beasts entrailes, they would eate them halfe raw, the blood lothsomely slauering: Bracelets about their armes they had of Copper or Iuorie, with many Ostrich feathers and shels.

The Womens habit is as the Mens. They were shame-fac't at first; but at our returne homewards they would lift vp their Rat-skinnes and shew their priuities. Their Breasts hang to the middle, their haire curled. Copper with them is Gold; Iron, Siluer; their Houses little Tents in the field, of Skins, moueable at pleasure, their Language with doubling the tongue in their throat. There is a high hill, called the Table, ouer-covering all the adioyning Territories one hundred miles. Some went and discouered many Bayes and Riuers. The Negroes behaued themselves peaceably at Sinon, yet seeme of little or no Religion; they cut their skinnes like Baals Priests, one seemed (by making price) to be Commander.

The

The Guzerates tooke sea-coale to carry for a wonder to the Mogol. The Portugall Fleete was two hundred fortie sayle of Frigats, Merchants bound for Cambaya, which furnish the Carracks, foure Gallions, with twenty five or twenty sixe Frigats. The Admirall was Nuno de Ancona. When the Sabandar perswaded him to keep between vs and shoare; he answered proudly, that he scorned to spend a weekes prouision on his men in hindering vs, being able to force vs to yeeld in an houre. They had all red colours displayed. After three fights, they manned a Frigat, with sixe or seuen score best men to fire vs, which were all sunke.

Portugal pride.

The first fight.

Medbaprabadi.

Medbaprabadi is now ruined by the Mogols warres, which sometime hath beene a faire Citie, and walled. Here was a Castle kept by the Ratspuches, in which at that time a strong Rebell to the Mogoll, was besieged by the Nabob, with fiftie or sixtie thousand people in his Campe. The Nabob had a stately and spacious Tent; couered aboue with Cloth of Gold, beneath spread with Turkie Carpets. The Generall would not stirre till he had taken the Castle. He sent a horse, and two Vests wrought with Silke and Gold to our Generall, and foure Vests for foure other. They haue store of good Grapes, yet none but Rasin wine.

The three and twentieth and foure and twentieth of December, in view of the whole Army we had a second fight, and forced them first to cut their Cables, and then flee from vs, being better of saile then we.

The second place of fight.

M. Copelands journey hence ouer-land

Taddy or Palme-wine.

I rode to Surat in a Coach drawne with Oxen (which is most ordinary, though they haue store of goodly horses) here in the way was the goodliest Spring and Haruest together that euer I saw; the Fields ioyning, one Greene as a Meadow, the other yellow as Gold, ready to bee cut: their graine Wheat and Rice; they haue excellent bread. All along were goodly Villages, full of Trees yeelding Taddy, like new sweet wine, much strengthening and fattening. Surat hath stone and bricke houses faire, square, flat-roofed, goodly Gardens; with Pomegranats, Pomecitrons, Limons, Melons, Figs, continuing all the yeere, with curious springs of fresh water: the people are graue, iudicious, neat, tall, goodly cloathed in long white Callico or Silke robes.

The Sabandar assured vs, that we had killed of the Portugals aboue three hundred and fiftie: we heard after that there were spoyled and killed aboue five hundred. The Generall sent Letters by land, and the Messenger with his Indian were poysoned by two Friers homewards; but a second Letter was deliuered to a Mariner, which came to their hands.

Anno 1613.

The twelfth of Aprill, they anchored in the road of Achen, where the King welcomed our men. The Arancaia came riding in a Tent on an Elephants backe, with two or three of the Kings boyes (for he is attended with Boyes abroad, Women within) holding a Bason of Gold, to receiue the Kings letter. Our Generall followed with fortie or fiftie men. After the Letter and Present deliuered, the King told vs we should see some of his Pastime, and called for his Cockes, which after they haue fought about once or twice, they take them vp, bath them, picke their feathers, and sow vp their wounds. After an houre thus spent in Cock-fighting: his Rammes fought very fiercely; then his tame Elephants more cruelly: then his Buffles most stomackfully. Finally, our Antilopes wherewith our Generall had presented him, whole fight best pleased him. Hee all this while drinke Tobacco in a Siluer Pipe; giuen by his Women which are in a close roome behind him. After this, Supper was serued in by young Boyes of foureteene or fiftene yeeres in Swasse (a mettall halfe Copper halfe Gold.) This Supper continued from seuen till almost twelue, in which we had foure hundred dishes with hot drinkes. The next day the King sent the Generall an Elephant to ride on, and appointed one of his chiefe Arancaias to attend him alwayes. They had continuall free access granted, without the Kings Creefe (which is vsed as a Scepter) and promise to ratifie the Articles agreed vpon by his Predecessors, and Sir James Lancaster.

The second of May, all Strangers were invited to a banquet sixe miles off, for which purpose two Elephants were sent for our Generall. Here were all the dishes brought by water, the boyes holding the dish with one hand, and swimming with the other: so did they carrie the strong drinke also, whereof when they had tasted (which they must of all) they threw the rest into the Riuer. It continued from one till five. In it were five hundred dishes well dressed. Our General (weary with sitting by the King thus long in the water) was dismissed an houre before the rest. The Captaine of the Dutch house, taking there his bane, either with hot drinke, or cold sitting so long in the water, soone after died.

The second of Iune, they were entertained with a fight of foure Elephants, with a wild Tygre tied at a stake, which yet fastening on their Trunks and legges, made them to roare and bleed extreame. This day we were told, that one eye of a Noble man was plucked out, for looking on one of the Kings women washing in a Riuer. Another Gentleman wearing a Shash, had his head round cut so farre as that was too large. Some he is said to boyle in scalding oyle, some are sawne a peeces, others their legges cut off, or spitted aliue, or empaled on stakes.

The twentieth, was before the King a fight of wild Elephants, which would quickly kill each other, but that some tame are made fast to them, which draw them backe, sometime eighty or an hundred men helping. They set one wild betweene two tame to tame them. He sent the King a Letter, for painting and writing most stately, a Creefe, &c. for a Present.

Elephants:

The

The Letter is thus Englished.

PEDVCKA SIRIE SVLTAN King of Kings, renowned for his Warres, and sole King of Sumatra, and a King more famous then his Predecessors, feared in his Kingdome, and honoured of all bordering Nations: in Whom there is the true Image of a King, in whome raignes the true methode of Government, formed as it were of the most pure Metall, and adorned with the most finest colours; Whose Seat is high, and most compleat, like to a Christall Riner, pure and cleare as the Christall Glasse: From whom floweth the pure streame of Bountie and Iustice: whose Presence is as the finest Gold, King of Priaman, and of the Mountaine of Gold, viz. Solida, and Lord of nine sorts of Stones, King of two Sombrieroes of beaten Gold, having for his Seats mats of Gold, his furniture for his Horses and Armour for himselfe, being likewise of pure Gold. His Elephant with teeth of Gold, and all Provisions thereunto belonging: his Lances halfe Gold, halfe Siluer, his small shot of the same; a Saddle also for an other Elephant of the same Metall: a Tent of Siluer, and all his Scales halfe Gold halfe Siluer. His Vessels for bathing of pure Gold, his Sepulchre of Gold (whereas his Predecessours had all these halfe Gold halfe Siluer) his seruices compleat of Gold and Siluer. A King, vnder whom there are many Kings, hauing taken the King of Arrow: All the Countrey of Priaman, Tecoo, Baroule, being subdued by him, is now vnder his Command: Seuentie Elephants, and much Prouisions carried by sea, to make his Warres at Arrow, where God gaue me more Victory, then any of my Predecessors.
